IT is the fate of those who toil at the lower employments of life, to be rather driven by the fear of evil, than attracted by the prospect of good; to be exposed to censure, without hope of praise; to be disgraced by miscarriage, or punished for neglect, where success would have been without applause, and diligence without reward.

Among these unhappy mortals is the writer of dictionaries; whom mankind have considered, not as the pupil, but the slave of science, the pionier of literature, doomed only to remove rubbish and clear obstructions from the paths of Learning and Genius, who press forward to conquest and glory, without bestowing a smile on the humble drudge that facilitates their progress. Every other authour may aspire to praise; the lexicographer can only hope to escape reproach, and even this negative recompense has been yet granted to very few.

I have, notwithstanding this discouragement, attempted a dictionary of the English language, which, while it was employed in the cultivation of every species of literature, has itself been hitherto neglected, suffered to spread, under the direction of chance, into wild exuberance, resigned to the tyranny of time and fashion, and exposed to the corruptions of ignorance, and caprices of innovation.

When I took the first survey of my undertaking, I found our speech copious without order, and energetick without rules: wherever I turned my view, there was perplexity to be disentangled, and confusion to be regulated; choice was to be made out of boundless variety, without any established principle of selection; adulterations were to be detected, without a settled test of purity; and modes of expression to be rejected or received, without the suffrages of any writers of classical reputation or acknowledged authority.

Having therefore no assistance but from general grammar, I applied myself to the perusal of our writers; and noting whatever might be of use to ascertain or illustrate any word or phrase, accumulated in time the materials of a dictionary, which, by degrees, I reduced to method, establishing to myself, in the progress of the work, such rules as experience and analogy suggested to me; experience, which practice and observation were continually increasing; and analogy, which, though in some words obscure, was evident in others.

In adjusting the ORTHOGRAPHY, which has been to this time unsettled and fortuitous, I found it necessary to distinguish those irregularities that are inherent in our tongue, and perhaps coeval with it, from others which the ignorance or negligence of later writers has produced. Every language has its anomalies, which, though inconvenient, and in themselves once unnecessary, must be tolerated among the imperfections of human things, and which require only to be registred; that they may not be increased, and ascertained, that they may not be confounded: but every language has likewise its improprieties and absurdities, which it is the duty of the lexicographer to correct or proscribe.

As language was at its beginning merely oral, all words of necessary or common use were spoken before they were written; and while they were unfixed by any visible signs, must have been spoken with great diversity, as we now observe those who cannot read to catch sounds imperfectly, and utter them negligently. When this wild and barbarous jargon was first reduced to an alphabet, every penman endeavoured to express, as he could, the sounds which he was accustomed to pronounce or to receive, and vitiated in writing such words as were already vitiated in speech. The powers of the letters, when they were applied to a new language, must have been vague and unsettled, and therefore different hands would exhibit the same sound by different combinations.

From this uncertain pronunciation arise in a great part the various dialects of the same country, which will always be observed to grow fewer, and less different, as books are multiplied; and from this arbitrary representation of sounds by letters, proceeds that diversity of spelling observable in the Saxon remains, and I suppose in the first books of every nation, which perplexes or destroys analogy, and produces anomalous formations, which, being once incorporated, can never be afterward dismissed or reformed.

Of this kind are the derivatives length from long, strength from strong, darling from dear, breadth from broad, from dry, drought, and from high, height, which Milton, in zeal for analogy, writes hightb; Quid te exempta juvat spinis de pluribus una; to change all would be too much, and to change one is nothing.

This

P R E F A C E.

This uncertainty is most frequent in the vowels, which are so capriciously pronounced, and so differently modified, by accident or affectation, not only in every province, but in every mouth, that to them, as is well known to etymologists, little regard is to be shewn in the deduction of one language from another.

Such defects are not errors in orthography, but spots of barbarity impressed so deep in the English language, that criticism can never wash them away; these, therefore, must be permitted to remain untouched: but many words have likewise been altered by accident, or depraved by ignorance, as the pronunciation of the vulgar has been weakly followed; and some still continue to be variously written, as authours differ in their care or skill: of these it was proper to enquire the true orthography, which I have always considered as depending on their derivation, and have therefore referred them to their original languages: thus I write enchant, enchantment, enchanter, after the French, and incantation after the Latin; thus entire is chosen rather than intire, because it passed to us not from the Latin integer, but from the French entier.

Of many words it is difficult to say whether they were immediately received from the Latin or the French, since at the time when we had dominions in France, we had Latin service in our churches. It is, however, my opinion, that the French generally supplied us; for we have few Latin words, among the terms of domestick use, which are not French; but many French, which are very remote from Latin.

Even in words of which the derivation is apparent, I have been often obliged to sacrifice uniformity to custom; thus I write, in compliance with a numberless majority, convey and inveigh, deceit and receipt, fancy and phantom; sometimes the derivative varies from the primitive, as explain and explanation, repeat and repetition.

Some combinations of letters having the same power are used indifferently without any discoverable reason of choice, as in choak, choke; soap, sope; fewel, fuel, and many others; which I have sometimes inserted twice, that those who search for them under either form, may not search in vain.

In examining the orthography of any doubtful word, the mode of spelling by which it is inserted in the series of the dictionary, is to be considered as that to which I give, perhaps not often rashly, the preference. I have left, in the examples, to every authour his own practice unmolested, that the reader may balance suffrages, and judge between us: but this question is not always to be determined by reputed or by real learning; some men, intent upon greater things, have thought little on sounds and derivations; some, knowing in the ancient tongues, have neglected those in which our words are commonly to be sought. Thus Hammond writes fecibleness for feasibleness, because I suppose he imagined it derived immediately from the Latin; and some words, such as dependant, dependent; dependance, dependence, vary their final syllable, as one or other language is present to the writer.

In this part of the work, where caprice has long wanted without controul, and vanity sought praise by petty reformation, I have endeavoured to proceed with a scholar's reverence for antiquity, and a grammarian's regard to the genius of our tongue. I have attempted few alterations, and among those few, perhaps the greater part is from the modern to the ancient practice; and I hope I may be allowed to recommend to those, whose thoughts have been, perhaps, employed too anxiously on verbal singularities, not to disturb, upon narrow views, or for minute propriety, the orthography of their fathers. It has been asserted, that for the law to be known, is of more importance than to be right. Change, says Hooker, is not made without inconvenience, even from worse to better. There is in constancy and stability a general and lasting advantage, which will always overbalance the slow improvements of gradual correction. Much less ought our written language to comply with the corruptions of oral utterance, or copy that which every variation of time or place makes different from itself, and imitate those changes, which will again be changed, while imitation is employed in observing them.

This recommendation of steadiness and uniformity does not proceed from an opinion, that particular combinations of letters have much influence on human happiness; or that truth may not be successfully taught by modes of spelling fanciful and erroneous: I am not yet so lost in lexicography, as to forget that words are the daughters of earth, and that things are the sons of heaven. Language is only the instrument of science, and words are but the signs of ideas: I wish, however, that the instrument might be less apt to decay, and that signs might be permanent, like the things which they denote.

In settling the orthography, I have not wholly neglected the pronunciation, which I have directed, by printing an accent upon the acute or elevated syllable. It will sometimes be found, that the accent is placed by the authour quoted, on a different syllable from that marked in the alphabetical series; it is then to be understood, that custom has varied, or that the authour has, in my opinion, pronounced wrong. Short directions are sometimes given where the sound of letters is irregular; and if they are sometimes omitted, defect in such minute observations will be more easily excused, than superfluity.

In the investigation both of the orthography and signification of words, their ETYMOLOGY was necessarily to be considered, and they were therefore to be divided into primitives and derivatives. A primitive word, is that which can be traced no further to any English root; thus circumspect, circum-

cent,

P R E F A C E.

vent, circumstance, delude, concave, and complicate, though compounds in the Latin, are to us primitives. Derivatives, are all those that can be referred to any word in English of greater simplicity.

The derivatives I have referred to their primitives, with an accuracy sometimes needless; for who does not see that remoteness comes from remote, lovely from love, concavity from concave, and demonstrative from demonstrate? but this grammatical exuberance the scheme of my work did not allow me to repress. It is of great importance in examining the general fabrick of a language, to trace one word from another, by noting the usual modes of derivation and inflection; and uniformity must be preserved in systematical works, though sometimes at the expence of particular propriety.

Among other derivatives I have been careful to insert and elucidate the anomalous plurals of nouns and preterites of verbs, which in the Teutonic dialects are very frequent, and, though familiar to those who have always used them, interrupt and embarrass the learners of our language.

The two languages from which our primitives have been derived are the Roman and Teutonic: under the Roman I comprehend the French and provincial tongues; and under the Teutonic range the Saxon, German, and all their kindred dialects. Most of our polysyllables are Roman, and our words of one syllable are very often Teutonic.

In assigning the Roman original, it has perhaps sometimes happened that I have mentioned only the Latin, when the word was borrowed from the French; and considering myself as employed only in the illustration of my own language, I have not been very careful to observe whether the Latin word be pure or barbarous, or the French elegant or obsolete.

For the Teutonic etymologies I am commonly indebted to Junius and Skinner, the only names which I have forbore to quote when I copied their books; not that I might appropriate their labours or usurp their honours, but that I might spare a perpetual repetition by one general acknowledgment. Of these, whom I ought not to mention but with the reverence due to instructors and benefactors, Junius appears to have excelled in extent of learning, and Skinner in rectitude of understanding. Junius was accurately skilled in all the northern languages, Skinner probably examined the ancient and remoter dialects only by occasional inspection into dictionaries; but the learning of Junius is often of no other use than to show him a track by which he may deviate from his purpose, to which Skinner always presses forward by the shortest way. Skinner is often ignorant, but never ridiculous: Junius is always full of knowledge; but his variety distracts his judgment, and his learning is very frequently disgraced by his absurdities.

The votaries of the northern muses will not perhaps easily restrain their indignation, when they find the name of Junius thus degraded by a disadvantageous comparison; but whatever reverence is due to his diligence, or his attainments, it can be no criminal degree of censoriousness to charge that etymologist with want of judgment, who can seriously derive dream from drama, because life is a drama, and a drama is a dream; and who declares with a tone of defiance, that no man can fail to derive moan from μόνος, monos, who considers that grief naturally loves to be alone *.

Our knowledge of the northern literature is so scanty, that of words undoubtedly Teutonic the original is not always to be found in any ancient language; and I have therefore inserted Dutch or German substitutes, which I consider not as radical but parallel, not as the parents, but sisters of the English.

The words which are represented as thus related by descent or cognation, do not always agree in sense; for it is incident to words, as to their authours, to degenerate from their ancestors, and to change their manners when they change their country. It is sufficient, in etymological enquiries, if the senses of kindred words be found such as may easily pass into each other, or such as may both be referred to one general idea.

The etymology, so far as it is yet known, was easily found in the volumes where it is particularly and professedly delivered; and, by proper attention to the rules of derivation, the orthography was soon adjusted. But to COLLECT the WORDS of our language was a task of greater difficulty: the deficiency of dictionaries was immediately apparent; and when they were exhausted, what was yet wanting must be sought by fortuitous and unguided excursions into books, and gleaned as industry should find, or chance should offer it, in the boundless chaos of a living speech. My search, however, has been either skilful or lucky; for I have much augmented the vocabulary.

* That I may not appear to have spoken too irreverently of Junius, I have here subjoined a few Specimens of his etymological extravagance.

P R E F A C E.

As my design was a dictionary, common or appellative, I have omitted all words which have relation to proper names; such as Arian, Socinian, Calvinist, Benedictine, Mahometan; but have retained those of a more general nature, as Heathen, Pagan.

Of the terms of art I have received such as could be found either in books of science or technical dictionaries; and have often inserted, from philosophical writers, words which are supported perhaps only by a single authority, and which being not admitted into general use, stand yet as candidates or probationers, and must depend for their adoption on the suffrage of futurity.

The words which our authours have introduced by their knowledge of foreign languages, or ignorance of their own, by vanity or wantonness, by compliance with fashion, or lust of innovation, I have registred as they occurred, though commonly only to censure them, and warn others against the folly of naturalizing useless foreigners to the injury of the natives.

I have not rejected any by design, merely because they were unnecessary or exuberant; but have received those which by different writers have been differently formed, as viscid, and viscidit, viscous, and viscosity.

Compounded or double words I have seldom noted, except when they obtain a signification different from that which the components have in their simple state. Thus highwayman, woodman, and horsecourser, require an explication; but of thieflike or coachdriver no notice was needed, because the primitives contain the meaning of the compounds.

Words arbitrarily formed by a constant and settled analogy, like diminutive adjectives in ish, as greenish, bluish, adverbs in ly, as dully, openly, substantives in ness, as vileness, faultiness, were less diligently sought, and many sometimes have been omitted, when I had no authority that invited me to insert them; not that they are not genuine and regular offsprings of English roots, but because their relation to the primitive being always the same, their signification cannot be mistaken.

The verbal nouns in ing, such as the keeping of the castle, the leading of the army, are always neglected, or placed only to illustrate the sense of the verb, except when they signify things as well as actions, and have therefore a plural number, as dwelling, living; or have an absolute and abstract signification, as colouring, painting, learning.

The participles are likewise omitted, unless, by signifying rather qualities than action, they take the nature of adjectives; as a thinking man, a man of prudence; a pacing horse, a horse that can pace: these I have ventured to call participial adjectives. But neither are these always inserted, because they are commonly to be understood, without any danger of mistake, by consulting the verb.

Obsolete words are admitted, when they are found in authours not obsolete, or when they have any force or beauty that may deserve revival.

As composition is one of the chief characteristicks of a language, I have endeavoured to make some reparation for the universal negligence of my predecessors, by inserting great numbers of compounded words, as may be found under after, fore, new, night, fair, and many more. These, numerous as they are, might be multiplied, but that use and curiosity are here satisfied, and the frame of our language and modes of our combination amply discovered.

Of some forms of composition, such as that by which re is prefixed to note repetition, and un to signify contrariety or privation, all the examples cannot be accumulated, because the use of these particles, if not wholly arbitrary, is so little limited, that they are hourly affixed to new words as occasion requires, or is imagined to require them.

There is another kind of composition more frequent in our language than perhaps in any other, from which arises to foreigners the greatest difficulty. We modify the signification of many verbs by a particle subjoined; as to come off, to escape by a fetch; to fall on, to attack; to fall off, to apostatize; to break off, to stop abruptly; to bear out, to justify; to fall in, to comply; to give over, to cease; to set off, to embellish; to set in, to begin a continual tenour; to set out, to begin a course or journey; to take off, to copy; with innumerable expressions of the same kind, of which some appear wildly irregular, being so far distant from the sense of the simple words, that no sagacity will be able to trace the steps by which they arrived at the present use. These I have noted with great care; and though I cannot flatter myself that the collection is complete, I believe I have so far assisted the students of our language, that this kind of phraseology will be no longer insuperable; and the combinations of verbs and particles, by chance omitted, will be easily explained by comparison with those that may be found.

Many words yet stand supported only by the name of Bailey, Ainsworth, Philips, or the contracted Diēt. for Dictionaries subjoined: of these I am not always certain that they are read in any book but the works of lexicographers. Of such I have omitted many, because I had never read them; and many I have inserted, because they may perhaps exist, though they have escaped my notice: they are, however, however, to be yet considered as resting only upon the credit of former dictionaries. Others, which I considered as useful, or know to be proper, though I could not at present support them by authorities, I have suffered to stand upon my own attestation, claiming the same privilege with my predecessors of being sometimes credited without proof.

P R E F A C E.

The words, thus selected and disposed, are grammatically considered: they are referred to the different parts of speech; traced, when they are irregularly inflected, through their various terminations; and illustrated by observations, not indeed of great or striking importance, separately considered, but necessary to the elucidation of our language, and hitherto neglected or forgotten by English grammarians.

That part of my work on which I expect malignity most frequently to fasten, is the Explanation; in which I cannot hope to satisfy those, who are perhaps not inclined to be pleased, since I have not always been able to satisfy myself. To interpret a language by itself is very difficult; many words cannot be explained by synonimes, because the idea signified by them has not more than one appellation; nor by paraphrase, because simple ideas cannot be described. When the nature of things is unknown, or the notion unsettled and indefinite, and various in various minds, the words by which such notions are conveyed, or such things denoted, will be ambiguous and perplexed. And such is the fate of hapless lexicography, that not only darkness, but light, impedes and distresses it; things may be not only too little, but too much known, to be happily illustrated. To explain, requires the use of terms less abstruse than that which is to be explained, and such terms cannot always be found; for as nothing can be proved but by supposing something intuitively known, and evident without proof, so nothing can be defined but by the use of words too plain to admit a definition.

Other words there are, of which the sense is too subtle and evanescent to be fixed in a paraphrase; such are all those which are by the grammarians termed expletives, and, in dead languages, are suffered to pass for empty sounds, of no other use than to fill a verse, or to modulate a period, but which are easily perceived in living tongues to have power and emphasis, though it be sometimes such as no other form of expression can convey.

My labour has likewise been much increased by a class of verbs too frequent in the English language, of which the signification is so loose and general, the use so vague and indeterminate, and the senses detorted so widely from the first idea, that it is hard to trace them through the maze of variation, to catch them on the brink of utter inanity, to circumscribe them by any limitations, or interpret them by any words of distinct and settled meaning: such are bear, break, come, cast, full, get, give, do, put, set, go, run, make, take, turn, throw. If of these the whole power is not accurately delivered, it must be remembered, that while our language is yet living, and variable by the caprice of every one that speaks it, these words are hourly shifting their relations, and can no more be ascertained in a dictionary, than a grove, in the agitation of a storm, can be accurately delineated from its picture in the water.

The particles are among all nations applied with so great latitude, that they are not easily reducible under any regular scheme of explication: this difficulty is not less, nor perhaps greater, in English, than in other languages. I have laboured them with diligence, I hope with success; such at least as can be expected in a task, which no man, however learned or sagacious, has yet been able to perform.

Some words there are which I cannot explain, because I do not understand them; these might have been omitted very often with little inconvenience, but I would not so far indulge my vanity as to decline this confession: for when Tully owns himself ignorant whether lessus, in the twelve tables, means a funeral song, or mourning garment; and Aristotle doubts whether ούρεως, in the Iliad, signifies a mule, or muleteer, I may freely, without shame, leave some obscurities to happier industry, or future information.

The rigour of interpretative lexicography requires that the explanation, and the word explained, should be always reciprocal; this I have always endeavoured, but could not always attain. Words are seldom exactly synonymous; a new term was not introduced, but because the former was thought inadequate: names, therefore, have often many ideas, but few ideas have many names. It was then necessary to use the proximate word, for the deficiency of single terms can very seldom be supplied by circumlocution; nor is the inconvenience great of such mutilated interpretations, because the sense may easily be collected entire from the examples.

In every word of extensive use, it was requisite to mark the progress of its meaning, and show by what gradations of intermediate sense it has passed from its primitive to its remote and accidental signification; so that every foregoing explanation should tend to that which follows, and the series be regularly concatenated from the first notion to the last.

This is specious, but not always practicable; kindred senses may be so interwoven, that the perplexity cannot be disentangled, nor any reason be assigned why one should be ranged before the other. When the radical idea branches out into parallel ramifications, how can a consecutive series be formed of senses in their nature collateral? The shades of meaning sometimes pass imperceptibly into each other; so that though on one side they apparently differ, yet it is impossible to mark the point of contact. Ideas of the same race, though not exactly alike, are sometimes so little different, that no words can express the dissimilitude, though the mind easily perceives it, when they are exhibited bited together ; and sometimes there is such a confusion of acceptations, that discernment is wearied, and distinction puzzled, and perseverance herself hurries to an end, by crowding together what she cannot separate.

These complaints of difficulty will, by those that have never considered words beyond their popular use, be thought only the jargon of a man willing to magnify his labours, and procure veneration to his studies by involution and obscurity. But every art is obscure to those that have not learned it : this uncertainty of terms, and commixture of ideas, is well known to those who have joined philosophy with grammar ; and if I have not expressed them very clearly, it must be remembered that I am speaking of that which words are insufficient to explain.

The original sense of words is often driven out of use by their metaphorical acceptations, yet must be inserted for the sake of a regular origination. Thus I know not whether ardour is used for material heat, or whether flagrant, in English, ever signifies the same with burning ; yet such are the primitive ideas of these words, which are therefore set first, though without examples, that the figurative senses may be commodiously deduced.

Such is the exuberance of signification which many words have obtained, that it was scarcely possible to collect all their senses ; sometimes the meaning of derivatives must be sought in the mother term, and sometimes deficient explanations of the primitive may be supplied in the train of derivation. In any case of doubt or difficulty, it will be always proper to examine all the words of the same race ; for some words are slightly passed over to avoid repetition, some admitted easier and clearer explanation than others, and all will be better understood, as they are considered in greater variety of structures and relations.

All the interpretations of words are not written with the same skill, or the same happiness : things equally easy in themselves, are not all equally easy to any single mind. Every writer of a long work commits errors, where there appears neither ambiguity to mislead, nor obscurity to confound him ; and in a search like this, many felicities of expression will be casually overlooked, many convenient parallels will be forgotten, and many particulars will admit improvement from a mind utterly unequal to the whole performance.

But many seeming faults are to be imputed rather to the nature of the undertaking, than the negligence of the performer. Thus some explanations are unavoidably reciprocal or circular, as bind, the female of the stag ; stag, the male of the kind : sometimes easier words are changed into harder, as burial into sepulture or interment, drier into desiccative, dryness into siccidity or aridity, fit into paroxysm ; for the easiest word, whatever it be, can never be translated into one more easy. But easiness and difficulty are merely relative, and if the present prevalence of our language should invite foreigners to this dictionary, many will be assisted by those words which now seem only to increase or produce obscurity. For this reason I have endeavoured frequently to join a Teutonick and Roman interpretation, as to CHEER to gladden, or exhilarate, that every learner of English may be assisted by his own tongue.

The solution of all difficulties, and the supply of all defects, must be sought in the examples, subjoined to the various senses of each word, and ranged according to the time of their authours.

When first I collected these authorities, I was desirous that every quotation should be useful to some other end than the illustration of a word ; I therefore extracted from philosophers principles of science ; from historians remarkable facts ; from chymists complete processes ; from divines striking exhortations ; and from poets beautiful descriptions. Such is design, while it is yet at a distance from execution. When the time called upon me to range this accumulation of elegance and wisdom into an alphabetical series, I soon discovered that the bulk of my volumes would fright away the student, and was forced to depart from my scheme of including all that was pleasing or useful in English literature, and reduce my transcripts very often to clusters of words, in which scarcely any meaning is retained ; thus to the weariness of copying, I was condemned to add the vexation of expunging. Some passages I have yet spared, which may relieve the labour of verbal searches, and intersperse with verdure and flowers the dusty deserts of barren philology.

The examples, thus mutilated, are no longer to be considered as conveying the sentiments or doctrine of their authours ; the word for the sake of which they are inserted, with all its appendant clauses, has been carefully preserved ; but it may sometimes happen, by hasty detraction, that the general tendency of the sentence may be changed : the divine may desert his tenets, or the philosopher his system.

Some of the examples have been taken from writers who were never mentioned as masters of elegance or models of style ; but words must be sought where they are used ; and in what pages, eminent for purity, can terms of manufacture or agriculture be found ? Many quotations serve no other purpose, than that of proving the bare existence of words, and are therefore selected with less scrupulousness than those which are to teach their structures and relations.

My purpose was to admit no testimony of living authours, that I might not be misled by partiality, and that none of my contemporaries might have reason to complain ; nor have I departed from this resolution, but when some performance of uncommon excellence excited my veneration, when my memory supplied me, from late books, with an example that was wanting, or when my heart, in the tenderness of friendship, solicited admission for a favourite name.

P R E F A C E.

So far have I been from any care to grace my pages with modern decorations, that I have studiously endeavoured to collect examples and authorities from the writers before the restoration, whose works I regard as the wells of English undefiled, as the pure sources of genuine diction. Our language, for almost a century, has, by the concurrence of many causes, been gradually departing from its original Teutonic character, and deviating towards a Gallick structure and phraseology, from which it ought to be our endeavour to recal it, by making our ancient volumes the ground-work of style, admitting among the additions of later times, only such as may supply real deficiencies, such as are readily adopted by the genius of our tongue, and incorporate easily with our native idioms.

But as every language has a time of rudeness antecedent to perfection, as well as of false refinement and declension, I have been cautious lest my zeal for antiquity might drive me into times too remote, and crowd my book with words now no longer understood. I have fixed Sidney's work for the boundary, beyond which I make few excursions. From the authours which rose in the time of Elizabeth, a speech might be formed adequate to all the purposes of use and elegance. If the language of theology were extracted from Hooker and the translation of the Bible; the terms of natural knowledge from Bacon; the phrases of policy, war, and navigation from Raleigh; the dialect of poetry and fiction from Spenser and Sidney; and the diction of common life from Shakespeare, few ideas would be lost to mankind, for want of English words, in which they might be expressed.

It is not sufficient that a word is found, unless it be so combined as that its meaning is apparently determined by the tract and tenour of the sentence; such passages I have therefore chosen, and when it happened that any authour gave a definition of a term, or such an explanation as is equivalent to a definition, I have placed his authority as a supplement to my own, without regard to the chronological order, that is otherwise observed.

Some words, indeed, stand unsupported by any authority, but they are commonly derivative nouns or adverbs, formed from their primitives by regular and constant analogy, or names of things seldom occurring in books, or words of which I have reason to doubt the existence.

There is more danger of censure from the multiplicity than paucity of examples; authorities will sometimes seem to have been accumulated without necessity or use, and perhaps some will be found, which might, without loss, have been omitted. But a work of this kind is not hastily to be charged with superfluities: those quotations which to careless or unskilful perusers appear only to repeat the same sense, will often exhibit, to a more accurate examiner, diversities of signification, or, at least, afford different shades of the same meaning: one will shew the word applied to persons, another to things; one will express an ill, another a good, and a third a neutral sense; one will prove the expression genuine from an ancient authour; another will shew it elegant from a modern: a doubtful authority is corroborated by another of more credit; an ambiguous sentence is ascertained by a passage clear and determinate; the word, how often soever repeated, appears with new associates and in different combinations, and every quotation contributes something to the stability or enlargement of the language.

When words are used equivocally, I receive them in either sense; when they are metaphorical, I adopt them in their primitive acceptance.

I have sometimes, though rarely, yielded to the temptation of exhibiting a genealogy of sentiments, by shewing how one authour copied the thoughts and diction of another: such quotations are indeed little more than repetitions, which might justly be censured, did they not gratify the mind, by affording a kind of intellectual history.

The various syntactical structures occurring in the examples have been carefully noted; the licence or negligence with which many words have been hitherto used, has made our style capricious and indeterminate; when the different combinations of the same word are exhibited together, the preference is readily given to propriety, and I have often endeavoured to direct the choice.

Thus have I laboured to settle the orthography, display the analogy, regulate the structures, and ascertain the signification of English words, to perform all the parts of a faithful lexicographer: but I have not always executed my own scheme, or satisfied my own expectations. The work, whatever proofs of diligence and attention it may exhibit, is yet capable of many improvements: the orthography which I recommend is still controvertible, the etymology which I adopt is uncertain, and perhaps frequently erroneous; the explanations are sometimes too much contracted, and sometimes too much diffused, the significations are distinguished rather with subtilty than skill, and the attention is harraressed with unnecessary minuteness.

The examples are too often injudiciously truncated, and perhaps sometimes, I hope very rarely, alleged in a mistaken sense; for in making this collection I trusted more to memory, than, in a state of disquiet and embarrassment, memory can contain, and purposed to supply at the review what was left incomplete in the first transcription.

Many terms appropriated to particular occupations, though necessary and significant, are undoubtedly omitted; and of the words most studiously considered and exemplified, many senses have escaped observation.

Yet these failures, however frequent, may admit extenuation and apology. To have attempted much is always laudable, even when the enterprize is above the strength that undertakes it: To rest below his own aim is incident to every one whose fancy is active, and whose views are comprehensive; nor is any man satisfied with himself because he has done much, but because he can conceive little. When first I engaged in this work, I resolved to leave neither words nor things unexamined, and pleased myself with a prospect of the hours which I should revel away in feasts of literature, the obscure recesses of northern learning, which I should enter and ransack, the treasures with which I expected every search into those neglected mines to reward my labour, and the triumph with which I should display my acquisitions to mankind. When I had thus enquired into the original of words, I resolved to show likewise my attention to things; to pierce deep into every science, to enquire the nature of every substance of which I inserted the name, to limit every idea by a definition strictly logical, and exhibit every production of art or nature in an accurate description, that my book might be in place of all other dictionaries whether appellative or technical. But these were the dreams of a poet doomed at last to wake a lexicographer. I soon found that it is too late to look for instruments, when the work calls for execution, and that whatever abilities I had brought to my task, with those I must finally perform it. To deliberate whenever I doubted, to enquire whenever I was ignorant, would have protracted the undertaking without end, and, perhaps, without much improvement; for I did not find by my first experiments, that what I had not of my own was easily to be obtained: I saw that one enquiry only gave occasion to another, that book referred to book, that to search was not always to find, and to find was not always to be informed; and that thus to pursue perfection, was, like the first inhabitants of Arcadia, to chase the sun, which, when they had reached the hill where he seemed to rest, was still beheld at the same distance from them.

I then contracted my design, determining to confide in myself, and no longer to solicit auxiliaries, which produced more incumbrance than assistance: by this I obtained at least one advantage, that I set limits to my work, which would in time be finished, though not completed.

Despondency has never so far prevailed as to depress me to negligence; some faults will at last appear to be the effects of anxious diligence and persevering activity. The nice and subtle ramifications of meaning were not easily avoided by a mind intent upon accuracy, and convinced of the necessity of disentangling combinations, and separating similitudes. Many of the distinctions which to common readers appear useless and idle, will be found real and important by men versed in the school philosophy, without which no dictionary ever shall be accurately compiled, or skilfully examined.

Some senses however there are, which, though not the same, are yet so nearly allied, that they are often confounded. Most men think indistinctly, and therefore cannot speak with exactness; and consequently some examples might be indifferently put to either signification: this uncertainty is not to be imputed to me, who do not form, but register the language; who do not teach men how they should think, but relate how they have hitherto expressed their thoughts.

The imperfect sense of some examples I lamented, but could not remedy, and hope they will be compensated by innumerable passages selected with propriety, and preserved with exactness; some shining with sparks of imagination, and some replete with treasures of wisdom.

The orthography and etymology, though imperfect, are not imperfect for want of care, but because care will not always be successful, and recollection or information come too late for use.

That many terms of art and manufacture are omitted, must be frankly acknowledged; but for this defect I may boldly allege that it was unavoidable: I could not visit caverns to learn the miner's language, nor take a voyage to perfect my skill in the dialect of navigation, nor visit the warehouses of merchants, and shops of artificers, to gain the names of wares, tools and operations, of which no mention is found in books; what favourable accident, or easy enquiry brought within my reach, has not been neglected; but it had been a hopeless labour to glean up words, by courting living information, and contesting with the fullness of one, and the roughness of another.

To furnish the academicians della Crusca with words of this kind, a series of comedies called la Fiera, or the Fair, was professedly written by Buonaroti; but I had no such assistant, and therefore was content to want what they must have wanted likewise, had they not luckily been so supplied.

Nor are all words which are not found in the vocabulary, to be lamented as omissions. Of the laborious and mercantile part of the people, the diction is in a great measure casual and mutable; many of their terms are formed for some temporary or local convenience, and though current at certain times and places, are in others utterly unknown. This fugitive cant, which is always in a state of increase or decay, cannot be regarded as any part of the durable materials of a language, and therefore must be suffered to perish with other things unworthy of preservation.

Care will sometimes betray to the appearance of negligence. He that is catching opportunities which seldom occur, will suffer those to pass by unregarded, which he expects hourly to return; he that is searching for rare and remote things, will neglect those that are obvious and familiar: thus many of the most common and cursory words have been inserted with little illustration, because in gathering the authorities, I forbore to copy those which I thought likely to occur whenever they were wanted. It is remarkable that, in reviewing my collection, I found the word SEA unexemplified.

P R E F A C E.

Thus it happens, that in things difficult there is danger from ignorance, and in things easy from confidence; the mind, afraid of greatness, and disdainful of littleness, hastily withdraws herself from painful searches, and passes with scornful rapidity over tasks not adequate to her powers, sometimes too secure for caution, and again too anxious for vigorous effort; sometimes idle in a plain path, and sometimes distracted in labyrinths, and dissipated by different intentions.

A large work is difficult because it is large, even though all its parts might singly be performed with facility; where there are many things to be done, each must be allowed its share of time and labour, in the proportion only which it bears to the whole; nor can it be expected, that the stones which form the dome of a temple, should be squared and polished like the diamond of a ring.

Of the event of this work, for which, having laboured it with so much application, I cannot but have some degree of parental fondness, it is natural to form conjectures. Those who have been persuaded to think well of my design, require that it should fix our language, and put a stop to those alterations which time and chance have hitherto been suffered to make in it without opposition. With this consequence I will confess that I flattered myself for a while; but now begin to fear that I have indulged expectation which neither reason nor experience can justify. When we see men grow old and die at a certain time one after another, from century to century, we laugh at the elixir that promises to prolong life to a thousand years; and with equal justice may the lexicographer be derided, who being able to produce no example of a nation that has preserved their words and phrases from mutability, shall imagine that his dictionary can embalm his language, and secure it from corruption and decay, that it is in his power to change sublunary nature, or clear the world at once from folly, vanity, and affectation.

With this hope, however, academies have been instituted, to guard the avenues of their languages, to retain fugitives, and repulse intruders; but their vigilance and activity have hitherto been vain; sounds are too volatile and subtle for legal restraints; to enchain syllables, and to lash the wind, are equally the undertakings of pride, unwilling to measure its desires by its strength. The French language has visibly changed under the inspection of the academy; the stile of Amelot's translation of father Paul is observed by Le Courayer to be un peu passé; and no Italian will maintain, that the diction of any modern writer is not perceptibly different from that of Boccace, Machiavel, or Caro.

Total and sudden transformations of a language seldom happen; conquests and migrations are now very rare: but there are other causes of change, which, though slow in their operation, and invisible in their progress, are perhaps as much superiour to human resistance, as the revolutions of the sky, or intumescence of the tide. Commerce, however necessary, however lucrative, as it depraves the manners, corrupts the language; they that have frequent intercourse with strangers, to whom they endeavour to accommodate themselves, must in time learn a mingled dialect, like the jargon which serves the traffickers on the Mediterranean and Indian coasts. This will not always be confined to the exchange, the warehouse, or the port, but will be communicated by degrees to other ranks of the people, and be at last incorporated with the current speech.

There are likewise internal causes equally forcible. The language most likely to continue long without alteration, would be that of a nation raised a little, and but a little, above barbarity, secluded from strangers, and totally employed in procuring the conveniencies of life; either without books, or, like some of the Mahometan countries, with very few: men thus busied and unlearned, having only such words as common use requires, would perhaps long continue to express the same notions by the same signs. But no such constancy can be expected in a people polished by arts, and classed by subordination, where one part of the community is sustained and accommodated by the labour of the other. Those who have much leisure to think, will always be enlarging the stock of ideas, and every increase of knowledge, whether real or fancied, will produce new words, or combinations of words. When the mind is unchained from necessity, it will range after convenience; when it is left at large in the fields of speculation, it will shift opinions; as any custom is disused, the words that expressed it must perish with it; as any opinion grows popular, it will innovate speech in the same proportion as it alters practice.

As by the cultivation of various sciences, a language is amplified, it will be more furnished with words deflected from their original sense; the geometrician will talk of a courtier's zenith, or the excentrick virtue of a wild hero, and the physician of sanguine expectations and phlegmatick delays. Copiousness of speech will give opportunities to capricious choice, by which some words will be preferred, and others degraded; vicissitudes of fashion will enforce the use of new, or extend the signification of known terms. The tropes of poetry will make hourly encroachments, and the metaphorical will become the current sense: pronunciation will be varied by levity or ignorance, and the pen must at length comply with the tongue; illiterate writers will at one time or other, by publick infatuation, rise into renown, who, not knowing the original import of words, will use them with colloquial licentiousness, confound distinction, and forget propriety. As politeness increases, some expressions will be considered as too gross and vulgar for the delicate, others as too formal and ceremonious for the gay and airy; new phrases are therefore adopted, which must, for the same reasons, be in time dismissed. Swift, in his petty treatise on the English language, allows that new words must sometimes be introduced, but proposes that none should be suffered to become obsolete. But what makes a word obsolete, more than general agreement to forbear it? and how shall it be continued, when it conveys an offensive idea, or recalled again into the mouths of mankind, when it has once by disuse become unfamiliar, and by unfamiliarity unpleasing.

P R E F A C E.

There is another cause of alteration more prevalent than any other, which yet in the present state of the world cannot be obviated. A mixture of two languages will produce a third distinct from both, and they will always be mixed, where the chief part of education, and the most conspicuous accomplishment, is skill in ancient or in foreign tongues. He that has long cultivated another language, will find its words and combinations crowd upon his memory; and haste and negligence, refinement and affectation, will obtrude borrowed terms and exotick expressions.

The great pest of speech is frequency of translation. No book was ever turned from one language into another, without imparting something of its native idiom; this is the most mischievous and comprehensive innovation; single words may enter by thousands, and the fabrick of the tongue continue the same, but new phraseology changes much at once; it alters not the single stones of the building, but the order of the columns. If an academy should be established for the cultivation of our stile, which I, who can never wish to see dependance multiplied, hope the spirit of English liberty will hinder or destroy, let them, instead of compiling grammars and dictionaries, endeavour, with all their influence, to stop the licence of translatours, whose idleness and ignorance, if it be suffered to proceed, will reduce us to babble a dialect of France.

If the changes that we fear be thus irresistible, what remains but to acquiesce with silence, as in the other insurmountable distresses of humanity? it remains that we retard what we cannot repel, that we palliate what we cannot cure. Life may be lengthened by care, though death cannot be ultimately defeated: tongues, like governments, have a natural tendency to degeneration; we have long preserved our constitution, let us make some struggles for our language.

In hope of giving longevity to that which its own nature forbids to be immortal, I have devoted this book, the labour of years, to the honour of my country, that we may no longer yield the palm of philology to the nations of the continent. The chief glory of every people arises from its authours: whether I shall add any thing by my own writings to the reputation of English literature, must be left to time: much of my life has been lost under the pressures of disease; much has been trifled away; and much has always been spent in provision for the day that was passing over me; but I shall not think my employment useless or ignoble, if by my assistance foreign nations, and distant ages, gain access to the propagators of knowledge, and understand the teachers of truth; if my labours afford light to the repositories of science, and add celebrity to Bacon, to Hooker, to Milton, and to Boyle.

When I am animated by this wish, I look with pleasure on my book, however defective, and deliver it to the world with the spirit of a man that has endeavoured well. That it will immediately become popular I have not promised to myself: a few wild blunders, and risible absurdities, from which no work of such multiplicity was ever free, may for a time furnish folly with laughter, and harden ignorance in contempt; but useful diligence will at last prevail, and there never can be wanting some who distinguish desert; who will consider that no dictionary of a living tongue ever can be perfect, since while it is hastening to publication, some words are budding, and some falling away; that a whole life cannot be spent upon syntax and etymology, and that even a whole life would not be sufficient; that he, whose design includes whatever language can express, must often speak of what he does not understand; that a writer will sometimes be hurried by eagerness to the end, and sometimes faint with weariness under a task, which Scaliger compares to the labours of the anvil and the mine; that what is obvious is not always known, and what is known is not always present; that sudden fits of inadvertency will surprize vigilance, slight avocations will seduce attention, and casual eclipses of the mind will darken learning; and that the writer shall often in vain trace his memory at the moment of need, for that which yesterday he knew with intuitive readiness, and which will come uncalled into his thoughts to-morrow.

In this work, when it shall be found that much is omitted, let it not be forgotten that much likewise is performed; and though no book was ever spared out of tenderness to the authour, and the world is little solicitous to know whence proceeded the faults of that which it condemns; yet it may gratify curiosity to inform it, that the English Dictionary was written with little assistance of the learned, and without any patronage of the great; not in the soft obscurities of retirement, or under the shelter of academick bowers, but amidst inconvenience and distraction, in sickness and in sorrow: and it may repress the triumph of malignant criticism to observe, that if our language is not here fully displayed, I have only failed in an attempt which no human powers have hitherto completed. If the lexicons of ancient tongues, now immutably fixed, and comprised in a few volumes, be yet, after the toil of successive ages, inadequate and delusive; if the aggregated knowledge, and co-operating diligence of the Italian academicians, did not secure them from the censure of Beni; if the embodied criticks of France, when fifty years had been spent upon their work, were obliged to change its oeconomy, and give their second edition another form, I may surely be contented without the praise of perfection, which, if I could obtain, in this gloom of solitude, what would it avail me? I have protracted my work till most of those whom I wished to please, have sunk into the grave, and success and miscarriage are empty sounds: I therefore dismiss it with frigid tranquillity, having little to fear or hope from censure or from praise.

THOUGH the Britains or Welsh were the first possessors of this island, whose names are recorded, and are therefore in civil history always considered as the predecessors of the present inhabitants; yet the deduction of the English language, from the earliest times of which we have any knowledge to its present state, requires no mention of them: for we have so few words, which can, with any probability, be referred to British roots, that we justly regard the Saxons and Welsh, as nations totally distinct. It has been conjectured, that when the Saxons seized this country, they suffered the Britains to live among them in a state of vassalage, employed in the culture of the ground, and other laborious and ignoble services. But it is scarcely possible, that a nation, however depressed, should have been mixed in considerable numbers with the Saxons without some communication of their tongue, and therefore it may, with great reason, be imagined, that those, who were not sheltered in the mountains, perished by the sword.

The whole fabrick and scheme of the English language is Gothick or Teutonic: it is a dialect of that tongue, which prevails over all the northern countries of Europe, except those where the Sclavonian is spoken. Of these languages Dr. Hickes has thus exhibited the genealogy.

Of the Gothick, the only monument remaining is a copy of the gospels somewhat mutilated, which, from the silver with which the characters are adorned, is called the silver book. It is now preserved at Upsal, and has been twice published. Whether the diction of this venerable manuscript be purely Gothick, has been doubted; it seems however to exhibit the most ancient dialect now to be found of the Teutonic race, and the Saxon, which is the original of the present English, was either derived from it, or both descended from some common parent.

What was the form of the Saxon language, when, about the year 450, they first entered Britain, cannot now be known. They seem to have been a people without learning, and very probably without an alphabet; their speech therefore, having been always cursory and extemporaneous, must have been artless and unconnected, without any modes of transition or involution of clauses; which abruptness and inconnection may be observed even in their later writings. This barbarity may be supposed to have continued during their wars with the Britains, which for a time left them no leisure for softer studies; nor is there any reason for supposing it abated, till the year 570, when Augustine came from Rome to convert them to Christianity. The Christian religion always implies or produces a certain degree of civility and learning; they then became by degrees acquainted with the Roman language, and so gained, from time to time, some knowledge and elegance, till in three centuries they had formed a language capable of expressing all the sentiments of a civilised people, as appears by king Alfred's paraphrase or imitation of Boethius, and his short preface, which I have selected as the first specimen of ancient English.

Of the following version of the gospels the age is not certainly known, but it was probably written between the time of Alfred and that of the Norman conquest, and therefore may properly be inserted here.

Translations seldom afford just specimens of a language, and least of all those in which a scrupulous and verbal interpretation is endeavoured, because they retain the phraseology and structure of the original tongue;

This may perhaps be considered as a specimen of the Saxon in its highest state of purity, for here are scarcely any words borrowed from the Roman dialects.

yet they have often this convenience, that the same book, being translated in different ages, affords opportunity of marking the gradations of change, and bringing one age into comparison with another. For this purpose I have placed the Saxon version and that of Wickliffe, written about the year 1380, in opposite columns; because the convenience of easy collation seems greater than that of regular chronology.

LUK, CHAP. I.

IN the dayes of Eroude kyng of Judee ther was a preſt Zacarye by name: of the ſort of Abia, and his wyf was of the doughtriſ of Aaron: and hir name was Elizabeth.

2 An bothe weren juſte bifore God: goynge in alle the maundementis and juſtifyingis of the Lord with- outen playnt.

3 And thei hadden no child, for Elizabeth was bareyn and bothe weren of greet age in her dayes.

4 And it biſel that whanne Zacarye ſchould do the office of preſthod in the ordir of his courſe to fore God.

5 Aſtir the cuſtom of the preſthod, he wente forth by lot and entride into the temple to encenſen.

6 And at the multitude of the puple was without forth and preyede in the our of encenſying.

7 And an aungel of the Lord apperide to him: and ſtood on the right haſ of the auter of encenſe.

8 And Zacarye ſeynge was aſrayed: and drede ſel upon him.

9 And the aungel ſayde to him, Zacarye drede thou not: for thy preier is herd, and Elizabeth thi wiſ ſchal bere to thee a ſone: and his name ſchal be clepid Jon.

10 And joye and gladyng ſchal be to thee: and manye ſchulen have joye in hiſ natyvyte.

11 For he ſchal be great bifore the Lord: and he ſchal not drinke wyn ne ſydyr, and he ſchal be fulſild with the holy goſt yit of hiſ modir wombe.

12 And he ſchal converte manye of the children of Iſrael to her Lord God.

13 And he ſchal go bifore in the ſpiryte and vertu of Helye: and he ſchal turne the hertis of the ſadriſ to the ſoniſ, and men out of beleewe: to the prudence of juſt men, to make redy a perſyt puple to the Lord.

18 Ða cwæð Zacharias to þam engele. Ðpanun pat ic þis. ic eom nu eald. and min wif on hýre dagum forðeode:

46 Ða cwæð Maria. Min ƿapel mæſrað Ðrihten.

14 And Zacarye ſeyde to the aungel: wherof ſchal Y wyte this? for Y am old: and my wyf hath gon fer in hir dayes.

15 And the aungel anſwerde and ſeyde to him, for Y am Gabriel that ſtonde nygh biſore God, and Y am ſent to thee to ſpeke and to euangelife to thee theſe thingis, and lo thou ſhalt be dourbe.

16 And thou ſhalt not mowe ſpeke, til into the day in which theſe thingis ſchulen be don. for thou haſt not beleved to my wordis, whiche ſchulen be fulfilled in her tyme.

17 And the ƿuple was abidyng: Zacarye: and thei wondriden that he taryede in the temple.

18 And he gede out and myghte not ſpeke to hem: and thei knewen that he hadde ſeyn a viſioun in the temple, and he bekenide to hem: and he dwellide ſtille dourbe.

19 And it was don whanne the dayes of hiſ office wæren fulfilled: he wente into hiſ houſ.

20 And aſtir theſe dayes Elizabeth hiſ wiſ conſeyvede and hidde hiſ fyve monethis and ſeyde.

21 For ſo the Lord dide to me in the dayes in whiche he biheld to take away my reprof among men.

22 But in the ſixte monethe the aungel Gabriel was ſent from God: into a cytee of Galilee whos name was Nazareth.

23 To a maydun weddid to a man: whos name was Joſeph of the houſ of Dauith, and the name of the maydun was Marye.

24 And the aungel entride to hiſ, and ſayde, heil ful of grace the Lord be with thee: bleſſid be thou among wymm: n.

25 And whanne ſche hadde herd: ſche was troublid in hiſ word, and thoughte what manner ſalutacioun this was.

26 And the aungel ſeid to hiſ, ne drede not thou Marye: for thou haſt founden grace anentis God.

27 Lo thou ſhalt conſeyve in wombe, and ſhalt bere a ſone: and thou ſhalt clepe hiſ name Jheſus.

28 This ſhall be gret: and he ſchal be clepid the ſone of higheſte, and the Lord God ſchal geve to him the ſeete of Dauith hiſ fadir.

29 And he ſchal regne in the houſ of Jacob withouten ende, and of hiſ rewme ſchal be noon ende.

30 And Marye ſeyde to the aungel, on what maner ſchal this thing be don? for Y knowe not man.

31 And the aungel anſwerde and ſeyde to hiſ, the holy Goſt ſchal come fro above into thee: and the vertu of the higheſte ſchal ouer ſadowe thee: and therfore that holy thing that ſchal be borun of thee: ſchal be clepide the ſone of God.

32 And to Elizabeth thi coſyn, and ſche alſo hath conſeyved a ſone in hiſ eelde, and this monethe is the ſixte to hiſ that is clepid bareyn.

33 For every word ſchal not be impoſſyble anentis God.

34 And Marye ſeide to the hond maydun of the Lord: be it doon to me aſtir thi word; and the aungel departide fro hiſ.

35 And Marye roos up in tho dayes and wente with haſte into the mouhtaynes into a citee of Judee.

36 And ſche entride into the houſ of Zacarye and grette Elizabeth.

37 And it was don as Elizabeth herde the ſalutacioun of Marye the young childe in hiſ wombe gladide, and Elizabeth was fulfilled with the holy Goſt.

38 And cryede with a gret voice and ſeyde, bleſſid be thou among wymm: n and bleſſid be the fruyt of thy wombe.

39 And wherof is this thing to me, that the modir of my Lord come to me?

40 For lo as the vois of thi ſalutacioun was maad in myn eeris: the yong childe gladide in joye in my wombe.

41 And bleſſid be thou that haſt beleved: for thilke thingis that ben ſeid of the Lord to thee ſchulen be parfytly don.

42 And Marye ſeyde, my ſoul magnifieth the Lord.

that I am blestid.

45 For he that is mighti hath don to me grete thingis, and his name is holy.

46 And his merly is fro kyndrede into kyndredis to men that dreden him.

47 He made myght in his arm, he scateride proude men with the thoughte of his herte.

48 He sette down myghty men fro seete and enhaunside meke men.

49 He hath fulfillid hungry men with goodis, and he has left riche men voide.

50 He havyng mynde of his mercy took up Iſrael his child,

51 As he hath spokun to oure fadris, to Abraham, and to his seed into worldis.

52 And Marye dwellide with hir as it were thre monethis and turned agen into his hous.

53 But the tyme of beringe child was fulfillid to Elizabeth, and sche bar a son.

54 And the neyghbouris and cosyns of hir herden that the Lord hadde magnified his mercy with hir, and thei thankiden him.

55 And it was doon in the eightithe day thei camen to circumside the child, and thei clepiden him Zacarye by the name of his fadir.

56 And his modir answeride and seide, nay; but he schal be clepid Jon.

57 And thei seiden to hir, for no man is in thi kyn-rede that is clepid this name.

58 And thei bikenyden to his fadir, what he wolde that he were clepid.

59 And he axinge a poyntel wroot seiynge, Jon is his name, and alle men wondriden.

60 And annoon his mouth was openyd and his tunge, and he spak and blestide God.

61 And drede was maad on all hir neyghbouris, and all the wordis weren publischid on alle the mounteynes of Judee.

62 And alle men that herden puttiden in her herte, and seiden what manner child schal this be, for the hond of the Lord was with him.

63 And Zacarye his fadir was fulfillid with the holy Gost, and profeciede and seide.

64 Blestid be the Lord God of Iſrael, for he has visitid and maad redempcioun of his puple.

65 And he has rered to us an horn of helthe in the hous of Dauith his child.

66 As he spak by the mouth of hise holy prophetis that weren fro the world.

67 Helth fro oure enemyes, and fro the hond of alle men that hatiden us.

68 To do mercy with oure fadris, and to have mynde of his holy testament.

69 The grete ooth that he swoor to Abraham our fadir,

70 To geve himself to us, that we without drede delyvered fro the hond of oure enemyes serve to him,

71 In holynesse and rightwisnesse before him, in alle our dayes.

72 And thou child schalt be clepid the profete of the higheste, for thou schalt go before the face of the Lord to make redy hise weyes.

73 To geve science of heeth to his puple into remissioun of her synnes.

74 By the inwardenes of the mercy of oure God, in the which he springyng up fro on high hath visited us.

75 To geve light to them that sitten in derknessis, and in schadowe of deeth, to dresse oure feet into the weye of pees;

76 And the child wexide, and was confortid in spiryt, and was in desert placis till to the day of his schewing to Yſrael.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Of the Saxon poetry some specimen is necessary, though our ignorance of the laws of their metre and the quantities of their syllables, which it would be very difficult, perhaps impossible, to recover, excludes us from that pleasure which the old bards undoubtedly gave to their contemporaries.

The first poetry of the Saxons was without rhyme, and consequently must have depended upon the quantity of their syllables; but they began in time to imitate their neighbours, and close their verses with correspondent sounds.

The two passages, which I have selected, contain apparently the rudiments of our present lyric measures, and the writers may be justly considered as the genuine ancestors of the English poets.

About the year 1150, the Saxon began to take a form in which the beginning of the present English may be plainly discovered; this change seems not to have been the effect of the Norman conquest, for very few French words are found to have been introduced in the first hundred years after it; the language must therefore have been altered by causes like those which, notwithstanding the care of writers and societies instituted to obviate them, are even now daily making innovations in every living language. I have exhibited a specimen of the language of this age from the year 1135 to 1140 of the Saxon chronicle, of which the latter part was apparently written near the time to which it relates.

Nearly about this time, the following pieces of poetry ſeem to have been written, of which I have inſerted only ſhort fragments; the firſt is a rude attempt at the preſent meaſure of eight ſyllables, and the ſecond is a natural introduction to Robert of Glouceſter, being compoſed in the ſame meaſure, which, however rude and barbarous it may ſeem, taught the way to the Alexan-drines of the French poetry.

In theſe fragments, the adulteration of the Saxon tongue, by a mixture of the Norman, becomes apparent; yet it is not ſo much changed by the admixture of new words, which might be imputed to commerce with the continent, as by changes of its own forms and terminations; for which no reaſon can be given.

Hitherto the language uſed in this iſland, however different in ſucceſſive time, may be called Saxon; nor can it be expected, from the nature of things gradually changing, that any time can be aſſigned, when the Saxon may be ſaid to ceaſe, and the Engliſh to commence. Robert of Glouceſter however, who is placed by the criticks in the thirteenth century, ſeems to have uſed a kind of intermediate dicſion, neither Saxon nor Engliſh;
in his work therefore we ſee the tranſition exhibited, and, as he is the firſt of our writers in rhyme, of whom any large work remains, a more extenſive quotation is extracted. He writes apparently in the ſame meaſure with the foregoing authour of St. Margarete, which po-liſhed into greater exactneſs, appeared to our anceſtors ſo ſuitable to the genius of the Engliſh language, that it was continued in uſe almoſt to the middle of the ſeventeenth century.

 Ac hii adde alle ýbe aſſend, ȝýf þe nýȝt nadde y be.
 Tueye bataýles her after in þe ſulf ȝere Hii ſmyte, and at boþe þe heþene mayſtres were.

þe kýng Aldered ſone þo þen weý of deþ nome,
 As yt vel, þe výtý ȝer of ys kýnedom.
 At Wýmbourne he was ybured, as God ȝef þat cas, þe gode Alfred, ys broþer, after hym kýng was.

ALFRÉD, þys noble man, as in þe ȝer of grace
 he nom
 Eyȝte hondred & fyxtý & tuelue þe kýnedom.
 Ariſt he adde at Rome ýbe, &, vor ys grete wýſdom, þe pope Leon hym bleſſede, þo he þader com,
 And þe kýnge's croune of hys lond, þat in þys lond gut ys:
 And he led hym to be kýng, ar he kýng were ýwýs.
 An he was kýng of Engeland, of alle þat þer come,
 þat vorſt þus ýlad was of þe pope of Rome,
 An ſupþe oþer after hym of þe erchebýſſopes echon.
 So þat hýuor hym pore kýng nas þer non.
 In þe Souþ ſýde of Temfe nýne bataýles he nome
 Aȝen þe Deneýs þe vorſt ȝer of ys kýnedom.
 Nýe ȝer he was þus in þys lond in bataýle & in wo,
 An ofte ſýþe aboue was, and býneþe oſtor mo;
 So longe, þat hym nere bý leuede bote þre ſýren in ys

 And ſupþe he ȝef hem large ȝýſtes, and let hym wende.
 Hii, þat nolde Criſtyn be, of lande ſlowe þo,
 And byȝonde ſec in France dude wel muche wo.
 gut þe ſſewen come aȝen, and muche wo here wroȝte.
 Ac þe kýng Alfred atte laſte to ſſame hem euere broȝte.

Kyng Alfred was þe wýsost kýng, þat long was býuore.
Vor þey me segge þe lawes beþ in worre tyme vorlore,
Nas yt nozt so hiis daye. vor þey he in worre were,
Lawes he made rýgtuollere, and strengore þan er were.
Clerc he was god ynou, and gut, as me telleþ me,
He was more þan ten zer old, ar he coupe ys abece.
Ac ys gode moder ofte smale gýftes hym tok,
Vor to byleue oper ple, and loký on ys boke.
So þat bý por clergýe ys rýgt lawes he wonde,
þat neuere er nere y mad, to gouerný ys lond.
And vor þe worre was so muche of þe luper Deneys, þe men of þýs fulue lond were of þe worse peys.

Hýs lýf eýgte and tuentý zer in ys kýnedom ýlaste.
After ys deþ he was ýbured at Wýnchestre atte laste.

Sir John Mandeville wrote, as he himself informs us, in the fourteenth century, and his work, which comprising a relation of many different particulars, consequently required the use of many words and phrases, may be properly specified in this place. Of the following quotations, I have chosen the first, because it shows, in some measure, the state of European science as well as of the English tongue; and the second, because it is valuable for the force of thought and beauty of expression.

IN that lond, ne in many othere bezonde that, no man may see the sterre transmontane, that is clept the sterre of the see, that is unmevabe, and that is toward the Northe, that we clepen the lode sterre. But men seen another sterre, the contrarie to him, that is toward the Southe, that is clept Antartyk. And right as the schip men taken here avys here, and governe hem be the lode sterre, right so don schip men bezonde the parties, be the sterre of the Southe, the which sterre apperethe not to us. And this sterre, that is toward the Northe, that wee clepen the lode sterre, ne apperethe not to hem. For whiche cause, men may wel perceyve, that the lond and the see ben of rownde schapp and forme. For the partie of the firmament schewethe in o contree, that schewethe not in another contree. And men may well preven be experience and sotyle compassiement of wytt, that zif a man fond passages be schippes, that wolde go to serchen the world, men myghte go be schippe alle aboute the world, and aboven and benethen. The whiche thing I prove thus, afre that I have seyn. For I have been toward the parties of Braban, and beholden the Astrolabre, that the sterre that is clept the transmontayne, is 53 degrees highe. And more forthere in Almayne and Bewme, it hathe 58 degrees. And more forthe toward the parties septentrioneles, it is 62 degrees of heghte, and certyn mynutes. For I my self have mesured it by the Astrolabre. Now schulle ze knowe, that azen the Transmontayne, is the tother sterre, that is clept Antartyke; as I have seyde before. And tho 2 sterres ne meeven nevere. And be hem turnethe alle the firmament, righte as dothe a wheel, that turnethe be his axille tree: so that tho sterres beren the firmament in 2 egalle parties; so that it hathe als mochel aboven, as it hathe benethen. Afre this, I have gon toward the parties meridionales, that is toward the Southe: and I have founden, that in Lybye, men seen first the sterre Antartyk. And so fer I have gon more in tho contrees, that I have founde that sterre more highe; so that toward the highe Lybye, it is 18 degrees of heghte, and certeyn minutes (of the whiche, 60 minutes maken a degree) afre goynge be see and be londe, toward this contree, of that I have spoke, and to other yles and londes bezonde that contree, I have founden the sterre Antartyk of 33 degrees of heghte, and mo mynutes. And zif I hadde had companye and schippyng, for to go more bezonde, I trowe wel in certyn, that wee scholde have seen alle the roundnesse of the firmament alle aboute. For as I have seyde zou be for, the half of the firmament is betwene tho 2 sterres: the whiche halfondelle I have seyn. And of the tother halfondelle, I have seyn toward the Northe, undre the Transmontane 62 degrees and 10 mynutes; and toward the partie meridionale, I have seen undre the Antartyk 33 degrees and 16 mynutes: and thanne the halfondelle of the firmament in alle, ne holdethe not but 180 degrees. And of tho 180, I have seen 62 on that o part, and 33 on that other part, that ben 95 degrees, and nyghe the halfondelle of a degree; and so there ne faylethe but that I have seen alle the firmament, saf 84 degrees and the halfondelle of a degree; and that is not the fourthe part of the firmament. For the 4 partie of the roundnesse of the firmament holt 90 degrees: so there faylethe but 5 degrees and an half, of the fourthe partie. And also I have seen the 3 parties of alle the roundnesse of the firmament, and more zit 5 degrees and an half. Be the whiche I seye zou certeynly, that men may envirowne alle the erthe of alle the world, as wel undre as aboven, and turnen azen to his contree, that hadde companye and schippyng and conduyt: and alle weyes he scholde fynde men, londes, and yles, als wel as in this contree. For zee wyten welle, that thei that ben toward the Antartyk, thei ben streghte, feet azen feet of hem, that dwellen undre the transmontane; als wel as wee and thei that dwellyn under us, ben feet azenft feet. For alle the parties of see and of lond han here appositees, habitables or trepassables, and thei of this half and bezond half. And wytethe wel, that afre that, that I may parceyve and comprehende, the londes of Prestre John, emperour of Ynde ben undre us. For in goynge from Scotland or from Englund toward Jerusalem, men gon upward always. For oure lond is in the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the West: and the lond of Prestre John is the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the Est: and thei han there the day, whan wee have the nyghte, and also highe to the contrarie, thei han the nyghte, whan wee han the day. For the erthe and the see ben of round forme and schapp, as I have seyde befor. And that that men gon upward to o cost, men gon downward to another cost. Also zee have herd me seye, that Jerusalem is in the myddes of the world; and that may men preven and schewen there, be a spere, that is pighte in to the erthe, upon the hour of mydday, whan it is equenoxium, that schewethe no schadwe on no syde. And that it scholde ben in the myddes of the world, David wytnesse the it in the Psautre, where he seythe, Deus operatus est salutē in medio terre. Thanne thei that parten fro the parties of the West, for to go toward Jerusalem, als many iorneyes as thei gon upward for to go thidre, in als many iorneyes may thei gon fro Jerusalem, unto other consynyes of the superficialtie of the erthe bezonde. And whan men gon bezonde tho iorneyes, towarde Ynde and to the foreyn yles, alle is envyrnyng the roundnesse of the erthe and of the see, undre oure contrees on this half. And therefore hathe it befallen many tymes of o thing, that I have herd cownted, whan I was zong; how a worthi man departed sometyme from oure contrees, for to go serche the world. And so he passed Ynde, and the yles bezonde Ynde; where ben mo than 5000 yles: and so longe he wente be see and lond, and so envyround the world be many seysons, that he fond an yle, where he herde speke his owne langage, callynge on oxen in the plowghe, suche wordes as men speken to bestes in his owne contree: whereof he hadde gret mervayle: for he knewe not how it myghte be. But I seye, that he had gon so longe, be londe and be see, that he had envyround alle the erthe, that he was comen azen envyrounyng, that is to seye, goynge aboute, unto his owne marches, zif he wolde have passed forthe, til he had founden his contree and his owne knouleche. But he turned azen from thens, from whens he was come fro; and so he losse moche peynesfulle labour, as him self seyde, a gret while afre, that he was comen hom. For it befelle afre, that he wente in to Norweye; and there tempest of the see toke him; and he arryved in an yle; and whan he was in that yle, he knew wel, that it was the yle, where he had herd speke his owne langage before, and the callynge of the oxen at the plowghe: and that was possible thinge. But how it semethe to symple men unlearned, that men ne mowe not go undre the erthe, and also that men scholde falle toward the hevene, from undre! But that may not be, upon lesse, than wee mowe falle toward hevene, fro the erthe, where wee ben. For fro what partie of the erthe, that men duelle, outhen aboven or benethen, it semethe alweyes to hem that duellen, that thei gon more righte than any other folk. And righte as it semethe to us, that thei ben undre us, righte so it semethe hem, that wee ben undre hem. For zif a man myghte falle fro the erthe unto the firmament; be grettere refoun, the erthe and the see, that ben so grete and so hevy, scholde fallen to the firmament: but that may not be: and therfore seithe oure Lord God, Non timeas me, qui suspendi terrā ex nichilo? And alle be it, that it be possible thing, that men may so envyrone alle the world, natheles of a 1000 perfonen, on ne myghte not happen to returnen in to his contree. For, for the gretneffe of the erthe and of the see, men may go be a 1000 and a 1000 other weyes, that no man cowde redye him perfytely toward the parties that he cam fro, but zif it were be aventure and happ, or be the grace of God. For the erthe is fulle large and fulle gret, and hole in roundneffe and aboute envyroun, be aboven and be benethen 20425 myles, afre the opynyoun of the olde wise astronomeres. And here seyenges I repreve noughte. But afre my lytylle wyt, it semethe me, savyng here reverence, that it is more, And for to have bettere understondynge, I seye thus, be ther ymagyned a figure, that hathe a gret compas; and aboute the poynt of the gret compas, that is clept the centre, be made another litille compas: than afre, be the gret compas devyfed be lines in manye parties; and that alle the lynes meeten at the centre; so that in as many parties, as the grete compas schal be departed, in als manye, schalle be departed the litille, that is aboute the centre, alle be it, that the spaces ben lesse. Now thanne, be the gret compas represented for the firmament, and the litille compas represented for the erthe. Now thanne the firmament is devyfed, be astronomeres, in 12 signes; and every signe is devyfed in 30 degrees, that is 360 degrees, that the firmament hathe aboven. Also, be the erthe devyfed in als many parties, as the firmament; and lat every partye answere to a degree of the firmament: and wytethe it wel, that afre the auctoures of astronomye, 700 furlonges of erthe answeren to a degree of the firmament; and tho ben 87 miles and 4 furlonges. Now be that here multiplyed be 360 fithes; and than thei ben 31500 myles, every of 8 furlonges, afre myles of oure contree. So moche hathe the erthe in roundneffe, and of heghte envyroun, afre myn opynyoun and myn undirstondynge. And zee schulle undirstonde, that afre the opynyoun of olde wise philosophres and astronomeres, oure contree ne Ire-lond ne Wales ne Scotlond ne Norweye ne the other yles costynge to hem, ne ben not in the superficialte cownted aboven the erthe; as it schewethe be alle the bokes of astronomye. For the superficialtee of the erthe is departed in 7 parties, for the 7 planetes: and tho parties ben clept clymates. And oure parties be not of the 7 clymates: for thei ben descendynge toward the West. And also these yles of Ynde, which beth evene azenst us, beth noght reckned in the climates: for thei ben azenst us, that ben in the lowe contree. And the 7 clymates strecken hem envyrounynge the world.

II. And I John Maundevylle knyghte aboveseyd, (alle thoughe I be unworthi) that departed from oure contrees and passed the see, the zeer of grace 1322. that have passed manye londes and manye yles and contrees, and cerched manye fulle straunge places, and have ben in many a fulle gode honourable companye, and at many a faire dede of armes, (alle be it that I dide none myself, for myn unable insuffisance) now I am comen hom (mawgree my self) to reste: for gowtes, artetykes, that me distreyne, tho diffynen the ende of my labour, azenst my wille (God knowethe.) And thus takynge solace in my wretched reste, recordynge the tyme passed,

I have fulfilled theise thinges and putte hem wryten in this boke, as it wolde come in to my mynde, the zeer of grace 1356 in the 34 zeer that I departede from oure contrees. Wherefore I preye to alle the redere and hereres of this boke, zif it plesse hem, that thei wolde preyen to God for me: and I schalle preye for hem. And alle tho that seyn for me a Pater noster, with an Ave Maria, that God forseve me my synnes, I make hem partneres and graunte hem part of alle the gode pilgrimages and of alle the gode dedes, that I have don, zif ony be to his plesance: and noghte only of tho, but of alle that evere I schalle do unto my lyfes ende. And I beseeche Almyghty God, fro whom alle godenesse and grace comethe fro, that he vouchesaf, of his excellent mercy and habundant grace, to fulle fylle hire soulles with inspiracioun of the Holy Gost, in makynge defence of alle hire gostly enemyes here in erthe, to hire salvacioun, bothe of body and soule; to worschipe and thankynge of him, that is three and on, with outen begynnynge and withouten endynge; that is, with outen qualitee, good, and with outen quantytee, gret; that in alle places is present, and alle thinges contenynynge; the whiche that no goodnesse may amende, ne non evelle empeyre; that in perfeyte trynytee lyveth and regneth God, be alle worldes and be alle tymes. Amen, Amen, Amen.

The first of our authours, who can be properly said to have written English, was Sir John Gower, who, in his Confession of a Lover, calls Chaucer his disciple, and may therefore be considered as the father of our poetry.

NOW E for to speke of the commune,
It is to drede of that fortune,
Which hath befall in sondrye londes:
But ofte for defaute of bondes
All fodeinly, er it be wist,
A tunne, whan his lie arist
Tobreketh, and renneth all aboute,
Whiche els shulde nought gone out.
And eke full ofte a littell skare
Vpon a banke, er men be ware,
Let in the streame, whiche with gret peine,
If any man it shall restreine.
Where lawe failleth, errour groweth.
He is not wise, who that ne troweth.
For it hath proued oft er this.
And thus the common clamour is
In euery londe, where people dwelleth:
And eche in his complainte telleth,
How that the worlde is miswent,
And thervpon his argument
Yeueth euery man in sondrie wise:
But what man wolde him selfe auise
His conscience, and nought misuse,
He maie well at the first excuse
His god, whiche euer stant in one,
In him there is defaute none
So must it stande vpon vs felue,
Nought only vpon ten ne twelue,
But plenarly vpon vs all.
For man is cause of that shall fall.

The history of our language is now brought to the point at which the history of our poetry is generally supposed to commence, the time of the illustrious Geoffrey Chaucer, who may perhaps, with great justice, be stiled the first of our versifiers who wrote poetically. He does not however appear to have deserved all the praise which he has received, or all the censure that he has suffered. Dryden, who mistakes genius for learning, and, in confidence of his abilities, ventured to write of what he had not examined, ascribes to Chaucer the first refinement of our numbers, the first production of easy and natural rhymes, and the improvement of our language, by words borrowed from the more polished languages of the continent. Skinner contrarily blames him in harsh terms for having vitiated his native speech by whole cartloads of foreign words. But he that reads the works of Gower will find smooth numbers and easy rhymes, of which Chaucer is supposed to have been the inventor, and the French words, whether good or bad, of which Chaucer is charged as the importer. Some innovations he might probably make, like others, in the infancy of our poetry, which the paucity of books does allow us to discover with particular exactness; but the works of Gower and Lydgate sufficiently evince, that his diction was in general like that of his contemporaries: and some improvements he undoubtedly made by the various dispositions of his rhymes, and by the mixture

CHAUCER.

ALAS! I wepyng am constrained to begin verse of sorowfull matter, that whilom in florishyng studie made delitable dities. For lo! rendyng muses of Poetes enditen to me thynges to be writen, and drierie teres. At laste no drede ne might overcame tho muses, that thei ne werren fellowes, and foloweden my waie, that is to saie, when I was exiled, thei that weren of my youth whilom welfull and grene, comforten now sorowfull wierdes of me olde man: for elde is comen unwarely upon me, hasted by the harmes that I have, and sorowe hath commaunded his age to be in me. Heres hore aren shad overtimeliche upon my hed: and the slacke skinne trembleth of mine emptied bodie. Tilke deth of men is welefull, that he ne cometh not in yeres that be swete, but cometh to wretches often icleped: Alas, alas! with how dese an ere deth cruell turneth awaie fro wretches, and naieth for to close wepyng eyen. While fortune unfaithfull favoured me with light godes, that sorowfull houre, that is to saie, the deth, had almoste drete myne hedde: but now for fortune cloudie hath chaunged her decevable chere to mewarde, myne unpitous life draweth along ungreable dwellynges. O ye my frendes, what, or whereto avaunted ye me to ben welfull? For he that hath fallin, stode in no stedfast degre.

IN the mene while, that I still record these thynges with my self, and marked my wepelie complainte with office of pointtell: I saugh stondyng aboven the hight of myn hed a woman of full grete reverence, by semblaunt. Her eyen brennyng, and clere, seyng over the common might of menne, with a lively colour, and with soche vigour and strength that it ne might not be nempned, all were it so, that she were full of so grete age, that menne woulden not trowen in no manere, that she were of our elde.

The stature of her was of doutous Judgemente, for sometyme she constrained and inronke her selven, like to the common mesure of menne: And sometyme it semed, that she touched the heven with the hight of her hedde. And when she hove her hedde higher, she perced the self heven, so that the sight of menne lokyng was in ydell: her clothes wer maked of right delie thredes, and subtel craft of perdurable matter. The whiche clothes she had woven with her owne handes, as I knewe well after by her self declaryng, and shewyng to me the beautie: The whiche clothes a darknesse of a forleten and dispised elde had dusked and darked, as it is wonte to darke by smoked Images.

In the netherest hemme and border of these clothes menne redde iwoven therein a Grekishe A. that signifieth the life active, and above that letter, in the hiest bordure, a Grekishe C. that signifieth the life contemplative. And betwene these two letters there were seen degrees nobly wrought, in maner of ladders, by whiche degrees menne might climben from the netherest letter to the upperest: nathelesse handes of some men hadden kerve that clothe, by violence or by strength, and of different numbers, in which he seems to have been happy and judicious. I have selected several specimens both of his prose and verse; and among them, part of his translation of Boetius, to which another version, made in the time of queen Mary, is opposed. It would be improper to quote very sparingly an authour of so much reputation, or to make very large extracts from a book so generally known.

COLVILLE.

ITHAT in tyme of prosperite, and floryshyng studye, made pleasaunte and delectable dities, or verses: alas now beyng heauy and sad ouerthrowen in aduersitie, am compelled to sele and tast heuines and greif. Beholde the muses Poeticall, that is to saye: the pleasure that is in poetes verses, do appoynt me, and compel me to writ these verses in meter, and the sorowfull verses do wet my wretched face with very waterye teares, yssuinge out of my eyes for sorowe. Whiche muses no feare without doute could ouercome, but that they wold folow me in my iourney of exile or banishment. Sometyne the ioye of happy and lusty delectable youth dyd comfort me, and nowe the course of sorowfull olde age causeth me to reioyse. For hasty old age vnloked for is come vpon me with al her incommodities and euyls, and sorow hath commaunded and broughte me into the same old age, that is to say: that sorowe causeth me to be olde, before my time come of olde age. The hoer heares do growe vntimely vpon my heade, and my reuiled skynne trembleth my flesh, cleane consumed and wasted with sorowe. Mannes death is happy, that cometh not in youth, when a man is lustye, and in pleasure or welth: but in time of aduersitie, when it is often desyred. Alas Alas howe dull and desse be the eares of cruel death vnto men in misery that would sayne dye: and yet refusythe to come and shutte vp theyr carefull wepyng eyes. Whiles that false fortune fauoryd me with her transitorye goodes, then the howre of death had almost ouercom me. That is to say deathe was redy to oppresse me when I was in prosperitie. Nowe for by cause that fortune beyng turned, from prosperitie into aduersitie (as the clere day is darkyd with cloudes) and hath chaungyd her deceyuable countenance: my wretched life is yet prolonged and doth continue in dolour. O my frendes why haue you so often boasted me, sayinge that I was happy when I had honor possessions riches, and authoritie whych be transitory thynges. He that hath fallen was in no stedfast degre.

WHYLES that I considerydde pryuylye with my selfe the thynges before sayd, and descrybed my wofull complaynte after the maner and offyce of a wrytter, me thought I sawe a woman stand ouer my head of a reuerend countenance, hauyng quycke and glysteryng clere eye, aboue the common sorte of men in lyuely and delectable coloure, and ful of strength, although she semed so olde that by no meanes she is thought to be one of this oure tyme, her stature is of douteful knowledge, for nowe she shewethe herselfe at the commen length or statur of men, and other whiles she semeth so high, as though she touched heuen with the crown of her hed. And when she wold stretch fourth her hed hygher, it also perced thorough heauen, so that mens syghte coulde not attaine to behold her. Her vestures or cloths were perfyte of the finyste thredes, and subtyll workemanshyp, and of substaunce permanent, whych vesturs she had wouen with her own handes as I perceyued after by her owne saynge. The kynde or beawtye of the whyche vestures, a certayne darkenes or rather ignoraunce of oldenes forgotten hadde obscuryd and darkened, as the smoke is wont to darken Images that stand nyghe the smoke. In the lower parte of the said vestures was read the greke letter P. wouen whych signifyeth practise or actyffe, and in the hygher part of the vestures the greke letter. T. whych estandeth for theorica, that signifieth speculation or contemplation. And betwene both the sayd letters were sene certayne degrees, wrought after the maner of ladders, wherein was as it were a passage or waye in steppes or degrees from the lower part wher the letter. P. was which is vnderstand from practys or actyf, unto everiche everiche manne of 'hem had borne awaie soche peces, as he might getten. And forsothe this foresaied woman bare smale bokes in her right hande, and in her left hand she bare a scepter. And when she sawe these Poeticall muses approchyng about my bed, and endityng wordes to my wepynges, she was a litle amoved, and glowed with cruell eyen. Who (qð she) hath suffered approchen to this like manne these commen strompettes, of which is the place that menne callen Theatre, the whiche onely ne affwagen not his sorowes with remedies, but thei would feden and norishe hym with swete venime? Forsothe, that ben tho that with thornes, and prickynge of talentes of affections, whiche that ben nothyng fructuous nor profitable, distroien the Corne, plentuous of fructes of reson. For thei holden hertes of men in usage, but thei ne deliver no folke fro maladie. But if ye muses had withdrawn fro me with your flatteries any unconnyng and unprofitable manne, as ben wont to finde communly among the peple, I would well suffre the lasse grevously. For why, in soche an unprofitable man myne ententes were nothyng endamaged. But ye withdrawn fro me this man, that hath ben nourished in my studies or scoles of Eleaticis, and of Academicis in Grece. But goeth now rather awaie ye Mermaidens, whiche that ben swete, till it be at the last, and suffreth this man to be cured and heled by my muses, that is to say, by my notefull sciences. And thus this companie of muses iblamed casten wrothly the chere downward to the yerth, and shewing by rednesse ther shame, thei passeden sorowfully the thresholde. And I of whom the sight plounged in teres was darked, so that I ne might not know what that woman was, of so Imperial aucthoritie, I woxe all abashed and stonied, and cast my sight doune to the yerth, and began still for to abide what she would doen afterward. Then came she nere, and set her doune upon the utterest corner of my bed, and she beholding my chere, that was cast to the yerth, hevie and grevous of wepyng, complained with these wordes (that I shall saine) the perturbacion of my thought.

The conclusions of the ASTROLABIE.

This book (written to his son in the year of our Lord 1391, and in the 14 of King Richard II.) standeth so good at this day, especially for the horizon of Oxford, as in the opinion of the learned it cannot be amended, says an Edit. of Chaucer.

LYTEL Lowys my sonne, I perceve well by certaine evidences thyne abylyte to lerne scyences, touching nombres and proporcions, and also well confydre I thy besye prayer in especyal to lerne the tretyse of the astrolabye. Than for as moche as a philosopher saithe, he wrapeth hym in his frende, that condiscendeth to the ryghtfull prayers of his frende: therefore I have given the a sufficient astrolabye for oure orizont, compowned after the latitude of Oxenforde: upon the whiche by mediacion of this lytell tretise, I purpose to teche the a certaine nombre of conclusions, pertainynge to this same instrument. I say a certaine nombre of conclusions for thre causes, the first cause is this. Truste wel that al the conclusions that have be founden, or ells possiblye might be founde in so noble an instrument as in the astrolabye, ben unknownen perfytely to anye mortal man in this region, as I suppose. Another cause is this, that sothely in any cartes of the astrolabye that I have ysene, ther ben some conclusions, that wol not in al thinges perfourme ther behestes: and some of 'hem ben to harde to thy tender age of ten yere to conceve. This tretise divided in five partes, wil I shewe the wondir light rules and naked wordes in Englishe, for Latine ne canst thou nat yet but smale, my litel sonne. But neverthelesse suffiseth to the these trewe conclusyons in Englishe, as well as suffiseth to these noble clerkes grekes these same conclusions in greke, and to the Arabines in Arabike, and to Jewes in Hebrewe, and to the Latin folke in Latyn: whiche Latyn folke had 'hem firste out of other divers langages, and write 'hem in ther owne tonge, that is to saine in Latine.

the hygher parte wher the letter T. was whych is vnderstand speculacion or contemplacion. Neuertheles the handes of some vyolente persones had cut the sayde vestures and had taken awaye certayne pecis thereof, such as euery one coulede catch. And she her selfe dyd bare in her ryght hand litel bokes, and in her lefte hande a scepter, which foresayd phylosophy (when she sawe the muses poetycal present at my bed, spekyng sorowful wordes to my wepynges) beyng angry sayd (with terrible or frownyng countenance) who suffred these crafty harlottes to com to thys fycke man? whych can help hym by no means of hys griefe by any kind of medicines, but rather increase the same with swete poyson. These be they that doo dystroye the fertile and plentious commodities of reason and the fruytes therof wyth their prykyng thornes, or barren affectes, and accustome or subdue mens myndes with sickenes, and heuynes, and do not delyuer or heale them of the same. But yf your flatterye had conueyed or wythdrawen from me, any vnlearned man as the comen sorte of people are wonte to be, I coulede haue ben better contentyd, for in that my worke should not be hurt or hynderyd. But you haue taken and conueyed from me thys man that hath ben broughte vp in the studyes of Aristotel and of Plato But yet get you hence maremaids (that seme swete untill you haue brought a man to deathe) and suffer me to heale thys my man wyth my muses or scyences that be holsome and good. And after that philosophy had spoken these wordes the sayd companie of the musys poetical beyng rebukyd and sad, caste down their countenance to the grounde, and by blussing confessed their shamfastnes, and went out of the dores. But I (that had my syght dull and blynd wyth wepyng, so that I knew not what woman this was hauyng so great aucthoritie) was amasyd or astonyed, and lokyng downeward, toward the grounde, I began pryvlye to look what thyng she would saye ferther, then she had said. Then she approching and drawynge nere vnto me, sat doune vpon the vttermoost part of my bed, and lokyng vpon my face sad with wepyng, and declynyng toward the earth for sorow, bewayled the trouble of my minde wyth these saynges folowynge.

And God wote that in all these languages and in manye mo, have these conclusyons ben sufficientlye lerned and taught, and yet by divers rules, right as divers pathes leden divers folke the right waye to Rome.

Now wol I pray mekely every person discrete, that redeth or hereth this lityl tretise to have my rude ententing excused, and my superfluite of wordes, for two causes. The first cause is, for that curious endityng and harde sentences is ful hevy at ones, for soch a childe to lerne. And the seconde cause is this, that sothely me semeth better to writen unto a childe twise a gode sentence, than he foriete it ones. And, Lowis, if it be so that I shewe the in my lith Englishe, as trewe conclusions touching this mater, and not only as trewe but as many and subtil conclusions as ben yshewed in latin, in any comon tretise of the astrolabye, conne me the more thanke, and praye God save the kinge, that is lorde of this langage, and all that him faith bereth, and obeieth everiche in his degree, the more and the lasse. But confydreth well, that I ne usurpe not to have founden this werke of my labour or of myne engin. I name but a leude compilatour of the laboure of olde astrologiens, and have it translated in myn englishe onely for thy doctrine: and with this swerde shal I sene envy.

The first party.

The first partye of this tretise shall reherce the figures, and the membres of thyne astrolaby, bycause that thou shalte have the greter knowinge of thine owne instrument.

The seconde party.

The seconde partye shal teche the to werken the very practike of the foresaid conclusions, as ferforthe and also narowe as may be shewed in so smale an instrument portatife aboute. For wel wote every astrologien, that smallest fractions ne wol not be shewed in so smal an instrument, as in subtil tables calculated for a cause.

The PROLOGUE of the TESTAMENT of LOVE.

MANY men there ben, that with eres openly sprad so moche swalowen the deliciousnesse of jestes and of ryme, by queint knittinge coloures, that of the gode-nesse or of the badnesse of the sentence take they litel hede or els none.

Sothelye dulle witte and a thoughtfulle soule so fore have mined and graffed in my spirites, that soche craft of enditinge woll nat ben of mine acquaintaunce. And for rude wordes and boistous percen the herte of the herer to the inrest point, and planten there the sentence of thinges, so that with litel helpe it is able to spring, this boke, that nothyng hath of the grete flode of wytte, ne of femelyche coloures, is dolven with rude wordes and boistous, and so drawe togid̃er to maken the catchers therof ben the more redy to hent sentence.

Some men there ben, that painten with colours riche and some with wers, as with red inke, and some with coles and chalke: and yet is there gode matter to the leude peple of thylke chalkye purtreiture, as 'hem thinketh for the time, and afterward the syght of the better colours yeven to 'hem more joye for the first leudenesse. So sothly this leude clowdy occupacyon is not to prayse, but by the leude, for comenly leude leudenesse commendeth. Eke it shal yeve sight that other precyous thynges shall be the more in reverence. In Latin and French hath many soveraine wittes had grete delyte to endite, and have many noble thinges fulfild, but certes there ben some that speken ther poisyte mater in Frenche, of whiche speche the Frenche men have as gode a fantasye as we have in heryng of Frenche mens Englishe. And many termes there ben in Englyshe, whiche unneth we Englishe men connen declare the knowleginge: howe should than a Frenche man borne? soche termes connejumpere in his matter, but as the jay chatereth Englishe. Right so truely the understandyn of Englishmen woll not stretche to the privie termes in Frenche, what so ever we bosten of straunge langage. Let than clerkes enditen in Latin, for they have the propertie of science, and the knowinge in that facultie: and lette Frenche men in ther Frenche also enditen ther queint termes, for it is kyndely to ther mouthes; and let us shewe our fantasies in such wordes as we lerneden of our dame's tonge. And although this boke be lytel thank worthy for the leudnesse in travaile, yet soch writing exiten men to thilke thinges that ben necessarie: for every man therby may as by a perpetual myrrour sene the vices or vertues of other, in whyche thyng lightly may be conceived to eschue perils, and necessities to catch, after as adventures have fallen to other peple or persons.

Certes the soverainst thinge of desire and most creature resonable, have or els shuld have full appetite to ther perfeccyon: unresonable bestes mowen not, si the reson hath in 'hem no workinge: than resonable that wol not, is comparisond to unresonable, and made lyke 'hem. Forsothe the most soveraine and finall perfeccion of man is in knowynge of a sothe, withouten any entent decevable, and in love of one very God, that is inchaungeable, that is to knowe, and love his creator.

Nowe principally the mene to brynge in knowleging and lovyng his creatour, is the consideracyon of thynges made by the creatour, wher through by thylke thinges that ben made, understandynge here to our wyttes, arne the unsene pryvities of God made to us syghtfull and knowinge, in our contemplacion and understondinge. These thinges than forsothe moche bringen us to the ful knowleginge sothe, and to the parfyte love of the maker of hevenly thynges. Lo! David saith: thou haste delited me in makeinge, as who saith, to have delite in the tune how God hat lent me in consideracion of thy makeinge. Wherof Aristotle in the boke de Animalibus, saith to naturell philosophers: it is a grete likyng in love of knowinge ther cretoure: and also in knowinge of causes in kindelye thynges, considrid forsothe the formes of kindelye thinges and the shap, a gret kyndely love we shulde have to the werkman that 'hem made. The crafte of a werkman is shewed in the werk. Herefore trulie the philosophers with a lyvely studie manie noble thinges, righte precious, and worthy to memorye, writen, and by a gret swet and travaille to us lesten of causes the properties in natures of thinges, to whiche therfore philosophers it was more joy, more lykinge, more herty lust in kindely vertues and matters of reson the perfeccion by busy study to knowe, than to have had all the tresour, al the richesse, al the vaine glory, that the passed emperours, princes, or kinges hadden. Therfore the names of 'hem in the boke of perpetuall memorie in vertue and pece arne writen; and in the contrarie, that is to saine, in Styxe the foule pitte of helle arne thilke pressed that soch godenes hated. And bicause this boke shall be of love, and the prime causes of stering in that doinge with passions and diseses for wantinge of desire, I wil that this boke be cleped the testament of love.

But nowe thou reder, who is thilke that will not in scorne laughe, to here a dwarfe or els halfe a man, say he wil rende out the swerde of Hercules handes, and also he shulde set Hercules Gades a mile yet ferther, and over that he had power of strength to pull up the spere, that Alisander the noble might never wagge, and that passinge al thinge to ben mayster of Fraunce by might, there as the noble gracious Edward the thirde for al his grete prowesse in victories ne might al yet conquere?

Certes I wote well, ther shall be made more scorne and jape of me, that I so unworthely clothed altogither in the cloudie cloude of unconning, wil putten me in prees to speak of love, or els of the causes in that matter, sithen al the gretteft clerkes han had ynough to don, and as who saith gathered up clene toforne 'hem, and with ther sharp sithes of conning al mowen and made therof grete rekes and noble, ful of al plenties to fede me and many an other. Envy forsothe commendeth noughte his reson, that he hath in hain, be it never so trusty. And although these noble repers, as gode workmen and worthy ther hier, han al draw and bounde up in the sheves, and made many shockes, yet have I ensample to gad̃er the smale crommes, and fullin ma walet of tho that fallen from the bourde among the smalle houndes, notwithstanding the travaile of the almoigner, that hath draw up in the cloth al the remissails, as trenchours, and the relese to bere to the almesse. Yet also have I leve of the noble husbnde Boece, although I be a straunger of conninge to come after his doctrine, and these grete workmen, and glene my handfuls of the shedyng after ther handes, and yf me faile ought of my ful, to encrese my porcion with that I shal drawe by privyties out of shockes; a flye servaunte in his owne helpe is often moche commended; knowynge of trouthe in causes of thynges, was more hardier in the firste sechers, and so sayth Aristotle, and lighter in us that han folowed after. For ther passing study han freshed our wittes, and oure understandynge han excited in consideration of trouthe by sharpenes of ther resons. Utterly these thinges be no dremes ne japes, to throwe to hogges, it is lyfelych mete for children of trouthe, and as they me betiden whan I pilgramed out of my kith in wintere, whan the wether out of mesure was boistous, and the wyld wynd Boreas, as his kind asketh, with dryinge coldes maked the waves of the ocean se so to arise unkindely over the commune bankes that it was in point to spill all the erthe.

The holy blisfull martyr for to feke,
That them hath holpin, whan that they were feke.

Befell that in that feson on a day
In Southwerk at the Tabberd as I lay,
Redy to wendin on my pilgrimage
To Canterbury, with devoute corage,
At night wer come into that hoftery
Wele nine and twenty in a cumpany
Of fundrie-folk, by aventure yfall
In felafhip; and pilgrimes wer they all;
That toward Canterbury wouldin ride.

The chambers and the stablis werin wide,
And well we werin esid at the best:
And shortly whan the funnè was to rest,
So had I spokin with them everych one,
That I was of ther felafhip anone;
And madè forward erli for to rise,
To take our weye, ther as I did devise.

But nathlefs while that I have time and fpace,
Er' that I farther in this talè pace,
Methinkith it accordaunt to refon,
To tell you allè the condition
Of ech of them, fo as it semid me,
And which they werin, and of what degree,
And eke in what array that they wer in:
And at a knight then woll I first begin.

The KNIGHT.

A knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the timè that he first began
To ridin out, he lovid Chevalrie,
Trowth and honour, fredome and curtesy:
Full worthy was he in his lord's werre,
And thereto had he riddin nane more ferre
As well in Christendom, as in Hethnes;
And evyr honoured for his worthines.

At Aleffandre' he was whan it was won;
Full oft timis he had the bord begon
Abovin allè naciouns in Puce;
In Lettow had he riddin, and in Luce;
No Christen-man so oft of his degree
In Granada; in the fege had he be
Of Algezir, and ridd in Belmary;
At Leyis was he, and at Sataly,
Whan that they wer won; and in the grete see
At many'a noble army had he be:
At mortal battails had he ben fiftene,
And foughtin for our feith at Trameseche,
In listis thrys, and alwey flein his fo.

This ilke worthy knight had ben also Sometimis with the lord of Palathy,
Ayens anothir hethin in Turkey;
And evirmore he had a sov'rane prize;
And though that he was worthy, he was wise;
And of his port as meke as is a maid,
He nevyr yet no villany ne faid
In all his life unto no manner wight:
He was a very parfit gentil knight.
But for to tellin you of his array,
His hors wer good; but he was nothing gay,
Of fustian he werid a gipon,
Allè besmottrid with his haburgeon.
For he was late ycome from his viage,
And wentè for to do his pilgrimage.

The HOUSE of FAME.

The First Boke.

NOW herkin, as I have you faied,
What that I mette or I abraied,
Of December the tenith daie,
When it was night, to slepe I laie,
Right as I was wonte for to doen,
And fill allepè wondir fone,
As he that was werie forgo
On pilgrimage milis two
To the corps of sainct Leonarde,
To makin lithe that erst was harde.

But as me slept me mette I was Within a temple' imade of glas,

In whiche there werin mo images
Of golde, standyng in fondrie stages,
Sette in mo riche tabirnales;
And with perrè mo pinnacles,
And mo curious portraitureis,
And queint manir of figuris
Of golde worke, then I sawe evir.

But certainly I n'ist nevyr
Where that it was, but well wist I
It was of Venus redily
This temple, for in purtreiture
I sawe anone right her figure
Nakid yfletyng in a fe,
And also on her hedde parde
Her rosy garland white and redde,
And her combe for to kembe her hedde,
Her dovis, and Dan Cupido
Her blindè sonne, and Vulcano,
That in his face ywas full broune.

But as I romid up and doune,
I founde that on the wall there was
Thus writtin on a table' of bras.

I woll now syng, if that I can,
The armis, and also the man,
That first came through his destine
Fugitive fro Troye the cowntre
Into Itale, with full moche pine,
Unto the strondis of Lavine,
And tho began the storie' anone,
As I shall tellin you echone.

First sawe I the distruccion
Of Troie, thorough the Greke Sinon,
With his false untrue forswerynges,
And with his chere and his lesynges,
That made a horse, brought into Troye,
By whiche Trojans losse all ther joye.

And aftir this was graved, alas!
How Ilions castill assailed was,
And won, and kyng Priamus slain,
And Polites his sonne certain,
Dispitously of Dan Pyrrhus.

And next that sawe I howe Venus,
When that she sawe the castill brende,
Doune from hevin she gan discende,
And bade her sonne Æneas fle,
And how he fled, and how that he
Escapid was from all the pres,
And toke his fathre', old Anchises,
And bare hym on his backe awaie,
Crying alas and welawaie!
The whiche Anchises in his hande,
Bare tho the goddis of the lande
I mene thilke that unbrennid were.

Then sawe I next that all in fere
How Creusa, Dan Æneas wife,
Whom that he lovid all his life,
And her yong sonne clepid Julo,
And eke Ascanius also,
Fleddin eke, with full drierie chere,
That it was pite for to here,
And in a forest as thei went
How at a tournyng of a went Creüsa was iloste, alas!
That rede not I, how that it was
How he her fought, and how her ghošte
Bad hym to fle the Grekis hoste,
And faied he must into Itale,
As was his destinie, fauns faile,
That it was pitie for to here,
When that her spirite gan appere,
The wordis that she to hym faied,
And for to kepe her sonne hym praied.

There sawe I gravin eke how he
His fathir eke, and his meinè,
With his shippis began to faile
Toward the cowntrey of Itale,
As streight as ere thei mightin go.

There sawe I eke the, cruill Juno,
That art Dan Jupiter his wife,
That hast ihatid all thy life

Mercileſs all the Trojan blode,
Rennin and crie as thou were wode
On Æolus, the god of windes,
To blowin out of allè kindes
So loudè, that he ſhou'd ydrenche
Lorde, and ladie, and grome, and wenche
Of all the Trojanis nacion,
Without any' of ther ſavacion.

There ſawe I ſoche tempeſt ariſe,
That ev'ry herte might agriſe
To ſe it paintid on the wall.

There ſawe I eke gravin withall,
Venus, how ye, my ladie dere,
Yweping with full wofull chere
Yprayid Jupiter on hie,
To ſave and kepin that navie
Of that dere Trojan Æneas,
Sithins that he your ſonne ywas.

FLIE fro the preſe and dwell with ſothfaſtneſſe, Suffiſe unto thy gode though it be ſmall,
For horde hath hate, and climbyng tikilneſſe,
Prece hath envie, and wele it brent oer all,
Savour no more then the behovin ſhall,
Rede well thy ſelf, that othir folke canſt rede,
And trouthe the ſhall delivir it 'is no drede.
Painè the not eche crokid to redreſſe,
In truſt of her that tournith as a balle,
Grete reſt ſtandith in litil buſineſſe,
Beware alſo to ſpurne again a nalle,
Strive not as doith a crocke with a walle,
Demith thy ſelf that demith othir's dede,
And trouthe the ſhall deliver it 'is no drede.
That the is ſent receve in buxomeneſſe;

THIS wretchid world's transmutacion
As wele and wo, nowe pore, and now honour,
Without ordir or due diſcrecion
Govirnid is by fortun's errour,
But nathelleſſe the lacke of her favour
Ne maie not doe me ſyng though that I die,
J'ay tout perdu, mon temps & mon labour
For finally fortune I doe deſie.
Yet is me left the ſight of my reſoun
To knowin frende fro foe in thy mirrour,
So moche hath yet thy tournyng up and down,
I taughtin me to knowin in an hour,
But truilly no force of thy reddour
To hym that ovir hymſelf hath maiſtrie,
My ſuffiſaunce yſhal be my ſuccour,
For finally fortune I do deſie.
O Socrates, thou ſtedfaſt champion,
She ne might nevir be thy turmentour,

Ne in her chere foundin thou no favour,
Thou knewe wele the diſceipt of her colour,
And that her moſte worſhip is for to lie,
I knowe her eke a falſe diſſimulour,
Tor finally fortune I do deſie.

The anſwere of Fortune.

No man is wretchid but hymſelf it wene,
He that yhath hymſelf hath ſuffiſaunce,
Why ſaiest thou then I am to the ſo kene,
That haſt thy ſelf out of my govirnaunce?
Saie thus grant mercie of thin habundaunce,
That thou haſt lent or this, thou ſhalt not ſtrive,
What woſt thou yet how I the woll avaunce?
And eke th u haſt thy beſtè frende alive.
I have the taught diviſion betwene
Frende of effecte, and frende of countinaunce,

The nedith not the gallè of an hine,
That curith eyin derke for ther penaunce,
Now ſeeſt thou clere that wer in ignoraunce,
Yet holt thine anker, and thou maieſt arive
There bountie bereth the key of my ſubſtaunce,
And eke thou haſte thy beſtè frende alive.
How many have I reſuſed to ſuſtene,
Sith I have the foſtrid in thy pleaſaunce?
Wolt thou then make a ſtatute on thy quene,
That I ſhall be aie at thine ordinaunce?
Thou born art in my reign of variaunce,
About the whele with othir muſt thou drive
My lore is bet, then wicke is thy grevaunce,
And eke thou haſt thy beſtè frende alive.

The anſwere to Fortune.

Th' envoye of Fortune.

Princes I praie you of your gentilneſſe,
Let not this man and me thus crie and plain,
And I ſhall quitin you this buſineſſe,
And if ye liſte releve hym of his pain,
Praie ye his beſt frende of his nob'eneſſe
That to ſome bettir ſtate he maie attain.

Lydgate was a monk of Bury, who wrote about the ſame time with Chaucer. Out of his prologue to his third book of the Fall of Princes a few ſtanzas are ſelected, which, being compared with the ſtyle of his two contemporaries, will ſhow that our language was then not written by caprice, but was in a ſettled ſtate.

THE HISTORY OF THE

Our life here short of wit the great dulnes
The heuy soule troubled with trauayle,
And of memorye the glasyng brotelnes,
Drede and vncunning haue made a strong batail
With werines my spirite to assayle,
And with their subtil creping in most queint
Hath made my spirit in makyng for to feint.

And ouermore, the ferefull frowardnes
Of my stepmother called obliuion,
Hath a bastyll of foryetfulnes,
To stoppe the passage, and shadow my reason
That I might haue no clere direccion,
In translating of new to quicke me,
Stories to write of olde antiquite.

Thus was I set and stode in double werre
At the metyng of feareful wayes tweyne,
The one was this, who euer list to lere,
Whereas good wyll gan me constrayne,
Bochas accomplish for to doe my payne,
Came ignoraunce, with a menace of drede,
My penne to rest I durst not procede.

Fortescue was chief justice of the Common-Pleas, in the reign of king Henry VI. He retired in 1471. after the battle of Tewkesbury, and probably wrote most of his works in his privacy. The following passage is selected from his book of the Difference between an absolute and limited Monarchy.

HY T may peradventure be marvelid by some men, why one Realme is a Lordshyp only Royall, and the Prynce thereof rulyth yt by his Law, callid Jus Regale; and another Kyngdome is a Lordship, Royal and Politike, and the Prince thereof rulyth by a Lawe, callyd Jus Politicum & Regale; sythen thes two Princes beth of egall Astate.

To this dowte it may be answeyrd in this manner; The first Institution of thes twoo Realmys, upon the Incorporation of them, is the Cause of this diversyte.

When Nembroth by Might, for his own Glorye, made and incorporate the first Realme, and subduyd it to hymself by Tyrannye, he would not have it governyd by any other Rule or Lawe, but by his own Will; by which and for th' accomplishment thereof he made it. And therfor, though he had thus made a Realme, holy Scripture denyd to cal hym a Kyng, Quia Rex dicitur a Regendo; Whych thyng he dyd not, but oppressyd the People by Myght, and therfor he was a Tyrant, and callid Primus Tyrannorum. But holy Writ callith hym Robustus Venator coram Deo. For as the Hunter takyth the wyld beste for to sle and eate hym; so Nembroth subduyd to him the People with Might, to have their service and their goods, using upon them the Lordship that is callid Dominium Regale tantum. After hym Belus that was callid first a Kyng, and after hym his Sone Nynus, and after hym other Panyms; They, by Example of Nembroth, made them Realmys, would not have them rulyd by other Lawys than by their own Wills. Which Lawys ben right good under good Princes; and their Kyngdoms a then most resemblyd to the Kyngdome of God, which reynith upon Man, rulyng him by hys own Will. Wherfor many Crystyn Princes usen the same Lawe; and therfor it is, that the Lawys sayen, Quod Principi placuit Legis habet vigorem. And thus I suppose first beganne in Realmys, Dominium tantum Regale. But afterward, whan Mankynd was more mansuete, and better disposyd to Vertue, Grete Communalities, as was the Feliship, that came into this Lond with Brute, wylling to be unyed and made a Body Politike callid a Realme, havynge an Heed to governe it; as after the Saying of the Philosopher, every Communalitie unyed of many parts must needs have an Heed; than they chose the same Brute to be their Heed and Kyng. And they and he upon this Incorporation and Institution, and onyng of themselves into a Realme, ordeynyd the same Realme so to be rulyd and justyfyd by such Lawys, as they al would assent unto; which Law therfor is callid Politicum; and bycause it is mynystred by a Kyng, it is callid Regale. Dominium Politicum dicitur quasi Regimen, plurium Scientia, sive Consilio ministratum. The Kyng of Scotts reynith upon his People by this Lawe, videlicet, Regimine Politico & Regali. And as Diodorus Syculus saith, in his Boke de prisca Historiis, The Realme of Egypte is rulid by the same Lawe, and therfor the Kyng therof chaungith not his Lawes, without the Assent of his People. And in like forme as he saith is ruled the Kyngdome of Saba, in Felici Arabia, and the Lond of Libie; And also the more parte of al the Realmys in Afrike. Which manner of Rule and Lordship, the sayd Diodorus in that Boke, praysthy grete-ly. For it is not only good for the Prince, that may thereby the more sewerly do Justice, than by his owne Arbitriment; but it is also good for his People that receyve therby, such Justice as they desyer themself. Now as me seymth, it ys shewyd opynly ynough, why one Kyng rulyth and reynith on his People Dominio tantum Regali, and that other reynith Dominio Politico & Regali: For that one Kyngdome beganne, of and by, the Might of the Prince, and that other beganne, by the Desier and Institution of the People of the same Prince.

Of the works of Sir Thomas More it was necessary to give a larger specimen, both because our language was then in a great degree formed and settled, and because it appears from Ben Jonson, that his works were considered as models of pure and elegant style. The tale, which is placed first, because earliest written, will show what an attentive reader will, in perusing our old writers, often remark, that the familiar and colloquial part of our language, being disused among those classes who had no ambition of refinement, or affectation of novelty, has suffered very little change. There is another reason why the extracts from this authour are more copious: his works are carefully and correctly printed, and may therefore be better trusted than any other edition of the English books of that, or the preceding ages.

A merry iest how a sergeant would learne to playe the frere. Written by maister Thomas More in hys youth.

WYSE men alway, Affyrme and say,
That best is for a man:
Diligently,
For to apply,
The busines that he can,
And in no wyse,
To enterpryse,
An other faculte,
For he that wyll,
And can no skyll,
Is neuer lyke to the.
He that hath laste,
The hosiers crafte,
And falleth to making shone,
The smythe that shall,
To payntyng fall,
His thrift is well nigh done.
A blacke draper,
With whyte paper,
To goe to writyng scole,
An olde butler,
Becum a cutler,
I wene shall proue a sole.
And an olde trot,
That can I wot,
Nothyng but kyffe the cup,
With her phisick,
Wil kepe one sicke,
Tyll she haue soufed hym vp,
A man of lawe,
That neuer sawe,
The wayes to bye and sell,
Wenyng to ryse,
By marchaundise,
I wish to spede hym well.
A marchaunt eke,
That wyll goo seke,
By all the meanes he may,
To fall in sute,
Tyll he dispute,
His money cleane away,

Pletyng

Pletyng the lawe,
 For euery strawe,
 Shall proue a thrifty man,
 With bate and strife,
 But by my life,
 I cannot tell you whan.
 Whan an hatter
 Wyll go smatter,
 In philosophy,
 Or a pedlar,
 Ware a medlar,
 In theology,
 All that ensue,
 Suche craftes new,
 They driue so farre a cast,
 That euermore,
 They do therfore,
 Beshrewe themselfe at last.
 This thing was tryed
 And verelyed,
 Here by a sergeaunt late,
 That thriftly was,
 Or he coulde pas,
 Rapped about the pate,
 Whyle that he would
 See how he coulde,
 A little play the frere :
 Now yf you wyll,
 Knowe how it fyll,
 Take hede and ye shall here.
 It happed so,
 Not long ago,
 A thrifty man there dyed,
 An hundred ponde,
 Of nobles rounde,
 That had he layd a side :
 His sonne he wolde,
 Should haue this golde,
 For to beginne with all :
 But to suffice
 His chylde, well thrise,
 That money was to final.
 Yet or this day
 I have hard say,
 That many a man certesse,
 Hath with good cast,
 Be ryche at last,
 That hath begonne with lesse.
 But this yonge manne,
 So well beganne,
 His money to imploy,
 That certainly,
 His policy,
 To see it was a joy,
 For lest sum blast,
 Myght ouer cast,
 His ship, or by mischaunce,
 Men with sum wile,
 Myght hym begyle,
 And minish his substaunce,
 For to put out,
 All maner dout,
 He made a good puruay,
 For euery whyt,
 By his owne wyt,
 And toke an other way :
 First fayre and wele,
 Therof much dele,
 He dygged it in a pot,
 But then him thought,
 That way was nought,
 And there he left it not.
 So was he faine,
 From thence agayne,
 To put it in a cup,
 And by and by,
 Couetously,
 He supped it fayre vp,
 In his owne brest,
 He thought it best,
 His money to enclose,

Then wist he well,
 What euer fell,
 He coulde it neuer lose.
 He borrowed then,
 Of other men,
 Money and marchaundise :
 Neuer payd it,
 Up he laid it,
 In like maner wyse.
 Yet on the gere,
 That he would were,
 He reight not what he spent,
 So it were nyce,
 As for the price,
 Could him not miscontent.
 With lusty sporte,
 And with resort,
 Of ioly company,
 In mirth and play,
 Full many a day,
 He liued merely.
 And men had sworne,
 Some man is borne,
 To haue a lucky howre,
 And so was he,
 For such degre,
 He gat and suche honour,
 That without dout,
 Whan he went out,
 A sergeaunt well and fayre,
 Was redy strayte,
 On him to wayte,
 As sone as on the mayre.
 But he doubtlesse,
 Of his mekenesse,
 Hated such pompe and pride,
 And would not go,
 Companied so,
 But drewe himself a side,
 To saint Katharine,
 Streight as a line,
 He gate him at a tyde,
 For deuocion,
 Or promocion,
 There would he nedes abyde.
 There spent he fast,
 Till all were past,
 And to him came there meny,
 To aske theyr det,
 But none could get,
 The valour of a peny.
 With visage stout,
 He bare it out,
 Euen vnto the harde hedge,
 A month or twaine,
 Tyll he was faine,
 To laye his gowne to pledge.
 Than was he there,
 In greater feare,
 I han ere that he came thither,
 And would as fayne,
 Depart againe,
 But that he wist not whither.
 Than after this,
 To a frende of his,
 He went and there abode,
 Where as he lay,
 So sick alway,
 He myght not come abroad.
 It happed than,
 A marchant man,
 That he ought money to,
 Of an officere,
 Than gan enquire,
 What him was best to do.
 And he answerde,
 Be not aferde,
 Take an accion therfore,
 I you beheste,
 I shall hym reste,
 And than care for no more.

THE HISTORY OF THE

I feare quod he,
 It wyll not be,
 For he wyll not come out.
 The fergeaunt said,
 Be not aſſayd.
 It ſhall be brought about,
 In many a game,
 Lyke to the ſame,
 Hauē I bene well in vre,
 And for your ſake,
 Let me be bake,
 But yf I do this cure.
 Thus part they both,
 And foorth then goth,
 A pace this officere,
 And for a day,
 All his array,
 He chaunged with a frere.
 So was he dight,
 That no man might,
 Hym for a frere deny,
 He dopped and dooked,
 He ſpake and looked,
 So religiously.
 Yet in a glaſſe,
 Or he would paſſe,
 He toted and he peered,
 His harte for pryde,
 Lepte in his ſyde,
 To ſee how well he freered.
 Than forth a pace,
 Unto the place,
 He goeth withouten ſhame
 To do this dede,
 But now take hede,
 For here begynneth the game.
 He drew hym ny,
 And ſoftely,
 Streyght at the dore he knocked;
 And a damſell,
 That hard hym well,
 There came and it vnlocked.
 The frere ſayd,
 Good ſpede fayre mayd,
 Here lodgeth ſuch a man,
 It is told me:
 Well ſyr quod ſhe,
 And yf he do what than.
 Quod he mayſtreſſe,
 No harme doutleſſe:
 It longeth for our order,
 To hurt no man,
 But as we can,
 Euery wight to forder.
 With hym truly,
 Fayne ſpeake would I.
 Sir quod ſhe by my fay,
 He is ſo ſike,
 Ye be not lyke,
 To ſpeake with hym to day.
 Quod he fayre may,
 Yet I you pray,
 This much at my deſire,
 Vouchesafe to do,
 As go hym to,
 And ſay an auſten frere
 Would with hym ſpeke,
 And matters breake,
 For his auayle certayn.
 Quod ſhe I wyll,
 Stonde ye here ſtyll,
 Tyll I come downe agayn.
 Vp is ſhe go,
 And told hym ſo,
 As ſhe was bode to ſay,
 He miſtruſtyng,
 No maner thyng,
 Sayd mayden go thy way,
 And fetch him hyder,
 That we togyder,
 May talk. A downe ſhe gothe,

Vp ſhe hym brought,
 No harme ſhe thought,
 But it made ſome folke wrothe.
 This officere,
 This fayned frere,
 Whan he was come aloft,
 He dopped than,
 And grete this man,
 Religiously and oft.
 And he agayn,
 Ryght glad and fayn,
 Toke hym there by the hande,
 The frere than ſayd,
 Ye be diſmayd,
 With trouble I underſtande.
 In dede quod he,
 It hath with me,
 Bene better than it is.
 Syr quod the frere,
 Be of good chere,
 Yet ſhall it after this.
 But I would now,
 Comen with you,
 In counſayle yf you pleaſe,
 Or ellys nat
 Of matters that,
 Shall ſet your heart at eaſe.
 Downe went the mayd,
 The marchaunt ſayd,
 Now ſay on gentle frere,
 Of thys tydyng,
 That ye me bryng,
 I long full fore to here.
 Whan there was none,
 But they alone,
 The frere with euyll grace,
 Sayd, I reſt the,
 Come on with me,
 And out he toke his mace:
 Thou ſhalt obay,
 Come on thy way,
 I have the in my clouche,
 Thou goeſt not hence,
 For all the penſe,
 The mayre hath in his pouche.
 This marchaunt there,
 For wrath and fere,
 He waxyng welnygh wood,
 Sayd horſon theſe,
 With a miſcheſe,
 Who hathtaught the thy good.
 And with his fiſt,
 Vpon the lyſt,
 He gaue hym ſuch a blow,
 That backward downe,
 Almost in ſowne,
 The frere is ouerthrow.
 Yet was this man,
 Well fearder than,
 Left he the frere had ſlayne,
 Tyll with good rappes,
 And heuy clappes,
 He dawde hym vp agayne.
 The frere toke harte,
 And vp he ſtarte,
 And well he layde about,
 And ſo there goth,
 Betwene them both,
 Many a luſty clout.
 They rent and tere,
 Eche others here,
 And claue togyder faſt,
 Tyll with luggyng,
 And with tuggyng,
 They fell downe bothe at laſt.
 Than on the grounde,
 Togyder rounde,
 With many a ſadde ſtroke,
 They roll and rumble,
 They turne and tumble,
 As pygges do in a poke.

So long aboute,
 They heue and shoue,
 Togider that at last,
 The mayd and wyfe,
 To breake the strife,
 Hyed them vpward fast.
 And whan they spye,
 The captaynes lye,
 Both waltring on the place,
 The freres hood;
 They pulled a good,
 Adowne about his face.
 Whyle he was blynde,
 The wenche behynde,
 Lent him leyd on the flore,
 Many a ioule,
 About the noule,
 With a great batyldore.
 The wyfe came yet,
 And with her fete,
 She holpe to kepe him downe,
 And with her rocke,
 Many a knocke,
 She gaue hym on the crowne.
 They layd his mace,
 About his face,
 That he was wood for payne:
 The fryre frappe,
 Gate many a swappe,
 Tyll he was full nygh slayne.
 Vp they hym lift,
 And with yll thrift,
 Hedlyng a long the stayre,
 Downe they hym threwe,
 And sayde adewe,
 Commende us to the mayre.
 The frere arofe,
 But I suppose,
 Amased was his hed,
 He shoke his eares,
 And from grete feares,
 He thought hym well yfled.
 Quod he now lost,
 Is all this cost,
 We be neuer the nere.
 Ill mote he be,
 That caused me,
 To make my self a frere.
 Now masters all,
 Here now I shall,
 Ende there as I began,
 In any wyfe,
 I would auyse,
 And counsayle euery man,
 His owne craft vse,
 All newe refuse,
 And lyghtly let them gone:
 Play not the frere,
 Now make good chere,
 And welcome euerych one.

A ruful lamentacion (writen by master Thomas More in his youth) of the deth of quene Elisabeth mother to king Henry the eight, wife to king Henry the seuenth, and eldest doughter to king Edward the fourth, which quene Elisabeth dyed in childbed in February in the yere of our Lord 1503. and in the 18 yere of the raigne of king Henry the seuenth.

O Ye that put your trust and confidence,
 In worldly ioy and frayle prosperite,
 That so lyue here as ye should neuer hence,
 Remember death and loke here vppon me.
 Ensaumple I thynke there may no better be.
 Your selfe wotte well that in this realme was I,
 Your quene but late, and lo now here I lye.
 Was I not borne of olde worthy linage?
 Was not my mother queene my father kyng?
 Was I not a kinges fere in marriage?
 Had I not plenty of euery pleasaunt thyng?
 Mercifull god this is a straunge reckenying:
 Rycheffe, honour, welth, and auncestry?
 Hath me forsaken and lo now here I ly.

If worship myght haue kept me, I had not gone.
 If wyt myght haue me saued, I neded not fere.
 If money myght haue holpe, I lacked none.
 But O good God what vayleth all this gere.
 When deth is come thy mighty messangere,
 Obey we must there is no remedy,
 Me hath he sommoned, and lo now here I ly.

Yet was I late promised otherwyse,
 This yere to liue in welth and delice.
 Lo where to commeth thy blandishyng promyse,
 O false astrolagy and deynatrice,
 Of goddes secretes makyng thy selfe so wyfe.
 How true is for this yere thy prophecy.
 The yere yet lasteth, and lo now here I ly.

O bryttill welth, as full of bitternesse,
 Thy sngle pleasure doubled is with payne.
 Account my sorow first and my distresse,
 In fondry wyfe, and reckon there agayne,
 The ioy that I haue had, and I dare sayne,
 For all my honour, endured yet haue I,
 More wo then welth, and lo now here I ly.

Where are our castels, now where are our towers,
 Goodly Rychmonde sone art thou gone from me,
 At Westminster that costly worke of yours,
 Myne owne dere lorde now shall I neuer see.
 Almighty god vouchesafe to graunt that ye,
 For you and your children well may edefy.
 My palyce bylded is, and lo now here I ly.

Adew myne owne dere spouse my worthy lorde,
 The faithfull loue, that dyd vs both combyne,
 In mariage and peasable concorde,
 Into your handes here I cleane refyne,
 To be bestowed vppon your children and myne.
 Erst wer you father, and now must ye supply,
 The mothers part also, for lo now here I ly.

Farewell my doughter lady Margerete.
 God wotte full oft it greued hath my mynde,
 That ye should go where we should seldome mete.
 Now am I gone, and haue left you behynde.
 O mortall folke that we be very blynde.
 That we least feare, full oft it is most nye,
 From you depart I fyrst, and lo now here I lye.

Farewell Madame my lordes worthy mother,
 Comfort your sonne, and be ye of good chere.
 Take all a worth, for it will be no nother.
 Farewell my doughter Katherine late the fere,
 To prince Arthur myne owne chyld so dere,
 It booteth not for me to wepe or cry,
 Pray for my soule, for lo now here I ly.

Adew lord Henry my louyng sonne adew.
 Our lorde encrease your honour and estate,
 Adew my doughter Mary bright of hew,
 God make you vertuous wyfe and fortunate.
 Adew swete hart my litle doughter Kate,
 Thou shalt swete babe suche is thy desteny,
 Thy mother neuer know, for lo now here I ly.

Lady Cicely Anne and Katheryne,
 Farewell my welbeloved sisters three,
 O lady Briget other sister myne,
 Lo here the ende of worldly vanitee.
 Now well are ye that earthly folly flee,
 And heuenly thynges loue and magnify,
 Farewell and pray for me, for lo now here I ly.

A dew my lordes, a dew my ladies all,
 A dew my faithful seruauntes euerych one,
 A dew my commons whom I neuer shall,
 See in this world wherfore to the alone,
 Immortall god verely three and one,
 I me commende. Thy infinite mercy,
 Shew to thy seruant, for lo now here I ly.

Certain meters in English writen by master Thomas More in hys youth for the boke of fortune, and caused them to be printed in the begynnyng of that boke.

The wordes of Fortune to the people.

MINE high estate power and auctoritie,
 If ye ne know, enserche and ye shall spye,
 That richesse, worship, welth, and dignitie,
 Joy, rest, and peace, and all thyng fynally,
 That any pleasure or profit may come by,
 To mannes comfort, ayde, and sustinaunce,
 Is all at my deuysse and ordinaunce.

Without

Without my fauour there is nothyng wonne.
Many a matter haue I brought at last,
To good concludon, that fondly was begonne.
And many a purpose, bounden sure and last
With wise prouision, I haue ouercast.
Without good happe there may no wit suffice.
Better is to be fortunate than wyse.

And therefore hath there some men bene or this,
My deadly foes and written many a boke,
To my dispryse. And other cause there nys,
But for me list not frendly on them loke.
Thus lyke the fox they fare that once forfoke,
The pleasaunt grapes, and gan for to defy them,
Because he lept and yet could not come by them.

But let them write theyr labour is in vayne.
For well ye wote, myrth, honour, and richesse,
Much better is than penury and payne.
The nedy wretch that lingereth in distresse,
Without myne helpe is euer comfortlesse,
A wery burden odious and loth,
To all the world, and eke to him selfe both.

But he that by my fauour may ascende,
To mighty power and excellent degree,
A common wele to gouerne and defende,
O in how blist condicion standeth he:
Him self in honour and felicity,
And ouer that, may farther and increase,
A region hole in ioyfull rest and peace.

Now in this poynt there is no more to say,
Eche man hath of him self the gouernaunce.
Let euery wight than folowe his owne way,
And he that out of pouertee and mischaunce,
List for to liue, and wyll him selfe enhaunce,
In wealth and richesse, come forth and wayte on me.
And he that wyll be a beggar, let hym be.

THOMAS MORE to them that trust in Fortune.

THOU that are proude of honour shape or kynne,
That hepest vp this wretched worldes treasure,
Thy fingers shrined with gold, thy tawny skynne,
With fresh apparyle garnished out of measure,
And wenest to haue fortune at thy pleasure,
Cast vp thyne eye, and loke how slipper chaunce,
Illudeth her men with chaunge and varyaunce.

Sometyme she loketh as louely fayre and bright,
As goodly Uenus mother of Cupyde.
She becketh and she smileth on euery wight.
But this chere fayned, may not long abide.
There cometh a cloude, and farewell all our pryde.
Like any serpent she beginneth to swell,
And looketh as fierce as any fury of hell.

Yet for all that we brotle men are fayne,
(So wretched is our nature and so blynde)
As soone as Fortune list to laugh agayne,
With fayre countenaunce and disceitfull mynde,
To crouche and knele and gape after the wynde,
Not one or twayne but thousandes in a rout,
Lyke swarmyng bees come flickeryng her aboute.

Then as a bayte she bryngeth forth her ware,
Siluer, gold, riche perle, and precious stone:
On whiche the mased people gafe and stare,
And gape therefore, as dogges doe for the bone.
Fortune at them laugheth, and in her trone
Amyd her treasure and waueryng rycheffe,
Prowdly she houeth as lady and empresse.

Fast by her syde doth wery labour stand,
Pale fere also, and sorow all bewept,
Disdayn and hatred on that other hand,
Eke restles watche fro slepe with trauayle kept,
His eyes drowfy and loking as he slept.
Before her standeth daunger and enuy,
Flattery, dysceyt, mischiese and tyranny.

About her commeth all the world to begge.
He asketh lande, and he to pas would bryng,
This toye and that, and all not worth an egge:
He would in loue prosper aboue all thyng:
He kneleth downe and would be made a kyng:
He forceth not so he may money haue,
Though all the worlde accompt hym for a knaue.

Lo thus ye see diuers heddes, diuers wittes.
Fortune alone as diuers as they all,

Vnstable here and there among them flittes:
And at auenture downe her giftes fall,
Catch who so may she throweth great and small
Not to all men, as commeth sonne or dewe,
But for the most part, all among a fewe.

And yet her brotell giftes long may not last.
He that she gaue them, loketh prowde and hye.
She whirleth about and pluckth away as fast,
And geueth them to an other by and by.
And thus from man to man continually,
She vseth to geue and take, and slyly tosse,
One man to wynnynge of an others losse.

And when she robbeth one, down goth his pryde.
He wepeth and wayleth and curseth her full sore.
But he that receueth it, on that other syde,
Is glad, and blest her often tymes therefore.
But in a whyle when she loueth hym no more,
She glydeth from hym, and her giftes to.
And he her curseth, as other fooles do,

Alas the folysh people can not cease,
Ne voyd her trayne, tyll they the harme do fele.
About her alway, besely they preace.
But lord how he doth thynk hym self full wele.
That may set once his hande vpon her whele.
He holdeth fast: but vpward as he flieth,
She whippeth her whele about, and there he lyeth.

Thus fell Julius from his mighty power.
Thus fell Darius the worthy kyng of Perse.
Thus fell Alexander the great conquerour.
Thus many mo then I may well reherse.
Thus double fortune, when she lyst reuerse
Her slipper fauour fro them that in her trust,
She fleeth her wey and leyeth them in the dust.

She sodeinly enhaunceth them aloft.
And sodeynly mischeueth all the flocke.
The head that late lay easily and full soft,
In stede of pylows lyeth after on the blocke.
And yet alas the most cruell proude mocke:
The deyntie mowth that ladyes kissed haue,
She bryngeth in the case to kyss a knaue.

In chaungyng of her course, the chaunge shewth this,
Vp startth a knaue, and downe there falth a knight,
The beggar ryche, and the ryche man pore is.
Hatred is turned to loue, loue to despyght.
This is her sport, thus proueth she her myght.
Great bofte she maketh yf one be by her power,
Welthy and wretched both within an howre.

Pouertee that of her giftes wyl nothing take,
Wyth mery chere, looketh vpon the prece,
And seeth how fortunes household goeth to wrake.
Fast by her standeth the wyse Socrates.
Arristippus, Pythagoras, and many a lese.
Of olde philosophers. And eke agaynst the sonne
Bekyth hym poore Diogenes in his tonne.

With her is Byas, whose countrey lackt defence,
And whylom of their foes stode so in dout,
That eche man hastely gan to cary thence,
And asked hym why he nought caryed out.
I bere quod he all myne with me about:
Wisedom he ment, not fortunes brotle fees.
For nought he counted his that he might leese.

Heraclitus eke, lyst felowship to kepe
With glad pouertee, Democritus also:
Of which the fyrst can neuer cease but wepe,
To see how thick the blynded people go,
With labour great to purchase care and wo.
That other laugheth to see the foolyshe apes,
Howe earnestly they walk about theyr capes.

Of this poore sect, it is comen vsage,
Onely to take that nature may sustayne,
Banishing cleane all other surplusage,
They be content, and of nothyng complayne.
No nygarde eke is of his good so fayne.
But they more pleasure haue a thousande folde,
The secrete draughtes of nature to beholde.

Set fortunes seruautes by them and ye wull,
That one is free, that other euer thrall,
That one content, that other neuer full.
That one in suretye, that other lyke to fall.
Who lyst to aduise them bothe, parceyue he shall,
As great difference between them as we see,
Betwixte wretchednes and felicitye.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Nowe haue I shewed you bothe: these whiche ye lyst,
Stately fortune, or humble pouertee:
That is to say, nowe lyeth it in your fyft,
To take here bondage, or free libertee.
But in thys poynte and ye do after me,
Draw you to fortune, and labour her to please,
If that ye thynke your selfe to well at ease.

And fyrst vppon the louely shall she smile,
And frendly on the cast her wandering eyes,
Embrace the in her armes, and for a while,
Put the and kepe the in a fooles paradise:
And foorth with all what so thou lyst deuise,
She wyll the graunt it liberally parhappes:
But for all that beware of after clappes.

Recken you neuer of her fauoure sure:
Ye may in clouds as easily trace an hare,
Or in drye lande cause fishes to endure,
And make the burnyng fyre his heate to spare,
And all thys worlde in compace to forfare,
As her to make by craft or engine stable,
That of her nature is euer variable.

Serue her day and nyght as reuerently,
Vppon thy knees as any seruaunt may,
And in conclusion, that thou shalt winne thereby
Shall not be worth thy servyce I dare say.
And looke yet what she geueth the to day,
With labour wonne she shall happily to morow
Pluck it agayne out of thyne hande with sorow.

Wherefore yf thou in suretye lyst to stande,
Take pouerties parte and let prowde fortune go,
Receyue nothing that commeth from her hande.
Loue maner and vertue: they be onely tho.
Whiche double fortune may not take the fro.
Then mayst thou boldly desye her turnyng chaunce:
She can the neyther hynder nor auance.

But and thou wylt nedes medle with her treasure,
Trust not therein, and spende it liberally.
Beare the not proude, nor take not out of measure.
Bylde not thyne house on heyth vp in the sbye.
None falleth farre, but he that climbeth hye,
Remember nature sent the hyther bare,
The gyftes of fortune count them borrowed ware.

THOMAS MORE to them that seke Fortune.

WHO so delyteth to prouen and assay,
Of waveryng fortune the vncertayne lot,
If that the aunswere please you not alway,
Blame ye not me: for I commaunde you not,
Fortune to trust, and eke full well ye wot,
I haue of her no brydle in my fist,
She renneth loose, and turneth where she lyst.

The rollyng dyse in whome your lucke doth stande,
With whose vnhappy chaunce ye be so wroth,
Ye knowe your selfe came neuer in myne hande.
Lo in this ponde be fyshe and frogges both.
Cast in your nette: but be you liefte or lothe,
Hold you content as fortune lyst assyue:
For it is your owne fishyng and not myne.

And though in one chaunce fortune you offend,
Grudge not there at, but beare a mery face.
In many an other she shall it amende.
There is no manne so farre out of her grace,
But he sometyme hath comfort and solace:
Ne none agayne so farre foorth in her fauour,
That is full satisfyed with her behauour.

Fortune is stately, solemne, prowde, and hye:
And rycheffe geueth, to haue seruyce therefore.
The nedy begger catcheth an halfpenny:
Some manne a thousande ponde, some lesse some more.
But for all that she kepeth euer in store,
From euery manne some parcell of his wyll,
That he may pray therfore and serue her styll.

Some manne hath good, but chyldren hath he none.
Some man hath both, but he can get none health.
Some hath al thre, but vp to honours trone,
Can he not crepe, by no maner of stelth.
To some she sendeth, children, ryches, welthe,
Honour, woorshyp, and reuerence all hys lyfe:
But yet she pyncheth hym with a shrewde wyfe.

Then for asmuch as it is fortunes guyse,
To graunt no manne all thyng that he wyll axe,

But as her selfe lyst order and deuysse,
Doth euery manne his parte diuide and tax,
I counsaile you eche one trusse vp your packes,
And take no thyng at all, or be content,
With suche rewarde as fortune hath you sent.

All thynges in this boke that ye shall rede,
Doe as ye lyst, there shall no manne you bynde,
Them to beleue, as surely as your crede.
But notwithstanding certes in my mynde,
I durst well swere, as true ye shall them fynde,
In euery poynt eche answere by and by,
As are the iudgementes of astronomye.

The Description of RICHARD the thirde.

RICHARDE the third sonne, of whom we nowe entreate, was in witte and courage egall with either of them, in bodye and prowesse farre vnder them bothe, little of stature, ill fetured of limmes, croke backed, his left shoulder much higher than his right, hard fauoured of visage, and such as is in states called warlye, in other menne otherwise, he was malicious, wrathfull, enuious, and from afore his birth, euer frowarde. It is for trouth reported, that the duches his mother had so much a doe in her trauaile, that shee coulde not bee de-liuered of hym vncutte: and that hee came into the worlde with the feete forwarde, as menne bee borne out-warde, and (as the fame runneth) also not vntothed, whither menne of hatred reporte aboute the trouthe, or elles that nature chaunged her course in hys beginninge, whiche in the course of his lyfe many thynges vnnaturallye committed. None euill captaine was hee in the warre, as to whiche his disposicion was more metely then for peace. Sundrye victories hadde hee, and sommetime ouerthrowes, but neuer in defaulte as for his owne parsons, either of hardinesse or polytyke order, free was hee called of dyspence, and sommewhat aboute hys power liberall, with large gyftes hee get him vnstedfaste friendshippe, for whiche hee was faine to pil and spoyle in other places, and get him stedfast hatred. Hee was close and secrete, a deepe dissimuler, lowlye of countey-naunce, arrogant of heart, outwardly coumpinable where he inwardely hated, not letting to kisse whome hee thoughte to kyll: dispitious and cruell, not for euill will alway, but after for ambicion, and either for the suretie or encrease of his estate. Frende and foo was much what indifferent, where his aduantage grew, he spared no mans deathe, whose life withstoode his purpose. He slewe with his owne handes king Henry the sixt, being prisoner in the Tower, as menne constantly saye, and that without commaundement or knowedge of the king, whiche woulde vndoubtedly yf he had en-tended that thinge, haue appointed that boocherly office, to some other then his owne borne brother.

Somme wise menne also weene, that his drift couertly conuayde, lacked not in helping furth his brother of Clarence to his death: whiche hee resisted openly, howbeit somewhat (as menne deme) more faintly then he that wer hartely minded to his welth. And they that thus deme, think that he long time in king Edwardes life, forethought to be king in that case the king his brother (whose life hee looked that euil dyete shoulde shorten) shoulde happen to decease (as in dede he did) while his children wer yonge. And thei deme, that for thys intente he was gladde of his brothers death the duke of Clarence, whose life must nedes haue hindered hym so entenyng, whither the same duke of Clarence hadde keppe him true to his nephew the yonge king, or enterprised to be kyng himselfe. But of al this poynte, is there no certaintie, and whoso diuineth vppon coniectures, maye as wel shote to farre as to short. How beit this haue I by credible informacion learned, that the selfe nighte in whiche kyng Edward died, one Mytlebrooke longe ere mornyng, came in greete haste to the house of one Pottier dwellyng in Reddecrosse strete without Crepulgate: and when he was with hasty rappying quickly letten in, hee shewed vnto Pottier that kyng Edward was departed. By my trouthe manne quod Pottier then wyll my mayster the duke of Gloucester bee kyng. What cause hee hadde soo to thynke harde it is to saye, whyther hee being toward him, anye thyng knewe that hee suche thyng purposed, or otherwyse

wyfe had anye inkelynge thereof: for hee was not liklye to speake it of noughte.

But nowe to returne to the course of this hystorye, were it that the duke of Gloucester hadde of old fore-minded this conclusion, or was nowe at erste thereunto moued, and putte in hope by the occasion of the tender age of the younge princes, his nephues (as opportunitye and lykelyhoode of spede, putteth a manne in courage of that hee neuer intended) certayn is it that hee contriued theyr destruccion, with the vsurpacion of the regal dignitye vppon hymselfe. And for as muche as hee well wiste and holpe to mayntayn, a long continued grudge and hearte brennyng betwene the quenes kinred and the kinges blood eyther partye enuying others authoritye, hee nowe thought that their deuision shoulde bee (as it was in dede) a fortherlye begynnynge to the pursuite of his intente, and a sure ground for the foundation of al his building yf he might firste vnder the pretext of reuengynge of olde displeasure, abuse the anger and ygnorance of the one partie, to the destruccion of the tother: and then wyne to his purpose as manye as he coulede: and those that coulede not be wonne, myght be losse ere they looked therefore. For of one thyng was hee certayne, that if his entente were perceiued, he shold soone haue made peace betwene the bothe parties, with his owne bloude.

Kynge Edward in his life, albeit that this discencion betwene hys frendes sommewhat yrked hym: yet in his good health hee sommewhat the lesse regarded it, because hee thought whatsoeuer busines shoulde falle betwene them, hymselfe shoulde alwaye bee hable to rule bothe the parties.

But in his last sicknesse, when hee receiued his naturall strengthe soo fore enfebled, that hee dyspayred all recouerye, then hee consyderynge the youthe of his chyldren, albeit hee nothyng lesse mistrusted then that that happened, yet well forseyng that manye harmes myghte growe by theyr debate, whyle the youth of hys children shoulde lacke discrecion of themselfe and good counsaile, of their frendes, of whiche either party shold counsaile for their owne commodity and rather by pleasaunte aduysse too wyne themselfe fauour, then by profitable aduertisemente to do the children good, he called some of them before him that were at variaunce, and in especyall the lorde marques Dorsette the quenes sonne by her fyrste housebande, and Richarde the lorde Hastynges, a noble man, than lorde chaumberlayne agayne whome the quene specially grudged, for the great fauoure the kyng bare hym, and also for that shee thoughte hym secretlye famyler with the kynge in wanton coumpanye. Her kynred also bare hym fore, as well for that the kynge hadde made hym captayne of Calyce (whiche office the lorde Ryuers, brother to the quene claimed of the kinges former promysse as for diuerse other great giftes whiche hee receyued, that they loked for. When these lordes with diuerse other of bothe the parties were comme in presence, the kynge listinge vppe hymselfe and vnderfette with pillowes, as it is reported on this wyse sayd vnto them, My lordes, my dere kinsmenne and alies, in what plighte I lye you see, and I feele. By whiche the lesse whyle I looke to lyue with you, the more depelye am I moued to care in what case I leaue you, for such as I leaue you, suche bee my children lyke to fynde you. Whiche if they shoulde (that Godde forbydde) fynde you at variaunce, myght happe to fall themselfe at warre ere their discrecion woulde serue to sette you at peace. Ye se their youthe, of whiche I reckon the onely suretie to reste in youre concord, For it suffiseth not that al you loue them, yf eche of you hate other, If they wer menne, your faithfulnesse happelye woulde suffice. But childehood must be maintained by mens authoritye, and slipper youth vnderpropped with elder counsaile, which neither they can haue, but ye geue it, nor ye geue it, yf ye gree not. For wher eche laboureth to breake that the other maketh, and for hatred of ech of others parson, impugneth eche others counsaile, there must it nedes bee long ere anye good conclusion goe forward. And also while either partye laboureth to be chiefe, flattery shall haue more place then plaine and faithfull aduysse, of whiche muste needes ensue the euill bringyng vppe of the prynce, whose mynd in tender youth infect, shal redily fal to mischief and riot, and drawe down with this noble realme to ruine, but if grace turn him to wisdom: which if God send, then thei that by euill menes before pleased him best, shal after fall farthest out of fauour, so that euer at length euil driftes dreue to nought, and good pain wayes prosper. Great variaunce hath ther long bene betwene you, not alway for great causes. Sometime a thing right wel intended, our misconstruccion turneth vnto worle or a smal displeasure done vs, eyther our owne affeccion or euil tongues agreueth. But this wote I well ye neuer had so great cause of hatred, as ye haue of loue. That we be al men, that we be christen men, this shall I leaue for prechers to tel you (and yet I wote nere whither any preachers wordes ought more to moue you, then his that is by and by gooying to the place that thei all preache of.) But this shal I desire you to remember, that the one parte of you is of my bloode, the other of myne alies, and eche of yow with other, eyther of kinred or affinitie, whiche spirytually kynred of affynity, if the sacramentes of Christes church, beare that weyghte with vs that woulde Godde thei did, shoulde no lesse moue vs to charitye, then the respecte of fleshye consanguinitye. Oure Lorde forbydde, that you loue together the worse, for the selfe cause that you ought to loue the better. And yet that happeneth. And no where fynde wee so deadlye debate, as amonge them, whyche by nature and lawe moste oughte to agree together. Suche a pestilente serpente is ambicion and desyre of vaine glorye and souerainty, whiche amonge states where he once entreth crepeth forth so farre, tyll with deuision and variaunce hee turneth all to mischiefe. Firste longing to be nexte the best, afterwarde egall with the beste, and at laste chiefe and aboue the beste. Of which immoderate appetite of woorship, and thereby of debate and dissencion what losse, what sorowe, what trouble hath within these fewe yeares growen in this realme, I praye Godde as well forgeate as wee well remember.

Whiche thynges yf I coulede as well haue foresene, as I haue with my more payne then pleasure proued, by Goddes blessed Ladie (that was euer his othe) I woulde neuer haue won the courtesye of mennes knees, with the losse of soo many heades. But sithen thynges passed cannot be gaine called, muche oughte wee the more beware, by what occasion we haue taken soo greute hurte afore, that we estefoones fall not in that occasion agayne. Nowe be those griefes passed, and all is (Godde be thanked) quiete, and likeli righte wel to prosper in wealthfull peace vnder youre coseyns my children, if Godde sende them life and you loue. Of whyche twoo thynges, the lesse losse wer they by whome thoughte Godde dydde hys pleasure, yet shoulde the realme alway fynde kinges and paraduenture as good kinges. But yf you among youre selfe in a chilles reygne fall at debate, many a good man shall perishe and happely he to, and ye to, ere thys land fynde peace again. Wherfore in these last wordes that euer I looke to speak with you: I exhort you and require you al, for the loue that you haue euer borne to me, for the loue that I haue euer born to you, for the loue that our Lord beareth to vs all, from this time forward, all grieues forgotten, eche of you loue other. Whiche I verelye truste you will, if ye any thing earthly regard, either Godde or your king, affinitie or kinred, this realme, your owne countrey, or your owne surety. And therewithal the king no longer enduring to sitte vp, laide him down on his right side, his face towarde them: and none was there present that coulede refrain from wepyng. But the lordes recomforting him with as good wordes as they coulede, and answering for the time as thei thought to stand with his pleasure, there in his presence (as by their wordes appered ech forgaue other, and ioyned their hands together, when (as it after appeared by their dedes) their hearts wer far a sonder. As sone as the king was departed, the noble prince his sonne drew toward London, which at the time of his decease, kept his household at Ludlow in Wales. Which countrey being far of from the law and recourse to iustice, was begon to be farre oute of good wyll and waxen wild, robbers and riuers walking at libertie vncorrected. And for this encheason

the prince was in the life of his father sente thither, to the end that the authoritie of his presence, should re-fraine euill disposed parsons fro the boldnes of their formar outerages, to the gouernaunce and ordering of this yong prince at his sending thither, was there appointed Sir Antony Wodvile lord Riuers and brother vnto the queene, a right honourable man, as valiaunte of hande as politike in counsaile. Adioyned wer there vnto him other of the same partie, and in effect euery one as he was neresst of kin vnto the queene, so was planted next about the prince. That drifte by the queene not vnwisely deuised, whereby her bloode mighte of youth be rooted in the princes fauor, the duke of Gloucester turned vnto their destruccion, and vpon that grounde set the foundation of all his vnhappy building. For whom soeuer he perceiued, either at variance with them, or bearing himself their fauor, hee brake vnto them, some by mouth, som by writing and secret messengers, that it neyther was reason nor in any wise to be suffered, that the yong king their master and kinsmanne, should bee in the handes and custodie of his mothers kinred, sequestred in maner from theyr compani and attendance, of which eueri one ought him as faithful seruice as they, and manye of them far more honorable part of kin then his mothers side: whose blood (quod he) sauing the kinges pleasure, was ful vnmetely to be matched with his: whiche nowe to be as who say removed from the kyng, and the lesse noble to be left aboute him, is (quod he) neither honorable to hys magestie, nor vnto vs, and also to his grace no surety to haue the mightiest of his frendes from him, and vnto vs no little ieopardy, to suffer our welproued euil willers, to grow in ouergret authoritie with the prince in youth, namely which is lighte of beliefe and sone perswaded. Ye remember I trow king Edward himself, albeit he was a manne of age and of discrecion, yet was he in manye thynges ruled by the bende, more then stode either with his honour, or our profite, or with the commoditie of any manne els, except onely the immoderate aduancement of them selfe. Whiche whither they forer thirsted after their owne weale, or our woe, it wer hard I wene to gesse. And if some folkes frendship had not holden better place with the king, then any respect of kinred, thei might peraduenture easily haue be trapped and brought to confusion somme of vs ere this. Why not as easily as they haue done some other alreadye, as neere of his royal bloode as we. But our Lord hath wrought his wil, and thanke be to his grace that peril is passe. Howe be it as great is growing, yf wee suffer this yonge kyng in oure enemyes hande, whiche without his wytyng, might abuse the name of his commaundement, to ani of our vndoing, which thyng God and good prouision forbyd. Of which good prouision none of us hath any thing the lesse nede, for the late made attonement, in whiche the kinges pleasure hadde more place then the parties willes. Nor none of vs I beleue is so vnwyse, ouersone to truste a newe frende made of an olde foe, or to think that an houerly kindnes, sodainely contract in one houre continued, yet scant a fortnight, shold be deper settled in their stomackes: then a long accustomed malice many yeres rooted.

With these wordes and writynges and suche other, the duke of Gloucester sone set a fyre, them that were of themself ethe to kindle, and in especiall twayne, Edward duke of Buckingham, and Richarde lorde Hastings and chaumberlayn, both men of honour and of great power. The tone by longe succession from his ancestrie, the tother by his office and the kinges fauor. These two not bearing eche to other so muche loue, as hatred bothe vnto the queenes parte: in this poynte accorded together wyth the duke of Gloucester, that they wolde vtterlye amoue fro the kynes companye, all his mothers frendes, vnder the name of their enemyes. Vpon this concluded, the duke of Gloucester vnderstandyng, that the lordes whiche at that tyme were aboute the kyng, intended to bryng him vppe to his coronacion, accompanied with suche power of theyr frendes, that it shoulde bee harde for hym to brynge his purpose to passe, without the gathering and great assemble of people and in maner of open warre, whereof the ende he wiste was doubtuous, and in which the kyng being on their side, his part shoulde haue the face and name of a rebellion: he secretly therefore by diuers meanes, caused the queene to be perswaded and brought in the mynd, that it neither wer nede, and also shold be ieopardous, the king to come vp strong. For whereas nowe euery lorde loued other, and none other thing studyed vppon, but aboute the coronacion and honoure of the king: if the lordes of her kinred shold assemble in the kinges name muche people, thei shoulde geue the lordes atwixte whome and them hadde bene sommetyme debate, to feare and suspēcie, lest they shoulde gather thys people, not for the kynes sauegarde whome no manne enpugned, but for theyr destruccion, hauyng more regarde to their olde variaunce, then their newe attonement. For whiche cause thei shoulde assemble on the other partie muche people agayne for their defence, whose power she wiste wel farre stretched. And thus shoulde all the realme fall on a rore. And of al the hurte that therof shoulde ensue, which was likely not to be litle, and the most harme there like to fal wher she lest would, all the worlde woulde put her and her kinred in the wyght, and say that thei had vnwyfelye and vntrewlye also, broken the amitie and peace that the kyng her husband so prudentelye made, betwene hys kinne and hers in his death bed, and whiche the other party faithfully obserued.

The queene being in this wise perswaded, suche woofde sente vnto her sonne, and vnto her brother being aboute the kyng, and ouer that the duke of Gloucester hymselfe and other lordes the chiefe of hys bende, wrote vnto the kyng soo reuerentelye, and to the queenes frendes, there soo louyngelye, that they nothyng eearthelye mystrustyng, broughte the kyng vppe in greate haste, not in good speede, with a lobar companye. Nowe was the king in his waye to London gone, from Northampton, when these dukes of Gloucester and Buckyngham came thither. Where remained behynd, the lorde Ryuers the kynes vnclē, entending on the morowe to folow the kyng, and bee with hym at Stonye Stratford miles thence, earely or hee departed. So was there made that nyghte muche frendely chere betwene these dukes and the lorde Riuers a greate while. But incontinente after that they were oppenlye with greate courtesye departed, and the lorde Riuers lodged, the dukes secretlye with a fewe of their moste priuie frendes, sette them downe in counsaile, wherin they spent a great parte of the nyght. And at their risinge in the dawning of the day, thei sent about priuily to their seruantes in their innes and lodgynges about, geuinge them commaundement to make them selfe shortly readye, for their lordes wer to horsebackward. Vppon whiche messages, manye of their folke were attendaunt, when manye of the lorde Riuers seruantes were vnreadye. Nowe hadde these dukes taken also into their custodie the kayes of the inne, that none shoulde passe forth without theyr licence.

And ouer this in the hyghe waye towarde Stonye Stratforde where the kyng laye, they hadde beestowed certayne of theyr folke, that shoulde sende backe agayne, and compell to retourne, anye manne that were gotten oute of Northampton toward Stonye Stratforde, tyll they shoulde geue other lycence. For as muche as the dukes themselfe intended for the shewe of their dylygence, to bee the fyrste that shoulde that daye attende vppon the kynes highnesse oute of that towne: thus bare they folke in hande. But when the lorde Ryuers vnderstode the gates closed, and the wayes on euerye side besette, neyther hys seruantes nor hymself suffered to go oute, parceiuyng well so greate a thyng without his knowledge not begun for noughte, comparýng this maner present with this last nightes chere, in so few houres so gret a chaunge marueylouslye misliked. How be it sithe hee coulde not geat awaye, and keepe hymselfe close, hee woulde not, lest he shoulde seeme to hyde hymselfe for some secret feare of hys owne faulte, whereof he saw no such cause in hym self: he determined vppon the suretie of his own conscience, to goe boldelye to them, and inquire what thys matter myghte meane. Whome as soone as they sawe, they beganne to quarrell with hym, and saye, that hee intended to sette distaunce beetweene the kyng and them, and to brynge them to confusion, but it shoulde not lye in hys power. And when hee beganne (as hee was a very well spoken manne) in goodly wise to excuse himself, they taryed not the ende of his aunswere, but shortly tooke him and putte him in warde, and that done, forthwyth wente to horsebacke, and tooke the waye to Stonye Stratforde. Where they founde the kinge with his companie readye to leape on horsebacke, and departe forward, to leaue that lodging for them, because it was to streighte for bothe coupanies. And as sone as they came in his presence, they lighte adowne with all their companie aboute them. To whome the duke of Buckingham saide, goe afore gentlemenne and yeomen, kepe youre rowmes. And thus in goodly arraye, thei came to the kinge, and on their knees in very humble wise, salued his grace; whiche receyued them in very ioyous and amiable maner, nothinge earthlye knowing nor mistrustinge as yet. But euen by and by in his presence, they piked a quarell to the lorde Richard Graye, the kynges other brother by his mother, sayinge that hee with the lorde marques his brother and the lorde Riuers his vncle, hadde coumpassed to rule the kinge and the realme, and to sette variaunce among the states, and to subdewe and destroye the noble blood of the realm. Toward the accomplishinge whereof, they sayde that the lorde Marques hadde entered into the Tower of London, and thence taken out the kinges treasor, and sent menne to the sea. All whiche thinge these dukes wiste well were done for good purposes and necessari by the whole counsaile at London, sauing that sommewhat thei must sai. Vnto whiche woordes, the king aunswered, what my brother Marques hath done I cannot saie. But in good faith I dare well aunswere for myne vncle Riuers and my brother here, that thei be innocent of any such matters. Ye my liege quod the duke of Buckingham thei haue kepte their dealing in these matters farre fro the knowledge of your good grace. And forthwith thei arrested the lord Richarde and Sir Thomas Vaughan knyghte, in the kinges presence, and broughte the king and all backe vnto Northampton, where they tooke againe further counsaile. And there they sent awaie from the kinge whom it pleased them, and sette newe seruantes aboute him, suche as lyked better them than him. At whiche dealinge hee wepte and was nothing contente, but it booted not. And at dyner the duke of Gloucester sente a dishe from his owne table to the lord Riuers, prayinge him to bee of good chere, all shoulde be well inough. And he thanked the duke, and prayed the messenger to beare it to his nephewe the lorde Richard with the same message for his comfort, who he thought had more nede of coumfort, as one to whom such aduersitie was straunge. But himself had been al his dayes in vre therewith, and therefore coulde beare it the better. But for al this coumfortable courtesye of the duke of Gloucester he sent the lord Riuers and the lorde Richarde with Sir Thomas Vaughan into the Northe countrey into diuers places to prison, and afterward al to Pomfrait, where they were in conclusion beheaded.

A letter written with a cole by Sir THOMAS MORE to hys doughter maistres MARGARET ROPER, within a whyle after he was prisoner in the Towre.

MYNE own good doughter, our lorde be thanked I am in good helthe of bodye, and in good quiet of minde: and of worldly thynges I no more desyer then I haue. I beseeche hym make you all mery in the hope of heauen. And such thynges as I somewhat longed to talke with you all, concerning the worlde to come, our Lorde put them into your myndes, as I truste he dothe and better to by hys holy spirite: who blesse you and preferue you all. Written wyth a cole by your tender louing father, who in hys pore prayers forgetteth none of you all. nor your babes, nor your nurfes, nor your good husbandes, nor your good husbandes shrewde wyues, nor your fathers shrewde wyfe neither, nor our other frendes. And thus fare ye hartely well for lacke of paper.

THOMAS MORE, knight.

Two short ballettes which Sir THOMAS MORE made for hys pastime while he was prisoner in the Tower of London.

LEWYS the lost louer.

EY flatering fortune, loke thou neuer so fayre,
Or neuer so plesantly begin to smile,
As though thou wouldest my ruine all repayre,
During my life thou shalt me not begile.
Trust shall I God, to entre in a while.
Hys haue or heauen sure and vniforme.
Euer after thy calme, loke I for a storme.

LONG was I lady Lucke your seruing man,
And now haue lost agayne all that I gat,
Wherefore whan I thinke on you nowe and than,
And in my mynde remember this and that,
Ye may not blame me though I beshrew your cat,
But in fayth I blesse you agayne a thousand times,
For lending me now some layzure to make rymes.

At the same time with Sir Thomas More lived Skelton, the poet laureate of Henry VIII. from whose works it seems proper to insert a few stanzas, though he cannot be said to have attained great elegance of language.

Of the wits that flourished in the reign of Henry VIII. none has been more frequently celebrated than the earl of Surry; and this history would therefore have been imperfect without some specimens of his works, which yet it is not easy to distinguish from those of Sir Thomas Wyatt and others, with which they are confounded in the edition that has fallen into my hands. The three first are, I believe, Surry's; the rest, being of the same age, are selected, some as examples of different measures, and one as the oldest composition which I have found in blank verse.

Description of Spring, wherein eche thing renewes, save only the lover.

THE soote season that bud, and bloome fourth brings,
With grene hath cladde the hyll, and eke the vale,
The Nightingall with fethers new she singes;
The turtle to her mate hath told her tale:

E N G L I S H   L A N G U A G E.

Somer is come, for every spray now springes.
 The hart hath hunge hys olde head on the pale,
 The bucke in brake his winter coate he flynges;
 The fishes flete with newe repayred scale:
 The adder all her slough away she flynges,
 The swift swallow puriueth the flies smalle,
 The busy bee her honey how she mynges;
 Winter is worne that was the floures bale.
 And thus I see among these pleasant thynges
 Eche care decays, and yet my sorrow springes.

Descripcion of the restless estate of a lover.

WHen youth had led me half the race,
 That Cupides scourge had made me runne;
 I looked back to meet the place,
 From whence my weary course begunne:

And then I saw howe my desyre
 Misguiding me had led the waye,
 Myne eyne to greedy of theyre hyre,
 Had made me lose a better prey.

For when in sighes I spent the day,
 And could not cloake my grief with game;
 The boyling smoke dyd still bewray,
 The present heat of secret flame:

And when salt teares do bayne my breast,
 Where love his pleasant traynes hath sown,
 Her beauty hath the fruytes opprest,
 Ere that the buddes were spronge and blowne.

And when myne eyen dyd still pursue,
 The flying chafe of theyre request;
 Theyre greedy looks dyd oft renew,
 The hydden wounde within my breste.

Wheneveryloke these cheekes might stayne,
 From dedly pale to glowing red;
 By outward signes appeared playne,
 To her for helpe my hart was fled.

But all to late Love learneth me,
 To paynt all kynd of Colours new;
 To blynd theyre eyes that else should see
 My speckled chekes with Cupids hew.

And now the covert brest I clame,
 That worshipt Cupide secretly;
 And nourished hys sacred flame,
 From whence no blairing sparks do flye.

Descripcion of the fickle Affections, Pangs, and Sleights of Love.

SUCH wayward wayes hath Love, that most part in discord
 Our willes do stand, whereby our hartes but seldom do accord:

Decyte is hys delighte, and to begyle and mocke
 The simple hartes which he doth strike with froward divers stroke.

He causeth th' one to rage with golden burning darte,
 And doth alay with Leaden cold, again the others harte.
 Whose gleames of burning fyre and easy sparkes of flame,
 In balance of unequal weyght he pondereth by ame
 From easye ford where I myghte wade and pass full well,
 He me withdrawes and doth me drive, into a depe dark hell:

And me witholdes where I am calde and offred place,
 And willes me that my mortal foe I do beseke of Grace;
 He lettes me to pursue a conquest welnere wonne
 To follow where my paynes were lost, ere that my fute begunne.

So by this means I know how soon a hart may turne
 From warre to peace, from truce to stryfe, and so agayne returne.

I know how to content my self in others lust,
 Of little stufte unto my self to weave a webbe of trust:
 And how to hyde my harmes with sole dyssembling
 chere,

Whan in my face the painted thoughtes would outwardly appeare.

I know how that the bloud forsakes the face for dred,
 And how by shame it staynes agayne the Chekes with flamyng red:

I know under the Grene, the Serpent how he lurkes:
 The hammer of the restless forge I wote eke how it workes.

I know and con by roate the tale that I woulde tell But ofte the woordes come fourth awrye of him that loveth well.

I know in heate and colde the Lover how he shakes,
 In synging how he doth complayne, in sleeping how he wakes

To languish without ache, sickleesse for to consume,
 A thousand thynges for to devyse, resolvyng of his fume;

And though he lyst to see his Ladyes Grace full fore
 Such pleasures as delyght hys Eye, do not his helthe restore.

I know to seke the tracte of my desyred foe,
 And fere to fynde that I do seek, but chiefly this I know,
 That Lovers must transfourme into the thyng beloved,
 And live (alas! who would believe?) with sprite from Lyfe removed.

I knowe in harty sighes and laughters of the spleene,
 At once to chaunge my state, my will, and eke my colour clehe.

I know how to deceyve my self wythe others helpe,
 And how the Lyon chastised is, by beatyng of the whelpe.

In standyng nere the fyre, I know how that I frease; Farre of I burne, in bothe I waste, and so my Lyfe I leese.

I know how Love doth rage upon a yeylding mynde,
 How smalle a nete may take and mase a harte of gentle kynde:

Or else with seldom swete to season hepes of gall, Revived with a glympse of Grace old sorrowes to let fall.

The hydden traynes I know, and secret snares of Love,
 How soone a loke will prynte a thoughte that never may remove.

The flypper state I know, the fodein turnes from welthe

The doubtfull hope, the certaine wooe, and sure despaired helthe.

A praise of his ladie.

GIVE place you ladies and be gone,
 Boast not your selves at all,
 For here at hande approacheth one,
 Whose face will stayne you all.

The vertue of her lively lookes
 Excels the precious stone,
 I wishe to have none other bookes
 To reade or look upon.

In eche of her two christall eyes,
 Smyleth a naked boy;
 It would you all in heart suffice
 To see that lampe of joye.

I think nature hath lost the moulde,
 Where she her shape did take;
 Or else I doubte if nature coulde
 So fayre a creature make.

She may be well comparde
 Unto the Phenix kinde,
 Whose like was never seene nor heard,
 That any man can fynde.

In lyfe she is Diana chaste
 In trouth Penelopey,
 In woord and eke in dede stedfast;
 What will you more we say:

If all the world were sought so farre,
 Who could finde suche a wight,
 Her beauty twinkleth lyke a starre
 Within the frosty night.

The Lover refused of his love, embraceth vertue.

MY youthfull yeres are past,
 My joyfull dayes are gone,
 My lyfe it may not last,
 My grave and I am one.
 My Myrth and joyes are fled,
 And I a Man in wo,
 Desirous to be ded,
 My miserie to forgo.

 I cannot live with stones,
 It is too hard a foode,
 I wil be dead at ones

 Shrowded with shafts, the heaven with cloude of dartes,
 Covered the ayre. Against full fatted bulles,
 As forceth kyndled yre the lyons keene,
 Whose greedy gutts the gnawing hunger prickes;
 So Macedons against the Persians fare,
 Now corpses hyde the purpurde soyle with blood;
 Large slaughter on eche side, but Perses more,
 Moyst fieldes bebled, theyr heartes and numbers bate,
 Fainted while they gave backe, and fall to flighte.

 With throte yent he roares, he lyeth along
 His entrailes with a launce through gryded quyte,
 Hym smytes the club, hym woundes farre stryking bowe,
 And him the sling, and him the shining sword;
 He dyeth, he is all dead, he pantes, he restes.
 Right over stoode in snowwhite armour brave,
 The Memphite Zoroas, a cunning clarke,
 To whom the heaven lay open as his booke;
 And in celestiaall bodies he could tell
 The moving meeting light, aspect, eclips,
 And influence, and constellations all;
 What earthly chaunces would betyde, what yere,
 Of plenty storde, what signe forewarned death,
 How winter gendreth snow, what temperature
 In the prime tyde doth season well the soyle,
 Why summer burnes, why autumn hath ripe grapes,
 Whither the circle quadrate may become,
 Whether our tunes heavens harmony can yelde
 Of four begyns among themselves how great
 Proportion is; what sway the erryng lightes
 Doth send in course gayne that fyrst movyng heaven;
 What, grees one from another distant be,
 What starr doth lett the hurtfull fyre to rage,
 Or him more mylde what opposition makes,
 What fyre doth qualifye Mavorfes fyre,
 What house eche one doth seeke, what plannett raignes
 Within this heaven sphere, nor that small thynges
 I speake, whole heaven he closeth in his breft.
 This sage then in the starres hath spyed the fates
 Threatned him death without delay, and, sith,
 He saw he could not fatall order chaunge,
 Foreward he preft in battayle, that he might Mete with the rulers of the Macedons,
 Of his right hand desirous to be slain,
 The bouldrest borne, and worthiest in the feilde;

And as a wight, now wery of his lyfe,
 And seking death, in fyrst front of his rage,
 Comes desperately to Alexanders face,
 At him with dartes one after other throwes,
 With recklesse wordes and clamour him provokes,
 And sayth, Nectanaks bastard shamefull stayne
 Of mothers bed, why lovest thou thy strokes,
 Cowardes among, Turn thee to me, in case
 Manhood there be so much left in thy heart,
 Come fight with me, that on my helmet weare
 Apollo's laurell both for learnings laude,
 And eke for martiall praise, that in my shielde
 The seven fold Sophie of Minerve containe,
 A match more mete, Syr King, then any here.
 The noble prince amoved takes ruth upon
 The wilfull wight, and with soft words ayen,
 O monstrous man (quoth he) what so thou art,
 I pray thee live, ne do not with thy death.
 This lodge of Lore, the Muses mansion marre;
 That treasure house this hand shall never spoyle,
 My sword shall never bruise that skilfull brayne,
 Long gather'd heapes of science sone to spill;
 O how fayre fruites may you to mortall men
 From Wisdoms garden give; how many may
 By you the wiser and the better prove:
 What error, what mad moode, what frenzy thee
 Perswades to be downe, sent to depe Averne,
 Where no artes flourish, nor no knowledge vailes
 For all these sawes. When thus the sovereign said,
 Alighted Zoroas with sword unsheathed,
 The careless king there smoate above the greve,
 At th' opening of his quilles wounded him,
 So that the blood down traile on the ground:
 The Macedon perceiving hurt, gan gnashe,
 But yet his mynde he bent in any wise
 Hym to forbear, sett spurrs unto his stede,
 And turnde away, lest anger of his smarte
 Should cause revenger hand deale balefull blowes;
 But of the Macedonian chieftaines knights,
 One Meleager could not bear this sight,
 But ran upon the said Egyptian rude,
 And cutt him in both knees: he fell to ground,
 Wherewith a whole rout came of souldiours sterne,
 And all in pieces hewed the sely seg,
 But happely the soule fled to the starres,
 Where, under him, he hath full sight of all,
 Whereat he gazed here with reaching looke.
 The Persians waild such sapience to forgoe,
 The very sone the Macedonians wisht
 He would have lived, king Alexander selfe
 Demde him a man unmete to dye at all;
 Who wonne like praise for conquest of his Yre,
 As for stoute men in field that day subdued,
 Who princes taught how to discerne a man,
 That in his head so rare a jewel beares,
 But over all those same Camenes, those same,
 Divine Camenes, whose honour he procurde,
 As tender parent doth his daughters weale,
 Lamented, and for thanks, all that they can,
 Do cherish hym deceast, and sett him free,
 From dark oblivion of devouring death.

Barclay wrote about 1550; his chief work is the Ship of Fools, of which the following extract will shew his style.

Of Mockers and Scorners, and false Accusers.

O Heartles fooles, haste here to our doctrine,
 Leaue off the wayes of your enormitie,
 Enforce you to my preceptes to encline,
 For here shall I shewe you good and veritie:
 Encline, and ye finde shall great prosperitie,
 Ensuing the doctrine of our fathers olde,
 And godly lawes in valour worth great golde.
 Who that will followe the graces manyfolde
 Which are in vertue, shall finde auancement:
 Wherfore ye fooles that in your sinne are bolde,
 Ensue ye wisdom, and leaue your lewde intent,
 Wisdom is the way of men most excellent:
 Therfore haue done, and shortly spede your pace,
 To quaynt your self and company with grace.

Learne

Learne what is vertue, therin is great folace,
Learne what is truth, sadnes and prudence,
Let grutche be gone, and grauitie purchase,
Forlake your folly and inconuenience,
Cease to be fooles, and ay to sue offence,
Followe ye vertue, chiefe roote of godlynes,
For it and wisedome is ground of clenlynes.

Wisedome and vertue two thinges are doubtles,
Whiche man endueth with honour speciall,
But suche heartes as slepe in foolishnes
Knoweth nothing, and will nought know at all :
But in this little barge in principall
All foolish mockers I purpose to repreue,
Clawe he his backe that feeleth itche or greue.

Mockers and scorners that are harde of beleue,
With a rough combe here will I clawe and grate,
To proue if they will from their vice remeue,
And leaue their folly, which causeth great debate :
Suche caytiues spare neyther poore man nor estate,
And where their selfe are moste worthy derision,
Other men to scorne is all their most condition.

Yet are mo fooles of this abusion,
Whiche of wise men despiseth the doctrine,
With mowes, mockes, scorne, and collusion,
Rewarding rebukes for their good discipline :
Shewe to suche wisedome, yet shall they not encline
Unto the same, but set nothing therby,
But mocke thy doctrine, still or openly.

So in the worlde it appeareth commonly,
That who that will a foole rebuke or blame,
A mocke or mowe shall he haue by and by :
Thus in derision haue fooles their speciall game.
Correct a wise man that woulde eschue ill name,
And fayne would learne, and his lewde life amende,
And to thy wordes he gladly shall intende.

If by misfortune a rightwise man offende,
He gladly suffereth a iuste correction,
And him that him teacheth taketh for his frende,
Him selfe putting mekely unto subiection,
Following his preceptes and good direction :
But yf that one a foole rebuke or blame,
He shall his teacher hate, slander and diffame.

Howbeit his wordes oft turne to his own shame,
And his owne dartes retourne to him agayne,
And so is he fore wounded with the same,
And in wo endeth, great misery and payne.
It also proued full often is certayne,
That they that on mockers alway their mindes cast,
Shall of all other be mocked at the last.

He that goeth right, stedfast, sure, and fast,
May him well mocke that goeth halting and lame,
And he that is white may well his scornescast,
Agaynst a man of Inde : but no man ought to blame
Anothers vice, while he vseth the same.
But who that of sinne is cleane in deede and thought,
May him well scorne whose liuing is starke nought.
The scornescast of Naball full dere should haue been bought,
If Abigayl his wife discrete and sage,
Had not by kindnes right crafty meanes fought,
The wrath of Dauid to temper and asswage.
Hath not two beares in their fury and rage

Thus have I deduced the English language from the age of Alfred to that of Elizabeth; in some parts imperfectly for want of materials; but I hope, at least, in

Two and fortie children rent and torne,
For they the prophete Helyseus did scorne.

So might they curse the time that they were borne,
For their mocking of this prophete diuine :
So many other of this sort often mourne
For their lewde mockes, and fall into ruine.
Thus is it folly for wise men to encline,
To this lewde flocke of fooles, for see thou shall
Them moste scorning that are most bad of all.

The Lenuoy of Barclay to the fooles.

Ye mocking fooles that in scorne set your ioy,
Proudly despising Gods punishment :
Take ye example by Cham the sonne of Noy,
Which laughed his father vnto derision,
Which him after cursed for his transgression,
And made him seruauant to all his lyne and stocke.
So shall ye caytifs at the conclusion,
Since ye are nought, and other scorne and mocke.

About the year 1553 wrote Dr. Wilson, a man celebrated for the politeness of his style, and the extent of his knowledge : what was the state of our language in his time, the following may be of use to show.

Pronunciation is an apte ordering bothe of the voyce, countenance, and all the whole bodye, accordyng to the worthines of suche woordes and mater as by speache are declared. The vse hereof is suche for anye one that liketh to haue prayse for tellynge his tale in open assemblie, that hauing a good tongue, and a comelye countenance, he shalbe thought to passe all other that haue the like vtterance : thoughe they haue much better learning. The tongue geueth a certayne grace to euerye matter, and beautifieth the cause in like maner, as a swete soundyng lute muche setteth forth a meane deuised ballade. Or as the founde of a good instrumente styrreth the hearers, and moueth muche delite, so a cleare soundyng voice comforteth muche our deintie eares, with muche swete melodie, and causeth vs to al-lowe the matter rather for the reporters sake, then the reporter for the matters sake. Demosthenes therefore, that famous oratour, beyng asked what was the chiefe point in al oratorie, gaue the chiefe and onely praise to Pronunciation; being demaunded, what was the seconde, and the thirde, he stil made answere, Pronunciation, and would make none other aunswere, till they leste askyng, declaryng hereby that arte without vtterance can dooe nothyng, vtterance without arte can dooe right muche. And no doubt that man is in outwarde apparaunce halfe a good clarke, that hath a cleane tongue, and a comely gesture of his body. Æschines lykwyse beyng bannished his countrie through Demosthenes, when he had redde to the Rhodians his own oration, and Demosthenes aunswere thereunto, by force whereof he was bannished, and all they marueiled muche at the excellencie of the same : then (q d Æschines) you would haue marueiled muche more if you had heard hymselfe speak it. Thus beyng cast in miserie and bannished for euer, he could not but geue such great reporte of his deadly and mortal enemy.

such a manner that its progress may be easily traced, and the gradations observed, by which it advanced from its first rudeness to its present elegance.

GRAMMAR

OF THE

ENGLISH TONGUE.

GRAMMAR, which is the art of using words properly, comprises four parts; Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Prosody.

In this division and order of the parts of grammar I follow the common grammarians, without enquiring whether a fitter distribution might not be found. Experience has long shown this method to be so distinct as to obviate confusion, and so comprehensive as to prevent any inconvenient omissions. I likewise use the terms already received, and already understood, though perhaps others more proper might sometimes be invented. Sylburgius, and other innovators, whose new terms have sunk their learning into neglect, have left sufficient warning against the trifling ambition of teaching arts in a new language.

ORTHOGRAPHY is the art of combining letters into syllables, and syllables into words. It therefore teaches previously the form and sound of letters.

The letters of the English language are,

Roman.	Italick.	Old English.	Name.
A a	A a	A a	a
B b	B b	B b	be
C c	C c	C c	see
D d	D d	D d	dee
E e	E e	E e	e
F f	F f	F f	eff
G g	G g	G g	jee
H h	H h	H h	aitch
I i	I i	I i	i (or ja)
J j	J j	J j	j consonant,
K k	K k	K k	ka
L l	L l	L l	el
M m	M m	M m	em
N n	N n	N n	en
O o	O o	O o	o
P p	P p	P p	pee
Q q	Q q	Q q	cue
R r	R r	R r	ar
S s	S s	S s	efs
T t	T t	T t	tee
U u	U u	U u	u (or va)
V v	V v	V v	v consonant,
W w	W w	W w	double u
X x	X x	X x	ex
Y y	Y y	Y y	wy
Z z	Z z	Z z	zed, more commonly izzard or uzzard, that is, f hard.

To these may be added certain combinations of letters universally used in printing; as ct, ft, fl, fb, fk, ff, fi, ffi, fi, ffi, ffl, and &c, or and per se, and. ct, ft, fl, fb, fk, ff, fi, ffi, fi, ffi, ffl, &c. ct, ft, fl, fb, fk, ff, fi, ffi, fi, ffi, ffl, &c.

Our letters are commonly reckoned twenty-four, because anciently i and j, as well as u and v, were expressed by the same character; but as those letters, which had always different powers, have now different forms, our alphabet may be properly said to consist of twenty-six letters.

None of the small consonants have a double form, except f, s; of which f is used in the beginning and middle, and s at the end.

Vowels are five, a, e, i, o, u.

Such is the number generally received; but for i it is the practice to write y in the end of words, as thy, holy; before i, as from die, dying; from beautify, beautifying; in the words says, days, eyes; and in words derived from the Greek, and written originally with υ, as system, συστημα, sympathy, συμπάθεια.

For u we often write w after a vowel, to make a diphthong; as raw, grew, view, vow, flowing, lowness.

The sounds of all the letters are various.

In treating on the letters, I shall not, like some other grammarians, enquire into the original of their form as an antiquarian; nor into their formation and prolotion by the organs of speech, as a mechanick, anatomist, or physiologist; nor into the properties and gradation of sounds, or the elegance or harshness of particular combinations, as a writer of universal and transcendental grammar. I consider the English alphabet only as it is English; and even in this narrow view I follow the example of former grammarians, perhaps with more reverence than judgment, because by writing in English I suppose my reader already acquainted with the English language; and because of sounds in general it may be observed, that words are unable to describe them. An account therefore of the primitive and simple letters is useless almost alike to those who know their sound, and those who know it not.

OF VOWELS.

A.

A has three sounds, the slender, open, and broad.

A slender is found in most words, as face, mane; and in words ending in ation, as creation, salvation, generation.

The a slender is the proper English a, called very justly by Erpenius, in his Arabick Grammar, a Anglicum cum e misum, as having a middle sound between the open a and the e. The French have a similar sound in the word pais, and in their e masculine.

A open is the a of the Italian, or nearly resembles it; as father, rather, congratulate, fancy, glafs.

A broad resembles the a of the German; as all, wall, call.

Many words pronounced with a broad were anciently written with au, as fault, mault; and we still say fault, vault. This was probably the Saxon sound, for it is yet retained in the northern dialects, and in the rustick pronunciation; as maun for man, haund for hand.

The short a approaches to the a open, as grass.

The long a, if prolonged by e at the end of the word, is always slender, as graze, fame.

A forms a diphthong only with i or y, and u or w. Ai or ay, as in plain, wain, gay, clay, has only the sound of the long and slender a, and differs not in the pronunciation from plane, wane.

Au or aw has the sound of the German a, as raw, naughty.

Ae is sometimes found in Latin words not compleatly naturalised or assimilated, but is no English diphthong; and is more properly expressed by single e, as Cesar, Eneas.

A GRAMMAR OF THE

E.

E is the letter which occurs most frequently in the English language.

E is long, as in scène; or short, as in cellar, séparate, célébrate, mèn, thèn.

It is always short before a double consonant, or two consonants, relènt, mèdclar, rèptile, sèrpènt, cèllar, cèssation, blèssing, fèll, fèlling, dèbt.

E is always mute at the end of a word, except in monosyllables that have no other vowel, as the; or proper names, as Penelope, Phebe, Derbe; being used to modify the foregoing consonant, as since, once, hedge, oblige; or to lengthen the preceding vowel, as bàn, bāne; cān, cāne; pīn, pīne; tūn, tūne; rōb, rōbe; pōp, pōpe; fīr, fīre; cūr, cūre; tūb, tūbe.

Almost all words which now terminate in consonants ended anciently in e, as year, yeare; wildness, wildnesse; which e probably had the force of the French e feminine, and constituted a syllable with its associate consonant; for, in old editions, words are sometimes divided thus, clea-re, fel-le, knowled-ge. This e was perhaps for a time vocal or silent in poetry as convenience required; but it has been long wholly mute. Camden calls it the silent e.

It does not always lengthen the foregoing vowel, as glōve, live, give.

It has sometimes in the end of words a sound obscure, and scarcely perceptible, as open, shapen, shotten, thistle, participle, metre, lucre.

E forms a diphthong with a, as near; with i, as deign, receive; and with u or w, as new, flew.

Ea sounds like e long, as mean; or like ee, as dear, clear, near.

Ei is sounded like e long, as seize, perceiving.

Eu sounds as u long and soft.

E, a, u are combined in beauty and its derivatives, but have only the sound of u.

E may be said to form a diphthong by reduplication, as agree, sleeping.

Eo is found in yeomen, where it is sounded as e short; and in people, where it is pronounced like ee.

I.

I has a sound, long, as fine; and short, as fin.

That is eminently observable in i, which may be likewise remarked in other letters, that the short sound is not the long sound contracted, but a sound wholly different.

The long sound in monosyllables is always marked by the e final, as thīn, thīne.

I is often sounded before r as a short u; as flirt, first, flirt.

It forms a diphthong only with e, as field, shield, which is sounded as the double ee; except friend, which is sounded as frēnd.

I is joined with eu in lieu, and ew in view; which triphthongs are sounded as the open u.

O.

O is long, as bōne, ōbedient, corrōding; or short, as blōck, knōck, ōblique, lōll.

Women is pronounced wimen.

The short o has sometimes the sound of a close u, as son, come.

O coalesces into a diphthong with a, as moan, groan, approach; oa has the sound of o long.

O is united to e in some words derived from Greek, as æconomy; but oe being not an English diphthong, they are better written as they are sounded, with only e, economy.

With i, as oil, soil, moil, noisome.

This coalition of letters seems to unite the sounds of the two letters as far as two sounds can be united without being destroyed, and therefore approaches more nearly than any combination in our tongue to the notion of a diphthong.

With o, as boot, hoot, cooler; oo has the sound of the Italian u.

With u or w, as our, power, flower; but in some words has only the sound of o long, as in soul, bowl, sow, grow. These different sounds are used to distinguish different significations; as bow, an instrument for shooting; bow, a depression of the head: sow, the she of a boar; sow, to scatter seed: bowl, an orbicular body; bowl, a wooden vessel.

Ou is sometimes pronounced like o soft, as court; sometimes like o short, as cough; sometimes like u close, as could; or u open, as rough, tough; which use only can teach.

Ou is frequently used in the last syllable of words which in Latin end in or, and are made English, as honour, labour, favour, from bonor, labor, favor.

Some late innovators have ejected the u, without considering that the last syllable gives the sound neither of or nor ur, but a sound between them, if not compounded of both; besides that they are probably derived to us from the French nouns in eur, as honneur, faveur.

U.

U is long in use, confusion; or short, as us, concussion.

It coalesces with a, e, i, o; but has rather in these combinations the force of the w consonant, as quaff, quest, quit, quite, languish; sometimes in ui the i loses its sound, as in juice. It is sometimes mute before a, e, i, y, as guard, guest, guise, buy.

U is followed by e in virtue, but the e has no sound.

Ue is sometimes mute at the end of a word, in imitation of the French, as prorogue, synagogue, plogue, vague, harangue.

Y.

Y is a vowel, which, as Quintilian observes of one of the Roman letters, we might want without inconvenience, but that we have it. It supplies the place of i at the end of words, as thy; before an i, as dying; and is commonly retained in derivative words where it was part of a diphthong in the primitive; as destroy, destroyer; betray, betrayed, betrayed; pray, prayer; say, sayer; day, days.

Y being the Saxon vowel ȳ, which was commonly used where i is now put, occurs very frequently in all old books.

GENERAL RULES.

A vowel in the beginning or middle syllable, before two consonants, is commonly short, as opportunity.

In monosyllables a single vowel before a single consonant is short, as stag, frog.

OF CONSONANTS.

B.

B has one unvaried sound, such as it obtains in other languages.

It is mute in debt, debtor, subtle, doubt, lamb, limb, dumb, thumb, climb, comb, womb.

It is used before l and r, as black, brown.

C.

C has before e and i the sound of s; as sincerely, centric, century, circular, cistern, city, siccidity: before a, o, and u, it sounds like k, as calm, concavity, copper, incorporate, curiosity, concupiscence.

C might be omitted in the language without loss, since one of its sounds might be supplied by s, and the other by k, but that it preserves to the eye the etymology of words, as face from facies, captive from captivus.

Ch has a sound which is analysed into tsh, as church, chin, crutch. It is the same sound which the Italians give to the c simple before i and e, as citta, cerro.

Ch is sounded like k in words derived from the Greek, as chymist, scheme, choler. Arch is commonly sounded ark before a vowel, as archangel; and with the English sound of ch before a consonant, as archbishop.

Ch, in some French words not yet assimilated, sounds like sh, as machine, chaise.

C, according to English orthography, never ends a word; therefore we write stick, block, which were originally sticke, blocke, in such words. C is now mute.

It is used before l and r, as clock, cross.

D

Is uniform in its sound, as death, diligent.

It is used before r, as draw, drofs; and w, as dwell.

F.

F, though having a name beginning with a vowel, it is numbered by the grammarians among the semi-vowels, yet has this quality of a mute, that it is commodiously sounded before a liquid, as flask, fly, freckle. It has an unvariable sound, except that of is sometimes spoken nearly as ov.

G.

G has two sounds, one hard, as in gay, go, gun; the other soft, as in gem, giant.

At

At the end of a word it is always hard, ring, snug, song, frog.

Before e and i the sound is uncertain.

G before e is soft, as gem, generation, except in gear, gold, geese, get, gewgaw, and derivatives from words ending in g, as singing, stronger, and generally before er at the end of words, as finger.

G is mute before n, as gnash, sign, foreign.

G before i is hard, as give, except in giant, gigantick, gibbet, gite, giblets, giles, gill, gilliflower, gin, ginger, gingle, gipsy.

Gh in the beginning of a word has the sound of the hard g, as ghostly; in the middle, and sometimes at the end, it is quite silent, as though, right, sought, spoken tho', rite, soute.

It has often at the end the sound of f, as laugh; whence laughter retains the same sound in the middle; cough, trough, sought, tough, enough, slough.

It is not to be doubted, but that in the original pronunciation gh had the force of a consonant, deeply guttural, which is still continued among the Scotch.

G is used before b, l, and r.

H.

H is a note of aspiration, and shows that the following vowel must be pronounced with a strong emission of the breath, at bat, herse.

It seldom, perhaps never, begins any but the first syllable, in which it is always sounded with a full breath, except in heir, herb, hostler, honour, humble, honest, humour, and their derivatives.

J.

J consonant sounds uniformly like the soft g, and is therefore a letter useless, except in etymology, as ejaculation, jester, jocund, juice.

K:

K has the sound of hard c, and is used before e and i, where, according to English analogy, c would be soft, as kept, king, skirt, skeptick, for so it should be written, not sceptick.

It is used before n, as knell, knot, but totally loses its sound.

K is never doubled; but c is used before it to shorten the vowel by a double consonant, as cöckle, pickle.

L.

L has in English the same liquid sound as in other languages.

The custom is to double the l at the end of monosyllables, as kill, will, full. These words were originally written kille, wille, fulle; and when the e first grew silent, and was afterwards omitted, the ll was retained, to give force, according to the analogy of our language, to the foregoing vowel.

L is sometimes mute, as in calf, half, halves, calves, could, would, should, psalm, talk, salmon, falcon.

The Saxon, who delighted in guttural sounds, sometimes aspirated the l at the beginning of words, as hlaf, a loaf, or bread; hlaford, a lord; but this pronunciation is now diuised.

Le at the end of words is pronounced like a weak el, in which the e is almost mute, as table, shuttle.

M.

M has always the same sound, as murmur, monumental.

N.

N has always the same sound, as noble, manners.

N is sometimes mute after m, as damn, condemn, hymn.

P.

P has always the same sound, which the Welsh and Germans confound with B.

P is sometimes mute, as in psalm, and between m and t, as tempt.

Pb is used for f in words derived from the Greek, as philosopher, philanthropy, Philip.

Q.

Q, as in other languages, is always followed by u, and has a sound which our Saxon ancestors well expressed by cy, cw, as quadrant, queen, equestrian, quilt, enquiry, quire, quotidian. Qu is never followed by u.

Qu is sometimes sounded, in words derived from the French, like k, as conquer, liquor, risque, chequer.

R.

R has the same rough snarling sound as in other tongues.

The Saxons used often to put b before it, as before l at the beginning of words.

Rb is used in words derived from the Greek, as myrrh, myrrhine, catarrhus, rheum, rheumatick, rhyme.

Re, at the end of some words derived from the Latin or French, is pronounced like a weak er, as theatre, sepulchre.

S.

S has a hissing sound, as sibilation, sister.

A single s seldom ends any word, except the third person of verbs, as loves, grows; and the plurals of nouns, as trees, bushes, distresses; the pronouns this, his, ours, yours, us; the adverb thus; and words derived from Latin, as rebus, surplus; the close being always either in se, as house, horse, or in ss, as grass, dress, bliss, less, anciently grasse, dresse.

S single, at the end of words, has a grosser sound, like that of z, as trees, eyes, except this, thus, us, rebus, surplus.

It sounds like z before ion, if a vowel goes before, as intrusion; and like s, if it follows a consonant, as conversion.

It sounds like z before e mute, as refuse, and before y final, as rosy; and in those words, bosom, desire, wisdom, prison, prisoner, present, present, damsel, casement.

It is the peculiar quality of s, that it may be sounded before all consonants, except x and z, in which s is comprised, x being only ks, and z a hard or gross s. This s is therefore termed by grammarians suæ potestatis litera; the reason of which the learned Dr. Clarke erroneously supposed to be, that in some words it might be doubled at pleasure. Thus we find in several languages:

Σκέωμι, scatter, sdegno, sdrucciolo, sfavellare, σκῆπτρ, sgombrare, sgranare, sbake, slumber, smell, strife, space, splendour, spring, squeeze, sbrew, step, strength, stramen, sventura, sawell.

S is mute in isle, island, demesne, viscount.

T.

T has its customary sound, as take, temptation.

Ti before a vowel has the sound of si, as salvation, except an f goes before, as question, excepting likewise derivatives from y, as mighty, mightier.

Tb has two sounds; the one soft, as thus, whether; the other hard, as thing, think. The sound is soft in these words, then, thence, and there, with their derivatives and compounds, that, these, thou, thee, thy, thine, their, they, this, these, them, though, thus, and in all words between two vowels, as father, whether; and between r and a vowel, as burthen.

In other words it is hard, as thick, thunder, faith, faithful. Where it is softened at the end of a word, an e silent must be added, as breath, breathe; cloth, clothe.

V.

V has a sound of near affinity to that of f, vain, vanity.

From f in the Islandick alphabet, v is only distinguished by a diacritical point.

W.

Of w, which in diphthongs is often an undoubted vowel, some grammarians have doubted whether it ever be a consonant; and not rather as it is called a double u or ou, as water may be resolved into ouater; but letters of the same sound are always reckoned consonants in other alphabets: and it may be observed, that w follows a vowel without any hiatus or difficulty of utterance, as frosty winter.

Wh has a sound accounted peculiar to the English, which the Saxons better expressed by hw, as what, whence, whiting; in whore only, and sometimes in wholesome, wh is sounded like a simple h.

X.

X begins no English word; it has the sound of ks, as axe, extraneous.

Y.

Y, when it follows a consonant, is a vowel; when it precedes either vowel or diphthong, is a consonant, ye,

A GRAMMAR OF THE

ye, young. It is thought by some to be in all cases a vowel. But it may be observed of y as of w, that it follows a vowel without any hiatus, as rosy youth.

Z.

Z begins no word originally English; it has the sound as its name izzard or z hard expresses, of an s uttered with closer compression of the palate by the tongue, as freeze, froze.

In orthography I have supposed orthoepey, or just utterance of words, to be included; orthography being only the art of expressing certain sounds by proper characters. I have therefore observed in what words any of the letters are mute.

Most of the writers of English grammar have given long tables of words pronounced otherwise than they are written, and seem not sufficiently to have considered, that of English, as of all living tongues, there is a double pronunciation, one cursory and colloquial, the other regular and solemn. The cursory pronunciation is always vague and uncertain, being made different in different mouths by negligence, unskillfulness, or affectation. The solemn pronunciation, though by no means immutable and permanent, is yet always less remote from the orthography, and less liable to capricious innovation. They have however generally formed their tables according to the cursory speech of those with whom they happened to converse; and concluding that the whole nation combines to vitiate language in one manner, have often established the jargon of the lowest of the people as the model of speech.

For pronunciation the best general rule is, to consider those as the most elegant speakers who deviate least from the written words.

There have been many schemes offered for the emendation and settlement of our orthography, which, like that of other nations, being formed by chance, or according to the fancy of the earliest writers in rude ages, was at first very various and uncertain, and is yet sufficiently irregular. Of these reformers some have endeavoured to accommodate orthography better to the pronunciation, without considering that this is to measure by a shadow, to take that for a model or standard which is changing while they apply it. Others, less absurdly indeed, but with equal unlikelihood of success, have endeavoured to proportion the number of letters to that of sounds, that every sound may have its own character, and every character a single sound. Such would be the orthography of a new language to be formed by a synod of grammarians upon principles of science. But who can hope to prevail on nations to change their practice, and make all their old books useless? or what advantage would a new orthography procure equivalent to the confusion and perplexity of such an alteration?

Some of these schemes I shall however exhibit, which may be used according to the diversities of genius, as a guide to reformers, or terror to innovators.

One of the first who proposed a scheme of regular orthography, was Sir Thomas Smith, secretary of state to Queen Elizabeth, a man of real learning, and much practised in grammatical disquisitions. Had he written the following lines according to his scheme, they would have appeared thus.

At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
The glory of the priesthood, and the shame,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
And drove those holy Vandals off the stage.

At length Erasmus, ðat grêt injurd nâm, ðe glori of ðe prësthüd, and ðe zâm,
Stemmd ðe wild torrent of a barb'rous âg.
And drov ðos höli Vandals öff ðe stâg.

After him another mode of writing was offered by Dr. Gill, the celebrated master of St. Paul's school in London; which I cannot represent exactly for want of types, but will approach as nearly as I can by means of characters now in use as to make it understood, exhibiting two stanzas of Spenser in the reformed orthography.

Spenser, book iii. canto 5.

Unthankful wretch, said he, is this the meed,
With which her sovereign mercy thou dost quite?
Thy life she saved by her gracious deed;
But thou dost ween with villanous despight,
To blot her honour, and her heav'nly light.
Die, rather die, than so disloyally,
Deem of her high desert, or seem so light.
Fair death it is to shun more shame; then die.
Die; rather die, than ever love disloyally.

But if to love disloyalty it be,
Shall I then hate her, that from death's door
Me brought? ah! far be such reproach from me!
What can I less do, than her love therefore,
Sith I her due reward cannot restore?
Die, rather die, and dying do her serve,
Dying her serve, and living her adore.
'T hy life she gave, thy life she doth deserve;
Die, rather die, than ever from her service swerve.

Vnthankful wrec, said hj, iz ðis ðe mjð,
Wið wið her soverain merfi ðou dust qujt?
ðj lif rj sâved bj her grâsius djd;
But ðou dust wen wið vilenus dispjt,
Tu blot her honor, and her hebnlj lîbt.
ðj, raðer djd, ðen so disloialj.
ðjm of her hið dezert, or sjm so lîbt.
Fair deð it iz tu run mæt rãm; ðen djd.
ðj, raðer djd, ðen ever lub disloialj.

But if tu lub disloialtj it bj,
Sal I ðen hât her ðat from deðez dær
Mj brougt? ah! far bj sja reproç from mj.
Wat kan I les du ðen her lub ðerfær,
Sib I her du reward kanot restær?
ðj, raðer djd, and djdj du her sêrb, ðjg her sêrb, and lîbîg her adær.
ðj lif rj gâb, ðj lif rj dub dezerð.
ðj, raðer di, ðen ever from her sêrbis swêrb.

Dr. Gill was followed by Charles Butler, a man who did not want an understanding which might have qualified him for better employment. He seems to have been more sanguine than his predecessors, for he printed his book according to his own scheme; which the following specimen will make easily understood.

But whensoever you have occasion to trouble their patience, or to come among them being troubled, it is better to stand upon your guard, than to trust to their gentleness. For the safeguard of your face, which they have most mind unto, provide a pursehood, made of coarse bouldering, to be drawn and knit about your collar, which for more safety is to be lined against the eminent parts with woollen cloth. First cut a piece about an inch and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by the temples and forehead, from one ear to the other; which being sowed in his place, join unto it two short peces of the same breadth under the eyes, for the balls of the cheeks, and then set an other piece about the breadth of a shilling against the top of the nose. At other times, when they are not angered, a little piece half a quarter broad, to cover the eyes and parts about them, may serve though it be in the heat of the day.

But pensoever you hav' occasion to trubble ðeir patienc', or to cœm among ðem beeing troubled, it is better to stand upon your gard, ðan to trust to ðeir gentlenes. For ðe saf'gard of your fac', p'io ðey hav' most mind' unto, provid' a pursehood, mad' of coorse bouldering, to bee drawn and knit about your collar, p'io for mor' saf'ty is to bee lined against ð' eminent parts wit woollen clot. First cut a peec' about an ins and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by ðe temples and for'head, from one ear to ðe oðer; p'io beeing sowed in his plac', join unto it two port peeces of the sam breadt under ðe eys, for the bals of ðe cheeks, and then set an oðer peec' about ðe breadt of a rilling against the top of ðe nose. At oðer tim's, pen ðey ar' not angered, a little piec' half a quarter broad, to cover ðe eys and parts about them, may serve ðewg it be in the heat of ðe day. Butler on the Nature and Properties of Bees, 1634.

In the time of Charles I. there was a very prevalent inclination to change the orthography; as appears, among other books, in such editions of the works of Milton as were published by himself. Of these reformers every man had his own scheme; but they agreed in one general design of accommodating the letters to the pronunciation, by ejecting such as they thought superfluous. Some of them would have written these lines thus:

—All the erth
Shall then be paradis, far happier place
Than this of Eden, and far happier dais.

Bishop Wilkins afterwards, in his great work of the philosophical language, proposed, without expecting to be followed, a regular orthography; by which the Lord's prayer is to be written thus:

Yer Fâdher heitfh art in héven, halloed bi dhyi nám, dhyi cingdým cým, dhy sill bi dýn in erth as it is in héven, &c.

We have since had no general reformers; but some ingenious men have endeavoured to deserve well of their country, by writing honor and labor for honour and labour, red for read in the preter-tense, sais for says, repete for repeat, explane for explain, or declame for declaim. Of these it may be said, that as they have done no good, they have done little harm; both because they have innovated little, and because few have followed them.

ETYMOLOGY.

ETYMOLOGY teaches the deduction of one word from another, and the various modifications by which the sense of the same word is diversified; as horse, horses; I love, I loved.

Of the ARTICLE.

The English have two articles, an or a, and the.

AN, A.

A has an indefinite signification, and means one, with some reference to more; as, This is a good book, that is, one among the books that are good. He was killed by a sword, that is, some sword. This is a better book for a man than a boy, that is, for one of those that are men than one of those that are boys. An army might enter without resistance, that is, any army.

In the senses in which we use a or an in the singular, we speak in the plural without an article; as, these are good books.

I have made an the original article, because it is only the Saxon an, or æn, one, applied to a new use, as the German ein, and the French

French un; the n being cut off before a consonant in the speed of utterance.

Grammarians of the last age direct, that an should be used before b; whence it appears that the English anciently aspirated less. An is still used before the silent b, as an herb, an honest man: but otherwise a; as,

A horse, a horse, my kingdom for a horse.
Shakespeare.

THE has a particular and definite signification.
The fruit

Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world. Milton.

That is, that particular fruit, and this world in which we live. So He giveth fodder for the cattle, and green herbs for the use of man; that is, for those beings that are cattle, and his use that is man.

The is used in both numbers.

I am as free as Nature first made man,
Ere the base laws of servitude began,
When wild in woods the noble savage ran. Dryd. }

Many words are used without articles; as,

1. Proper names, as John, Alexander, Longinus, Aristarchus, Jerusalem, Athens, Rome, London. God is used as a proper name.

2. Abstract names, as blackness, witchcraft, virtue, vice, beauty, ugliness, love, hatred, anger, goodnature, kindness.

3. Words in which nothing but the mere being of any thing is implied: This is not beer, but water; This is not brass, but steel.

Of NOUNS SUBSTANTIVES.

The relations of English nouns to words going before or following are not expressed by cases, or changes of termination, but as in most of the other European languages by prepositions, unless we may be said to have a genitive case.

Singular.

Nom. Magister, a Master, the Master.
Gen. Magistri, of a Master, of the Master, or Masters, the Masters.
Dat. Magistro, to a Master, to the Master.
Acc. Magistrum, a Master, the Master.
Voc. Magister, Master, O Master.
Abl. Magistro, from a Master, from the Master.

Plural.

Nom. Magistri, Masters, the Masters.
Gen. Magistrorum, of Masters, of the Masters.
Dat. Magistris, to Masters, to the Masters.
Acc. Magistros, Masters, the Masters.
Voc. Magistri, Masters, O Masters.
Abl. Magistris, from Masters, from the Masters.

Our nouns are therefore only declined thus:

Master, Gen. Masters. Plur. Masters.
Scholar, Gen. Scholars. Plur. Scholars.

These genitives are always written with a mark of elision, master's, scholar's, according to an opinion long received, that the 's is a contraction of his, as the soldier's valour, for the soldier his valour: but this cannot be the true original, because 's is put to female nouns, Woman's beauty; the Virgin's delicacy; Haughty Juno's unrelenting hate: and collective nouns, as Women's passions; the rabble's insolence; the multitude's folly; in all these cases it is apparent that his cannot be understood. We say likewise, the foundation's strength, the diamond's lustre, the winter's severity; but in these cases his may be understood, he and his having formerly been applied to neuters in the place now supplied by it and its.

The learned, the sagacious Wallis, to whom every English grammarian owes a tribute of reverence, calls this modification of the noun an adjective possessive; I think with no more propriety than he might have applied the same to the genitive in equitum decus, Trojae oris, or any other Latin genitive.

This termination of the noun seems to constitute a real genitive indicating possession. It is derived to us from those who declined smith, a smith; Gen. smithes, of a smith; Plur. smithes, or smiths; and so in two other of their seven declensions.

It is a further confirmation of this opinion, that in the old poets both the genitive and plural were longer by a syllable than the original word; knitis, for knight's, in Chaucer; leavis, for leaves, in Spenser.

When a word ends in s, the genitive may be the same with the nominative, as Venus temple.

The plural is formed by adding s, as table, tables; fly, flies; sister, sisters; wood, woods; or es where s could not otherwise be sounded, as after ch, s, sh, x, z; after c sounded like s, and g like j; the mute e is vocal before s, as lance, lances; outrage, outrages.

The formation of the plural and genitive singular is the same.

A few words yet make the plural in n, as men, women, oxen, swine, and more anciently eyen and shoon. This formation is that which generally prevails in the Teutonic dialects.

Words that end in f commonly form their plural by ves, as loaf, loaves; calf, calves.

Except a few, muff, muffs; chief, chiefs. So hoof, roofs, proof, relief, mischief, puff, cuff, dwarf, handkerchief, grief.

Irregular plurals are teeth from tooth, lice from louse, mice from mouse, geese from goose, feet from foot, dice from die, pence from penny, brethren from brother, children from child.

Plurals ending in s have no genitives; but we say, Womens excellencies, and Weigh the mens wits against the ladies hairs. Pope.

Dr. Wallis thinks the Lords' house may be said for the house of Lords; but such phrases are not now in use; and surely an English ear rebels against them.

Of ADJECTIVES.

Adjectives in the English language are wholly indeclinable; having neither case, gender, nor number, and being added to substantives in all relations without any change; as, a good woman, good women, of a good woman; a good man, good men, of good men.

The Comparison of Adjectives.

The comparative degree of adjectives is formed by adding er, the superlative by adding est, to the positive; as, fair, fairer, fairest; lovely, lovelier, loveliest; sweet, sweeter, sweetest; low, lower, lowest; high, higher, highest.

Some words are irregularly compared; as good, better, best; bad, worse, worst; little, less, least; near, nearer, next; much, more, most; many (or more), more (for more), most (for most); late, latter, latest or last.

Some comparatives form a superlative by adding most, as nether, nethermost; outer, outmost; under, undermost; up, upper, uppermost; fore, former, foremost.

Most is sometimes added to a substantive, as topmost, southmost.

Many adjectives do not admit of comparison by terminations, and are only compared by more and most, as benevolent, more benevolent, most benevolent.

All adjectives may be compared by more and most, even when they have comparatives and superlatives regularly formed; as fair; fairer, or more fair; fairest, or most fair.

In adjectives that admit a regular comparison, the comparative more is oftener used than the superlative most, as more fair is oftener written for fairer, than most fair for fairest.

The comparison of adjectives is very uncertain; and being much regulated by commodiousness of utterance, or agreeableness of sound, is not easily reduced to rules.

Monosyllables are commonly compared.

Poly-syllables, or words of more than two syllables, are seldom compared otherwise than by more and most, as deplorable, more deplorable, most deplorable.

Disyllables are seldom compared if they terminate in some, as fulsome, toilsome; in ful, as careful, spleenful, dreadful; in ing, as trifling, charming; in ous, as porous; in less, as careless, harmless; in ed, as wretched; in id, as candid; in al, as mortal; in ent, as recent, fervent; in ain, as certain; in ive, as missive; in dy, as woody; in fy, as puffy; in ky, as rocky, except lucky; in my, as roomy; in ny, as skinny; in py, as ropy, except happy; in ry, as boary.

Some comparatives and superlatives are yet found in good writers formed without regard to the foregoing rules; but in a language subjected so little and so late to grammar, such anomalies must frequently occur.

So shady is compared by Milton.

She in shadiest covert hid,
Tun'd her nocturnal note. Parad. Lost.

And virtuous.

What she wills to say or do,
Seems wisest, virtuousesi, discreetest, best. Parad. Lost.

A GRAMMAR OF THE

So trifling, by Ray, who is indeed of no great authority.

It is not so decorous, in respect of God, that he should immediately do all the meanest and triflingest things himself, without making use of any inferior or subordinate minister.

Ray on the Creation.

Famous, by Milton.

I shall be named among the famous
Of women, sung at solemn festivals.

Milton's Agonistes.

Inventive, by Ascham.

Those have the inventive heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters.

Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Mortal, by Bacon.

The mortalest poisons practised by the West Indians, have some mixture of the blood, fat, or flesh of man.

Bacon.

Natural, by Wotton.

I will now deliver a few of the properest and naturallest considerations that belong to this piece.

Wotton's Architecture.

Wretched, by Johnson.

The wretcheder are the contemners of all helps; such as presuming on their own naturals, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they understand not things.

B. Johnson.

Powerful, by Milton.

We have sustain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What heav'n's great King hath pow'rfullest to send Against us from about his throne.

Paradise Lost.

The termination in ish may be accounted in some sort a degree of comparison, by which the signification is diminished below the positive, as black, blackish, or tending to blackness; salt, saltish, or having a little taste of salt: they therefore admit no comparison. This termination is seldom added but to words expressing sensible qualities, nor often to words of above one syllable, and is scarcely used in the solemn or sublime style.

Of PRONOUNS.

Pronouns, in the English language, are, I, thou, he, with their plurals we, ye, they, it, who, which, what, whether, whosoever, whatsoever, my, mine, our, ours, thy, thine, your, yours, his, her, hers, their, theirs, this, that, other, another, the same.

The pronouns personal are irregularly inflected.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	I	We
Accus. and other oblique cases.	Me	Us
Nom.	Thou	Ye
Oblique.	Thee	You

You is commonly used in modern writers for ye, particularly in the language of ceremony, where the second person plural is used for the second person singular, You are my friend.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	He	They	} Applied to masculines.
Oblique.	Him	Them
Nom.	She	They	} Applied to feminines.
Oblique.	Her	Them
Nom.	It	They	} Applied to neutrals or things.
Oblique.	Its	Them

For it the practice of ancient writers was to use he, and for its, his.

The possessive pronouns, like other adjectives, are without cases or change of termination.

The possessive of the first person is my, mine, our, ours; of the second, thy, thine, you, yours; of the third, from he, his, from she, her, and hers, and in the plural their, theirs, for both sexes.

Our, yours, hers, theirs, are used when the substantive preceding is separated by a verb, as These are our books. These books are ours. Your children excel ours in stature, but ours surpass yours in learning.

Ours, yours, hers, theirs, notwithstanding their seeming plural termination, are applied equally to singular and plural substantives, as This book is ours. These books are ours.

Mine and thine were formerly used before a vowel, as mine amiable lady; which though now disused in prose, might be still properly continued in poetry, they are used as ours and yours, when they are referred to a substantive preceding.

Their and theirs are the possessives likewise of it, and are therefore applied to things.

Pronouns relative are, who, which, what, whether, whosoever, whatsoever.

Who is now used in relation to persons, and which in relation to things; but they were anciently confounded.

Whose is rather the poetical than regular genitive of which:

The fruit

Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world.

Milton.

Whether is only used in the nominative and accusative cases; and has no plural, being applied only to one of a number, commonly to one of two, as, Whether of these is left I know not. Whether shall I choose? It is now almost obsolete.

What, whether relative or interrogative, is without variation.

Whosoever, whatsoever, being compounded of who or what, and soever, follow the rule of their primitives.

	Singular.	Plural.
In all cases,	This	These
	That	Those
	Other	Others
	Whether

The plural others is not used but when it is referred to a substantive preceding, as I have sent other horses. I have not sent the same horses, but others.

Another, being only an other, has no plural.

Here, there, and where, joined with certain particles, have a relative and pronominal use. Hereof, herein, hereby, hereafter, herewith, thereof, therein, thereby, thereupon, therewith, whereof, wherein, whereby, whereupon, wherewith, which signify, of this, in this, &c. of that, in that, &c. of which, in which, &c.

Therefore and wherefore, which are properly, there for and where for, for that, for which, are now reckoned conjunctions, and continued in use. The rest seem to be passing by degrees into neglect, though proper, useful, and analogous. They are referred both to singular and plural antecedents.

There are two more words used only in conjunction with pronouns, own and self.

Own is added to possessives, both singular and plural, as my own hand, our own house. It is emphatical, and implies a silent contrariety or opposition; as, I live in my own house, that is, not in a hired house. This I did with my own hand, that is, without help, or not by proxy.

Self is added to possessives, as myself, yourselves; and sometimes to personal pronouns, as himself, itself, themselves. It then, like own, expresses emphasis and opposition, as I did this myself, that is, not another; or it forms a reciprocal pronoun, as We hurt ourselves by vain rage.

Himself, itself, themselves, is supposed by Wallis to be put by corruption, for his self, it self, their selves; so that self is always a substantive. This seems justly observed, for we say, He came himself; Himself shall do this; where himself cannot be an accusative.

Of the VERB.

English verbs are active, as I love; or neuter, as I languish. The neutrals are formed like the actives.

Most verbs signifying action, may likewise signify condition or habit, and become neutrals, as I love, I am in love; I strike, I am now striking.

Verbs have only two tenses inflected in their terminations, the present, and simple preterite; the other tenses are compounded of the auxiliary verbs have, shall, will, let, may, can, and the infinitive of the active or neuter verb.

The passive voice is formed by joining the participle preterite to the substantive verb, as I am loved.

To Have. Indicative Mood.

Present Tense.

Sing. I have, thou hast, he hath or has;
Plur. We have, ye have, they have.

Has is a termination corrupted from hath, but now more frequently used both in verse and prose.

Simple Preterite.

Sing. I had, thou hadst, he had;
Plur. We had, ye had, they had.

Compound Preterite.

Sing. I have had, thou hast had, he has had;
Plur. We have have had, ye have had, they have had.

Preterpluperfect.

E N G L I S H T O N G U E.

Preterpluperfect.

Sing. I had had, thou hadst had, he had had;
Plur. We had had, ye had had, they had had.

Future.

Sing. I shall have, thou shalt have, he shall have;
Plur. We shall have, ye shall have, they shall have.

Second Future.

Sing. I will have, thou wilt have, he will have;
Plur. We will have, ye will have, they will have.

By reading these future tenses may be observed the variations of shall and will.

Imperative Mood.

Sing. Have or have thou, let him have;
Plur. Let us have, have or have ye, let them have.

Conjunctive Mood.

Present.

Sing. I have, thou have, he have;
Plur. We have, ye have, they have.

Preterite simple as in the Indicative.

Preterite compound.

Sing. I have had, they have had, he have had;
Plur. We have had, ye have had, they have had.

Future.

Sing. I shall have, as in the Indicative.

Second Future.

Sing. I shall have had, thou shalt have had, he shall have had;
Plur. We shall have had, ye shall have had, they shall have had.

Potential.

The potential form of speaking is expressed by may, can, in the present; and might, could, or should, in the preterite, joined with the infinitive mood of the verb.

Present.

Sing. I may have, thou mayst have, he may have;
Plur. We may have, ye may have, they may have.

Preterite.

Sing. I might have, thou mightst have, he might have;
Plur. We might have, ye might have, they might have.

Present.

Sing. I can have, thou canst have, he can have;
Plur. We can have, ye can have, they can have.

Preterite.

Sing. I could have, thou couldst have, he could have;
Plur. We could have, ye could have, they could have.

In like manner should is united to the verb.

There is likewise a double Preterite.

Sing. I should have had, thou shouldst have had, he should have had;
Plur. We should have had, ye should have had, they should have had.

In like manner we use, I might have had; I could have had, &c.

Infinitive Mood.

Present. To have. Preterite. To have had.
Participle present. Having. Participle preter. Had:

Verb Active. To Love.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I love, thou lovest, he loveth or loves;
Plur. We love, ye love, they love.

Preterite simple.

Sing. I loved, thou lovedst, he loved;
Plur. We loved, ye loved, they loved.

Preterperfect compared. I have loved, &c.

Preterpluperfect. I had loved, &c.

Future. I shall love, &c. I will love, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Love or love thou, let him love;
Plur. Let us love, love or love ye, let them love.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I love, thou love, he love;
Plur. We love, ye love, they love.
Preterite simple, as in the Indicative.
Preterite compound. I have loved, &c.

Future. I shall love, &c.

Second Future. I shall have loved, &c.

Potential.

Present. I may or can love, &c.

Preterite. I might, could, or should love, &c.

Double Pret. I might, could, or should have loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To love. Preterite. To have loved.

Participle present. Loving. Participle past. Loved.

The passive is formed by the addition of the participle preterite, to the different tenses of the verb to be, which must therefore be here exhibited.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I am, thou art, he is;
Plur. We are or be, ye are or be, they are or be.

The plural be is now little in use.

Preterite.

Sing. I was, thou wast or wert, he was;
Plur. We were, ye were, they were.

Wert is properly of the conjunctive mood, and ought not to be used in the indicative.

Preterite compound. I have been, &c.

Preterpluperfect. I had been, &c.

Future. I shall or will be, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Be thou; let him be;
Plur. Let us be; be ye; let them be.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I be, thou beest, he be;
Plur. We be, ye be, they be.

Preterite.

Sing. I were, thou wert, he were;
Plur. We were, ye were, they were.
Preterite compound. I have been, &c.
Future. I shall have been, &c.

Potential.

I may or can; would, could, or should be; could, would, or should have been, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be. Preterite. To have been.
Participle pres. Being. Participle preter. Having been.

Passive Voice. Indicative Mood.

I am loved, &c. I was loved, &c. I have been loved, &c.

Conjunctive Mood.

If I be loved, &c. If I were loved, &c. If I shall have been loved, &c.

Potential Mood.

I may or can be loved, &c. I might, could, or should be loved, &c. I might, could, or should have been loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be loved. Preterite. To have been loved.
Participle. Loved.

There is another form of English verbs, in which the infinitive mood is joined to the verb do in its various inflections, which are therefore to be learned in this place.

To Do.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I do, thou dost, he doth;
Plur. We do, ye do, they do.

Preterite.

Sing. I did, thou didst, he did;
Plur. We did, ye did, they did.
Preterite, &c. I have done, &c. I had done, &c.
Future. I shall or will do, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Do thou, let him do;
Plur. Let us do, do ye, let them do.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I do, thou do, he do;
Plur. We do, ye do, they do.

The rest are as in the indicative.

Infinitive. To do; to have done.

Participle pres. Doing. Participle preter. Done.

I do is sometimes used superfluously, as, I do love, I did love; simply for I love, or I loved; but this is considered as a vitious mode of speech.

It is sometimes used emphatically; as,

*I do love thee, and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again.* Shakespeare.

It is frequently joined with a negative; as, I like her, but I do not love her; I wished him success, but did not help him.

The Imperative prohibitory is seldom applied in the second person, at least in prose, without the word do; as, Stop him, but do not hurt him; Praise beauty, but do not dote on it.

Its chief use is in interrogative forms of speech, in which it is used through all the persons; as, Do I live? Dost thou strike me? Do they rebel? Did I complain? Didst thou love her? Did she die? So likewise in negative interrogations; Do I not yet grieve? Did she not die?

Do is thus used only in the simple tenses.

There is another manner of conjugating neuter verbs, which, when it is used, may not improperly denominate them neuter passives, as they are inflected according to the passive form by the help of the verb substantive to be. They answer nearly to the reciprocal verbs in French; as,

*I am risen, surrexi, Latin; Je me suis levé, French.
I was walked out, exieram; Je m'étois promené.*

In like manner we commonly express the present tense; as, I am going, eo. I am grieving, doleo. She is dying, illa moritur. The tempest is raging, furit procella. I am pursuing an enemy, hostem inseguor. So the other tenses, as, We were walking, ἐντροχόμεν ὡς περὶ ὁδοῦ, I have been walking, I had been walking, I shall or will be walking.

There is another manner of using the active participle, which gives it a passive signification; as, The grammar is now printing, grammatica jam nunc chartis imprimitur. The brass is forging, ara excuduntur. This is, in my opinion, a vitious expression, probably corrupted from a phrase more pure, but now somewhat obsolete: The book is a printing, The brass is a forging; a being properly at, and printing and forging verbal nouns signifying action, according to the analogy of this language.

The indicative and conjunctive moods are by modern writers frequently confounded, or rather the conjunctive is wholly neglected, when some convenience of verification does not invite its revival. It is used among the purer writers after if, though, ere, before, whether, except, unless, whatsoever, whomsoever, and words of wishing; as, Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not.

Of Irregular Verbs.

The English verbs were divided by Ben Johnson into four conjugations, without any reason arising from the nature of the language, which has properly but one conjugation, such as has been exemplified; from which all deviations are to be considered as anomalies, which are indeed in our monosyllable Saxon verbs and the verbs derived from them very frequent; but almost all the verbs which have been adopted from other languages, follow the regular form.

Our verbs are observed by Dr. Wallis to be irregular only in the formation of the preterite, and its participle. Indeed, in the scantiness of our conjugations, there is scarcely any other place for irregularity.

The first irregularity, is a slight deviation from the regular form, by rapid utterance or poetical contraction: the last syllable ed is often joined with the former by suppression of e; as, lov'd for loved; after c, ch, sh, f, k, x, and after the consonants s, th, when more strongly pronounced, and sometimes after m, n, r, if preceded by a short vowel, t is used in pronunciation, but very seldom in writing, rather than d; as plac't, snatch't, fish't, wak't, dwell't, smel't; for plac'd, snatch'd, fish'd, wak'd, dwell'd, smel'd; or placed, snatched, fished, waked, dwelled, smelled.

Those words which terminate in l or ll, or p, make their preterite in t, even in solemn language; as crept, felt, dwelt; sometimes after x, ed is changed into t; as, vent: this is not constant.

A long vowel is often changed into a short one; thus, kept, slept, wept, crept, swept; from the verbs, to keep, to sleep, to weep, to creep, to sweep.

Where d or t go before, the additional letter d or t, in this contracted form, coalesce into one letter with the radical d or t: if t were the radical, they coalesce into t;

but if d were the radical, then into d or t, as the one or the other letter may be more easily pronounced: as, read, led, spread, shed, shred, bid, bid, chid, fed, bled, bred, sped, strid, rid; from the verbs, to read, to lead, to spread, to shed, to shread, to bid, to hide, to chide, to feed, to bleed, to breed, to speed, to stride, to slide, to ride. And thus, cast, hurt, cost, burst, eat, beat, sweat, sit, quit, smit, writ, bit, hit, met, shot; from the verbs, to cast, to hurt, to cost, to burst, to eat, to beat, to sweat, to sit, to quit, to smite, to write, to bite, to hit, to meet, to shoot. And in like manner, lent, sent, rent, girt; from the verbs, to lend, to send, to rend, to gird.

The participle preterite or passive is often formed in en, instead of ed; as been, taken, given, slain, known, from the verbs to be, to take, to give, to slay, to know.

Many words have two or more participles, as not only written, bitten, eaten, beaten, bidden, chidden, shotten, chosen, broken; but likewise writ, bit, eat, beat, bid, chid, shot, chose, broke, are promiscuously used in the participle, from the verbs to write, to bite, to eat, to beat, to hide, to chide, to shoot, to choose, to break, and many such like.

In the same manner sown, shewn, hewn, mown, loaden, laden, as well as sow'd, shew'd, hew'd, mow'd, loaded, laded, from the verbs to sow, to shew, to hew, to mow, to load, or lade.

Concerning these double participles it is difficult to give any rule; but he shall seldom err who remembers, that when a verb has a participle distinct from its preterite, as write, wrote, written, that distinct participle is more proper and elegant, as The book is written, is better than The book is wrote, though wrote may be used in poetry.

There are other anomalies in the preterite.

1. Win, spin, begin, swim, strike, stick, sing, sting, fling, ring, wring, spring, swing, drink, sink, shrink, stink, come, run, find, bind, grind, wind, both in the preterite imperfect and participle passive, give won, spun, begun, swum, struck, stuck, sung, stung, flung, rung, wrung, sprung, swung, drunk, sunk, shrunk, hung, come, run, found, bound, ground, wound. And most of them are also formed in the preterite by a, as began, rang, sang, sprang, drank, came, ran, and some others; but most of these are now obsolete. Some in the participle passive likewise take en, as stricken, stricken, drunken, bounden.

2. Fight, teach, reach, seek, beseech, catch, buy, bring, think, work, make fought, taught, raught, sought, besought, caught, bought, brought, thought, wrought.

But a great many of these retain likewise the regular form, as tached, reached, beseeched, catched, worked.

3. Take, shake, forsake, wake, awake, stand, break, speak, bear, shear, swear, tear, weave, cleave, strive, thrive, drive, shine, rise, arise, smite, write, bide, abide, ride, choose, chuse, tread, get, beget, forget, seethe, make in both preterite and participle took, forsook, woke, awoke, stood, broke, spoke, bore, shore, swore, tore, wore, wove, clove, strove, throve, drove, shone, rose, arose, smote, wrote, bode, abode, rode, chose, trade, got, begot, forgot, sod. But we say likewise, thrive, rise, smit, writ, abid, rid. In the preterite some are likewise formed by a, as brake, spake, bare, share, sware, tare, ware, clave, gat, begat, forgat, and perhaps some others, but more rarely. In the participle passive are many of them formed by en, as taken, shaken, forsaken, broken, spoken, born, shorn, sworn, torn, worn, woven, cloven, thriven, driven, risen, smitten, ridden, chosen, trodden, gotten, begotten, forgotten, sodden. And many do likewise retain the analogy in both, as waked, awaked, sheared, weaved, leaved, abided, seethed.

4. Give, bid, sit, make in the preterite gave, bade, sate; in the participle passive, given, bidden, sitten; but in both bid.

5. Draw, know, grow, throw, blow, crow like a cock, fly, slay, see, ly, make their preterite drew, knew, grew, threw, blew, crew, flew, slew, saw, lay; their participles passive by n, drawn, known, sown, grown, thrown, blown, flown, slain, seen, lien, lain. Yet from flee is made fled; from go, went, from the old wend, and the participle gone.

Of DERIVATION.

That the English language may be more easily understood, it is necessary to enquire how its derivative words are deduced from their primitives, and how the primitives are borrowed from other languages. In this enquiry I shall sometimes copy Dr. Wallis, and sometimes endeavour to supply his defects, and rectify his errors.

Nouns are derived from verbs.

The thing implied in the verb as done or produced, is commonly either the present of the verb; as, to love, love; to fright, a fright; to fight, a fight; or the preterite of the verb, as, to strike, I struck or strook, a stroke.

The action is the same with the participle present, as loving, frighting, fighting, striking.

The agent, or person acting, is denoted by the syllable er added to the verb, as lover, frighter, striker.

Substantives, adjectives, and sometimes other parts of speech, are changed into verbs: in which case the vowel is often lengthened, or the consonant softened; as, a house, to house; brass, to braise; glass, to glaze; grass, to graze; price, to prize; breath, to breathe; a fish, to fish; oyl, to oyl; further, to further; forward, to forward; hinder, to hinder.

Sometimes the termination en is added, especially to adjectives; as, haste, to hasten; length, to lengthen; strength, to strengthen; short, to shorten; fast, to fasten; white, to whiten; black, to blacken; hard, to harden; soft, to soften.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination y; as, a louse, lousy; wealth, wealthy; health, healthy; might, mighty; worth, worthy; wit, witty; lust, lusty; water, watery; earth, earthy; wood, a wood, woody; air, airy; a heart, heartly; a hand, bandy.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination ful, denoting abundance; as, joy, joyful; fruit, fruitful; youth, youthful; care, careful; use, useful; delight, delightful; plenty, plentiful; help, helpful.

Sometimes, in almost the same sense, but with some kind of diminution thereof, the termination some is added, denoting something, or in some degree; as, delight, delightsome; game, gamesome; irk, irksome; burden, burdensome; trouble, troublesome; light, lightsome; hand, handsome; alone, lonesome; toil, toilsome.

On the contrary, the termination less added to substantives, makes adjectives signifying want; as worthless, witless, heartless, joyless, careless, helpless. Thus comfort, comfortless; sap, sapless.

Privation or contrariety is very often denoted by the particle un prefixed to many adjectives, or in before words derived from the Latin; as, pleasant, unpleasant; wife, unwise; profitable, unprofitable; patient, impatient. Thus unworthy, unhealthy, unfruitful, unuseful, and many more.

The original English privative is un; but as we often borrow from the Latin, or its descendants, words already signifying privation, as inefficacious, impious, indiscreet, the inseparable particles un and in have fallen into confusion, from which it is not easy to disentangle them.

Un is prefixed to all words originally English, as untrue, untruth, untaught, unhandsome.

Un is prefixed to all participles made privative adjectives, as unfeeling, unassisting, unaided, undelighted, unendeared.

Un ought never to be prefixed to a participle present, to mark a forbearance of action, as unfighing; but a privation of habit, as unpitying.

Un is prefixed to most substantives which have an English termination, as unfertileness, unperfectness, which, if they have borrowed terminations, take in or im, as infertility, imperfectness; uncivil, incivility; inactive, inactivity.

In borrowing adjectives, if we receive them already compounded, it is usual to retain the particle prefixed, as indecent, inelegant, improper; but if we borrow the adjective, and add the privative particle, we commonly prefix un, as unpolite, ungallant.

The prepositive particles dis and mis, derived from the des and mes of the French, signify almost the same as un; yet dis rather imports contrariety than privation, since it answers to the Latin preposition de. Mis insinuates some error, and for the most part may be rendered by the Latin words male or perperam. To like, to dislike; honour, dishonour; to honour, to grace, to dishonour, to disgrace; to deign, to disdeign; chance, hap, miscance, miscap; to take, to mistake; deed, misdeed; to use, to misuse; to employ, to misemploy; to apply, to misapply.

Words derived from Latin written with de or dis retain the same signification, as distinguish, distinguo; detract, detraho; defame, defamo; detain, detineo.

The termination ly added to substantives, and sometimes to adjectives, forms adjectives that import some kind of similitude or agreement, being formed by contraction of lick or like.

A giant, giantly, giantlike; earth, earthly; heaven, heavenly; world, worldly; God, godly; good, goodly.

The same termination ly added to adjectives, forms adverbs of like signification; as, beautiful, beautifully; sweet, sweetly; that is, in a beautiful manner; with some degree of sweetness.

The termination ish added to adjectives, imports diminution; and added to substantives, imports similitude or tendency to a character; as, green, greenish; white, whitish; soft, softish; a thief, thievish; a wolf, wolvish; a child, childish.

We have forms of diminutives in substantives, though not frequent; as, a hill, a hillock; a cock, a cockrel; a pike, pickrel; this is a French termination: a goose, a gosling; this is a German termination: a lamb, a lambkin; a chick, a chicken; a man, a manikin; a pipe, a pipkin; and thus Halkin, whence the patronimick Hawkins, Wilkin, Thomkin, and others.

Yet still there is another form of diminution among the English, by lessening the sound itself, especially of vowels; as there is a form of augmenting them by enlarging, or even lengthening it; and that sometimes not so much by change of the letters, as of their pronunciation; as, sup, sip, soop, sop, sippet, where, besides the extenuation of the vowel, there is added the French termination et; top, tip; spit, spout; babe, baby, booby, bonny; great pronounced long, especially if with a stronger sound, grea-t; little pronounced long, lee-tle; ting, tang, tong, imports a succession of smaller and then greater sounds; and so in jingle, jangle, tingle, tangle, and many other made words.

Much however of this is arbitrary and fanciful, depending wholly on oral utterance, and therefore scarcely worthy the notice of Wallis.

Of concrete adjectives are made abstract substantives, by adding the termination ness, and a few in hood or head, noting character or qualities; as, white, whiteness; hard, hardness; great, greatness; skillful, skillfulness, unskillfulness; godhead, manhood, maidenhead, widowhood, knighthood, priesthood, likelihoood, falsehood.

There are other abstracts, partly derived from adjectives, and partly from verbs, which are formed by the addition of the termination th, a small change being sometimes made; as, long, length; strong, strength; broad, wide, breadth, width; deep, depth; true, truth; warm, warmth; dear, dearth; slow, slowness; merry, mirth; heal, health; well, weal, wealth; dry, drought; young, youth; and so moon, month.

Like these are some words derived from verbs; dy, death; till, tilth; grow, growth; mow, later mowth, after mowth; commonly spoken and written later math, after math; steal, stealth; bear, birth; rue, rueth; and probably earth from to ear or plow; fly, flight; weigh, weight; fray, fright; to draw, draught.

These should rather be written slighth, fright, only that custom prevails, lest h should be twice repeated.

The same form retain faith, spight, wreath, wrath, broth, froth, breath, sooth, worth, light, weight, and the like, whose primitives are either entirely obsolete, or seldom occur. Perhaps they are derived from sey or soy, spry, wry, wreak, brew, mow, fry, bray, say, work.

Some ending in ship imply an office, employment, or condition; as, kingship, wardship, guardianship, partnership, stewardship, headship, lordship.

Thus worship, that is, worthship; whence worshipful, to worship.

Some few ending in dom, rick, wick, do especially denote dominion, at least state or condition; as kingdom, dukedom, earldom, princedom, popedom, christendom, freedom, wisdom, whoredom, bishoprick, bailiwick.

Ment and age are plainly French terminations, and are of the same import with us as among them, scarcely ever occurring, except in words derived from the French, as commandment, usage.

A GRAMMAR OF THE

There are in English often long trains of words allied by their meaning and derivation; as, to beat, a bat, baton, a battle, a beetle, a battle-door, to batter, butter, a kind of glutinous composition for food. All these are of similar signification, and perhaps derived from the Latin batuo. Thus take, touch, tickle, tack, tackle; all imply a local conjunction, from the Latin tango, tetigi, taſum.

From two are formed twain, twice, twenty, twelve, twins, twine, twist, twirl, twig, twitch, twinge, between, betwixt, twilight, twibil.

The following remarks, extracted from Wallis, are ingenious, but of more subtlety than solidity, and such as perhaps might in every language be enlarged without end.

Sn usually implies the nose, and what relates to it. From the Latin nasus are derived the French nes and the English nose; and neſſe, a promontory, as projecting like a nose. But as if from the consonants ns taken from nasus, and transposed, that they may the better correspond, sn denotes nasus; and thence are derived many words that relate to the nose, as snout, sneeze, snore, snort, snear, snicker, snot, snevil, snite, snuff, snuffle, snaffle, snarle, snudge.

There is another sn, which may perhaps be derived from the Latin ſnuo, as snake, sneak, snail, snare; so likewise snap and snatch, snib, snub.

Bl implies a blast; as, blow, blast, to blast, to blight, and, metaphorically, to blast one's reputation; bleat, bleak, a bleak place, to look bleak or weather-beaten, bleak, blay, bleach, bluster, blurt, blifter, blab, bladder, bleb, blifter, blubber-lip't, blubber-cheek't, bloted, blote-herrings, blast, blaze, to blow, that is, blossom, bloom; and perhaps blood and blush.

In the native words of our tongue is to be found a great agreement between the letters and the thing signified; and therefore the sounds of letters smaller, sharper, louder, closer, softer, stronger, clearer, more obscure, and more stridulous, do very often intimate the like effects in the things signified.

Thus words that begin with ſtr intimate the force and effect of the thing signified, as if probably derived from ſtronus, or ſtrenuus; as, strong, strength, ſtrew, strike, streak, stroke, stripe, strive, strife, struggle, strout, strut, stretch, strait, strict, freight, that is, narrow, ſtrain, stress, distress, string, strap, stream, streamer, strand, strip, stray, struggle, strange, stride, straddle.

St in like manner implies strength, but in a less degree, so much only as is sufficient to preserve what has been already communicated, rather than acquire any new degree; as if it were derived from the Latin ſto: for example, stand, stay, that is, to remain, or to prop; staff, stay, that is, to oppose; stop, to stuff, stiffe, to stay, that is, to stop; a stay, that is, an obstacle; stick, stut, stutter, stammer, stagger, stickle, stick, stake, a sharp pale, and any thing deposited at play; stock, stem, sting, to sting, stink, stitch, stud, stanchion, stub, stubble, to stub up, stump, whence stumble, stalk, to stalk, step, to stamp with the feet, whence to stamp, that is, to make an impression and a stamp; stow, to stow, to bestow, steward or stoward, stead, steady, steadfast, stable, a stable, a stall, to stall, stool, stall, still, stall, stallage, stall, stage, still adj. and still adv. stale, stout, sturdy, steed, stoat, stallion, stiff, stark-dead, to starve with hunger or cold; stone, steel, stern, stanch, to stanch blood, to stare, steep, steeple, stair, standard, a stated measure, stately. In all these, and perhaps some others, ſt denotes something firm and fixed.

Thr implies a more violent degree of motion, as throw, thrust, throng, throb, through, threat, threaten, thrall, throws.

Wr imply some sort of obliquity or distortion, as wry, to wreathe, wrest, wrestle, wring, wrong, wrinch, wrench, wrangle, wrinkle, wrath, wreak, wrack, wretch, wrist, wrap.

Sw imply a silent agitation, or a softer kind of lateral motion; as sway, swag, to sway, swagger, swerve, sweat, sweep, swill, swim, swing, swift, sweet, switch, swinge.

Nor is there much difference of sm in smothe, smug, smile, smirk, smite, which signifies the same as to strike, but is a softer word; small, smell, snack, smother, smart, a smart blow properly signifies such a kind of stroke as with an originally silent motion implied in sm, proceeds to a quick violence, denoted by ar suddenly ended, as is shewn by t.

Cl denote a kind of adhesion or tenacity, as in cleave, clay, cling, climb, clamber, clammy, cless, to clasp, to clip, to clinch, cloak, clog, close, to close, a clod, a clot, as a clot of blood, clouted cream, a cluster, a cluſter.

Sp implies a kind of dissipation or expansion, especially a quick one, particularly if there be an r, as if it were from ſpargo or ſeparo: for example, spread, spring, sprig, sprout, sprinkle, split, splinter, spill, spit, sputter, spatter.

Sl denotes a kind of silent fall, or a less observable motion; as in slime, slide, slip, slipper, fly, sleight, slit, slow, slack, slight, sling, slap.

And so likewise ash, in crash, rash, gasb, flash, clasp, lash, slasp, plash, trash, indicates something acting more nimbly and sharply. But ush, in crush, rush, gush, flush, blush, brush, hush, push, implies something as acting more obtusely and dully. Yet in both there is indicated a swift and sudden motion, not instantaneous, but gradual, by the continued sound sh.

Thus in sling, fling, ding, faving, cling, sing, wring, sting, the tingling of the termination ng, and the sharpness of the vowel i, imply the continuation of a very slender motion or tremor, at length indeed vanishing, but not suddenly interrupted. But in tink, wink, sink, clink, chink, think, that end in a mute consonant, there is also indicated a sudden ending.

If there be an l, as in jingle, tingle, tinkle, mingle, sprinkle, twinkle, there is implied a frequency, or iteration of small acts. And the same frequency of acts, but less subtle by reason of the clearer vowel a, is indicated in jangle, tangle, spangle, mangle, wrangle, brangle, dangle; as also in mumble, grumble, jumble, tumble, stumble, rumble, crumble, fumble. But at the same time the close u implies something obscure or obtunded; and a congeries of consonants mbl, denotes a confused kind of rolling or tumbling, as in ramble, scamble, scramble, wamble, amble; but in these there is something acute.

In nimble, the acuteness of the vowel denotes celerity. In sparkle, ſp denotes dissipation, ar an acute crackling, k a sudden interruption, l a frequent iteration; and in like manner in sprinkle, unless in may imply the subtilty of the dissipated guttales. Thick and thin differ, in that the former ends with an obtuse consonant, and the latter with an acute.

In like manner, in squeek, squeak, squeal, squall, brail, wrail, yaul, spaul, screek, shriek, shril, sharp, shrivel, wrinkle, crack, crash, clasp, gnash, plash, crush, hush, bisse, whist, soft, jarr, burl, curl, whirl, buzz, bustle, spindle, dwindle, twine, twist, and in many more, we may observe the agreement of such sort of sounds with the things signified: and this so frequently happens, that scarce any language which I know can be compared with ours. So that one monosyllable word, of which kind are almost all ours, emphatically expresses what in other languages can scarce be explained but by compounds, or decompositions, or sometimes a tedious circumlocution.

We have many words borrowed from the Latin; but the greatest part of them were communicated by the intervention of the French; as grace, face, elegant, elegance, resemble.

Some verbs, which seem borrowed from the Latin, are formed from the present tense, and some from the supines.

From the present are formed ſpend, expend, expendo; conduce, conduco; despise, despicio; approve, approbo; conceive, concipio.

From the supines, ſupplicate, supplico; demonstrate, demonstro; dispose, dispono; expatiate, expatior; ſuppreſs, ſupprimo; exempt, eximo.

Nothing is more apparent, than that Wallis goes too far in quest of originals. Many of these which seem selected as immediate descendents from the Latin, are apparently French, as conceive, approve, expose, exempt.

Some words purely French, not derived from the Latin, we have transferred into our language; as, garden, garter, buckler, to advance, to cry, to plead, from the French jardin, jartier, bouclier, avancer, cryer, plaider; though indeed, even of these, part is of Latin original.

As to many words which we have in common with the Germans, it is doubtful whether the old Teutons borrowed them from the Latins, or the Latins from the Teutons, or both had them from some common original; as, wine, vinum; wind, ventus; went, veni; way, via; wall, vallum; swallow, volvo; wool, vellus; will, volo; worm, vermis; worth, virtus; wasp, vespa; day, dies; draw, traho; tame, domo, δαμάω; yoke, jugum, ζεύγος; over, upper, super, υπερ; am, sum, εἰμι; break, frango; fly, volo; blow, flo. I make no doubt but the Teutonic is more ancient than the Latin: and it is no less certain, that the Latin, which borrowed a great number of words, not only from the Greek, especially the Æolick, but from other neighbouring languages, as the Oscan and others, which have long become obsolete, received not a few from the Teutonic. It is certain, that the English, German, and other Teutonic languages, retained some derived from the Greek, which the Latin has not; as path, psad, ax, achs, mit, ford, pfurd, daughter, tochter, mickle, mingle, moon, fear, grave, graff, to grave, to scrape, whole, heal, from πάθος, αἰδώς, μέλας, ποθεύω, μέγας, μύνη, ἔλεος, γράφω, ὅλος, εἰλέω. Since they received these immediately from the Greeks, without the intervention of the Latin language, why may not other words be derived immediately from the same fountain, though they be likewise found among the Latins.

Our ancestors were studious to form borrowed words, however long, into monosyllables; and not only cut off the formative terminations, but cropped the first syllable, especially in words beginning with a vowel; and rejected not only vowels in the middle, but likewise consonants of a weaker sound, retaining the stronger, which seem the bones of words, or changing them for others of the same organ, in order that the sound might become the softer; but especially transposing their order, that they might the more readily be pronounced without the intermediate vowels. For example, in expendo, ſpend; exemplum, sample; excipio, scape; extraneus, strange; extractum, stretch'd; excrucio, to screw; exscorio, to scour; excorio, to scourge; excortico, to scratch; and others beginning with ex: as also, emendo, to mend; episcopus, bishop; in Danish Bisp; epistola, pistle; hospitale, spittle; Hispania, Spain; hitoria, story.

Many of these etymologies are doubtful, and some evidently mistaken.

The following are somewhat harder, Alexander, Sander; Elisabetha, Betty; apis, bee; aper, bar; p passing into b, as in bishop; and by cutting cutting off a from the beginning, which is restored in the middle; but for the old bar or bare, we now say boar; as for lang, long; for bain, bane; for stane, stone; aprunna, brown, p being changed into b, and a transposed, as in aper, and g changed into w, as in pignus, pawn; lege, law; ἀλπήξ, fox, cutting off the beginning, and changing p into f, as in pellis, a fell; pullus, a foal; pater, father; pavor, fear; polio, file; pleo, impleo, fill, full; piscis, fish; and transposing o into the middle, which was taken from the beginning; apex, a piece; peak, pike; zophorus, freeze; mustum, stun; defensio, fence; dispensator, spencer; asculco, escouter, Fr. scout; exscalpo, scrape, restoring l instead of r, and hence scrap, scrable, scrawl; exculpo, scoop; exterritus, start; extonitus, attonitus, stonn'd; flomachus, marv; offendo, fined; obstipo, stop; audere, dare; cavere, ware, whence a-ware, be-ware, wary, warn, warning; for the Latin v consonant formerly sounded like our w, and the modern sound of the v consonant was formerly that of the letter f, that is, the Æolick digamma, which had the sound of φ, and the modern sound of the letter f was that of the Greek φ or ph; ulcus, ulcer, fore, and hence sorry, sorrow, sorrowful; ingenium, engine, gin; scalenus, leaning, unless you would rather derive it from κλίνω, whence incline; infundibulum, funnel; gagates, jett; projectum, to jett forth, a jetty; cucullus, a cowl.

There are syncopes somewhat harder; from tempore, time; from nomine, name; domina, dame; as the French homme, femme, nom, from homine, fœmina, nomine. Thus pagina, page; ποτήριον, pot; κύπελλον, cup; cantharus, can; tentorium, tent; precor, pray; præda, prey; specio, speculator, spy; plico, ply; implico, imply; replico, reply; complico, comply; fedes episcopalis, see.

A vowel is also cut off in the middle, that the number of the syllables may be lessened; as, amita, aunt; spiritus, spirit; debitum, debt; dubito, doubt; comes, comitis, count; clericus, clerk; quietus, quit, quite; acquieto, to acquit; separo, to spare; stabilis, stable; stabulum, stable; pallacium, palace, place; rabula, rail, rawl, wraul, brawl, rable, brable; quæstio, quest.

As also a consonant, or at least one of a softer sound, or even a whole syllable; rotundus, round; fragilis, frail; securus, sure; regula, rule; tegula, tile; subtilis, subtle; nomen, noun; decanus, dean; computo, count; subitaneus, sudden, soon; superare, to soar; periculum, peril; mirabile, marvel; as magnus, main; dignor, deign; tingo, stain; tinctum, taint; pingo, paint; prædari, reach.

The contractions may seem harder, where many of them meet, as κυριακός, kyrk, church; presbyter, priest; sacristanus, sexton; frango, fregi, break, breach; fagus, φῆνα, beech, f changed into b, and g into ch, which are letters near-a-kin; frigesco, freeze; frigesco, fresh, sc into sh, as above in bishop, fish, so in scapha, skiff, ship, and refrigesco, refresh; but viresco, fresh; phlebotomus, steam; bovina, beef; vitulina, veal; scutifer, squire; pœnitentia, penance; sanctuarium, sanctuary, sentry; quæstio, chase; perquisitio, purchase; anguilla, eel; insula, isle, ile, island, iland; insuletta, islet, ilet; eyght and more contractedly ey, whence Owsfey, Ruley, Ely; examinare, to scan, namely, by rejecting from the beginning and end e and o, according to the usual manner, the remainder xamin, which the Saxons, who did not use x, writ csamen, or scamen is contracted into scan; as from dominus, don; nomine, noun; abomino, ban; and indeed apum examen they turned into sciam; for which we say swarme, by inserting r to denote the murmuring; thesaurus, store; sedile, stool; verdes, wet; fudo, sweat; gaudium, gay; jocus, joy; succus, juice; catena, chain; caliga, calga; chaufe, chauffe, Fr. hose; extinguo, stanch, quenck, quench, stint; foras, forth; species, spice; recito, read; adjuvo, aid; αἶψα, ævum, ay, age, ever; floccus, lock; excerpo, scrape, scrabble, scrawl; extravagus, stray, straggle; collectum, clot, clutch; colligo, coil; recolligo, recoil; severo, sweat; stridulus, shrill; procurator, proxy; pulso, to push; calamus, a quill; impetere, to impeach; augeo, auxi, wax; and vanesco, vanui, wane; syllabare, to spell; puteus, pit; granum, corn; comprimo, cramp, crump, crumple, crinkle.

Some may seem harsher, yet may not be rejected, for it at least appears, that some of them are derived from proper names, and there are others whose etymology is acknowledged by every body; as, Alexander, Elick, Scander, Sander, Sandy, Sanny; Elizabeth, Elizabeth, Betty, Bess; Margareta, Margaret, Margget, Meg, Peg; Maria, Mary, Mal, Pal, Malkin, Marwin, Marwick; Matthæus, Mattha, Matthew; Martha, Matt, Pat; Gulielmus, Wilhelmus, Girolamo, Guillaume, William, Will, Bill, Wilkin, Wicken, Wicks, Weeks.

Thus cariophyllus, flos; gerosilo, Ital. giriflee, gilofer, Fr. gilliflowers, which the vulgar call julyflower, as if derived from the month July; petroselinum, parsly; portulaca, purslain; cydonium, quince; cydoniatum, quidney; persicum, peach; eruca, eruke, which they corrupt to ear-wig, as if it took its name from the ear; annulus geminus, a gimmal or gimbal ring; and thus the word gimbal and jumbal is transferred to other things thus interwoven; quelques choses, kickshaws. Since the origin of these, and many others, however forced, is evident, it ought to appear no wonder to any one if the ancients have thus disfigured many, especially as they so much affected monosyllables; and, to make them sound the softer, took this liberty of maiming, taking away, changing, transposing, and softening them.

But while we derive these from the Latin, I do not mean to say, that many of them did not immediately come to us from the Saxon, Danish, Dutch, and Teutonic languages, and other dialects, and some taken more lately from the French or Italians, or Spaniards.

The same word, according to its different significations, often has a different origin; as, to bear a burden, from fero; but to bear, whence birth, born, bairn, comes from pario; and a bear, at least if it be of Latin original, from fera. Thus perch, a fish, from perca; but perch, a measure, from pertica, and likewise to perch. To spell is from syllaba; but spell, an incantment, by which it is believed that the boundaries are so fixed in lands, that none can pass them against the master's will, from expello; and spell, a messenger, from epistola; whence gospel, good-tel, or god-spell. Thus freeze, or freeze, from frigesco; but freeze, an architectonic word, from zophorus; but freeze, for clath, from Frisia, or perhaps from frigesco, as being more fit than any other for keeping out the cold.

There are many words among us even monosyllables, compounded of two or more words, at least serving instead of compounds, and comprising the signification of more words than one; as, from scrip and roll comes scroll; from proud and dance, prance; from st of the verb stay, or stand and stout, is made stout; from stout and hardy, sturdy; from sp of spit or sperw, and out, comes spout; from the same sp, with the termination in, is spin; and adding out, spin out; and from the same sp, with it, is spit, which only differs from spout in that it is smaller, and with less noise and force; but sputter is, because of the obscure u, something between spit and spout; and by reason of adding r, it intimates a frequent iteration and noise, but obscurely confused: whereas spatter, on account of the sharper and clearer vowel a, intimates a more distinct noise, in which it chiefly differs from sputter. From the same sp, and the termination ark, comes spark, signifying a single emission of fire with a noise; namely, sp the emission, ar the more acute noise, and k, the mute consonant, intimates its being suddenly terminated; but adding l, is made the frequentative sparkle. The same sp, by adding r, that is spr, implies a more lively impetus of diffusing or expanding itself; to which adding the termination ing, it becomes spring; its vigour spr imports, its sharpness the termination ing, and lastly in acute and tremulous, ends in the mute consonant g, denotes the sudden ending of any motion, that it is meant in its primary signification, of a single, not a complicated exhalation. Hence we call spring whatever has an elastic force; as also a fountain of water, and thence the origin of any thing; and to spring, to germinate; and spring, one of the four seasons. From the same spr and out, is formed sprout, and with the termination ig, sprig; of which the following, for the most part, is the difference: sprout, of a grosser sound, imports a fatter or crosser bud; sprig, of a slenderer sound, denotes a smaller shoot. In like manner, from str of the verb strive, and out, comes strout and strut. From the same str, and the termination uggle, is made struggle; and this gl imports, but without any great noise, by reason of the obscure sound of the vowel u. In like manner, from throw and roll is made trull; and almost in the same sense is trundle, from throw or thrust, and rundle. Thus graff or grough is compounded of grave and rough; and trudge from tread or trot, and drudge.

In these observations it is easy to discover great sagacity and great extravagance, an ability to do much defeated by the desire of doing more than enough. It may be remarked,

1. That Wallis's derivations are often so made, that by the same licence any language may be deduced from any other.

2. That he makes no distinction between words immediately derived by us from the Latin, and those which being copied from other languages, can therefore afford no example of the genius of the English language, or its laws of derivation.

3. That he derives from the Latin, often with great harshness and violence, words apparently Teutonic; and therefore, according to his own declaration, probably older than the tongue to which he refers them.

4. That some of his derivations are apparently erroneous.

S Y N T A X.

The established practice of grammarians requires that I should here treat of the Syntax; but our language has so little inflection, or variety of terminations, that its construction neither requires nor admits many rules. Wallis therefore has totally omitted it; and Johnson, whose desire of following the writers upon the learned languages made him think a syntax indispensably necessary, has published such petty observations as were better omitted.

The verb, as in other languages, agrees with the nominative in number and person; as, Thou fliest from good; He runs to death.

Our adjectives and pronouns are invariable.

Of two substantives; the noun possessive is the genitive; as, His father's glory; The sun's heat.

Verbs transitive require an oblique case; as, He loves me; You fear him.

All prepositions require an oblique case: He gave this to me; He took this from me; He says this of me; He came with me.

P R O S O D Y.

It is common for those that deliver the grammar of modern languages, to omit their Prosody. So that of the Italians is neglected by Buomattei; that of the French by Desmarais; and that of the English by Wallis, Cooper, and even by Johnson though a poet. But as the laws of metre are included in the idea of a grammar, I have thought it proper to insert them.

Prosody comprises orthoëpy, or the rules of pronunciation; and orthometry, or the laws of versification.

PRONUN-

A GRAMMAR OF THE

PRONUNCIATION is just, when every letter has its proper sound, and when every syllable has its proper accent, or which in English versification is the same, its proper quantity.

The sounds of the letters have been already explained; and rules for the accent or quantity are not easily to be given, being subject to innumerable exceptions. Such however as I have read or formed, I shall here propose.

1. Of disyllables formed by affixing a termination, the former syllable is commonly accented, as childish, kingdom, ánest, áned, tóilsome, lóver, scóffer, fairer, forémst, zéalous, fúlness, gódy, méekly, ártist.

2. Disyllables formed by prefixing a syllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter; as, to begét, to beséem, to bestów.

3. Of disyllables, which are at once nouns and verbs, the verb has commonly the accent on the latter, and the noun on the former syllable; as, to descánt, a désánt; to cemént, a cément; to contráct, a cóntráct.

This rule has many exceptions. Though verbs seldom have their accent on the former, yet nouns often have it on the latter syllable; as, delight, perfúme.

4. All disyllables ending in y, as cranny; in our, as labour, favour; in ow, as willow, wállow, except allów; in le, as báttle, bíble; in ish, as bánish; in ck, as cámbrick, cásock; in ter, as to báttter; in age, as cóurage; in en, as fásten; in et, as quíet, accent the former syllable.

5. Disyllable nouns in er, as cánker, búttter, have the accent on the former syllable.

6. Disyllable verbs terminating in a consonant and e final, as compríse, escápe; or having a diphthong in the last syllable, as appéase, revéal; or ending in two consonants, as attend; have the accent on the latter syllable.

7. Disyllable nouns having a diphthong in the latter syllable, have commonly their accent on the latter syllable, as appláuse; except words in ain, cértain, moúntain.

8. Trisyllables formed by adding a termination, or prefixing a syllable, retain the accent of the radical word, as lóveliness, ténderness, contémner, wágonner, phýsical, bespáttter, comménting, comménding, assúrance.

9. Trisyllables ending in ous, as grácious, árduous; in al, as cápital; in ion, as méntion, accent the first.

10. Trisyllables ending in ce, ent, and ate, accent the first syllable, as cóútenance, cóntinence, ármament, ímminent, élegant, própagate, except they be derived from words having the accent on the last, as connívence, acquáintance; or the middle syllable hath a vowel before two consonants, as promúlgate.

11. Trisyllables ending in y, as éntity, spécify, liberty, víctory, súbsidy, commonly accent the first syllable.

12. Trisyllables in re or le accent the first syllable, as légible, théatre, except discíple, and some words which have a position, as exámple, epístle.

13. Trisyllables in ude commonly accent the first syllable, as plénitude.

14. Trisyllables ending in ator or atour, as créátour, or having in the middle syllable a diphthong, as endeáour; or a vowel before two consonants, as doméstick, accent the middle syllable.

15. Trisyllables that have their accent on the last syllable are commonly French, as acquiesce, repartée, magazine, or words formed by prefixing one or two syllables to an acute syllable, as immátüre, overchárge.

16. Polysyllables, or words of more than three syllables, follow the accent of the words from which they are derived, as árrogating, cóntinency, incóntinently, comméndable, commúnicableness.

17. Words in ion have the accent upon the antepenult, as salvátion, perturbátion, concóction; words in atour or ator on the penult, as dedicátor.

18. Words ending in le commonly have the accent on the first syllable, as ámicable, unless the second syllable have a vowel before two consonants, as combústible.

19. Words ending in ous have the accent on the antepenult, as uxórious, volúptuous.

20. Words ending in ly have their accent on the antepenult, as pússillanimity, actívity.

These rules are not advanced as compleat or infallible, but proposed as useful. Almost every rule of every language has its exceptions; and in English, as in other tongues, much must be learned by example and authority. Perhaps more and better rules may be given that have escaped my observation.

VERSIFICATION is the arrangement of a certain number of syllables according to certain laws.

The feet of our verses are either iambick, as alóft, créate; or trochaick, as bóly, lófty.

Our iambick measure comprises verses

Of four syllables,

Most good, most fair,
Or things as rare,
To call you's lost;
For all the cost
Words can bestow,
So poorly show
Upon your praise,
That all the ways
Sense hath, come short.

Drayton.

With ravish'd ears
The monarch hears.

Dryden.

Of six,

This while we are abroad,
Shall we not touch our lyre?
Shall we not sing an ode?
Shall that holy fire,
In us that strongly glow'd,
In this cold air expire?

Though in the utmost Peak
A while we do remain,
Amongst the mountains bleak,
Expos'd to fleet and rain,
No sport our hours shall break,
To exercise our vein.

Who though bright Phoebus' beams
Refresh the southern ground,
And though the princely Thames
With beauteous nymphs abound,
And by old Camber's streams
Be many wonders found;

Yet many rivers clear
Here glide in silver swathes,
And what of all most dear,
Buxton's delicious baths,
Strong ale and noble chear,
T' assuage breem winter's scathes.

In places far or near,
Or famous, or obscure,
Where wholesom is the air,
Or where the most impure,
All times, and every where,
The muse is still in ure.

Drayton.

Of eight, which is the usual measure for short poems,

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown, and mossy cell,
Where I may sit, and nightly spell
Of ev'ry star the sky doth shew,
And ev'ry herb that sips the dew.

Milton.

Of ten, which is the common measure of heroick and tragick poetry.

Full in the midst of this created space,
Betwixt heav'n, earth, and skies, there stands a place
Confining on all three; with triple bound;
Whence all things, though remote, are view'd around,
And thither bring their undulating sound.
The palace of loud Fame, her seat of pow'r,
Plac'd on the summit of a lofty tow'r;
A thousand winding entries long and wide
Receive of fresh reports a flowing tide.

E N G L I S H T O N G U E.

A thousand crannies in the walls are made ;
 Nor gate nor bars exclude the busy trade.
 'Tis built of brags, the better to diffuse
 The spreading sounds, and multiply the news ;
 Where echo's in repeated echo's play :
 A mart for ever full ; and open night and day.
 Nor silence is within, nor voice express,
 But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease ;
 Confus'd, and chiding, like the hollow rore
 Of tides, receding from th' insulted shore ;
 Or like the broken thunder, heard from far,
 When Jove to distance drives the rolling war.
 The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din
 Of crouds, or issuing forth, or entring in :
 A thorough-fare of news ; where some devise
 Things never heard, some mingle truth with lies :
 The troubled air with empty sounds they beat,
 Intent to hear, and eager to repeat. Dryden.

In all these measures the accents are to be placed on even syllables ; and every line considered by itself is more harmonious, as this rule is more strictly observed.

Our trochaick measures are

Of three syllables,
 Here we may
 Think and pray,
 Before death
 Stops our breath :
 Other joys
 Are but toys.

Of five,
 In the days of old,
 Stories plainly told,
 Lovers felt annoy.

Of seven,
 Fairest piece of welform'd earth,
 Urge not thus your haughty birth.

In these measures the accent is to be placed on the odd syllables.

These are the measures which are now in use, and above the rest those of seven, eight, and ten syllables. Our ancient poets wrote verses sometimes of twelve syllables, as Drayton's Polyolbion.

Of all the Cambrian shires their heads that bear so high;
 And farth't survey their soils with an ambitious eye,
 Mervinia for her hills, as for their matchless crowds,
 The nearest that are said to kiss the wand'ring clouds,
 Especial audience craves, offended with the throng,
 That she of all the rest neglected was so long ;
 Alledging for herself, when through the Saxons pride,
 The godlike race of Brute to Severn's setting side
 Were cruelly inforc'd, her mountains did relieve
 Those whom devouring war else every where did grieve.
 And when all Wales beside (by fortune or by might)
 Unto her ancient foe resign'd her ancient right,
 A constant maiden still she only did remain,
 The last her genuine laws which stoutly did retain.
 And as each one is prais'd for her peculiar things ;
 So only she is rich, in mountains, meres, and springs,
 And holds herself as great in her superfluous waste,
 As others by their towns, and fruitful tillage grac'd.

And of fourteen, as Chapman's Homer.

And as the mind of such a man, that hath a long way gone,
 And either knoweth not his way, or else would let alone
 His purpos'd journey, is distract.

The verse of twelve lines, called an Alexandrine, is now only used to diversify heroick lines.

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
 The varying verse, the full-resounding line,
 The long majestick march, and energy divine. }

The pause in the Alexandrine must be at the sixth syllable.

The verse of fourteen syllables is now broken into a soft lyric measure of verses, consisting alternately of eight syllables and six.

She to receive thy radiant name,
 Selects a whiter space.

When all shall praise, and ev'ry lay
 Devote a wreath to thee,
 That day, for come it will, that day
 Shall I lament to see.

We have another measure very quick and lively, and therefore much used in songs, which may be called the anapestick, in which the accent rests upon every third syllable.

May I govern my passions with absolute sway,
 And grow wiser and better as life wears away.

In this measure a syllable is often retrenched from the first foot, as Diogenes furly and proud.

I think not of I'ris, nor I'ris of mé.

These measures are varied by many combinations, and sometimes by double endings, either with or without rhyme, as in the heroick measure.

'Tis heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
 And intimates eternity to man.

So in that of eight syllables,
 They neither added nor confounded,
 They neither wanted nor abounded.

In that of seven,
 For resistance I could fear none,
 But with twenty ships had done,
 What thou, brave and happy Vernon,
 Hast achiev'd with six alone.

In that of six,
 'Twas when the seas were roaring,
 With hollow blasts of wind,
 A damsel lay deploring,
 All on a rock reclin'd.

In the anapestick,
 When terrible tempests assail us;
 And mountainous billows affright,
 Nor power nor wealth can avail us;
 But skilful industry steers right.

To these measures, and their laws, may be reduced every species of English verse.

Our versification admits of few licences, except a synalæpha, or elision of e in the before a vowel, as th'eter-nal ; and more rarely of o in to, as t'accept ; and a synæresis, by which two short vowels coalesce into one syllable, as question, special ; or a word is contracted by the expulsion of a short vowel before a liquid, as av'rice, temp'rance.

Thus have I collected rules and examples, by which the English language may be learned, if the reader be already acquainted with grammatical terms, or taught by a master to those that are more ignorant. To have written a grammar for such as are not yet initiated in the schools, would have been tedious, and perhaps at last ineffectual.

A GENERAL DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A

A, The first letter of the European alphabets, has, in the English language, three different sounds, which may be termed the broad, open, and slender.

The broad sound resembling that of the German a is found, in many of our monosyllables, as all, wall, malt, salt; in which a is pronounced as au in cause, or aw in law. Many of these words were anciently written with au, as fault, waulk; which happens to be still retained in fault. This was probably the ancient sound of the Saxons, since it is almost uniformly preserved in the rustic pronunciation, and the Northern dialects, as maun for man, haund for hand.

A open, not unlike the a of the Italians, is found in father, rather, and more obscurely in fancy, fast, &c.

A slender or close, is the peculiar a of the English language, resembling the sound of the French e masculine, or diphthong ai in païs, or perhaps a middle sound between them, or between the a and e; to this the Arabic a is said nearly to approach. Of this sound we have examples in the words, place, face, waste, and all those that terminate in ation; as, relation, nation, generation.

A is short, as, glafs, grafs; or long, as, glaze, graze: it is marked long, generally, by an e final, plane, or by an i added, as, plain.

A, an article set before nouns of the singular number; a man, a tree; denoting the number one, as, a man is coming, that is, no more than one; or an indefinite indication, as, a man may come this way; that is, any man. This article has no plural signification. Before a word beginning with a vowel, it is written an, as, an ox, an egg, of which a is the contraction.

A is sometimes a noun; as, a great A, a little a.

A is placed before a participle, or participial noun; and is considered by Wallis as a contraction of at, when it is put before a word denoting some action not yet finished; as, I am a walking. It also seems to be anciently contracted from at, when placed before local surnames; as, Thomas a Becket. In other cases, it seems to signify to, like the French à.

A hunting Chloë went.

Prior.

They go a begging to a bankrupt's door.

Dryd.

May pure contents for ever pitch their tents

Upon these downs, these meads, these rocks, these mountains,

And peace still slumber by these purling fountains!

Which we may every year

Find when we come a fishing here.

Wotton.

Now the men fell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain oiled; the magazines of munition are viewed; the officers of remains called to account.

Wotton.

Another falls a ringing a Pescennius Niger, and judiciously distinguishes the sound of it to be modern. Addison on medals.

A has a peculiar signification, denoting the proportion of one thing to another. Thus we say, The landlord hath a hundred a year; The ship's crew gained a thousand pounds a man.

The river Inn, that had been hitherto shut up among mountains, passes generally through a wide open country, during all its course through Bavaria; which is a voyage of two days, after the rate of twenty leagues a day.

Addison on Italy.

A is used in burlesque poetry, to lengthen out a syllable, without adding to the sense.

VOL. I.

A B A

For cloves and nutmegs to the line-a,

And even for oranges to China.

Dryden.

A is sometimes, in familiar writings, put by a barbarous corruption for be.

A, in composition, seems to have sometimes the power of the French a in these phrases, a droit, a gauche, &c. and sometimes to be contracted from at; as, aside, aslope, asoot, asleep, athirst, aware.

If this, which he avouches, does appear,

There is no flying hence, nor tarrying here.

I gin to be a weary of the sun;

And wish the state of the world were now undone.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

And now a breeze from shore began to blow,

The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row;

Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails

Let fall, to court the wind, and catch the gales.

Dryden's Ceyx and Alcyone.

A is sometimes redundant; as, arise, arouse, awake; the same with rise, rouse, wake.

A, in abbreviations, stands for artium, or arts; as, A. B. bachelor of arts, artium baccalaureus; A. M. master of arts, artium magister; or, anno; as, A. D. anno domini.

AB, at the beginning of the names of places, generally shews that they have some relation to an abbey.

ABA'CKE. adv. obsolete. Backwards.

But when they came where thou thy skill didst show,

They drew aback, as half with shame confound,

Shepherds to see them in their art outgo.

Spens. Past.

ABA'CTOK. n. f. [Lat. abactor, a driver away.] Those who drive away or steal cattle in herds, or great numbers at once, in distinction from those that steal only a sheep or two. Blount.

ABACUS. n. f. [Lat. abacus.]

1. A counting-table, anciently used in calculations.

2. In architecture, it is the uppermost member of a column, which serves as a sort of crowning both to the capital and column.

Dict.

ABAFT. adv. [of abaftan, Sax. Behind.] From the fore-part of the ship, towards the stern.

Dict.

ABAI'SANCE. n. f. [from the French abaïser, to depress, to bring down.] An act of reverence, a bow. Obeysance is considered by Skinner as a corruption of abaisance, but is now universally used.

TO ABA'LIENATE. v. a. [from abalieno, Lat.] To make that another's which was our own before. Calv. Lex. Jur. A term of the civil law, not much used in common speech.

ABALIENATION. n. f. [Lat. abalienatio.] A giving up one's right to another person; or a making over an estate, goods, or chattels by sale, or due course of law.

Dict.

TO ABA'ND. v. a. [A word contracted from abandon, but not now in use. See ABANDON.] To forsake.

Those foreigners which came from far

Grew great, and got large portions of land,

That in the realm, ere long, they stronger are

Than they which fought at first their helping hand,

And Vortiger enforced the kingdom to aband.

Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 10.

TO ABA'NDON. v. a. [Fr. abandonner. Derived, according to Menage, from the Italian abandonare, which signifies to forsake his colours; bandum [vexillum] deserere. Pasquier thinks

it

it a coalition of a ban donner, to give up to a proscription; in which sense we, at this day, mention the ban of the empire. Ban, in our own old dialect, signifies a curse; and to abandon, if considered as compounded between French and Saxon, is exactly equivalent to diris devovere.]

1. To give up, resign, or quit; often followed by the particle to.
The passive gods behold the Greeks defile
Their temples, and abandon to the spoil
Their own abodes; we, feeble few, conspire
To save a sinking town, involv'd in fire. Dryd. Æneid.

2. To desert.
The princes using the passions of fearing evil, and desiring to escape, only to serve the rule of virtue, not to abandon one's self, leapt to a rib of the ship. Sidney, b. ii.

Then being alone,
Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends,
'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company. Shakesp. As you like it.

What fate a wretched fugitive attends,
Scorn'd by my foes, abandon'd by my friends. Dryd. Æn. 2.

3. To forsake, generally with a tendency to an ill sense.
When he in presence came, to Guyon first
He boldly spake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place at erst,
For fear of further harm, I counsel thee.

Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 4. stanza. 39.

But to the parting goddess thus she pray'd;
Propitious still be present to my aid,
Nor quite abandon your once favour'd maid. Dryd. Fab.

4. ABANDON OVER. v. a. [a form of writing not usual, perhaps not exact.] To give up to, to resign.

Look on me as a man abandon'd o'er
To an eternal lethargy of love;
To pull, and pinch, and wound me, cannot cure,
And but disturb the quiet of my death. Dryd. Sp. Friar.

5. ABANDONED. particip. adj.

1. Given up.
If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow,
As it is spoke, she never will admit me. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

Who is he so abandoned to sottish credulity, as to think, upon that principle, that a clod of earth in a sack, may ever,
by eternal shaking, receive the fabric of man's body? Bentley's Sermons.

Must he, whose altars on the Phrygian shore,
With frequent rites, and pure, avow'd thy pow'r,
Be doom'd the worst of human ills to prove,
Unblest'd, abandon'd to the wrath of Jove?

Pope's Odyssey, b. i. l. 80.

2. Forsaken, deserted.
3. Corrupted in the highest degree. In this sense, it is a contraction of a longer form, abanidoned [given up] to wickedness.

ABANDONING. [A verbal noun from abandon.] Desertion, forsaking.

He hoped his past meritorious actions might outweigh his present, abandoning the thought of future action. Clarend. b. viii.

ABANDONMENT. n. f. [abandonnement, Fr.]

1. The act of abandoning.
2. The state of being abandoned. Dict.

ABANNITION. n. f. [Lat. abannitio.] A banishment for one or two years, among the ancients, for manslaughter. Dict.

ABARCY. n. f. Insatiableness. Dict.

TO ABARE. v. a. [abarian, Sax.] To make bare, uncover, or disclose. Dict.

ABARTICULATION. n. f. [from ab, from, and articulus, a joint, Lat.] A good and apt construction of the bones, by which they move strongly and easily; or that species of articulation that has manifest motion. Dict.

TO ABASE. v. a. [Fr. abaisser, from the Lat. basis, or bassus, a barbarous word, signifying low, base.] To cast down, to depress, to bring low, almost always in a figurative and personal sense.

Happy shepherd, with thanks to the gods, still think to be thankful, that to thy advancement their wisdoms have thee abased. Sidney, b. i.

With unresisted might the monarch reigns;
He levels mountains, and he raises plains;
And, not regarding difference of degree,
Abas'd your daughter, and exalted me. Dryd. Fables.

Behold every one that is proud, and abase him. Job, xl. 11.
If the mind be curbed and humbled too much in children;
if their spirits be abased and broken much by too strict an hand over them; they lose all their vigour and industry, and are in a worse state than the former. Locke on Education, § 46.

ABA'SED. adj. [with heralds] is a term used of the wings of eagles, when the top looks downwards towards the point of the shield; or when the wings are shut; the natural way of bearing them being spread with the top pointing to the chief of the angle. Bailey. Chambers.

ABA'SEMENT. n. f. The state of being brought low; the act of bringing low; depression.

There is an abatement because of glory; and there is that listeth up his head from a low estate. Ecclesiasticus, xx. 11.

TO ABA'SH. v. a. [See BASHFUL.] To put into confusion; to make ashamed. It generally implies a sudden impression of shame.

They heard, and were abash'd, and up they sprung Upon the wing. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 331.

This heard, th' imperious queen sat mute with fear;
Nor further durst incense the gloomy thunderer.
Silence was in the court at this rebuke:

Nor could the gods, abash'd, sustain their sovereign's look. Dryden's Fables.

The passive admits the particle at, sometimes of, before the causal noun.

In no wise speak against the truth, but be abashed of the error of thy ignorance. Ecclesiasticus, iv. 25.

I said unto her, from whence is this kid? Is it not stolen?
Render it to the owners, for it is not lawful to eat any thing that is stolen. But she replied upon me, it was given for a gift, more than the wages: however, I did not believe her, but bad her render it to the owners: and I was abashed at her. Tob. ii. 13, 14.

The little Cupids hov'ring round,
(As pictures prove) with garlands crown'd,
Abash'd at what they saw and heard,
Flew off, nor ever more appear'd. Swift's Miscellanies.

TO ABA'TE. v. a. [from the French abbatre, to beat down.]

1. To lessen, to diminish.

Who can tell whether the divine wisdom, to abate the glory of those kings, did not reserve this work to be done by a queen, that it might appear to be his own immediate work?

Sir John Davies on Ireland.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.

Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Here we see the hopes of great benefit and light from expositors and commentators are in a great part abated; and those who have most need of your help, can receive but little from them, and can have very little assurance of reaching the Apostle's sense, by what they find in them.

Locke's Essay on St. Paul's Epistles.

2. To deject, or depress the mind.

This iron world (the same he weeping says)
Brings down the stoutest hearts to lowest state:
For misery doth bravest minds abate. Spens. Hubberd's Tale.

— — — — Have they power still

To banish your defenders, till at length

Your ignorance deliver you,

As most abated captives to some nation

That won you without blows? Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Time that changes all, yet changes us in vain,

The body, not the mind; nor can controul

Th' immortal vigour, or abate the soul. Dryden's Æneid.

3. In commerce, to let down the price in selling, sometimes to beat down the price in buying.

TO ABATE. v. n. To grow less; as, his passion abates; the storm abates. It is used sometimes with the particle of before the thing lessened.

Our physicians have observed, that, in process of time, some diseases have abated of their virulence, and have, in a manner, worn out their malignity, so as to be no longer mortal. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

TO ABATE. [in common law.]

It is in law used both actively and neuterly; as, to abate a castle, to beat it down. To abate a writ, is, by some exception, to defeat or overthrow it. A stranger abateth, that is, entereth upon a house or land void by the death of him that last possessed it, before the heir take his possession, and so keepeth him out. Wherefore, as he that putteth out him in possession, is said to disseise: so he that steppeth in between the former possessor and his heir, is said to abate. In the neuter signification thus; The writ of the demandment shall abate, that is, shall be disabled, frustrated, or overthrown. The appeal abateth by covin, that is, that the accusation is defeated by deceit. Cowel.

TO ABATE. [in horsemanship.] A horse is said to abate or take down his curvets; when working upon curvets, he puts his two hind-legs to the ground both at once, and observes the same exactness in all the times. Dict.

ABA'TEMENT. n. f. [abatement, Fr.]

1. The act of abating or lessening.

The law of works then, in short, is that law, which requires perfect obedience, without remission or abatement; so that, by that law, a man cannot be just, or justified, without an exact performance of every tittle.

2. The state of being abated.

Coffee has, in common with all nuts, an oil strongly combined and entangled with earthy particles. The most noxious part of oil exhales in roasting to the abatement of near one quarter of its weight. Arbuthnot on aliments.

3. The sum or quantity taken away by the act of abating.

Xenophon tells us, that the city contained about ten thousand land houses, and allowing one man to every house, who could have any share in the government, (the rest, consisting of women, children and servants) and making other obvious abatements, these tyrants, if they had been careful to adhere together, might have been a majority even of the people collective. Swift on the contests in Athens and Rome.

4. The cause of abating; extenuation.

As our advantages towards practising and promoting piety and virtue were greater than those of other men; so will our excuse be less, if we neglect to make use of them. We cannot plead in abatement of our guilt, that we were ignorant of our duty, under the prepossession of ill habits, and the bias of a wrong education. Atterbury's Sermons.

ABATEMENT, in law.

The act of the abator; as, the abatement of the heir into the land before he hath agreed with the lord. The affection or passion of the thing abated; as, abatement of the writ. Cowel.

ABATEMENT, [with heralds] is an accidental mark, which being added to a coat of arms, the dignity of it is abased, by reason of some stain or dishonourable quality of the bearer. Dict.

ABA'TER. n. f. The agent or cause by which an abatement is procured.

Abaters of acrimony or sharpness: expressed oils of ripe vegetables, and all preparations of such; as of almonds, pistachoes, and other nuts. Arbutnot on diet.

ABA'TOR. n. f. [a law-term.] One who intrudes into houses or land, that is void by the death of the former possessor, as yet not entered upon or taken up by his heir. Dict.

A'BATUDE. n. f. [old records.] Any thing diminished. Bailey.

ABATURE. n. f. [a hunting term.] Those sprigs of grass which are thrown down by a stag in his passing by. Dict.

ABB. n. f. The yarn on a weaver's warp; a term among clothiers. Chambers.

ABBA. n. f. [Heb. אבא] A Syriac word, which signifies father.

A'B'ACY. n. f. [Lat. abbatia.] The rights or privileges of an abbot. See ABBEY.

According to Felinus, an abbacy is the dignity itself, since an abbot is a term or word of dignity, and not of office; and, therefore, even a secular person, who has the care of souls, is sometimes, in the canon law, also styled an abbot. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ABBESS. n. f. [Lat. abbatissa, from whence the Saxon abbiſſe, then probably abbateſs, and by contraction abbesse in Fr. and abbess, Eng.] The superiour or governess of a nunnery or monastery of women.

They fled

Into this abbey, whither we pursued them;

And here the abbess shuts the gate on us,

And will not suffer us to fetch him out.

Shakeſp. Comedy of Errors.

I have a sister, abbess in Terceras,

Who lost her lover on her bridal-day.

Dryd. D. Sebast.

Constantia's heart was so elevated with the discourse of Father Francis, that the very next day she entered upon her vow. As soon as the solemnities of her reception were over, we retired, as it is usual, with the abbess into her own apartment.

Addison. Spect. N° 164.

ABBEY, or ABBY. n. f. [Lat. abbatia; from whence probably first ABBACY; which see.] A monastery of religious persons, whether men or women; distinguished from religious houses of other denominations by larger privileges. See ABBOT.

With easy roads he came to Leicester;

Lodg'd in the abbey, where the reverend abbot,

With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him.

Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

A'B'BEY-LUBBER. n. f. [See LUBBER.] A slothful loiterer in a religious house, under pretence of retirement and austerity.

This is no Father Dominic, no huge overgrown abbey-lubber; this is but a diminutive sucking friar. Dryd. Sp. Fr.

A'B'BOT. n. f. [in the lower Latin abbas, from אבא father, which sense was implied; so that the abbots were called pateres, and abbesses matres monasterii. Thus Fortunatus to the abbot Paternus: Nominis officium jure, Paternae, geris.] The chief of a convent, or fellowship of canons. Of these, some in England were mitred, some not: those that were mitred, were exempted from the jurisdiction of the diocesan, having in themselves episcopal authority within their precincts, and being also lords of parliament. The other sort were subject to the diocesan in all spiritual government. Cowel.

See ABBEY.

ABBY. See ABBEY.

ABBOTSHIP. n. f. The state or privilege of an abbot. Dict.

To ABBREVIATE. v. a. [Lat. abbreviare.]

1. To shorten by contraction of parts without loss of the main substance.

It is one thing to abbreviate by contracting, another by cutting off. Bacon. Essay 26.

The only invention of late years, which hath any way contributed towards politeness in discourse, is that of abbreviating or reducing words of many syllables into one, by lopping off the rest. Swift's Introduction to genteel conversation.

A B D

2. To shorten, to cut short.

Against this opinion we may very well set the length of their days before the flood; which were abbreviated after, and in half this space contracted into hundreds and threescores.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 6.

ABBREVIATION. n. f.

1. The act of abbreviating.

2. The means used to abbreviate, as characters signifying whole words.

Such is the propriety and energy of expression in them all, that they never can be changed, but to disadvantage, except in the circumstance of using abbreviations.

Swift's Introduction to genteel conversation.

ABBREVIATOR. n. f. [abbreviateur, Fr.] One who abbreviates, or abridges.

ABBREVIATURE. n. f. [abbreviatura, Lat.]

1. A mark used for the sake of shortening.

2. A compendium or abridgement.

He is a good man, who grieves rather for him that injures him, than for his own suffering; who prays for him, that wrongs him, forgiving all his faults; who sooner shews mercy than anger; who offers violence to his appetite, in all things endeavouring to subdue the flesh to the spirit. This is an excellent abbreviature of the whole duty of a christian.

Taylor's Guide to devotion.

ABBREUVOIR. [in French, a watering-place. This word is derived by Menage, not much acquainted with the Teutonic dialects, from adbibere for adbibere; but more probably it comes from the same root with brew. See BREW.] It signifies, among masons, the joint or juncture of two stones, or the interstice between two stones to be filled up with mortar. Dict.

A, B, C.

1. Is taken for the alphabet; as, he has not learned his a, b, c.

2. Sometimes for the little book by which the elements of reading are taught.

To A'B'DICATE. v. a. [Lat. abdico.] To give up right; to resign; to lay down an office.

Old Saturn, here, with upcast eyes,

Beheld his abdicated skies.

Addison.

ABDICATION. n. f. [abdication, Lat.] The act of abdicating; resignation; quitting an office by one's own proper act before the usual or stated expiration.

Neither doth it appear how a prince's abdication can make any other sort of vacancy in the throne, than would be caused by his death; since he cannot abdicate for his children, otherwise than by his own consent in form to a bill from the two houses. Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England man.

A'B'DICATIVE. adj. That which causes or implies an abdication. Dict.

A'B'DITIVE. adj. [from abdo, to hide.] That which has the power or quality of hiding. Dict.

ABDOMEN. n. f. [Lat. from abdo, to hide.] A cavity commonly called the lower venter or belly: It contains the stomach, guts, liver, spleen, bladder, and is within lined with a membrane called the peritonæum. The lower part is called the hypogastrium; the foremost part is divided into the epigastrium, the right and left hypochondria, and the navel; 'tis bounded above by the cartilago ensiformis and the diaphragm, sideways by the short or lower ribs, and behind by the vertebræ of the loins, the bones of the coxendix, that of the pubes and os sacrum. It is covered with several muscles, from whose alternate relaxations and contractions in respiration, digestion is forwarded, and the due motion of all the parts therein contained promoted, both for secretion and expulsion. Quincy.

ABDO'MINAL. } adj. relating to the abdomen.

ABDO'MINOUS. }

To ABDU'CE. v. a. [Lat. abduco.] To draw to a different part; to withdraw one part from another. A word chiefly used in physic or science.

And if we abduce the eye unto either corner, the object will not duplicate; for, in that position, the axis of the cones remain in the same plain, as is demonstrated in the optics delivered by Galen. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 20.

ABDU'CENT. adj. Muscles abducent, are those which serve to open or pull back divers parts of the body; their opposites being called adducent. Dict.

ABDU'CTION. n. f. [abductio, Lat.]

1. The act of drawing apart, or withdrawing one part from another.

2. A particular form of argument.

ABDU'CTOR. n. f. [abductor, Lat.] The name given by anatomists to the muscles, which serve to draw back the several members.

In pursuance of this theory, he supposed the constrictors of the eyelids must be strengthened in the supercilious; the abductors in drunkards, and contemplative men, who have the same steady and grave motion of the eye.

Arbutnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus.

ABECEDA'RIAN. n. f. [from the names of a, b, c, the three first letters of the alphabet.] He that teaches or learns the alphabet, or first rudiments of literature.

This word is used by Wood in his Athenæ Oxonienses, where mentioning Farnaby the critic, he relates, that, in some part of his life, he was reduced to follow the trade of an abecedarian by his misfortunes.

A'BECEDARY. adj. [See ABECEDARIAN.]

1. Belonging to the alphabet.

2. Inscribed with the alphabet.

This is pretended from the sympathy of two needles touched with the loadstone, and placed in the center of two abecedary circles, or rings of letters, described round about them, one friend keeping one, and another the other, and agreeing upon an hour wherein they will communicate.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 2.

ABE'D. adv. [from a, for at. See (A,) and BED.] In bed.

It was a shame for them to mar their complexions, yea and conditions too, with long lying abed: and that, when she was of their age, she trowed, she would have made a handkerchief by that time o' day.

Sidney, b. ii.

She has not been abed, but in her chapel

All night devoutly watch'd, and brib'd the saints

With prayers for her deliverance.

Dryd. Span. Friar.

ABERR'ANCE. n. f. [from aberro, Lat. to wander from the right way.] A deviation from the right way; an error; a mistake; a false opinion.

Could a man be compos'd to such an advantage of constitution, that it should not at all adulterate the images of his mind; yet this second nature would alter the crafts of his understanding, and render it as obnoxious to aberrances, as now.

Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica, c. 16.

ABERRANCY. The same with ABERRANCE.

They do not only swarm with errors, but vices depending thereon. Thus they commonly affect no man any farther than he deserts his reason, or complies with their aberrancies.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 3.

ABERR'ANT. adj. [from aberrans, Lat.] Deviating, wandering from the right or known way.

Dict.

ABERRATION. n. f. [from aberratio, Lat.] The act of deviating from the common track.

And if it be a mistake, it is only so; there is no heresy in such an harmless aberration; at the worst, with the ingenuous, the probability of it will render it a lapse of easy pardon.

Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica, c. 11.

ABERR'ING. part. [from the verb aberr, of aberro, Lat.] Wandering, going astray.

Though there were a fatality in this year, yet divers were, and others might be, out in their account, aberring several ways from the true and just compute, and calling that one year, which perhaps might be another.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 12.

Of the verb aberr I have found no example.

TO ABERU'NCATE. v. a. [from averunco, Lat.] To pull up by the roots; to extirpate utterly.

Dict.

TO ABE'T. v. a. [from betan, Sax. signifying to enkindle or animate.] To push forward another, to support him in his designs by connivance, encouragement, or help. It is generally taken, at least by modern writers, in an ill sense; as may be seen in ABETTER.

To abet signifieth, in our common law, as much as to encourage or set on.

Cowel.

Then shall I soon, quoth he, return again,

Abet that virgin's cause disconsolate,

And shortly back return unto this place,

To walk this way in pilgrim's poor estate.

Fairy 2. b. i.

A widow who by solemn vows,

Contracted to me, for my spouse,

Combin'd with him to break her word,

And has abetted all. — — —

Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 3.

Men lay so great weight upon their being of right opinions, and their eagerness of abetting them, that they account that the unum necessarium.

Decay of Piety.

In the reign of king Charles the first, though that prince was married to a daughter of France, and was personally beloved and esteemed in the French court; it is well known that they abetted both parties in the civil war, and always furnished supplies to the weaker side, lest there should be an end put to these fatal divisions.

Addison. Freeholder, N° 28.

ABE'TMENT. n. f. The act of abetting.

Dict.

ABE'TTER, or ABE'TTOR. n. f. He that abets; the supporter or encourager of another.

You shall be still plain Torrismond with me,

Th' abetter, partner, (if you like the name)

The husband of a tyrant, but no king;

Till you deserve that title by your justice.

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

Whilst this sin of calumny has two such potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth: as long as men are malicious and designing, they will be traducing. Govern. of the Tongue.

These and the like considerations, though they may have no influence on the headstrong unruly multitude, ought to sink into the minds of those who are their abettors, and who, if they escape the punishment here due to them, must very well know, that these several mischiefs will be one day laid to their charge.

A B I

Addison. Freeholder, N° 50.

ABEY'ANCE. n. f. [from the French aboyer, allatrare, to bark at.] This word, in Littleton, cap. Discontinuance, is thus used. The right of fee-simple lieth in abeyance, when it is all only in the remembrance, intendment, and consideration of the law. The frank tenement of the glebe of the parsonage, is in no man during the time that the parsonage is void, but is in abeyance.

Cowel.

ABGREGA'TION. n. f. [abgregatio, Lat.] A separation from the flock.

Dict.

TO ABHO'R. v. a. [abhorreo, Lat.] To hate with acrimony; to detest to extremity; to loath.

Whilst I was big in clamour, came there a man,

Who having seen me in my worser state,

Shunn'd my abhorr'd society.

Shakespeare's K. Lear.

To whom thus Michael: Justly thou abhorr'st

That son, who on the quiet state of men

Such trouble brought, affecting to subdue

Rational liberty.

Milt. Parad. Lost, b. xii. l. 79.

The self-same thing they will abhor

One way, and long another for.

Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

A church of England man abhors the humour of the age, in delighting to fling scandals upon the clergy in general; which, besides the disgrace to the reformation, and to religion itself, cast an ignominy upon the kingdom that it doth not deserve.

Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England man.

ABHO'RRENCE. n. f. [from abhor.]

1. The act of abhorring, detestation.

It draws upon him the just and universal hatred and abhorrence of all men here; and, finally, subjects him to the wrath of God, and eternal damnation hereafter.

South's Serm.

2. The disposition to abhor, hatred.

He knew well that even a just and necessary offence does, by giving men acquaintance with war, take off somewhat from the abhorrence of it, and insensibly dispose them to farther hostilities.

Decay of Piety.

ABHO'RRENCY. n. f. The same with ABHORRENCE.

The first tendency to any injustice that appears, must be suppressed with a show of wonder and abhorrency in the parents and governours.

Locke on Education, § 110.

ABHO'RRENT. adj. [from abhor]

1. Struck with abhorrence.

— — — For if the worlds

In worlds inclos'd would on his senses burst,

He would abhorrent turn.

2. Contrary to, foreign, inconsistent with. It is used with the particles from or to, but more properly with from.

This I conceive to be an hypothesis, well worthy a rational belief; and yet is it so abhorrent from the vulgar, that they would as soon believe Anaxagoras, that snow is black, as him that should affirm it is not white; and if any should in effect assert, that the fire is not formally hot, it would be thought that the heat of his brain had fitted him for Anticyra, and that his head were so to madness.

Glanville's Sceptis Scient. c. 12.

Why then these foreign thoughts of state employments, Abhorrent to your function and your breeding?

Poor droning truants of unpractis'd cells,

Bred in the fellowship of beardless boys,

What wonder is it if you know not men?

Dryden's Don Sebastian.

ABHO'RRER. n. f. [from abhor.] The person that abhors; a hater, detester.

The representatives of the lower clergy were railed at, for disputing the power of the bishops, by the known abhorers of episcopacy, and abused for doing nothing in the convocations, by these very men who wanted to bind up their hands.

Swift. Examiner, N° 21.

ABHO'RRING. The object of abhorrence. This seems not to be the proper use of the participial noun.

And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched, and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

Isaiah, lxvi. 44.

TO ABIDE. v. n. I abode or abid. [from bidan, or aubidian, Sax.]

1. To dwell in a place, not remove.

Thy servant became surety for the lad unto my father, saying, if I bring him not unto thee, then I shall bear the blame to my father for ever. Now therefore I pray thee, let thy servant abide instead of the lad, a bondman to my lord; and let the lad go up with his brethren.

Gen. xlv. 32, 33.

2. To dwell.

The Marquis Dorset, as I hear, is fled

To Richmond, in the parts where he abides.

Shakesp. Richard III.

3. To remain, not cease or fail.

They that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever.

Psalms cxxv. 1.

4. To

4. To continue in the same state.

The fear of the Lord tendeth to life; and he that hath it shall abide satisfied. Prov. xix. 23.

Those who apply themselves to learning, are forced to acknowledge one God, incorruptible and unbegotten; who is the only true being, and abides for ever above the highest heavens, from whence he beholds all the things that are done in heaven and earth. Stillings Defence of Disc. on Rom. Idolat.

There can be no study without time; and the mind must abide and dwell upon things, or be always a stranger to the inside of them. South.

5. To wait for, expect, attend, wait upon, await; used of things prepared for persons, as well as of persons expecting things.

Home is he brought, and laid in sumptuous bed,

Where many skilful leeches him abide,

To salve his hurts. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 5. stanza. 17.

While lions war, and battle for their dens,

Poor harmless lambs abide their enmity. Shakesp. Hen. VI. p. 3.

Bonds and afflictions abide me. Acts xx. 23.

6. To bear or support the consequences of a thing.

Ah me! they little know

How dearly I abide that boast so vain.

Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv. l. 87.

7. To bear or support, without being conquered or destroyed.

But the Lord he is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlasting king: At his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation. Jer. x. 10.

It must be allowed a fair presumption in favour of the truth of my doctrines, that they have abid a very rigorous test now for above thirty years, stand yet firm; and the longer and more strictly they are look'd into, the more they are confirmed to this very day. Woodward, Letter i.

8. To bear without aversion; in which sense it is commonly used with a negative.

Thou can'st not abide Tiridates; this is but love of thyself. Sidney, b. ii.

Thy vile race,

Though thou didst learn, had that in't, which good natures Could not abide to be with; therefore wast thou Deservedly confin'd into this rock. Shakesp. Tempest.

9. To bear or suffer.

That chief (rejoin'd the God) his race derives

From Ithaca, and wond'rous woes survives;

Laertes' son: girt with circumfluous tides;

He still calamitous constraint abides. Pope's Odys. b. iv. l. 750.

10. It is used with the particle with before a person, and at or in before a place.

It is better that I give her to thee, than that I should give her to another man: Abide with me. Gen. xxix. 19.

For thy servant vowed a vow, while I abode at Geshur in Syria, saying, if the Lord shall bring me again indeed to Jerusalem, then I will serve the Lord. 2 Sam. xv. 8.

11. It is used with by before a thing; as, to abide by his testimony; to abide by his own skill; that is, to rely upon them; to abide by an opinion; to maintain it; to abide by a man, is also, to defend or support him. But these forms are something low.

Of the participle abid, I have found only the example in Woodward.

ABI'DER. n. f. [from abide.] The person that abides or dwells in a place; perhaps that lives or endures. A word little in use.

ABI'DING. n. f. [from abide.] Continuance.

We are strangers before thee and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on the earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding. 1 Chron. xxix. 15.

The air in that region is so violently removed, and carried about with such swiftness, as nothing in that place can consist or have abiding. Rawleigh's History of the World.

A'BJECT. adj. [abjectus, Lat. thrown away as of no value.]

1. Mean, or worthless, spoken of persons.

That rebellion

Came like itself in base and abject routs,

Led on by bloody youth goaded with rage,

And countenanc'd by boys and beggary. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

Honest men, who tell their sovereigns what they expect from them, and what obedience they shall be always ready to pay them, are not upon an equal foot with such base and abject flatterers; and are therefore always in danger of being the last in the royal favour. Addison's Whig Examiner.

2. Contemptible, or of no value; used of things.

I was at first, as other beasts that graze

The troden herb, of abject thoughts and low.

Milt. Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 571.

3. Without hope or regard; used of condition.

The rarer thy example stands,

By how much from the top of wond'rous glory,

Strongest of mortal men,

To lowest pitch of abject fortune thou art fall'n.

Milton's Samson Agonistes.

We see man and woman in the highest innocence and perfection, and in the most abject state of guilt and infirmity.

Addison. Spectator, N° 273.

VOL. I.

4. Destitute, mean and despicable; used of actions.

To what base ends, and by what abject ways,
Are mortals urg'd thro' sacred lust of praise?

Pope's Essay on Criticism.

The rapine is so abject and profane,

They not from trifles, nor from gods refrain.

Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 8.

A'BJECT. n. f. A man without hope; a man whose miseries are irretrievable.

But in mine adversity they rejoiced, and gathered themselves together: yea, the abjects gathered themselves together against me, and I knew it not; they did tear me, and ceased not. Psalms xxxv. 15.

TO ABJE'CT. v. a. [abjicio, Lat.] To throw away. A word rarely used.

ABJE'CTEDNESS. n. f. [from abject.] The state of an abject.

He would love at no less rate than death; and, from the supereminent height of glory, stooped and abased himself to the sufferance of the extremest of indignities, and sunk himself to the bottom of abjectedness, to exalt our condition to the contrary extreme. Boyle's Works.

ABJECTION. n. f. [from abject.] Meanness of mind; want of spirit; servility; baseness.

That this should be termed baseness, abjection of mind, or servility, is it credible? Hooker, b. v. § 47.

Now the just medium of this case lies betwixt the pride and the abjection, the two extremes. L'Estrange.

A'BJECTLY. adv. [from abject.] In an abject manner, meanly, basely, servilely, contemptibly.

A'BJECTNESS. n. f. [from abject.] The same with abjection; servility, meanness.

Servility and abjectness of humour is implicitly involved in the charge of lying; the condescending to that, being a mark of a disingenuous spirit. Government of the Tongue, § 8.

By humility I mean not the abjectness of a base mind: but a prudent care not to over-value ourselves upon any account.

Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. ii. c. 7.

ABI'LITY. n. f. [Habileté, Fr.]

1. The power to do any thing, whether depending upon skill, or riches, or strength, or any other quality.

Of singing thou hast got the reputation,

Good Thyrsis, mine I yield to thy ability;

My heart doth seek another estimation.

Sidney, b. i.

If aught in my ability may serve

To heighten what thou suffer'st, and appease

Thy mind with what amends is in my pow'r.

They gave after their ability unto the treasure of the work.

Ezra ii. 69.

If any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ. 1 Pet. iv. 11.

2. Capacity.

Children in whom there was no blemish, but well-favoured, and skilful in all wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science, and such as had ability in them to stand in the king's palace. Dan. i. 4.

3. When it has the plural number, abilities, it frequently signifies the faculties or powers of the mind, and sometimes the force of understanding given by nature, as distinguished from acquired qualifications.

Wherever we find our abilities too weak for the performance, he assures us of the assistance of his holy spirit. Rogers's Sermons.

Whether it may be thought necessary, that in certain tracts of country, like what we call parishes, there should be one man, at least, of abilities to read and write?

Swift's Arguments against abolishing Christianity.

ABINTE'STATE. adj. [of ab, from, and intestatus, Lat.] A term of law, implying him that inherits from a man, who, though he had the power to make a will, yet did not make it.

TO A'BJUGATE. v. a. [abjugo, Lat.] To unyoke, to uncouple. Dict.

TO ABJU'RE. v. a. [abjuro, Lat.]

1. To cast off upon oath, to swear not to do something.

Either to die the death, or to abjure

For ever the society of man. Shakesp. Midsum. Night's Dream.

No man, therefore, that hath not abjured his reason, and sworn allegiance to a preconceived fantastical hypothesis, can undertake the defence of such a supposition.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. To retract, or recant, or abnegate; a position upon oath.

ABJURA'TION. n. f. [from abjure.] The act of abjuring. The oath taken for that end.

Until Henry VIII. his time, if a man, having committed felony, could go into a church or church-yard, before he were apprehended, he might not be taken from thence to the usual trial of law, but confessing his fault to the justices, or to the coroner, gave his oath to forsake the realm for ever, which was called abjuration.

There are some abjurations still in force among us here in England; as, by the statute of the 25th of king Charles II. all persons that are admitted into any office, civil or military,

must must take the test; which is an abjuration of some doctrines of the church of Rome.

There is likewise another oath of abjuration, which laymen and clergymen are both obliged to take; and that is, to abjure the Pretender. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

To ABLA'CTATE. v. a. [ablactō, Lat.] To wean from the breast.

ABLA'CTA'TION. n. f. One of the methods of grafting; and, according to the signification of the word, as it were a weaning of a cyon by degrees from its mother stock, not cutting it off wholly from the stock, till it is firmly united to that on which it is grafted.

ABLAQUEA'TION. [ablaqueatio, Lat.] The act or practice of opening the ground about the roots of trees, to let the air and water operate upon them.

Trench the ground, and make it ready for the spring: Prepare also soil, and use it where you have occasion: Dig borders. Uncover as yet roots of trees, where ablaqueation is requisite. Evelyn's Kalendar.

The tenure in chief ought to be kept alive and nourished; the which, as it is the very root that doth maintain this silver stem, that by many rich and fruitful branches spreadeth itself into the chancery, exchequer, and court of wards: so if it be suffered to starve, by want of ablaqueation, and other good husbandry, not only this yearly fruit will much decrease from time to time, but also the whole body and boughs of that precious tree itself, will fall into danger of decay and dying.

Bacon's Office of Alienations.

ABLA'TION. n. f. [ablatio, Lat.] The act of taking away.

A'BLATIVE. n. a. [ablativus, Lat.]

1. That which takes away.
2. The sixth case of the Latin nouns; the case which, among other significations, includes the person from whom something is taken away. A term of grammar.

A'BLE. adj. [habile, Fr. habilis, Lat. Skilful, ready.]

1. Having strong faculties, or great strength or knowledge, riches, or any other power of mind, body, or fortune.

He was not afraid of an able man, as Lewis the Eleventh was. But, contrariwise, he was served by the ablest men that were to be found; without which his affairs could not have prospered as they did. Bacon's Henry VII.

Such other gambol faculties he hath, that shew a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admits him: for the prince himself is such another: the weight of an hair will turn the scales. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

2. Having power sufficient; enabled.

All mankind acknowledge themselves able and sufficient to do many things, which actually they never do. South's Sermon.

Every man shall give as he is able, according to the blessing of the Lord thy God, which he hath given thee. Deut. xvi. 17.

3. Before a verb, with the participle to, it signifies generally having the power; before a noun, with for, it means qualified.

Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous; but who is able to stand before envy? Prov. xxvii. 4.

There have been some inventions also, which have been able for the utterance of articulate sounds, as the speaking of certain words. Wilkins's Mathematical Magic.

To A'BLE. v. a. To make able; to enable, which is the word commonly used. See ENABLE.

Plate him with gold,

And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks:

Arm it with rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.

None does offend, none, I say none; I'll able 'em;

Take that of me, my friend, who have the pow'r

To seal th' accuser's lips. Shakespeare's King Lear.

ABLE-BODIED. adj. Strong of body.

It lies in the power of every fine woman, to secure at least half a dozen able-bodied men to his majesty's service.

Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup> 4.

To A'BLEGATE. v. a. [ablego, Lat.] To send abroad upon some employment; also to send a person out of the way that one is weary of. Dict.

ABLEGA'TION. n. f. [from ablegate.] A sending abroad, or out of the way. Dict.

A'BLENESS. n. f. [from able.] Ability of body, vigour, force.

That nation doth so excel, both for comeliness and ableness, that from neighbour countries they ordinarily come, some to strive, some to learn, some to behold. Sidney, b. ii.

A'BLEPSY. n. f. [Ἀβλεψία, Gr.] Want of sight, natural blindness; also unadvisedness. Dict.

ABLIGURIT'ION. n. f. [abliguritis, Lat.] A prodigal spending on meat and drink. Dict.

To A'BLIGATE. v. a. [abligo, Lat.] To bind or tie up from. D.

To A'BLOCATE. v. a. [abloco, Lat.] To let out to hire.

Perhaps properly by him who has hired it from another.

Calvin's Lexicon Juridicum.

ABLOCA'TION. n. f. [from ablocare.] A letting out to hire.

To ABLU'DE. v. n. [abludo, Lat.] To be unlike. Dict.

A'BLUENT. adj. [abluens, Lat. from ablui, to wash away.]

1. That which washes clean.

2. That which has the power of cleansing. Dict.

ABLU'TION. n. f. [ablutio, Lat.]

1. The act of cleansing, or washing clean.

There is a natural analogy between the ablution of the body and the purification of the soul; between eating the holy bread and drinking the sacred chalice, and a participation of the body and blood of Christ. Taylor's Worthly Communicant.

Wash'd by the briny wave, the pious train

Are cleans'd, and cast th' ablutions in the main. Pope's Iliad.

2. The rinsing of chymical preparations in water, to dissolve and wash away any acrimonious particles.

3. The cup given, without consecration, to the laity in the popish churches.

To A'BNE'GATE. v. a. [from abnego, Lat.] To deny.

ABNEGA'TION. n. f. [abnegatio, Lat. denial, from abnego, to deny.] Denial, renunciation.

The abnegation or renouncing of all his own holds and interests, and trusts of all that man is most apt to depend upon, that he may the more expeditely follow Christ.

Hammond's Practical Catechism.

ABNODA'TION. n. f. [abnodatio, Lat.] The act of cutting away knots from trees; a term of gardening. Dict.

ABNO'RMOUS. adj. [abnormis, Lat. out of rule.] Irregular, misshapen. Dict.

ABO'ARD. adv. [a sea-term, but adopted into common language; derived immediately from the French à bord, as, aller à bord, envoyer à bord. Bord is itself a word of very doubtful original, and perhaps, in its different acceptations, deducible from different roots. Bord, in the ancient Saxon, signified a house; in which sense, to go aboard, is to take up residence in a ship.]

In a ship.

Which, when far off, Cymocles heard and saw,

He loudly call'd to such as were aboard,

The little bark unto the shore to draw,

And him to ferry over that deep ford. Fairy Q. b. ii. cant. 6.

I made this answer, that he might land them, if it pleased him, or otherwise keep them aboard. Sir W. Rawleigh's Essays.

When morning rose, I sent my mates to bring Supplies of water from a neighbour's spring;

Whilst I the motions of the winds explor'd;

Then summon'd in my crew, and went aboard.

Addison's Ovid's Metamorphoses, b. iii.

ABO'DE. n. f. [from abide.]

1. Habitation, dwelling, place of residence.

But I know thy abode and thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy rage against me. 2 Kings, xix. 27.

Others may use the ocean as their road,

Only the English make it their abode;

Whose ready sails with every wind can fly,

And make a covenant with th' inconstant sky. Waller.

2. Stay, continuance in a place.

Sweet friends, your patience for my long abode;

Not I, but my affairs, have made you wait.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Making a short abode in Sicily the second time, landing in Italy, and making the war, may be reasonably judged the business but of ten months. Dryden's Dedication to Æneid.

The woodcocks early visit, and abode

Of long continuance in our temperate clime,

Foretell a liberal harvest. Phillips.

3. To make abode; to dwell, to reside, to inhabit.

Deep in a cave the Sibyl makes abode;

Thence full of fate returns, and of the God. Dryden's Æneid, 6.

To ABO'DE. v. a. [See BODE.] To foretoken or foreshow; to be a prognostic, to be ominous. It is taken, with its derivatives, in the sense either of good or ill.

Every man,

After the hideous storm that follow'd, was

A thing inspir'd; and, not consulting, broke

Into a general prophecy, that this tempest,

Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded

The sudden breach of it. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

ABO'DEMENT. n. f. [from to abide.] A secret anticipation of something future; an impression upon the mind of some event to come; prognostication; omen.

I like not this.

For many men that stumble at the threshold,

Are well foretold that danger lurks within.—

—Tush! man, abodements must not now affright us.

Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.

My lord bishop, being somewhat troubled, took the freedom to ask him, Whether he had never any secret abodement in his mind? No, replied the duke; but I think some adventure may kill me as well as another man. Watson.

To ABO'LISH. v. a. [from aboles, Lat. to blot out.]

1. To annul.

For us to abolish what he hath established, were presumption most intolerable. Hooker, b. iii. § 10.

On the parliament's part it was proposed, that all the bishops, deans, and chapters, might be immediately taken away, and abolished. Clarendon, b. viii.

2. To put an end to; to destroy.

The long continued wars, between the English and the Scots, had then raised invincible jealousies and hate, which long continued peace hath since abolished. Sir John Hayward.

That

That shall Perocles well requite, I wot,
And, with thy blood, abolish so reproachful blot.
Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 4. stanza 45.
More destroy'd than they,
We should be quite abolish'd, and expire.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 92.
Or wilt thou thyself

Abolish thy creation, and unmake
For him, what for thy glory thou hast made? Idem, b. iii. l. 163.
Fermented spirits contract, harden, and consolidate many fibres together, abolishing many canals; especially where the fibres are the tenderest, as in the brain. Arbuth. on Aliments.
Nor could Vulcanian flame

The stench abolish, or the flavour tame. Dryd. Virg. Geo. iii.
ABO'LISHABLE. adj. [from abolish.] That which may be abolished.

ABO'LISHER. n. f. [from abolish.] He that abolishes.

ABO'LISHMENT. n. f. [from abolish.] The act of abolishing.

The plain and direct way against us herein, had been only to prove, that all such ceremonies, as they require to be abolished, are retained by us with the hurt of the church, or with less benefit than the abolishment of them would bring. Hooker, b. iv.

He should therefore think the abolishment of that order among us, would prove a mighty scandal and corruption to our faith, and manifestly dangerous to our monarchy.

Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of Englandman.

ABOLI'TION. n. f. [from abolish.] The act of abolishing. This is now more frequently used than abolishment.

From the total abolition of the popular power, may be dated the ruin of Rome: for had the reducing hereof to its ancient condition, proposed by Agrippa, been accepted instead of Mæ-cenas's model, that state might have continued unto this day.

Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. iii. c. 4.

An apoplexy is a sudden abolition of all the senses, external and internal, and of all voluntary motion, by the stoppage of the flux and reflux of the animal spirits through the nerves destined for those motions. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ABO'MINABLENESS. n. f. [from abominable.] The quality of being abominable; hatefulness, odiousness.

Till we have proved, in its proper place, the eternal and essential difference between virtue and vice, we must forbear to urge atheists with the corruption and abominableness of their principles. Bentley's Sermons.

ABO'MINABLE. adj. [abominabilis, Lat.]

1. Hateful, detestable.

Return'd

Successful beyond hope, to lead thee forth

Triumphant out of this infernal pit

Abominable, accurs'd, the house of woe. M. Par. Lost, b. x.

It is not to be questioned, but the queen and ministry might easily redress this abominable grievance, by enlarging the number of justices of the peace, by endeavouring to choose men of vir-tuous principles. Swift's Project for the advancement of Religion.

2. Unclean.

The soul that shall touch any unclean thing, as the uncleanness of man, or any unclean beast, or any abominable unclean thing, and eat of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings, which pertain unto the Lord, even that soul shall be cut off from his people. Leviticus, vii. 21.

3. In low and ludicrous language, it is a word of loose and indeterminate censure.

They say you are a melancholy fellow.—I am so; I do love it better than laughing.—Those that are in extremity of either, are abominable fellows, and betray themselves to every modern censure, worse than drunkards. Shakespeare's As you like it.

ABO'MINABLY. adv. [from abominable.] A word of low or familiar language, signifying excessively, extremely, exceedingly; in the ill sense.

Since I have been your wife, I have observed great abuses and disorders in your family; your servants are mutinous and quarrelsome, and cheat you most abominably.

Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

TO ABO'MINATE. v. a. [abominor, Lat.] To abhor, detest, hate utterly.

We are not guilty of your injuries,

No way consent to them; but abhor,

Abominate, and loath this cruelty. Southern's Oroonoko.

He professed both to abominate and despise all mystery, refinement, and intrigue, either in a prince or minister. He could not tell what I meant by secrets of state, where an enemy, or some rival nation, were not in the case. Swift's Gulliv. Travels.

ABOMINA'TION. n. f.

1. Hatred, detestation; as, to have in abomination.

To assist king Charles by English or Dutch forces, would render him odious to his new subjects, who have nothing in so great abomination, as those whom they hold for heretics.

Swift's Miscellanies.

2. The object of hatred.

That ye shall say, thy servant's trade hath been about cattle, from our youth even until now, both we and also our fathers:
that ye may dwell in the land of Goshen; for every shepherd is an abomination to the Egyptians. Genesis, xlv. 34.

3. Pollution, defilement.

And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie.
Rev. xxi. 27.

Each heart in Rome does love and pity you;

Only th' adulterous Antony, most large

In his abominations, turns you off,

And gives his potent regiment to a trull,

That noses it against us.

Shakefp. Antony and Cleopatra.

4. The cause of pollution.

And the high places that were before Jerusalem, which were on the right hand of the mount of corruption, which Solomon the king of Israel had builded for Ashtoreth the abomination of the Zidonians, and for Chemosh the abomination of the Moabites, and for Milcom the abomination of the children of Ammon, did the king defile. 2 Kings, xxiii. 13.

ABORIGINES. n. f. Lat. The earliest inhabitants of a country; those of whom no original is to be traced; as, the Welsh in Britain.

TO ABO'RT. v. n. [aborto, Lat.] To bring forth before the time; to miscarry. Dict.

ABO'RTION. n. f. [abortio, Lat.]

1. The act of bringing forth untimely.

2. The produce of an untimely birth.

His wife miscarried; but as the abortion proved only a female foetus, he comforted himself, that, had it arrived to perfection, it would not have answered his account.

Arbuthnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus.

Behold my arm thus blasted, dry and wither'd,

Shrunk like a foul abortion, and decay'd,

Like some untimely product of the seasons,

Robb'd of its properties of strength and office.

Rowe's Jane Shore.

ABO'RTIVE. n. f. That which is born before the due time. See
ABORTIVE, adj.

No common wind, no custom'd event,

But they will pluck away its nat'ral causes,

And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs,

Abortives, and presages, tongues of heav'n

Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John. Shakefp. K. John.

Take the fine skin of an abortive, and, with starch thin laid on, prepare your ground or tablet. Peacham on Drawing.

This is certain, that many are, by this means, preserved, and do signal service to their country, who, without such a provision, might have perished as abortives, or have come to an untimely end, and perhaps have brought, upon their guilty parents, the like destruction. Addison. Guardian, N° 106.

ABO'RTIVE. adj. [abortivus, Lat.]

1. That which is brought forth before the due time of birth.

If ever he have 'child, abortive be it,

Prodigious, and untimely brought to light. Shakefp. Rich. III.

All th' unaccomplish'd works of nature's hand,

Abortive, monstrous, or unkindly mix'd,

Diffolv'd on earth, fleet hither. Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 456.

2. Figuratively, that which fails for want of time.

This is the true cause, why so many politic conceptions, so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet, in the issue, miscarry and prove abortive.

South's Sermons.

False hopes

He cherishes, nor will his fruit expect

Th' autumnal season, but, in summer's pride

When other orchards smile, abortive fail.

Phillips.

How often hast thou waited at my cup,

Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,

When I have feasted with queen Margaret?

Remember it, and let it make thee crest-faln;

Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride. Shakefp. Hen. VI. p. ii.

3. That which brings forth nothing.

These pass'd, if any pass, the void profound

Of unessential night receives him next,

Wide-gaping! and with utter loss of being

Threatens him, plung'd in that abortive gulf.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 451.

ABO'RTIVELY. adv. [from abortive.] Born without the due time; immaturely, untimely.

ABO'RTIVENESS. n. f. [from abortive.] The state of abortion.

ABO'RTMENT. n. f. [from abort.] The thing brought forth out of time; an untimely birth.

I shall not then doubt the happy issue of my undertakings in this design, whereby concealed treasures, which now seem utterly lost to mankind, shall be confined to so universal a piety, and brought into use by the industry of converted penitents, whose wretched carcases the impartial laws have, or shall, dedicate, as untimely feasts, to the worms of the earth, in whose womb those deserted mineral riches must ever lie buried as lost abortments, unless those be made the active midwives to deliver them. Bacon's Physical Rem. ins.

ABOVE. prep. [from a, and buyan, Saxon; boven, Dutch.]

1. Higher in place.

So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,

The bubbling waters from the bottom rise;

Above

Above the brims they force their fiery way;
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day.

Dryden, Æneid vii. l. 643.

2. More in quantity or number.

Every one that passeth among them, that are numbered from twenty years old and above, shall give an offering unto the Lord.

Exodus, xxx. 14.

3. Higher in rank, power or excellence.

The Lord is high above all nations, and his glory above the heavens.

Psalms cxiii. 4.

The public power of all societies is above every soul contained in the same societies.

Hooker, b. i.

There is no riches above a sound body, and no joy above the joy of the heart.

Ecclesiasticus, xxx. 16.

To her

Thou didst resign thy manhood, and the place
Wherein God set thee above her, made of thee,
And for thee: whose perfection far excell'd

Her's, in all real dignity. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 147.

Latona fees her shine above the rest,

And feeds with secret joy her silent breast. Dryden's Æneid.

4. Superiour to; unattainable by.

It is an old and true distinction, that things may be above our reason, without being contrary to it. Of this kind are the power, the nature, and the universal presence of God, with innumerable other points.

Swift.

5. Beyond; more than.

We were pressed out of measure, above strength; infomuch that we despaired even of life.

2 Cor. i. 8.

In this, of having thoughts unconfused, and being able, nicely to distinguish one thing from another, where there is but the least difference, consists, in a great measure, the exactness of judgment and clearness of reason, which is to be observed in one man above another.

Locke.

The inhabitants of Tirol have many particular privileges above those of the other hereditary countries of the emperour.

Addison on Italy.

6. Too proud for; too high for. A phrase chiefly used in familiar expression.

Kings and princes, in the earlier ages of the world, laboured in arts and occupations, and were above nothing that tended to promote the conveniences of life.

ABOVE. adv.

1. Over-head.

To men standing below, men standing aloft seem much lessened; to those above, men standing below, seem not so much lessened.

Bacon.

When he established the clouds above; when he strengthened the fountains of the deep; when he gave to the sea his decree, that the waters should not pass his commandment: when he appointed the foundations of the earth: then I was by him, as one brought up with him: and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him.

Proverbs, viii. 28.

2. In the regions of heaven.

Your praise the birds shall chant in every grove,

And winds shall waft it to the powers above. Pope's Pastorals.

3. Before. [See ABOVE-CITED.]

I said above, that these two machines of the balance, and the dira, were only ornamental, and that the success of the duel had been the same without them. Dryden. Dedicat. Æneid.

FROM ABOVE.

1. From an higher place.

The Trojans from above their foes beheld;

And with arm'd legions all the rampires fill'd. Dryden. Æneid.

2. From heaven.

Every good gift, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.

James, i. 17.

ABOVE ALL. In the first place; chiefly.

I had also studied Virgil's design, his disposition of it, his manners, his judicious management of the figures, the sober retrenchments of his sense, which always leaves somewhat to gratify our imagination, on which it may enlarge at pleasure; but above all, the elegance of his expression, and the harmony of his numbers.

Dryden's Dedication to the Æneid.

ABOVE-BOARD. In open sight; without artifice or trick. A figurative expression, borrowed from gamblers, who, when they put their hands under the table, are changing their cards. It is used only in familiar language.

It is the part also of an honest man to deal above-board, and without tricks.

L'Estrange.

Though there have not been wanting such heretofore, as have practised these unworthy arts (for as much as there have been villains in all places, and all ages) yet now-a-days they are owned above-board.

South's Sermons.

ABOVE-CITED. Cited before. A figurative expression, taken from the ancient manner of writing books on scrolls; as whatever is cited or mentioned before in the same page, must be above.

Nor would I mention this particular, did it not appear from the authority above-cited, that this was a fact confessed by heathens themselves.

Addison on the Christian Religion.

ABOVE-GROUND. An expression used to signify, that a man is alive; not in the grave.

ABOVE-MENTIONED. See ABOVE-CITED.

I do not remember, that Homer any-where falls into the faults above-mentioned, which were indeed the false refinements of latter ages.

Addison. Spectator, N° 279.

To ABO'UND. v. n. [abundo, Lat. abonder, French.]

1. To have in great plenty; used sometimes with the particle in, and sometimes the particle with.

The king-becoming graces,

I have no relish of them, but abound

In the division of each several crime,

Acting it many ways.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Corn, wine, and oil, are wanting to this ground,

In which our countries fruitfully abound. Dryden. Indian Emp.

A faithful man shall abound with blessings: but he that maketh haste to be rich, shall not be innocent. Prov. xxviii. 20.

Now that languages are made, and abound with words, standing for such combinations, an usual way of getting these complex ideas, is by the explication of those terms that stand for them.

Locke.

2. To be in great plenty.

And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold.

Matthew, xxiv. 12.

Words are like leaves, and where they most abound,

Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely found.

Pope's Essay on Criticism.

ABO'UT. prep. [abutan, or abuton, Sax. which seems to signify encircling on the outside.]

1. Round, surrounding, encircling.

Let not mercy and truth forsake thee. Bind them about thy neck; write them upon the table of thy heart. Proverbs, iii. 3.

At this she loudly shrieks,

'Tis he, 'tis he, she cries, and tears her cheeks,

Her hair, her vest; and, stooping to the sands,

About his neck she cast her trembling hands. Dryden. Fables.

2. Near to.

Speak unto the congregation, saying, get you up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram.

Exodus.

Thou dost nothing, Sergius,

Thou canst endeavour nothing, nay, not think;

But I both see and hear it; and am with thee,

By and before, about and in thee too. Benj. Johnson's Catiline.

3. Concerning, with regard to, relating to.

When Constantine had finished an house for the service of God at Jerusalem, the dedication he judged a matter not unworthy; about the solemn performance whereof, the greatest part of the bishops in christendom should meet together.

Hooker, b. v. § 12.

The painter is not to take so much pains about the drapery as about the face, where the principal resemblance lies.

Dryden. Pref. to Dufresnoy.

They are most frequently used as words equivalent, and do both of them indifferently signify either a speculative knowledge of things, or a practical skill about them, according to the exigency of the matter or thing spoken of. Tillot. Sermon i.

Theft is always a sin, although the particular species of it, and the denomination of particular acts, doth suppose positive laws about dominion and property.

Stillington's Defence of Discourses on Romish Idolatry.

They should always be heard, and fairly and kindly answered, when they ask after any thing they would know, and desire to be informed about. Curiosity should be as carefully cherished in children, as other appetites suppressed.

Locke on Education, § 108.

It hath been practised as a method of making men's court, when they are asked about the rate of lands, the abilities of tenants, the state of trade and manufacture, to answer, that, in their neighbourhood, all things are in a flourishing condition.

Swift's short View of Ireland.

4. Engaged in, employed upon.

Our blessed Lord was pleased to command the representation of his death and sacrifice on the cross, should be made by breaking of bread and effusion of wine; to signify to us the nature and sacredness of the liturgy we are about.

Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

Labour, for labour's sake, is against nature. The understanding, as well as all the other faculties, chooses always the shortest way to its end, would presently obtain the knowledge it is about, and then set upon some new enquiry. But this, whether laziness or haste, often misleads it.

Locke.

They ought, however, to be provided with secretaries, and assisted by our foreign ministers, to tell their story for them in plain English, and to let us know, in our mother-tongue, what it is our brave countrymen are about.

Addison. Spect. N° 309.

5. Appendant to the person; as, cloaths, &c.

If you have this about you,

As I will give you when we go, you may Boldly assault the necromancer's hall.

Milton's Comus.

It is not strange to me, that persons of the fairer sex should like, in all things about them, that handfomeness for which they find themselves most liked.

Boyle on Colours.

6. Relating

6. Relating to the person, as a servant.

Liking very well the young gentleman, such I took him to be, admitted this Deiphantus about me, who well shewed, there is no service like his that serves because he loves. Sidney, b. ii.

Good master, corporal, captain, for my old dame's sake, stand my friend: she hath no body to do any thing about her when I am gone, and she is old and cannot help herself. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

ABO'UT. adv.

1. Circularly.

The weyward sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine. Shakesp. Macbeth.

2. In circuit.

My honest lads, I'll tell you what I am about.—Two yards and more.—No quips now, Pistol: indeed I am in the waste two yards about; but I am about no waste, I am about thrift.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

A tun about was ev'ry pillar there,

A polish'd mirrour shone not half so clear. Dryd. Fables.

3. Nearly.

When the boats were come within about sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, and could go no farther; yet so as they might move to go about, but might not approach nearer. Bacon's New Atlantis.

4. Here and there; every way.

Up rose the gentle virgin from her place,
And looked all about, if she might spy
Her lovely knight to move his manly pace.

Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. ii. stanza. 33.

A wolf that was past labour, had the wit in his old age, yet to make the best of a bad game; he borrows a habit, and so about he goes, begging charity from door to door, under the disguise of a pilgrim. L'Estrange.

5. With to before a verb; as, about to fly; upon the point, within a small distance of.

These dying lovers, and their floating sons,
Suspend the fight, and silence all our guns:
Beauty and youth, about to perish, finds
Such noble pity in brave English minds. Waller.

6. The longest way, in opposition to the short straight way.

Gold hath these natures; greatness of weight; closeness of parts; fixation; plianthness, or softness; immunity from rust; colour, or tincture of yellow: Therefore the sure way (though most about) to make gold, is to know the causes of the several natures before rehearsed. Bacon's Natural Hist. N° 328.

Spies of the Volscians

Held me in chafe, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about; else had I, Sir,
Half an hour since brought my report. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

7. To bring about; to bring to the point or state desired; as, he has brought about his purposes.

Whether this will be brought about, by breaking his head, I very much question. Spectator.

8. To come about; to come to some certain state or point.

Wherefore it came to pass, when the time was come about, after Hannah had conceived, that she bare a son. 1 Sam. i. 20.
One evening it befel, that looking out,
The wind they long had wish'd was come about;
Well pleas'd they went to rest; and if the gale
'Till morn continu'd, both resolv'd to fail. Dryd. Fables.

9. To go about a thing; to prepare to do it.

Did not Moses give you the law, and yet none of you keepeth the law? Why go ye about to kill me? John vii. 19.
In common language, they say, to come about a man, to circumvent him.

Some of these phrases seem to derive their original from the French à bout; venir à bout d'une chose; venir à bout de quelqu'un.

A. Bp. for Archbishop; which see.

ABRACADA'BRA. A superstitious charm against agues.

To ABRA'DE. v. a. [Lat. abrado.] To rub off; to wear away from the other parts; to waste by degrees.

By this means there may be a continued supply of what is successively abraded from them by decurion of waters.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ABRAHAM'S BALM. The name of an herb.

ABRA'SION. [See ABRASE.]

1. The act of abrading; a rubbing off.

2. [In medicine.] The wearing away of the natural mucus, which covers the membranes, particularly those of the stomach and guts, by corrosive or sharp medicines, or humours. Quincy.

3. The matter worn off by the attrition of bodies.

ABRE'AST. adv. [See BREAST.] Side by side; in such a position that the breasts may bear against the same line.

My cousin Suffolk,

My soul shall thine keep company to heav'n:

Tarry, sweet soul, for mine, then fly abreast. Shak. Henry V.

For honour travels in a freight so narrow,

Where one but goes abreast. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

The riders rode abreast, and one his shield,

His lance of cornel-wood another held;

The third his bow, and, glorious to behold!

The costly quiver, all of burnish'd gold. Dryden's Fables.

ABRI'COT. See APRICOT.

To ABRIDGE. v. a. [abreger, Fr. abbrevio, Lat.]

1. To make shorter in words, keeping still the same substance.

All these sayings, being declared by Jason of Cyrene in five books, we will essay to abridge in one volume. 2 Macc. ii. 23.

2. To contract, to diminish, to cut short.

The determination of the will, upon enquiry, is following the direction of that guide; and he, that has a power to act or not to act, according as such determination directs, is free. Such determination abridges not that power wherein liberty consists. Locke.

3. To deprive of; in which sense it is followed by the particle from, or of, preceding the thing taken away.

I have disabled mine estate,

By shewing something a more swelling port,

Than my faint means would grant continuance;

Nor do I now make moan to be abridg'd

From such a noble rate. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

They were formerly, by the common law, discharged from pontage and murage; but this privilege has been abridged them since by several statutes. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ABRIDGED OF. part. Deprived of, debarred from, cut short.

AN ABRIDGER.

1. He that abridges; a shortener.

2. A writer of compendiums or abridgments.

ABRIDGMENT. n. f. [abregement, French.]

1. The contraction of a larger work into a small compass.

Surely this commandment containeth the law and the prophets; and, in this one word, is the abridgment of all volumes of scripture. Hooker, b. ii. § 5.

Myself have play'd

The int'rim, by remembering you 'tis past;

Then brook abridgment, and your eyes advance

After your thoughts, straight back again to France?

Shakespeare's Henry V.

Idolatry is certainly the first-born of folly, the great and leading paradox; nay, the very abridgment and sum total of all absurdities. South's Sermons.

2. A diminution in general.

All trying, by a love of littleness,

To make abridgments, and to draw to less,

Even that nothing, which at first we were. Donne.

3. Restraint, or abridgment of liberty.

The constant desire of happiness, and the constraint it puts upon us, no body, I think, accounts an abridgment of liberty, or at least an abridgment of liberty, to be complained of. Locke.

ABRO'ACH. adv. [See To BROACH.]

1. In a posture to run out; to yield the liquor contained; properly spoken of vessels.

The Templer spruce, while ev'ry spout's abroach,

Stays 'till 'tis fair, yet seems to call a coach. Swift's Miscel.

The jars of gen'rous wine, (Acestes' gift,

When his Trinacrian shores the navy left)

He set abroach, and for the feast prepar'd,

In equal portions with the ven'son shar'd.

Dryden's Virgil's Æneid, vol. ii.

2. In a figurative sense; in a state to be diffused or advanced; in a state of such beginning as promises a progress.

That man, that sits within a monarch's heart,

And ripens in the sunshine of his favour,

Would he abuse the count'nance of the king,

Alack! what mischiefs might be set abroach,

In shadow of such greatness? Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

ABRO'AD. adv. [compounded of a and broad. See BROAD.]

1. Without confinement; widely; at large.

Intermit no watch

Against a wakeful foe, while I abroad,

Thro' all the coasts of dark destruction seek Deliverance. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 463.

Again, the lonely fox roams far abroad,

On secret rapine bent, and midnight fraud;

Now haunts the cliff, now traverses the lawn,

And flies the hated neighbourhood of man. Prior.

2. Out of the house.

Welcome, Sir,

This cell's my court; here have I few attendants,

And subjects none abroad. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Lady ——— walked a whole hour abroad, without dying after it; at least in the time I staid; though she seemed to be fainting, and had convulsive motions several times in her head.

Pope's Letters.

3. In another country.

They thought it better to be somewhat hardly yoked at home, than for ever abroad, and discredited. Hooker, Pref.

Whosoever offers at verbal translation, shall have the misfortune of that young traveller, who lost his own language abroad, and brought home no other instead of it. Sir J. Denham.

What learn our youth abroad, but to refine
The homely vices of their native land? Dryd. Span. Friar.
He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees and hears abroad, to the state of things at home. Atterb. Scrm.

4. In all directions, this way and that.

Full in the midst of this infernal road,

An elm displays her dusky arms abroad. Dryd. Virg. Æn. vi.
5. Without, not within.

Bodies politic, being subject, as much as natural, to dissolution, by divers means, there are undoubtedly more states overthrown through diseases bred within themselves, than through violence from abroad. Hooker, Dedication.

To A'BROGATE. v. a. [abrogo, Lat.] To take away from a law its force; to repeal, to annul.

Such laws, as have been made upon special occasions, which occasions ceasing, laws of that kind do abrogate themselves.

Hooker, b. iv. § 14.

The negative precepts of men may cease by many instruments, by contrary customs, by public disrelish, by long omission: but the negative precepts of God never can cease, but when they are expressly abrogated by the same authority.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

ABROGA'TION. n. f. [abrogatio, Lat.] The act of abrogating; the repeal of a law.

The commissioners from the confederate Roman catholics, demanded the abrogation and repeal of all those laws, which were in force against the exercise of the Roman religion.

Clarendon, b. viii.

To ABRO'OK. v. a. [from To brook, with a superabundant, a word not in use.] To brook, to bear, to endure.

Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind abrook

The abject people gazing on thy face

With envious looks, still laughing at thy shame.

Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

ABRUPT. adj. [abruptus, Lat.] Broken off.

1. Broken, craggy.

Reffless, roaring, dreadful, down it comes

From the rude mountain, and the mossy wild,

Tumbling through rocks abrupt.

Thomson's Winter.

2. Divided, without any thing intervening.

Or spread his airy flight,

Upborn with indefatigable wings,

Over the vast abrupt, ere he arrive

The happy isle.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 409.

3. Sudden, without the customary or proper preparatives.

My lady craves

To know the cause of your abrupt departure.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The abrupt and unkind breaking off the two first parliaments, was wholly imputed to the duke of Buckingham. Clar.

Abrupt, with eagle-speed she cut the sky;

Instant invisible to mortal eye.

Then first he recogniz'd th' ethereal guest. Pope's Odyss. b. i.

4. Unconnected.

The abrupt stile, which hath many breaches, and doth not seem to end but fall.

Ben. Johnson's Discovery.

ABRUPTED. adj. [abruptus, Lat. a word little in use.] Broken off suddenly.

The effects of whose activity are not precipitously abrupted, but gradually proceed to their cessations.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. 10.

ABRUPTION. n. f. [abruptio, Lat.] Breaking off, violent and sudden separation.

Those which are inclosed in stone, marble, or such other solid matter, being difficultly separable from it, because of its adhesion to all sides of them, have commonly some of that matter still adhering to them, or at least marks of its abruption from them, on all their sides. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. 4.

ABRUPTLY. adv. [See ABRUPT.] Hastily, without the due forms of preparation.

The sweetness of virtue's disposition, jealous even over itself, suffered her not to enter abruptly into questions of Musidorus.

Sidney, b. ii.

Now missing from their joy so lately found,

So lately found, and so abruptly gone.

Par. Regain. b. ii.

They both of them punctually observed the time thus agreed upon, and that in whatever company or business they were engaged, they left it abruptly, as soon as the clock warned them to retire.

Addison. Spectator, N° 241.

ABRUPTNESS. n. f. [from abrupt.]

1. An abrupt manner, haste, suddenness, untimely vehemence.

2. The state of an abrupt thing; unconnectedness, roughness, cragginess.

The crystallized bodies found in the perpendicular intervals, are easily known from those that are lodged in the strata. The former have always their root, as the jewellers call it, which is only the abruptness, at the end of the body whereby it adhered to the stone, or sides of the intervals; which abruptness is caused by its being broke off from the said stone.

A'ESCESS. [abscessus, Lat.] A morbid cavity in the body; a tumour filled with matter; a term of chirurgery.

If the patient is not relieved, nor dies in eight days, the inflammation ends in a suppuration and an abscess in the lungs, and sometimes in some other part of the body. Arbuth. of Diet.

Lindanus conjectured it might be some hidden abscess in the mesentery, which, breaking some few days after, was discovered to be an apostem of the mesentery. Harvey on Consumptions.

To ABSCI'ND. v. a. To cut off, either in a natural or figurative sense.

ABSCI'SSA. [Lat.] Part of the diameter of a conic section, intercepted between the vertex and a semi-ordinate.

ABSCI'SSION. n. f. [abscissio, Lat.]

1. The act of cutting off.

Fabricius ab Aquapendente renders the abscission of them difficult enough, and not without danger. Wise's Surgery.

2. The state of being cut off.

By cessation of oracles, with Montacutius, we may understand this intercision, not abscission, or consummate desolation.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 12.

To ABSCOND. v. n. [abscond, Lat.] To hide one's self; to retire from the public view: generally used of persons in debt, or criminals eluding the law.

ABSCONDER. n. f. [from abscond.] The person that absconds.

A'BSENCE. n. f. [See ABSENT.]

1. The state of being absent, opposed to presence.

Sir, 'tis fit

You have strong party to defend yourself

By calmness, or by absence: all's in danger. Shakesp. Coriol.

His friends beheld, and pity'd him in vain,

For what advice can ease a lover's pain?

Absence, the best expedient they could find,

Might save the fortune, if not cure the mind. Dryd. Fab.

2. Want of appearance, in the legal sense.

Absence is of a fourfold kind or species. The first is a necessary absence, as in banished persons; this is entirely necessary. A second, necessary and voluntary; as, upon the account of the commonwealth, or in the service of the church. The third kind the civilians call a probable absence; as, that of students on the score of study. And the fourth, an absence entirely voluntary; as, on the account of trade, merchandise, and the like. Some add a fifth kind of absence, which is committed cum dolo & culpa, by a man's non-appearance on a citation; as, in a contumacious person, who, in hatred to his contumacy, is, by the law, in some respects, reputed as a person present.

Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

You have given no dissertation upon the absence of lovers, nor laid down any methods how they should support themselves under those separations.

Addison. Spectator, N° 241.

3. Inattention, heedlessness, neglect of the present object.

I continued my walk, reflecting on the little absences and distractions of mankind.

Addison. Spectator, N° 77.

4. It is used with the particle from.

His absence from his mother oft he'll mourn,

And, with his eyes, look wishes to return. Dryd. Juv. Sat. ii.

A'BSENT. adj. [absens, Lat.]

1. Not present; used with the particle from.

In spring the fields, in autumn hills I love;

At morn the plains, at noon the shady grove;

But Delia always: absent from her sight,

Nor plains at morn, nor groves at noon delight. Pope's Past.

Where there is advantage to be given,

Both more and less have given him the revolt;

And none serve with him but constrained things,

Whose hearts are absent too.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Whether they were absent or present, they were vexed alike.

Wisd. xi. 11.

2. Absent in mind, inattentive; regardless of the present object.

I distinguish a man that is absent, because he thinks of something else, from him that is absent, because he thinks of nothing.

Addison. Spectator, N° 77.

To ABSE'NT. v. a. To withdraw, to forbear to come into presence.

If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart,

Absent thee from felicity a while,

And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain,

To tell my tale.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

But if thou think'st trial unsought may find

Us both securer, than thus warn'd thou seem'st,

Go—for thy stay, not free, absents thee more.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 372.

Tho' I am forc'd, thus to absent myself

From all I love, I shall contrive some means,

Some friendly intervals, to visit thee.

Southern's Spartan Dame.

The Arengo, however, is still called together in cases of extraordinary importance; and if, after due summons, any member absents himself, he is to be fined to the value of about a penny English.

Addison's Remarks on Italy.

ABSENTA'NEOUS. adj. Relating to absence; absent. Dict.

ABSENTE'E. n. f. He that is absent from his station or employment, or country. A word used commonly with regard to Irishmen living out of their country.

A B S

Then was the first statute made against absentees, commanding all such as had land in Ireland, to return and reside there-upon.

Sir John Davies on Ireland.

A great part of estates in Ireland are owned by absentees, and such as draw over the profits raised out of Ireland, refunding nothing.

Child's Discourse on Trade.

ABSI'NTHIATED. part. [from absinthium, Lat. wormwood.]

Imbittered, impregnated with wormwood. Dict.

AB'SIS. See APSIS.

To ABSI'ST. v. n. [absisto, Lat.] To stand off, to leave off. Dict.

To ABSO'LVE. v. a. [absolve, Lat.]

1. To clear, to acquit of a crime in a judicial sense.

Your great goodness, out of holy pity,

Absolv'd him with an axe. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Our victors, blest in peace, forget their wars,

Enjoy past dangers, and absolve the stars. Tickell.

As he hopes, and gives out, by the influence of his wealth, to be here absolved; in condemning this man, you have an opportunity of belying that general scandal, of redeeming the credit lost by former judgments. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. To set free from an engagement or promise.

Compell'd by threats to take that bloody oath,

And the act ill, I am absolv'd by both. Waller's Maid's Trag.

This command, which must necessarily comprehend the persons of our natural fathers, must mean a duty we owe them, distinct from our obedience to the magistrate, and from which the most absolute power of princes cannot absolve us. Locke.

3. To pronounce a sin remitted, in the ecclesiastical sense.

But all is calm in this eternal sleep;

Here grief forgets to groan, and love to weep;

Ev'n superstition loses ev'ry fear;

For God, not man, absolves our frailties here.

Pope's Eloisa to Abelard.

4. To finish, to complete.

If that which is so supposed infinitely distant from what is now current, is distant from us by a finite interval, and not infinitely, then that one circulation which preceded it, and must necessarily be like ours, and consequently absolved in the space of twenty-four hours.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

What cause

Mov'd the creator, in his holy rest

Through all eternity, so late to build

In chaos; and the work begun, how soon

Absolv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii. l. 94.

ABSOLUTE. adj. [absolutus, Lat.]

1. Complete; applied as well to persons as things.

Because the things that proceed from him are perfect, without any manner of defect or maim; it cannot be, but that the words of his mouth are absolute, and lack nothing which they should have, for performance of that thing whereunto they tend. Hooker, b. ii. § 6.

2. Unconditional; as, an absolute promise.

Although it runs in forms absolute, yet it is indeed conditional, as depending upon the qualification of the person to whom it is pronounced. South's Sermons.

3. Not relative; as, absolute space.

I see still the distinctions of sovereign and inferior, of absolute and relative worship, will bear any man out in the worship of any creature with respect to God, as well at least as it doth in the worship of images. Stillingfl. Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

An absolute mode is that which belongs to its subject, without respect to any other beings whatsoever: but a relative mode is derived from the regard that one being has to others.

Watts's Logic.

In this sense we speak of the ablative case absolute in grammar.

4. Not limited; as, absolute power.

My crown is absolute, and holds of none;

I cannot in a base subjection live,

Nor suffer you to take, though I would give. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

5. Positive, certain, without any hesitation. In this sense it rarely occurs.

Long is it since I saw him,

But time hath nothing blurr'd those lines of favour,

Which then he wore; the snatches in his voice,

And burst of speaking were as his: I'm absolute,

'Twas very Cloten. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

What is his strength by land?—

—Great and increasing: but by sea

He is an absolute master. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

ABSOLUTELY. adv. [from absolute.]

1. Completely, without restriction.

All the contradictions which grow in those minds, that neither absolutely climb the rock of virtue, nor freely sink into the sea of vanity. Sidney.

What merit they can build upon having joined with a protestant army, under a king they acknowledged, to defend their own liberties and properties, is, to me, absolutely inconceivable; and, I believe, will equally be so for ever. Swift's Presb. Pla.

2. Without relation.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve either willingness to live, or forwardness to die.

Hooker, b. v.

A B S

These then being the perpetual causes of zeal; the greatest good, or the greatest evil; either absolutely so in themselves, or relatively so to us; it is therefore good to be zealously affected for the one against the other. Sprat's Sermons.

No sensible quality, as light, and colour, and heat, and sound, can be subsistent in the bodies themselves, absolutely considered, without a relation to our eyes and ears, and other organs of sense. These qualities are only the effects of our sensation, which arise from the different motions, upon our nerves, from objects without, according to their various modifications and positions. Bentley's Sermons.

3. Without limits or dependance.

The prince long time had courted fortune's love,

But, once possess'd, did absolutely reign:

Thus, with their Amazons, the heroes strove,

And conquer'd first those beauties they would gain.

Dryden's Annus Mirabilis.

4. Without condition.

And of that nature, for the most part, are things absolutely unto all mens salvation necessary, either to be held or denied, either to be done or avoided. Hooker's Preface.

5. Peremptorily, positively.

Being as I am, why didst not thou

Command me absolutely not to go,

Going into such danger, as thou saidst? Parad. Lost, b. ix.

ABSOLUTENESS. n. f. [from absolute.]

1. Compleatness.

2. Freedom from dependance, or limits.

The absoluteness and illimitedness of his commission was generally much spoken of. Clarendon, b. viii.

There is nothing that can raise a man to that generous absoluteness of condition, as neither to cringe, to fawn, or to depend meanly; but that which gives him that happiness within himself, for which men depend upon others. South's Serm.

3. Despoticism.

He kept a strait hand on his nobility, and chose rather to advance clergymen and lawyers, which were more obsequious to him, but had less interest in the people; which made for his absoluteness, but not for his safety. Bacon's Henry VII.

ABSOLU'TION. n. f. [absolutio, Lat.]

1. Acquittal.

Absolution, in the civil law, imports a full acquittal of a person by some final sentence of law; also, a temporary discharge of his farther attendance upon a mesne process, through a failure or defect in pleading; as it does likewise in the canon law, where, and among divines, it likewise signifies a relaxation of him from the obligation of some sentence pronounced either in a court of law, or else in foro pœnitentiali. Thus there is, in this kind of law, one kind of absolution, termed judicial, and another, styled a declaratory or extrajudicial absolution. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

2. The remission of sins, or penance, declared by ecclesiastical authority.

The absolution pronounced by a priest, whether papist or protestant, is not a certain infallible ground to give the person, so absolved, confidence towards God. South's Sermons.

ABSOLUTORY. adj. [absolutorius, Lat.] That which absolves.

Though an absolutory sentence should be pronounced in favour of the persons, upon the account of nearness of blood; yet, if adultery shall afterwards be truly proved, he may be again proceeded against as an adulterer. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ABSONANT. adj. [See ABSONOUS.] Contrary to reason, wide from the purpose.

ABSONOUS. adj. [absonus, Lat. ill-founding.] Absurd, contrary to reason.

To suppose an uniter of a middle constitution, that should partake of some of the qualities of both, is unwarranted by any of our faculties; yea, most absonous to our reason.

Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica, c. 4.

To ABSO'RBE. v. a. [absorbeo, Lat. preter, absorbed; part. pret. absorbed, or absorpt.]

1. To swallow up.

Some tokens shew

Of fearless friendship, and their sinking mates

Sustain; vain love, tho' laudable, absorpt

By a fierce eddy, they together found

The vast profundity.

Phillips.

Moses imputed the deluge to the disruption of the abyss; and St. Peter, to the particular constitution of that earth, which made it obnoxious to be absorpt in water. Burn. Theory.

2. To suck up. See ABSORBENT.

Supposing the forementioned consumption should prove so durable, as to absorb and extenuate the said sanguine parts to an extreme degree, it is evident, that the fundamental parts must necessarily come into danger. Harvey on Consumptions.

ABSO'RBE'NT. n. f. [absorbens, Lat.]

A medicine that, by the softness or porosity of its parts, either causes the asperities of pungent humours, or dries away superfluous moisture in the body. Quincy.

There is a third class of substances, commonly called absorbents; as, the various kinds of shells, coral, chalk, crabs eyes, &c. which likewise raise an effervescence, and are therefore called called alkalis, though not so properly, for they are not salts.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ABSORPT. part. [from absorb.] Swallowed up; used as well, in a figurative sense, of persons, as, in the primitive, of things.

What can you expect from a man, who has not talked these five days? who is withdrawing his thoughts, as far as he can, from all the present world, its customs and its manners, to be fully possessed and absorpt in the past.

Pope's Letters.

ABSORPTION. n. f. [from absorb.] The act of swallowing up.

It was below the dignity of those sacred penmen, or the spirit of God that directed them, to shew us the causes of this disruption, or of this absorption; this is left to the enquiries of men.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To ABSTAIN. v. n. [abstineo, Lat.] To forbear, to deny one's self any gratification; with the particle from.

If thou judge it hard and difficult,

Conversing, looking, loving, to abstain

From love's due rites, nuptial embraces sweet;

And, with desires, to languish without hope.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 993.

To be perpetually longing, and impatiently desirous of any thing, so that a man cannot abstain from it, is to lose a man's liberty, and to become a servant of meat and drink, or smoke.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

Even then the doubtful billows scarce abstain

From the toss'd vessel on the troubled main. Dryden's Virgil.

ABSTEMIOUS. adj. [abstemius, Lat.] Temperate, sober, abstinent, refraining from excess or pleasures. It is used of persons; as, an abstemious hermit: and of things; as, an abstemious diet. It is spoken likewise of things that cause temperance.

The instances of longevity are chiefly amongst the abstemious. Abstinence in extremity will prove a mortal disease; but the experiments of it are very rare. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Clytorean streams the love of wine expel,

(Such is the virtue of the abstemious well)

Whether the colder nymph that rules the flood,

Extinguishes, and balks the drunken god:

Or that Melampus (so have some assur'd)

When the mad Præitides with charms he cur'd,

And pow'rful herbs, both charms and simples cast

Into the sober spring, where still their virtues last. Dryd. Fab.

ABSTEMIOUSLY. adv. [from abstemious.] Temperately, soberly, without indulgence.

ABSTEMIOUSNESS. n. f. [See ABSTEMIOUS.] The quality of being abstemious.

ABSTENTION. n. f. [from abstineo, Lat.] The act of holding off, or restraining; restraint. Diët.

To ABSTERGE. v. a. [abstergo, Lat.] To cleanse by wiping; to wipe.

ABSTERGENT. adj. Cleansing; having a cleansing quality.

To ABSTERSE. [See ABSTERGE.] To cleanse, to purify; a word very little in use, and less analogical than absterge.

Nor will we affirm, that iron receiveth, in the stomach of the ostrich, no alteration; but we suspect this effect rather from corrosion than digestion; not any tendency to chilification by the natural heat, but rather some attrition from an acid and vitriolous humidity in the stomach, which may absterse and shave the scoriaceous parts thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

ABTERSION. n. f. [abstersio, Lat.] The act of cleansing. See ABSTERGE.]

The seventh cause is abstersion; which is plainly a scouring off, or incision of the more viscous humours, and making the humours more fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as is found in nitrous water, which scoureth linen cloth speedily from the foulness. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 42.

ABTERSIVE. adj. [from absterge.] That has the quality of absterging or cleansing.

It is good, after purging, to use apozemes and broths, not so much opening as those used before purging; but abstersive and mundifying clysters also are good to conclude with, to draw away the reliques of the humours. Bacon's Nat. History.

A tablet flood of that abstersive tree,

Where Æthiops' swarthy bird did build to nest. Sir J. Denh.

There, many a flow'r abstersive grew,

Thy fav'rite flow'rs of yellow hue. Swift's Miscellanies.

ABSTINENCE. n. f. [abstinentia, Lat.]

1. Forbearance of any thing; with the particle from.

Because the abstinence from a present pleasure, that offers itself, is a pain, nay, oftentimes a very great one: it is no wonder that that operates after the same manner pain does, and lessens, in our thoughts, what is future; and so forces us, as it were, blindfold into its embraces. Locke.

2. Fasting, or forbearance of necessary food. It is generally distinguished from temperance, as the greater degree from the less; sometimes as single performances from habits; as, a day of abstinence, and a life of temperance.

Say, can you fast? your stomachs are too young:

And abstinence ingenders maladies. Shakesp. Love's Lab. Lost.

Religious men, who hither must be sent

As awful guides of heavenly government;

To teach you penance, fasts, and abstinence,

To punish bodies for the souls offence. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

And the faces of them, which have used abstinence, shall shine above the stars; whereas our faces shall be blacker than darkness. 2 Esdras, vii. 55.

ABSTINENCY. n. f. The same with ABSTINENCE.

Were our rewards for the abstinencies, or riots, of this present life, under the prejudices of short or finite, the promises and threats of Christ would lose much of their virtue and energy. Hammond's Fundam.

ABSTINENT. adj. [abstinens, Lat.] That uses abstinence, in opposition to covetous, rapacious, or luxurious. It is used chiefly of persons.

ABSTORTED. adj. [abstortus, Lat.] Forced away, wrung from another by violence. Diët.

To ABSTRACT. v. a. [abstraho, Lat.]

1. To take one thing from another.

Could we abstract from these pernicious effects, and suppose this were innocent, it would be too light to be matter of praise. Decay of Piety.

2. To separate ideas.

Those, who cannot distinguish, compare and abstract, would hardly be able to understand and make use of language, or judge or reason to any tolerable degree. Locke.

3. To reduce to an epitome.

If we would fix in the memory the discourses we hear, or what we design to speak, let us abstract them into brief compends, and review them often. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

ABSTRACT. adj. [abstractus, Lat. See the verb To ABSTRACT.]

1. Separated from something else, generally used with relation to mental perceptions; as, abstract mathematics, abstract terms, in opposition to concrete.

Mathematics, in its latitude, is usually divided into pure and mixed. And though the pure do handle only abstract quantity in general, as geometry, arithmetic; yet that which is mixed, doth consider the quantity of some particular determinate subject. So astronomy handles the quantity of heavenly motions, music of sounds, and mechanics of weights and powers. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

Abstract terms signify the mode or quality of a being, without any regard to the subject in which it is; as, whiteness, roundness, length, breadth, wisdom, mortality, life, death. Watts's Logick.

2. With the particle from.

Another fruit from the considering things in themselves, abstract from our opinions and other mens notions and discourses on them, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method, which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.

ABSTRACT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A smaller quantity, containing the virtue or power of a greater.

You shall there find a man, who is the abstract

Of all faults all men follow. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

If you are false, these epithets are small;

You're then the things, and abstract of them all. Dryd. Aur.

2. An epitome made by taking out the principal parts.

When Mnemon came to the end of a chapter, he recollected the sentiments he had remarked; so that he could give a tolerable analysis and abstract of every treatise he had read, just after he had finished it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. The state of being abstracted.

The hearts of great princes, if they be considered, as it were in abstract, without the necessity of states, and circumstances of time, can take no full and proportional pleasure in the exercise of any narrow bounty. Wotton.

ABSTRACTED. part. adj. [from abstract.]

1. Separated.

That space the evil one abstracted stood

From his own evil, and for the time remain'd

Stupidly good. Milton.

2. Refined, abstruse.

Abstracted spiritual love, they like

Their souls, exhal'd. Donne.

3. Absent of mind, inattentive to present objects; as, an abstracted scholar.

ABSTRACTEDLY. adv. With abstraction, simply, separately from all contingent circumstances.

Or whether more abstractedly we look,

Or on the writers, or the written book:

Whence, but from heav'n, could men unskill'd in arts,

In several ages born, in several parts,

Weave such agreeing truths? or how, or why

Should all conspire to cheat us with a lie?

Unask'd their pains, ungrateful their advice,

Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price. Dryden's Religio Laici.

ABSTRACTION. n. f. [abstractio, Lat.]

1. The act of abstracting.

The word abstraction signifies a withdrawing some part of an an idea from other parts of it; by which means, such abstracted ideas are formed, as neither represent any thing corporeal or spiritual; that is, any thing peculiar or proper to mind or body. Watts's Logick.

2. The state of being abstracted.
3. Absence of mind, inattention.
4. Disregard of worldly objects.

ABSTRACTIVE. adj. [from abstract.] Having the power or quality of abstracting.

ABSTRACTLY. adv. [from abstract.] In an abstract manner, absolutely, without reference to any thing else.

Matter abstractly and absolutely considered, cannot have born an infinite duration now past and expired. Bentley's Sermons.

ABSTRACTED. part. adj. [abstractus, Lat.] Unbound. Diët.

TO ABSTRINGE. v. a. [abstringo, Lat.] To unbind. Diët.

TO ABSTRUDE. v. a. [abstrudo, Lat.] To thrust off, or pull away. Diët.

ABSTRU'SE. adj. [abstrusus, Lat. thrust out of sight.]

1. Hidden.

Th' eternal eye, whose sight discerns
Abstrusest thoughts, from forth his holy mount,
 And from within the golden lamps that burn
 Nightly before him, saw, without their light, Rebellion rising. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v. l. 712.

2. Difficult, remote from conception or apprehension. It is opposed to obvious and easy.

So spake our Sire, and, by his count'nance, seem'd - Ent'ring on studious thoughts abstruse. Parad. Lost, b. viii.

The motions and figures within the mouth are abstruse, and not easy to be distinguished, especially those of the tongue, which is moved through the help of many muscles, so easily, and habitually, and variously, that we are scarce able to give a judgment of motions and figures thereby framed.

Holder's Elements of Speech.

No man could give a rule of the greatest beauties, and the knowledge of them was so abstruse, that there was no manner of speaking which could express them. Dryd. Dufresnoy.

ABSTRU'SELY. adv. In an abstruse manner; obscurely, not plainly, or obviously.

ABSTRU'SENESS. n. f. [from abstruse.] The quality of being abstruse; difficulty, obscurity.

It is not oftentimes so much what the scripture says, as what some men persuade others it says, that makes it seem obscure, and that as to some other passages that are so indeed, since it is the abstruseness of what is taught in them, that makes them almost inevitably so; it is little less saucy, upon such a score, to find fault with the style of the scripture, than to do so with the author for making us but men. Boyle on the Scripture.

ABSTRU'SITY. n. f. [from abstruse.]

1. Abstruseness.
2. That which is abstruse. A word seldom used.

Authors are also suspicious, nor greedily to be swallowed, who pretend to write of secrets, to deliver antipathies, sympathies, and the occult abstrusities of things. Brown's Vul. Err.

TO ABSU'ME. v. a. [absumo, Lat.] To bring to an end by a gradual waste; to eat up.

That which had been burning an infinite time could never be burnt, no not so much as any part of it; for if it had burned part after part, the whole must needs be absumed in a portion of time. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ABSUR'D. adj. [absurdus, Lat.]

1. Unreasonable, without judgment, as used of men.

Seeming wise men may make shift to get opinion; but let no man choose them for employment; for certainly you had better take for business a man somewhat absurd, than over formal. Bacon's Essay, 27.

2. Inconsistent, contrary to reason, used of sentiments or practices.

The thing itself appeared desirable to him, and accordingly he could not but like and desire it; but then, it was after a very irrational absurd way, and contrary to all the methods and principles of a rational agent; which never wills a thing really and properly, but it applies to the means, by which it is to be acquired. South's Sermons.

A man, who cannot write with wit on a proper subject, is dull and stupid; but one, who shews it in an improper place, is as impertinent and absurd. Addison. Spectator, N° 291.

But grant that those can conquer, these can cheat,

'Tis phrase absurd to call a villain great:

Who wickedly is wise, or madly brave,

Is but the more a fool, the more a knave. Pope's Essay on Man.

ABSUR'DITY. n. f. [from absurd.]

1. The quality of being absurd; want of judgment applied to men; want of propriety applied to things.

How clear soever this idea of the infinity of number be, there is nothing more evident than the absurdity of the actual idea of an infinite number. Locke.

2. That which is absurd; as, his travels were full of absurdities. In which sense it has a plural.

That satisfaction we receive from the opinion of some pre-eminence in ourselves, when we see the absurdities of another, or when we reflect on any past absurdities of our own.

VOL. I.

Addison. Spectator, N° 249.

ABSUR'DLY. adv. [from absurd.] After an absurd manner; improperly, unreasonably.

But man we find the only creature,

Who, led by folly, combats nature;

Who, when she loudly cries, forbear,

With obstinacy fixes there;

And where his genius least inclines,

Absurdly bends his whole designs.

Swift's Miscellanies.

We may proceed yet further with the atheist; and convince him, that not only his principle is absurd, but his consequences also as absurdly deduced from it. Bentley's Sermons.

ABSUR'DNESS. n. f. [from absurd.] The quality of being absurd; injudiciousness, impropriety. See ABSURDITY; which is more frequently used.

ABUNDANCE. n. f. [abundantia, Fr.]

1. Plenty; a sense chiefly poetical.

At the whisper of thy word,

Crown'd abundance spreads my board.

Crashaw.

The doubled charge his subjects love supplies,

Who, in that bounty, to themselves are kind;

So glad Egyptians see their Nilus rise,

And, in his plenty, their abundance find. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

2. Great numbers.

The river Inn, during its course through the Tyrol, is generally shut up between a double range of mountains, that are most of them covered with woods of fir-trees. Abundance of peasants are employed in hewing down of the largest of these trees, that, after they are barked and cut into shape, are tumbled down. Addison on Italy.

3. A great quantity.

Their chief enterprize was the recovery of the Holy land; in which worthy, but extremely difficult, action, it is lamentable to remember what abundance of noble blood hath been shed with very small benefit unto the Christian state.

Sir Walter Raleigh's Essays.

4. Exuberance, more than enough.

For well I wot, most mighty sovereign,

That all this famous antique history,

Of some, th' abundance of an idle brain

Will judged be, and painted forgery. Spens. Fairy Q. b. ii.

ABUNDANT. adj. [abundans, Lat.]

1. Plentiful.

Good the more

Communicated, more abundant grows;

The author not impair'd, but honour'd more. Par. Lost, b. v.

2. Exuberant.

If the vessels are in a state of too great rigidity, so as not to yield, a strong projectile motion occasions their rupture, and hæmorrhages; especially in the lungs, where the blood is abundant. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Fully stored. It is followed sometimes by in, commonly by with.

The world began but some ages before these were found out, and was abundant with all things at first; and men not very numerous; and therefore were not put so much to the use of their wits, to find out ways for living commodiously.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

4. It is applied generally to things, sometimes to persons.

The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering and abundant in goodness and truth. Exod. xxxiv. 6.

ABUNDANTLY. adv. [from abundant.]

1. In plenty.

Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Genesis, i. 20.

God on thee

Abundantly his gifts hath also pour'd;

Inward and outward both, his image fair. Par. Lost, b. viii.

2. Amply, liberally, more than sufficiently.

What the example of our equals wants of authority, is abundantly supplied in the imaginations of friendship, and the repeated influences of a constant conversation. Rogers's Serm.

Heroic poetry has ever been esteemed the greatest work of human nature. In that rank has Aristotle placed it; and Longinus is so full of the like expressions, that he abundantly confirms the other's testimony. Dryden's State of Innocence, Pref.

TO ABU'SE. v. a. [abutor, Lat.]

In abuse the verb, f has the sound of z; in the noun, the common sound.

1. To make an ill use of.

They that use this world, as not abusing it; for the fashion of this world passeth away. 1 Cor. vii. 31.

He has fixed and determined the time for our repentance, beyond which he will no longer await the perverseness of men, no longer suffer his compassion to be abused. Rogers's Sermons.

2. To deceive, to impose upon.

The world hath been much abused by the opinion of making gold: the work itself I judge to be possible; but the means hitherto propounded, are, in the practice, full of error.

Bacon's Natural History, N° 126.

He perhaps,

Out of my weakness and my melancholy,

As he is very potent with such spirits,

Abuses me to damn me.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

A B U

It imports the misrepresentation of the qualities of things and actions, to the common apprehensions of men, abusing their minds with false notions; and so, by this artifice, making evil pass for good, and good for evil, in all the great concerns of life. South's Sermons.

Nor be with all these tempting words abus'd;
These tempting words were all to Sappho us'd.

Pope's Sappho to Phaon.

3. To treat with rudeness, to reproach.
I am no strumpet, but of life as honest
As you that thus abuse me. Shakespeare's Othello.
But he mocked them, and laughed at them, and abused them shamefully, and spake proudly. 1 Mac. vii. 34.
Some praise at morning what they blame at night,
But always think the last opinion right.
A muse by these is like a mistress us'd,
This hour she's idoliz'd, the next abus'd. Pope's Eff. on Crit.
The next criticism upon the stars seems to be introduced for no other reason, but to mention Mr. Bickerstaff, whom the author every-where endeavours to imitate and abuse. Addison.

ABU'SE. n. f. [from the verb abuse.]

1. The ill use of any thing.
The casting away things profitable for the sustenance of man's life, is an unthankful abuse of the fruits of God's good providence towards mankind. Hooker, b. v. § 9.

Little knows

Any, but God alone, to value right
The good before him, but perverts best things
To worst abuse, or to their meanest use. Parad. Lost, b. iv.

2. A corrupt practice, bad custom.
The nature of things is such, that, if abuses be not remedied, they will certainly encrease. Swift for Advancem. of Relig.
3. Seducement.
Was it not enough for him to have deceived me, and through the deceit abused me, and, after the abuse, forsaken me, but that he must now, of all the company, and before all the company, lay want of beauty to my charge. Sidney, b. ii.
4. Unjust censure, rude reproach, contumely.

I dark in light, expos'd

To daily fraud, contempt, abuse, and wrong. Sampf. Agon.

ABU'SER. n. f. [from the verb abuse.]

1. He that makes an ill use.
Next thou, th' abuser of thy prince's ear. Denb. Sophy.
2. He that deceives.
3. He that reproaches with rudeness.
4. A ravisher, a violater.

ABU'SIVE. adj. [from abuse.]

1. Practising abuse.
The tongue mov'd gently first, and speech was low,
Till wrangling science taught it noise and show,
And wicked wit arose, thy most abusive foe. Pope's Miscell.
Dame Nature, as the learned show,
Provides each animal its foe;
Hounds hunt the hare, the wily fox
Devours your geese, the wolf your flocks.
Thus envy pleads a natural claim,
To persecute the muse's fame,
On poets in all times abusive,
From Homer down to Pope inclusive. Swift's Miscellanies.
2. Containing abuse; as, an abusive lampoon.
Next, Comedy appear'd with great applause,
Till her licentious and abusive tongue
Waken'd the magistrates coercive pow'r. Roscommon.
3. Deceitful; a sense little used, yet not improper.
It is verified by a number of examples, that whatsoever is gained by an abusive treaty, ought to be restored in integrum.
Bacon's Considerations on War with Spain.

ABU'SIVELY. adv. [from abuse.]

1. Improperly, by a wrong use.
The oil, abusively called spirit, of roses swims at the top of the water, in the form of a white butter; which I remember not to have observed in any other oil drawn in any limbeck.

Boyle's Sceptical Chymistry.

2. Reproachfully.

ABU'SIVENESS. n. f. [from abuse.] The quality of being abusive; foulness of language.

Pick out of mirth, like stones out of thy ground,
Profaneness, filthiness, abusiveness.
These are the scum, with which coarse wits abound:

The fine may spare these well, yet not go less. Herbert.

To ABU'T. v. n. obsolete. [aboutir, to touch at the end, Fr.]
To end at, to border upon; to meet, or approach to, with the particle upon.

Two mighty monarchies,

Whose high upreared and abutting fronts

Perilous the narrow ocean parts asunder. Shakesp. Henry V.

In entering the same, we will first pitch at the Looes, two several corporations, distinguished by the addition of east and west, abutting upon a navigable creek, and joined by a fair bridge of many arches. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

ABU'TTAL. n. f. [from abut.] The butting or boundaries of any land. A writing declaring on what lands, highways, or other places, it does abut. Dist.

A C A

ABU'TMENT. n. f. [from abut.] That which abuts, or borders upon another.

ABY'SM. n. f. [abyssme, old Fr. now written contractedly abime.]
A gulf; the same with abyss.

My good stars, that were my former guides,
Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires

Into the abyss of hell. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

ABY'SS. n. f. [abyssus, Lat. "Ἄβυσσος, bottomless, Gr.]

1. A depth without bottom.
Who shall tempt with wand'ring feet
The dark, unbottom'd, infinite abyss,
And, through the palpable obscure, find out
This uncouth way. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 405.
2. A great depth, a gulph.

The yawning earth disclos'd th' abyss of hell:
The weeping statues did the wars foretell,
And holy sweat from brazen idols fell. Dryd. Virg. Georg. i.

3. In a figurative sense, that in which any thing is lost.
For sepulchres themselves must crumbling fall
In time's abyss, the common grave of all. Dryd. Juv. Sat. x.
If, discovering how far we have clear and distinct ideas, we confine our thoughts within the contemplation of those things, that are within the reach of our understandings, and launch not out into that abyss of darkness, out of a presumption, that nothing is beyond our comprehension. Locke.
4. The body of waters supposed at the center of the earth.

We are here to consider what is generally understood by the great abyss, in the common explication of the deluge; and 'tis commonly interpreted either to be the sea, or subterraneous waters hid in the bowels of the earth. Burnet's Theor. Earth.

5. In the language of divines, hell.
From that insatiable abyss,
Where flames devour, and serpents hiss,
Promote me to thy seat of bliss. Roscommon.

Ac, Ak, or Ake.

Being initials in the names of places, as Aston, signify an oak, from the Saxon ac, an oak. Gibson's Camden.

ACACIA. n. f. [Lat.]

1. A drug brought from Egypt, which, being supposed the inspissated juice of a tree, is imitated by the juice of sloes, boiled to the same consistence. Dictionnaire de Comm. Savary. Trevoaux.
2. A tree commonly so called here, though different from that which produces the true acacia; and therefore termed pseudoca- cia, or Virginian acacia.

It hath a papilionaceous flower, from whose flower-cup rises the pointal, wrapped in a fimbriated membrane, which afterwards becomes a pod, opening into two parts, in which are contained several kidney-shaped seeds. Millar.

ACADE'MIAL. adj. [from academy.] Relating to an academy, belonging to an academy.

ACADE'MIAN. n. f. [from academy.] A scholar of an academy or university; a member of an university. Wood, in his Athenæ
Oxonienfes, mentions a great feast made for the academians.

ACADE'MICK. n. f. [from academy.] A student of an university.

A young academic shall dwell upon a journal that treats of trade in a dictatorial style, and shall be lavish in the praise of the author; while, at the same time, persons well skilled in those different subjects, hear the tattle with contempt.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind, p. i. c. 5.

ACADE'MICK. adj. [academicus, Lat.] Relating to an university.

While thro' poetic scenes the genius roves,

Or wanders wild in academic groves. Dunciad, b. iv. l. 481.

ACADE'MICAL. adj. [academicus, Lat.] Belonging to an university.

He drew him first into the fatal circle, from a kind of resolved privateness at his house at Lampfie in South Wales; where, after the academical life, he had taken such a taste of the rural, as I have heard him say, that he could well have bent his mind to a retired course. Wotton.

ACADEM'CIAN. n. f. [academicien, Fr.] The member of an academy. It is generally used in speaking of the professors in the academies of France.

ACA'DEMIST. n. f. [from academy.] The member of an academy.

It is observed by the Parisian academists, that some amphibious quadrupeds, particularly the sea-calf or seal, hath his epiglottis extraordinarily large. Ray on the Creation.

A'CADEMY. n. f. [anciently, and properly, with the accent on the first syllable, now frequently on the second. Academia, Lat.
from Academus of Athens, whose house was turned into a school, from whom the Groves of Academe in Milton.]

1. An assembly or society of men, uniting for the promotion of some art.

Our court shall be a little academy,

Still and contemplative in living arts. Shak. Love's Lab. Lost.

2. The place where sciences are taught.
Amongst the academies, which were composed by the rare genius of those great men, these four are reckoned as the principal; namely, the Athenian school, that of Sicyon, that of Rhodes, and that of Corinth. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. An university.
4. A place of education, in contradistinction to the universities or public schools.

ACANTHUS.

ACANTHUS. n. f. [Lat.] The name of the herb bears-foot, remarkable for being the model of the foliage on the Corinthian chapter.

On either side

Acanthus, and each od'rous bushy shrub,

ACATALECTIC. n. f. [ἀκαταλήκτος, Gr.] A verse which has the compleat number of syllables, without defect or superfluity.

To ACCEDE. v. n. [accedo, Lat.] To be added to, to come to; generally used in political accounts; as, another power has acceded to the treaty; that is, has become a party.

To ACCELERATE. v. a. [accelero, Lat.]

1. To make quick, to hasten, to quicken motion; to give a continual impulse to motion, so as perpetually to encrease.

Take new beer, and put in some quantity of stale beer into it; and see whether it will not accelerate the clarification, by opening the body of the beer, whereby the grosser parts may fall down into lees. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup> 307.

If the rays endeavour to recede from the densest part of the vibration, they may be alternately accelerated and retarded by the vibrations overtaking them. Newton's Optics.

Spices quicken the pulse, and accelerate the motion of the blood, and dissipate the fluids; from whence leanness, pains in the stomach, loathings, and fevers. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Lo! from the dread immensity of space

Returning, with accelerated course,

The rushing comet to the sun descends. Thomf. Sum. l. 1690.

2. It is generally applied to matter, and used chiefly in philosophical language; but is sometimes used on other occasions.

In which council the king himself, whose continual vigilancy did suck in sometimes causeless suspicions, which few else knew, inclined to the accelerating a battle. Bacon's Henry VII.

Perhaps it may point out to a student now and then, what may employ the most useful labours of his thoughts, and accelerate his diligence in the most momentous enquiries. Watts's Impr.

ACCELERATION. n. f. [acceleratio, Lat.]

1. The act of quickening motion.

The law of the acceleration of falling bodies, discovered first by Galileo, is, that the velocities acquired by falling, being as the time in which the body falls, the spaces through which it passes; will be as the squares of the velocities, and the velocity and time taken together, as in a quadruplicate ratio of the spaces.

2. The state of the body accelerated, or quickened in its motion.

The degrees of acceleration of motion, the gravitation of the air, the existence or non-existence of empty spaces, either coacervate or interspersed, and many the like, have taken up the thoughts and times of men in disputes concerning them. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To ACCE'ND. v. a. [accendo, Lat.] To kindle, to set on fire; a word very rarely used.

Our devotion, if sufficiently accended, would, as theirs, burn up innumerable books of this sort. Decay of Piety.

ACCE'NSION. n. f. [accensio, Lat.] The act of kindling, or the state of being kindled.

The fulminating damp will take fire at a candle, or other flame, and, upon its accension, gives a crack or report, like the discharge of a gun, and makes likewise an explosion so forcible as sometimes to kill the miners, break their limbs, shake the earth, and force coals, stones, and other bodies, even though they be of very great weight and bulk, from the bottom of the pit or mine. Woodward's Natural History, p. iv.

A'CCENT. n. f. [accentus, Lat.]

1. The manner of speaking or pronouncing, with regard either to force or elegance.

I know, Sir, I am no flatterer; he that beguiled you in a plain accent was a plain knave; which, for my part, I will not be. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Your accent is something finer than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling. Shakespeare's As you like it.

2. In grammar, the marks made upon syllables to regulate their pronunciation.

Accent, as in the Greek names and usage, seems to have regarded the tune of the voice; the acute accent raising the voice in some certain syllables to a higher, i. e. more acute pitch or tone, and the grave depressing it lower, and both having some emphasis, i. e. more vigorous pronunciation. Holder's Elem.

3. Poetically, language or words.

How many ages hence

Shall this our lofty scene be acted o'er,

In states unborn, and accents yet unknown. Shak. Jul. Caesar.

Winds on your wings to heav'n her accents bear;

Such words as heav'n alone is fit to hear. Dryd. Virg. Past. 3.

4. A modification of the voice, expressive of the passions or sentiments.

The tender accent of a woman's cry

Will pass unheard, will unregarded die;

When the rough seaman's louder shouts prevail,

When fair occasion shews the springing gale. Prior.

To ACCE'NT. v. a. [from accentus, Lat.]

1. To pronounce, to speak words with particular regard to the grammatical marks or rules.

Having got somebody to mark the last syllable but one, where it is long, in words above two syllables (which is enough to regulate her pronunciation, and accenting the words) let her read daily in the gospels, and avoid understanding them in Latin, if she can. Locke on Education, § 177.

2. In poetry, to pronounce or utter in general.

O my unhappy lines! you that before

Have serv'd my youth to vent some wanton cries,

And, now congeal'd with grief, can scarce implore

Strength to accent, Here my Albertus lies!

Wotton.

3. To write or note the accents.

To ACCE'NTUATE. v. a. [accentuer, Fr.] To place the proper accents over the vowels.

ACCENTUATION. n. f. [from accentuate.]

1. The act of placing the accent in pronunciation.

2. Marking the accent in writing.

To ACCEPT. v. a. [accipio, Lat. accepter, Fr.]

1. To take with pleasure; to receive kindly; to admit with approbation. It is distinguished from receive, as specific from general; noting a particular manner of receiving.

Neither do ye kindle fire on my altar for nought. I have no pleasure in you, saith the Lord of hosts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand, Malachi, i. 10.

Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but, in every nation, he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. Acts, x. 34, 35.

You have been graciously pleased to accept this tender of my duty. Dryden's Dedication to his Fables.

Charm by accepting, by submitting sway,

Yet have your humour most when you obey. Pope.

2. It is used in a kind of juridical sense; as, to accept terms, accept a treaty.

His promise Palamon accepts, but pray'd

To keep it better than the first he made. Dryden's Fables.

3. In the language of the bible, to accept persons, is to act with personal and partial regard.

He will surely reprove you, if ye do secretly accept persons. Job, xiii. 10.

4. It is sometimes used with the particle of.

I will appease him with the present that goeth before me, and afterward I will see his face; peradventure he will accept of me. Genesis, xxxii. 20.

ACCEPTABILITY. n. f. The quality of being acceptable. See ACCEPTABLE.

He hath given us his natural blood to be shed, for the remission of our sins, and for the obtaining the grace and acceptability of repentance. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

ACCEPTABLE. adj. [acceptable, Fr. from the Latin.] It is pronounced by some with the accent in the first syllable, as by Milton; by others, with the accent on the second.

1. That which is likely to be accepted; grateful; pleasing. It is used with the particle to before the person accepting.

This woman, whom thou mad'st to be my help,

And gav'st me as thy perfect gift, so good,

So fit, so acceptable, so divine,

That from her hand I could expect no ill. Parad. Lost, b. ii.

I do not see any other method left for men of that function to take, in order to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity. Swift's Proj. &c.

After he had made a peace so acceptable to the church, and so honourable to himself, he spent the remainder of his life at Ripaille, and died with an extraordinary reputation of sanctity. Addison on Italy.

ACCEPTABLENESS. n. f. [from acceptable.] The quality of being acceptable.

It will thereby take away the acceptableness of that conjunction.

Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. ii. c. 2.

ACCEPTABLY. adv. [from acceptable.] In an acceptable manner; so as to please; with the particle to. For the accent, see ACCEPTABLE.

Do not omit thy prayers, for want of a good oratory; for he that prayeth upon God's account, cares not what he suffers, so he be the friend of Christ; nor where nor when he prays, so he may do it frequently, fervently, and acceptably.

Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

If you can teach them to love and respect other people, they will, as your age requires it, find ways to express it acceptably to every one. Locke on Education, § 145.

ACCEPTANCE. n. f. [acceptance, Fr.]

1. Reception with approbation.

By that acceptance of his sovereignty, they also accepted of his laws; why then should any other laws be now used amongst them? Spenser's State of Ireland.

If he tells us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Some men cannot be fools with so good acceptance as others. South's Sermons.

Thus I imbolden'd spake, and freedom us'd

Permissive, and acceptance found. Par. Lost, b. viii. l. 435.

2. The meaning of a word as it is received or understood; acceptation.

That pleasure is man's chiefest good, because indeed it is the perception of good that is properly pleasure, is an assertion most

most certainly true, though, under the common acceptance of it, not only false but odious: for, according to this, pleasure and sensuality pass for terms equivalent; and therefore he, who takes it in this sense, alters the subject of the discourse. South.

ACCEPTANCE. [in law.] The receiving of a rent, whereby the giver binds himself, for ever, to allow a former fact done by another, whether it be in itself good or not. Cowel.

ACCEPTA'TION. n. f. [from accept.]

1. Reception, whether good or bad. This large sense seems now wholly out of use.

Yet, poor soul! knows he no other, but that I do suspect, neglect, yea, and detest him? For, every day, he finds one way or other to set forth himself unto me; but all are rewarded with like coldness of acceptation. Sidney, b. ii.

What is new finds better acceptation, than what is good or great. Denham's Sophy.

2. Good reception, acceptance.

Cain, envious of the acceptation of his brother's prayer and sacrifice, slew him; making himself the first man-slayer, and his brother the first martyr. Raleigh's History of the World, b. i.

3. The state of being acceptable, regard.

Some things, although not so required of necessity, that, to leave them undone, excludeth from salvation, are, notwithstanding, of so great dignity and acceptation with God, that most ample reward in heaven is laid up for them. Hooker, b. ii.

They have those enjoyments only as the consequences of the state of esteem and acceptation they are in with their parents and governours. Locke on Education, § 53.

4. Acceptance in the juridical sense. This sense occurs rarely.

As, in order to the passing away a thing by gift, there is required a surrender of all right on his part that gives; so there is required also an acceptation on his part to whom it is given. South's Sermons.

5. The meaning of a word, as it is commonly received.

Thereupon the earl of Lauderdale made a discourse upon the several questions, and what acceptation these words and expressions had. Clarendon, b. viii.

All matter is either fluid or solid, in a large acceptation of the words, that they may comprehend even all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies. Bentl. Sermon.

AN ACCE'PTER. n. f. [from accept.] The person that accepts.

ACCEPTILA'TION. n. f. [acceptilatio, Lat.] A term of the civil law, importing the remission of a debt by an acquittance from the creditor, testifying the receipt of money which has never been paid.

ACCE'PTION. [acception, Fr. from acceptio, Lat.] The received sense of a word; the meaning.

That this hath been esteemed the due and proper acception of this word, I shall testify by one evidence, which gave me the first hint of this notion. Hammond on Fundamentals.

ACCE'SS. n. f. [In some of its senses, it seems derived from accessus, in others, from accessio, Lat. acces, Fr.]

1. The way by which any thing may be approached.

There remained very advantageous accesses for temptations to enter and invade men, the fortifications being very slender, little knowledge of immortality, or any thing beyond this life, and no assurance that repentance would be admitted for sin. Hammond on Fundamentals.

And here th' access a gloomy grove defends;

And here th' unnavigable lake extends,

O'er whose unhappy waters, void of light,

No bird presumes to steer his airy flight. Dryd. Æneid vi.

2. The means, or liberty, of approaching either to things or men.

When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs,

We are deny'd access unto his person,

Ev'n by those men that most have done us wrong.

Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. 2.

They go commission'd to require a peace,

And carry presents to procure access. Dryd. Æn. vii. l. 209.

He grants what they besought;

Instructed, that to God is no access

Without Mediator, whose high office now

Moses in figures bears. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii. l. 239.

3. Encrease, enlargement, addition.

The gold was accumulated, and store treasure, for the most part; but the silver is still growing. Besides, infinite is the access of territory and empire by the same enterprize.

Bacon's Holy War.

Although to opinion, there be many gods, may seem an access in religion, and such as cannot at all consist with atheism, yet doth it deductively, and upon inference, include the same; for unity is the inseparable and essential attribute of Deity.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 10.

Nor think superfluous their aid;

I, from the influence of thy looks, receive

Access in every virtue; in thy fight

More wise, more watchful, stronger. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

The reputation

Of virtuous actions past, if not kept up

With an access, and fresh supply, of new ones,

Is lost and soon forgotten.

Denham's Sophy.

4. It is sometimes used, after the French, to signify the returns of fits of a distemper; but this sense seems yet scarcely received into our language.

For as relapses make diseases

More desperate than their first accesses. Hud. p. iii. cant. ii.

A'CCESSARINESS. n. f. [from accessary.] The state of being accessary.

Perhaps this will draw us into a negative accessariness to the mischiefs. Decay of Piety.

A'CCESSARY. adj. [A corruption, as it seems, of the word accessory, which see; but now more commonly used than the proper word.]

That which, without being the chief agent in a crime, contributes to it. But it had formerly a good and general sense.

As for those things that are accessary hereunto, those things that so belong to the way of salvation, &c. Hooker, b. iii. § 3.

He had taken upon him the government of Hull, without any apprehension or imagination, that it would ever make him accessary to rebellion. Clarendon, b. viii.

ACCE'SSIBLE. adj. [accessibilis, Lat. accessible, Fr.] That which may be approached; that which we may reach or arrive at.

It is applied both to persons and things, with the particle to.

In conversation, the tempers of men are open and accessible, their attention is awake, and their minds disposed to receive the strongest impressions; and what is spoken is generally more affecting, and more apposite to particular occasions. Rogers.

As an island, we are accessible on every side, and exposed to perpetual invasions; against which it is impossible to fortify ourselves sufficiently, without a power at sea. Addison's Freeholder.

Those things, which were indeed inexplicable, have been racked and tortured to discover themselves, while the plainer and more accessible truths, as if despicable while easy, are clouded and obscured. Decay of Piety.

Some lie more open to our senses and daily observation; others are more occult and hidden, and though accessible, in some measure, to our senses, yet not without great search and scrutiny, or some happy accident. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ACCE'SSION. n. f. [accessio, Lat. accession, Fr.]

1. Encrease by something added, enlargement, augmentation.

There would not have been found the difference here set down betwixt the force of the air, when expanded, and what that force should have been according to the theory, but that the included inch of air received some little accession during the trial. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

The wisest among the nobles began to apprehend the growing power of the people; and therefore, knowing what an accession thereof would accrue to them, by such an addition of property, used all means to prevent it.

Swift on the Contests in Athens and Rome.

Charity, indeed, and works of munificence are the proper discharge of such over-proportioned accessions, and the only virtuous enjoyment of them. Rogers's Sermons, ii. p. 37.

2. The act of coming to, or joining one's self to; as, accession to a confederacy.

Beside, what wise objections he prepares

Against my late accession to the wars?

Does not the fool perceive his argument

Is with more force against Achilles bent? Dryden's Fables.

3. The act of arriving at; as, the king's accession to the throne.

A'CCESSORILY. adv. [from accessory.] In the manner of an accessary.

A'CCESSORY. adj. Joined to another thing, so as to increase it; Additional.

In this kind there is not the least action, but it doth somewhat make to the accessory augmentation of our bliss. Hooker.

A'CCESSORY. n. f. [accessorius, Lat. accessoire, Fr.] This word, which had anciently a general signification, is now almost confined to forms of law.]

1. Applied to persons.

A man that is guilty of a felonious offence, not principally, but by participation; as, by commandment, advice, or concealment. And a man may be accessory to the offence of another, after two sorts, by the common law, or by statute: and, by the common law, two ways also; that is, before or after the fact. Before the fact; as, when one commandeth or adviseth another to commit a felony, and is not present at the execution thereof; for his presence makes him also a principal: wherefore there cannot be an accessory before the fact in manslaughter; because manslaughter is sudden and not premeditated. Accessory after the fact, is, when one receiveth him, whom he knoweth to have committed felony. Accessory by statute, is he that abets, counsels, or hides any man committing, or having committed an offence made felony by statute. Cowel.

By the common law, the accessories cannot be proceeded against, till the principal has received his trial. Spens. State of Irel.

But pause, my soul! and study, ere thou fall

On accidental joys, th' essential.

Still before accessories do abide

A trial, must the principal be try'd.

Now were all transform'd

Alike, to serpents all, as accessories

To his bold riot.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 520.

2. Applied

2. Applied to things.

An accessory is said to be that which does accede unto some principal fact or thing in law; and, as such, generally speaking, follows the reason and nature of its principal.

Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

A'CCIDENCE. n. f. [a corruption of accidents, from accidentia, Lat.]

The little book containing the first rudiments of grammar, and explaining the properties of the eight parts of speech.

I do confess I do want eloquence,

And never yet did learn mine accidence. Taylor the Water-poet.

A'CCIDENT. n. f. [accidens, Lat.]

1. The property or quality of any being, which may be separated from it, at least in thought.

If she were but the body's accident,

And her sole being did in it subsist,

As white in snow, she might herself absent,

And in the body's substance not be miss'd. Sir John Davies.

An accidental mode, or an accident, is such a mode as is not necessary to the being of a thing; for the subject may be without it, and yet remain of the same nature that it was before; or it is that mode which may be separated or abolished from its subject.

Watts's Logick.

2. In grammar, the property of a word.

The learning of a language is nothing else but the informing of ourselves, what compositions of letters are, by consent and institution, to signify such certain notions of things, with their modalities and accidents.

Holder's Elements of Speech.

3. That which happens unforeseen; casualty, chance.

General laws are like general rules in physic, according whereunto, as no wise man will desire himself to be cured, if there be joined with his disease some special accident, in regard whereof, that whereby others in the same infirmity, but without the like accident, recover health, would be, to him, either hurtful, or, at the least, unprofitable.

Hooker, b. v. § 9.

The flood, and other accidents of time, made it one common field and pasture with the land of Eden. Raleigh's Hist. World.

Thus we rejoic'd, but soon our joy is turn'd

Into perplexity, and new amaze;

For whither is he gone? What accident

Hath rapt him from us?

Paradise Regained, b. i.

And trivial accidents shall be forborn,

That others may have time to take their turn. Dryd. Fables.

The reformation owed nothing to the good intentions of king Henry. He was only an instrument of it (as the logicians speak) by accident.

Swift's Miscellanies.

ACCIDENTAL. n. f. [accidental, Fr. See ACCIDENT.] A property nonessential.

Conceive, as much as you can, of the essentials of any subject, before you consider its accidentals.

Watts's Logick.

ACCIDENTAL. adj. [from accident.]

1. Having the quality of an accident, nonessential; used with the particle to, before that in which the accident inheres.

A distinction is to be made between what pleases naturally in itself, and what pleases upon the account of machines, actors, dances, and circumstances, which are merely accidental to the tragedy.

Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

This is accidental to a state of religion, and therefore ought to be reckoned among the ordinary difficulties of it. Tillotson.

2. Casual, fortuitous, happening by chance.

Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.

So shall you hear

Of accidental judgments, casual slaughters;

Of deaths put on by cunning, and forc'd cause. Shakesp. Ham.

Look upon things of the most accidental and mutable nature; accidental in their production, and mutable in their continuance; yet God's prescience of them is as certain in him, as the memory of them is, or can be, in us.

South's Sermons.

3. In the following passage it seems to signify adventitious.

Ay, such a minister as wind to fire,

That adds an accidental fierceness to

Its natural fury.

Denham's Sophy.

ACCIDENTALLY. adv. [from accidental.]

1. After an accidental manner; nonessentially.

Other needful points of public matters, no less concerning the good of the commonwealth, though but accidentally depending upon the former.

Spenser's State of Ireland.

I conclude choler accidentally better, and acrimonious, but not in itself.

Harvey on Consumptions.

2. Casually, fortuitously.

Although virtuous men do sometimes accidentally make their way to preferment, yet the world is so corrupted, that no man can reasonably hope to be rewarded in it, merely upon account of his virtue.

Swift's Miscellanies.

ACCIDENTALNESS. n. f. [from accidental.] The quality of being accidental.

Dict.

ACCIPIENT. n. f. [accipiens, Lat.] A receiver, perhaps sometimes used for recipient.

Dict.

TO ACCITE. v. a. [accito, Lat.] To call, to summons; a word not in use now.

Our coronation done, we will accite

No prince, no peer, shall have just cause to say,

Heav'n shorten Harry's happy life one day. Shakesp. Henry IV.

VOL. I.

ACCLAIM. n. f. [acclamo, Lat. from which probably first the verb acclaim, now lost, and then the noun.] A shout of praise acclamation.

Back from pursuit thy pow'rs, with loud acclaim,

Thee only extoll'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii. l. 397.

The herald ends; the vaulted firmament

With loud acclaims, and vast applause, is rent. Dryd. Fables.

ACCLAMATION. n. f. [acclamatio, Lat.] Shouts of applause; such as those with which a victorious army salutes the general.

It hath been the custom of christian men, in token of the greater reverence, to stand, to utter certain words of acclamation, and, at the name of Jesus, to bow.

Hooker, b. v. § 29.

Gladly then he mix'd

Among those friendly pow'rs, who him receiv'd

With joy, and acclamations loud, that one,

That, of so many myriads fall'n, yet one

Return'd, not lost.

Milt. Parad. Lost, b. vi. l. 23.

Such an enchantment is there in words, and so fine a thing does it seem to some, to be ruined plausibly, and to be ushered to their destruction with panegyric and acclamation.

South. Ser.

ACCLIVITY. n. f. [from acclivus, Lat.] The steepness or slope of a line inclining to the horizon, reckoned upwards; as, the ascent of an hill is the acclivity, the descent is the declivity.

Quincy.

The men, leaving their wives and younger children below, do, not without some difficulty, clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them, where they feed them, and milk them, and make butter and cheese, and do all the dairy-work.

Ray on the Creation.

ACCLIVOUS. adj. [acclivus, Lat.] Rising with a slope.

TO ACCLOY. v. a. [See CLOY.]

1. To fill up, in an ill sense; to crowd, to stuff full; a word almost obsolete.

At the well-head the purest streams arise:

But mucky filth his branching arms annoys,

And with uncomely weeds the gentle wave accloys. Fairy Q.

2. To fill to satiety; in which sense cloy is still in use.

They that escape best in the temperate zone, would be accloyed with long nights, very tedious, no less than forty days.

Ray on the Creation.

TO ACCOIL. v. n. [See COIL.] To crowd, to keep a coil about; to baffle, to be in a hurry; a word now out of use.

About the cauldron many cooks accoil'd,

With hooks and ladles, as need did require;

The while the viands in the vessel boil'd,

They did about their business sweat, and sorely toil'd. Fairy Q.

A'CCOLENT. n. f. [accolens, Lat.] He that inhabits near a place; a borderer.

Dict.

ACCOMMODABLE. adj. [accommodabilis, Lat.] That which may be fitted; with the particle to.

As there is infinite variety in the circumstances of persons, things, actions, times and places; so we must be furnished with such general rules as are accommodable to all this variety, by a wise judgment and discretion.

Watts's Logick.

TO ACCOMMODATE. v. a. [accommodo, Lat.]

1. To supply with conveniences of any kind.

These three,

Three thousand confident, in act as many;

For three performers are the file, when all.

The rest do nothing; with this word stand, stand,

Accommodated by the place, (more charming

With their own nobleness, which could have turn'd

A distaff to a lance) gilded pale looks. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

2. With the particle to, to adapt, to fit, to make consistent with. He had altered many things, not that they were not natural before, but that he might accommodate himself to the age in which he lived.

Dryden on Dramatic Poetry.

'Twas his misfortune to light upon an hypothesis, that could not be accommodated to the nature of things, and human affairs; his principles could not be made to agree with that constitution and order which God had settled in the world.

Locke.

ACCOMMODATE. adj. [accommodatus, Lat.] Suitable, fit; used sometimes with the particle for, but more frequently with to.

They are so acted and directed by nature, as to cast their eggs in such places as are most accommodate for the exclusion of their young, and where there is food ready for them so soon as they be hatched.

Ray on the Creation.

In these cases, we examine the why, the what, and the how, of things, and propose means accommodate to the end. L'Estrange.

God did not primarily intend to appoint this way of worship, and to impose it upon them as that which was most proper and agreeable to him, but that he condescended to it as most accommodate to their present state and inclination.

Tillotson, Sermon v.

ACCOMMODATELY. adv. [from accommodate.] Suitably, fitly.

ACCOMMODATION. n. f. [from accommodate.]

1. Provision of conveniences.

2. In the plural, conveniences, things requisite to ease or refreshment.

The king's commissioners were to have such accommodations, as the other thought fit to leave to them; who had been very civil to the king's commissioners.

Clarendon, b. viii.

3. Adaptation, fitness; with the particle to.

The organization of the body, with a accommodation to its functions, tions, is fitted with the most curious mechanism. Hale's Origin.

F

4. Composition of a difference, reconciliation, adjustment.

ACCO'MPANABLE. adj. [from accompany.] Sociable; a word now not used.

A show, as it were, of an accompanable solitariness, and of a civil wildness. Sidney, b. i.

ACCO'MPANIÉ. n. f. [from accompany.] The person that makes part of the company; companion. Diét.

To ACCOMPANY. v. a. [accompagner, Fr.]

1. To be with another as a companion.

Go visit her, in her chaste bower of rest,
Accompany'd with angel-like delights. Spenser, Sonnet iii.

The great business of the senses being to make us take notice of what hurts or advantages the body, it is wisely ordered by nature, that pain should accompany the reception of several ideas. Locke.

2. To join with.

With regard to sheep, as folly is usually accompanied with perverseness, so it is here. There is something so monstrous to deal in a commodity, which we are not allowed to export; there is, I say, something so sottish, that it wants a name, in our language, to express it by. Swift's short View of Ireland.

ACCO'MPLICE. n. f. [complice, Fr. from complex, a word in the barbarous Latin, much in use, Complices fertæ prudentius.]

1. An associate, a partaker, usually in an ill sense.

There were several scandalous reports industriously spread by Wood, and his accomplices, to discourage all opposition against his infamous project. Swift.

2. A partner, or co-operator; in a sense indifferent.

If a tongue would be talking without a mouth, what could it have done, when it had all its organs of speech, and accomplices of sound, about it. Addison, Spectator, N° 247.

3. It is used with the particle to before a thing, and with before a person.

Childless Arturius, vastly rich before,
Thus by his losses multiplies his store,
Suspected for accomplice to the fire,
That burnt his palace but to build it higher. Dryd. Juv. Sat.

Who, should they steal, for want of his relief,
He judg'd himself accomplice with the thief. Dryden's Fables.

To ACCOMPLISH. v. a. [accomplir, Fr. from compleo, Lat.]

1. To complete, to execute fully; as, to accomplish a design.

He that is far off shall die of the pestilence, and he that is near shall fall by the sword, and he that remaineth, and is besieged, shall die by the famine. Thus will I accomplish my fury upon them. Ezekiel, vi. 12.

2. To complete a period of time.

He would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem. Daniel, ix. 2.

3. To fulfil; as, a prophecy.

The vision,
Which I made known to Lucius ere the stroke
Of this yet scarce cold battle, at this instant
Is full accomplish'd. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

We see every day those events exactly accomplished, which our Saviour foretold at so great a distance. Addison on the Christian Religion.

4. To gain, to obtain.

Tell him from me (as he will win my love)
He bear himself with honourable action;
Such as he hath observ'd in noble ladies
Unto their lords, by them accomplished. Shak. Tam. of a Shrew.

I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap,
And deck my body in gay ornaments.
Oh miserable thought, and more unlikely,
Than to accomplish twenty golden crowns. Shak. Henry V.

5. To adorn, or furnish, either mind or body.

From the tents
The armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakespeare's Henry V.

ACCO'MPLISHED. participial adj.

1. Complete in some qualification.

For who expects, that, under a tutor, a young gentleman should be an accomplished public orator or logician. Locke on Ed.

2. Elegant, finished in respect of embellishments; used commonly with respect to acquired qualifications, without including moral excellence.

The next I took to wife,
O that I never had! fond with too late,
Was in the vale of Sorec, Dalila,
That specious monster, my accomplish'd snare. Samson Agon.

ACCO'MPLISHER. n. f. [from accomplish.] The person that accomplishes. Diét.

ACCO'MPLISHMENT. n. f. [accomplissement, Fr.]

1. Completion, full performance, perfection.

Thereby he might evade the accomplishment of those afflictions, he now but gradually endureth. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

This would be the accomplishment of their common felicity, in case, by their evil, either through destiny or advice, they suffered not the occasion to be lost. Sir John Haywood.

He thought it impossible to find, in any one body, all those perfections which he sought for the accomplishment of a Helena; because nature, in any individual person, makes nothing that is perfect in all its parts. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Pref.

2. Completion; as, of a prophecy.

The miraculous success of the apostles preaching, and the accomplishment of many of their predictions, which, to those early christians, were matters of faith only, are, to us, matters of sight and experience. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. Embellishment, elegance, ornament of mind or body.

Young heirs, and elder brothers, from their own reflecting upon the estates they are born to, and therefore thinking all other accomplishments unnecessary, are of no manner of use but to keep up their families. Addison, Spectator, N° 123.

4. The act of obtaining any thing.

The means suggested by policy and worldly wisdom, for the attainment of those earthly enjoyments, are unfit for that purpose, not only upon the account of their insufficiency for, but also of their frequent opposition and contrariety to, the accomplishment of such ends. South's Sermons.

ACCO'MPT. n. f. [Fr. compter and compte, anciently acompter. Skinner.] An account, a reckoning. See ACCOUNT.

The soul may have time to call itself to a just account of all things past, by means whereof repentance is perfected. Hooker, b. v. § 46.

Each Christmas they accounts did clear;

And wound their bottom round the year. Prior.

ACCO'MPTANT. n. f. [accountant, Fr.] A reckoner, computer. See ACCOUNTANT.

As the account runs on, generally the accountant goes backward. South's Sermons.

ACCO'MPTING-DAY. The day on which the reckoning is to be settled.

To whom thou much dost owe, thou much must pay;

Think on the debt against th' accounting-day. Sir J. Denham.

To ACCORD. v. a. [derived, by some, from corda the string of a musical instrument, by others, from corda hearts; in the first, implying harmony, in the other, unity.]

To make agree; to adjust one thing to another; with the particle to.

The first sports the shepherds showed, were full of such leaps and gambols, as being accorded to the pipe which they bore in their mouths, even as they danced, made a right picture of their chief god Pan, and his companions the satyrs. Sidney, b. i.

Her hands accorded the lute's music to the voice; her panting heart danced to the music. Sidney, b. ii.

The lights and shades, whose well accorded strife,

Gives all the strength and colour of our life. Pope's Epist.

To ACCORD. v. n. To agree, to suit one with another; with the particle with.

Things are often spoke, and seldom meant;

But that my heart accordeth with my tongue,

Seeing the deed is meritorious,

And to preserve my sovereign from his foe. Shak. Hen. VI.

Several of the main parts of Moses's history, as concerning the flood, and the first fathers of the several nations of the world, do very well accord with the most ancient accounts of profane history. Tillotson, Sermon i.

ACCO'RD. n. f. [accord, Fr.]

1. A compact; an agreement.

If both are satisfy'd with this accord,

Swear by the laws of knighthood on my sword. Dryd. Fab.

2. Concurrence, union of mind.

At last such grace I found, and means I wrought,

That I that lady to my spouse had won,

Accord of friends, consent of parents sought,

Affiance made, my happiness begun.

Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. 4.

They gathered themselves together, to fight with Joshua and Israel, with one accord.

Joshua, ix. 2.

3. Harmony, symmetry, just correspondence of one thing with another.

Beauty is nothing else but a just accord and mutual harmony of the members, animated by a healthful constitution. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Pref.

4. Musical note.

Try if there were in one steeple two bells of unison, whether the striking of the one would move the other, more than if it were another accord. Bacon's Natural History, N° 281.

We must not blame Apollo, but his lute,

If false accords from her false strings be sent. Sir Jo. Davies.

5. Voluntary motion.

Ne Guyon yet spake word,

Till that they came unto an iron door,

Which to them open'd of its own accord. Fairy Q. b. ii. c. 7.

Will you blame any man for doing that of his own accord, which all men should be compelled to do, that are not willing of themselves. Hooker.

All animal substances, exposed to the air, turn alkaline of their own accord; and some vegetables, by heat, will not turn acid, but alkaline. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

6. Action in speaking, correspondent to the words.

Titus, I am come to talk with thee.—

—No, not a word: how can I grace my talk,

Wanting a hand to give it that accord? Shakesp. Titus And.

ACCO'RDANCE. n. f. [from accord.]

1. Agreement with a person; with the particle with.

And prays he may in long accordance bide,

With that great worth which hath such wonders wrought.

Fairfax, b. ii. Stanza 63.

2. Conformity to something.

The only way of defining of sin, is, by the contrariety to the will of God; as of good, by the accordance with that will.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

ACCO'RDANT. adj. [accordant, Fr.] Willing; in a good humour.

The prince discovered to Claudio, that he loved your niece my daughter, and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance; and, if he found her accordant, he meant to take the present time by the top, and instantly break with you of it.

Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

ACCO'RDING. prep. [from accord.]

1. In a manner suitable to, agreeably to, in proportion.

Our churches are places provided, that the people might there assemble themselves in due and decent manner, according to their several degrees and orders.

Hooker, b. v. § 13.

Our zeal, then, should be according to knowledge. And what kind of knowledge? Without all question, first, according to the true, saving, evangelical knowledge. It should be according to the gospel, the whole gospel: not only according to its truths, but precepts: not only according to its free grace, but necessary duties: not only according to its mysteries, but also its commandments.

Sprat's Sermons.

How much more noble is the fame that is built on candour and ingenuity, according to those beautiful lines of Sir John Denham, in his Poem on Fletcher's works.

Addis. Spect.

A man may, with prudence and a good conscience, approve of the professed principles of one party more than the other, according as he thinks they best promote the good of church and state.

Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of Engl. man.

2. With regard to.

God made all things in number, weight, and measure, and gave them to be considered by us according to these properties, which are inherent in created beings.

Holder on Time.

ACCO'RDINGLY. adv. [from accord.] Agreeably, suitably, conformably.

Sirrah, thou'rt said to have a stubborn soul,

That apprehends no further than this world;

And squar'st thy life accordingly. Shakesp. Measure for Meas.

As the actions of men are of sundry distinct kinds, so the laws thereof must accordingly be distinguished.

Hooker, b. i.

Whoever is so assured of the authority and sense of scripture, as to believe the doctrine of it, and to live accordingly, shall be saved.

Tillotson's Preface.

Mealy substances, fermented, turn sour. Accordingly, given to a weak child, they still retain their nature; for bread will give them the cholic.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

TO ACCO'ST. v. a. [acoster, Fr.] To speak to first; to address; to salute.

You mistake, knight: acost her, front her, board her, woo her, assail her.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

At length, collecting all his serpent wiles,

With soothing words renew'd, him thus acosts. Parad. Reg.

I first acosted him: I su'd, I sought,

And, with a loving force, to Pheneus brought. Dryd. Æneid.

ACCO'STABLE. adj. [from acost.] Easy of access; familiar.

They were both indubitable, strong, and high-minded men, yet of sweet and acostable nature, almost equally delighting in the press and affluence of dependents and suitors.

Wotton.

ACCO'UNT. n. f. [from the old French acompt, from compactus, Lat. originally written acompt, which see; but, by gradually softening the pronunciation, in time the orthography changed to account.]

1. A computation of debts or expences; a register of facts relating to money.

At many times I brought in my accounts,

Laid them before you; you would throw them off,

And say you found them in mine honesty. Shakesp. Timon.

When my young master has once got the skill of keeping accounts (which is a business of reason more than arithmetic) perhaps it will not be amiss, that his father from thenceforth require him to do it in all his concerns. Locke on Education.

2. The state or result of a computation; as, the account stands thus between us.

Behold this have I found, saith the Preacher, counting one by one, to find out the account.

Ecclesiasticus, vii. 27.

3. Such a state of persons or things, as may make them more or less worthy of being considered in the reckoning. Value, or estimation.

For the care that they took for their wives and their children, their brethren and kinsfolks, was in least account with them: but the greatest and principal fear was for the holy temple.

2 Maccab. xv. 18.

That good affection, which things of smaller account have once set on work, is by so much the more easily raised higher.

Hooker, b. v. § 35.

I should make more account of their judgment, who are men of sense, and yet have never touched a pencil, than of the opinion given by the greatest part of painters. Dryden's Dufresne.

We would establish our souls in such a solid and substantial virtue, as will turn to account in that great day, when it must stand the test of infinite wisdom and justice. Add. Spect. N° 399.

4. Distinction, dignity, rank.

There is such a peculiarity in Homer's manner of apostrophizing Eumæus, and speaking of him in the second person: it is generally applied, by that poet, only to men of account and distinction.

Pope's Odyssey; notes.

5. A reckoning verified by finding the value of a thing equal to what it was accounted.

Considering the usual motives of human actions, which are pleasure, profit, and ambition, I cannot yet comprehend how those persons find their account in any of the three.

Swift's Address to Parliament.

6. A reckoning referred to, or sum charged upon any particular person; and thence, figuratively, regard, consideration, sake.

If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on my account.

Philemon, i. 8.

This must be always remembered, that nothing can come into the account of recreation, that is not done with delight.

Locke on Education, § 197.

In matters where his judgment led him to oppose men on a public account, he would do it vigorously and heartily.

Atterbury's Sermons.

The assertion is our Saviour's, though uttered by him in the person of Abraham, the father of the faithful; who, on the account of that character, is very fitly introduced.

Idem.

These tribunes, a year or two after their institution, kindled great dissensions between the nobles and the commons, on the account of Coriolanus, a nobleman, whom the latter had impeached.

Swift's Contests in Athens and Rome.

Nothing can recommend itself to our love, on any other account, but either as it promotes our present, or is a means to assure to us a future happiness.

Rogers's Sermon v.

Sempronius gives no thanks on this account. Addison's Cato.

7. A narrative, relation; in this use it may seem to be derived from conte, Fr. a tale, a narration.

8. The review or examination of an affair taken by authority; as, the magistrate took an account of the tumult.

Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his servants; and when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him, which owed him ten thousand talents.

Matt. xix. 23, 24.

9. The relation and reasons of a transaction given to a person in authority.

Fie, my lord, fie! a soldier, and afraid! What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The true ground of morality can only be the will and law of a God, who sees men in the dark, has in his hands rewards and punishments, and power enough to call to account the proudest offender.

Locke.

10. Explanation; assignment of causes.

It is easy to give account, how it comes to pass, that though all men desire happiness, yet their wills carry them so contrarily.

Locke.

It being, in our author's account, a right acquired by begetting, to rule over those he had begotten, it was not a power possible to be inherited, because the right, being consequent to, and built on, an act perfectly personal, made that power so too, and impossible to be inherited.

Locke.

11. An opinion concerning things previously established.

These were designed to join with the forces at sea, there being prepared a number of flat-bottomed boats to transport the land-forces, under the wing of the great navy: for they made no account, but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas.

Bacon's Considerations on War with Spain.

A prodigal young fellow, that had sold his clothes, upon the sight of a swallow, made account that summer was at hand, and away went his shirt too.

L'Estrange, Fable cxxvii.

12. The reasons of any thing collected.

Being convinced, upon all accounts, that they had the same reason to believe the history of our Saviour, as that of any other person to which they themselves were not actually eye-witnesses, they were bound, by all the rules of historical faith, and of right reason, to give credit to this history.

Addison on the Christian Religion.

13. In law.

Account is, in the common law, taken for a writ or action brought against a man, that, by means of office or business undertaken, is to render an account unto another; as, a bailiff toward his master, a guardian to his ward.

Cowell.

TO ACCO'UNT. v. a. [See ACCOUNT.]

1. To esteem, to think, to hold in opinion.

That also was accounted a land of giants.

Deut.

2. To

2. To reckon, to compute.

The calendar months are likewise arbitrarily and unequally settled by the same power; by which months we, to this day, account, and they measure, and make up, that which we call the Julian year. Holder on Time.

3. To give an account, to assign the causes; in which sense it is followed by the particle for.

If any one should ask, why our general continued so easy to the last? I know no other way to account for it, but by that unmeasurable love of wealth, which his best friends allow to be his predominant passion. Swift.

4. To make up the reckoning; to answer for practices.

Then thou shalt see him plung'd, when least he fears,
At once accounting for his deep arrears. Dryd. Jew. Sat. xiii.
They have no uneasy presages of a future reckoning, wherein the pleasures they now taste, must be accounted for; and may, perhaps, be outweighed by the pains, which shall then lay hold of them. Atterbury's Sermons.

5. To appear as the medium by which any thing may be explained.

Such as have a faulty circulation through the lungs, ought to eat very little at a time; because the increase of the quantity of fresh chyle, must make that circulation still more uneasy; which, indeed, is the case of consumptive and some asthmatic persons, and accounts for the symptoms they are troubled with after eating. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

6. To assign to, with the particle to.

For some years, really accrued the yearly sum of two hundred thousand pounds to the king's coffers: and it was, in truth, the only project that was accounted to his own service. Clarendon.

7. To hold in esteem.

Silver was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon. Chron.
ACCO'UNTABLE. adj. [from account.] Of whom an account may be required; who must answer for: followed by the particle to before the person, and for before the thing.

Accountable to none,

But to my conscience and my God alone. Oldham.

* Thinking themselves excused from standing upon their own legs, or being accountable for their own conduct, they very seldom trouble themselves with enquiries. Locke on Education.

The good magistrate will make no distinction; for the judgment is God's; and he will look upon himself as accountable at his bar for the equity of it. Atterbury's Sermons.

ACCO'UNTANT. adj. [from account.] Accountable to; responsible for.

His offence is so, as it appears

Accountant to the law upon that pain. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.

I love her too,

Not out of absolute lust (though, peradventure,

I stand accountant for as great a sin)

But partly led to diet my revenge. Shakespeare's Othello.

ACCO'UNTANT. n. f. [See ACCOMPTANT.] A computer; a man skilled or employed in accounts.

The different compute of divers states; the short and irreconcilable years of some; the exceeding error in the natural frame of others; and the false deductions of ordinary accountants in most. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ACCO'UNT-BOOK. n. f. A book containing accounts.

I would endeavour to comfort myself upon the loss of friends, as I do upon the loss of money; by turning to my account-book, and seeing whether I have enough left for my support. Swift, Letter lxii.

ACCO'UNTING. n. f. [from account.] The act of reckoning, or making up of accounts.

This method faithfully observed, must keep a man from breaking, or running behind hand in his spiritual estate; which, without frequent accountings, he will hardly be able to prevent. South's Sermons.

TO ACCO'UPLE. v. a. [accoupler, Fr.] To join, to link together.

He sent a solemn embassy to treat a peace and league with the king; accoupling it with an article in the nature of a request. Bacon's Henry VII.

TO ACCO'URAGE. v. a. [obsolete. See COURAGE.] To animate.

That forward pair she ever would assuage,

When they would strive due reason to exceed;

But that same froward twain would accourage,

And of her plenty add unto her need. Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. ii.

TO ACCO'URT. v. a. [See TO COURT.] To entertain with courtship, or courtesy; a word now not in use.

Who all this while were at their wanton rest,

Accounting each her friend with lavish feast. Fairy Q. b. ii. c. ii.

TO ACCOUTRE. v. a. [accoutrer, Fr.] To dress, to equip.

Is it for this they study? to grow pale,

And miss the pleasures of a glorious meal?

For this, in rags accoutred are they seen,

And made the may-game of the public spleen? Dryd. Persius.

ACCO'UTREMENT. n. f. [accoutrement, Fr.] Dress, equipage, furniture relating to the person; trappings, ornaments.

I profess requital to a hair's breadth; not only in the simple office of love, but in all the accoutrement, complement, and ceremony of it. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

I have seen the pope officiate at St. Peter's, where, for two hours together, he was busied in putting on or off his different accoutrements, according to the different parts he was to act in them. Addison. Spectator, N° 201.

How gay with all th' accoutrements of war,

The Britons come, with gold well-fraught they come. Phil.

Christianity is lost among them, in the trappings and accoutrements of it; with which, instead of adorning religion, they have strangely disguised it, and quite stifled it in the croud of external rites and ceremonies. Tillotson, Sermon xxviii.

ACCRETION. n. f. [accretio, Lat.] The act of growing to another, so as to encrease it.

Plants do nourish; inanimate bodies do not: they have an accretion, but no alimentation. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 602.

The changes seem to be effected by the exhaling of the moisture, which may leave the tinging corpuscles more dense, and something augmented by the accretion of the oily and earthy parts of that moisture. Newton's Optics.

Infants support abstinence worst, from the quantity of aliment consumed in accretion. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ACC'RETIVE. adj. [from accretion.] Growing; that which by growth is added.

If the motion be very slow, we perceive it not: we have no sense of the accretive motion of plants and animals: and the sly shadow steals away upon the dial; and the quickest eye can discover no more but that it is gone. Glanv. Sceptis Scient.

TO ACCRO'ACH. v. a. [accrocher, Fr.] To draw to one as with a hook; to gripe, to draw away by degrees what is another's.ACCRO'ACHMENT. n. f. [from accroach.] The act of accroaching.

Dict.

TO ACCRUE. v. n. [from the participle accrû, formed from accroître, Fr.]

1. To accede to, to be added to; as, a natural production or effect, without any particular respect to good or ill.

The Son of God, by his incarnation, hath changed the manner of that personal subsistence; no alteration thereby accruing to the nature of God. Hooker, b. v. § 54.

2. To be added, as an advantage or improvement, in a sense inclining to good rather than ill; in which meaning it is more frequently used by later authors.

From which compact there arising an obligation upon every one, so to convey his meaning, there accrues also a right to every one, by the same signs, to judge of the sense or meaning of the person so obliged to express himself. South's Sermons.

Let the evidence of such a particular miracle be never so bright and clear, yet it is still but particular; and must therefore want that kind of force, that degree of influence, which accrues to a standing general proof, from its having been tried or approved, and consented to, by men of all ranks and capacities, of all tempers and interests, of all ages and nations. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. To append to, or arise from; as, an ill consequence; this sense seems to be less proper.

His scholar Aristotle, as in many other particulars, so likewise in this, did justly oppose him, and became one of the authors; choosing a certain benefit, before the hazard that might accrue from the disrespect of ignorant persons. Wilk. Math. Mag.

4. In a commercial sense, to be produced, or arise; as, profits.

The yearly benefit, that, out of those his works, accrueth to her majesty, amounteth to one thousand pounds. Carew's Surv.

The great profits which have accrued to the duke of Florence from his free port, have set several of the states of Italy on the same subject. Addison on Italy.

5. Sometimes to follow, as loss; but less properly.

The benefit or loss of such a trade accruing to the government, until it comes to take root in the nation. Temple's Misc.

ACCUBA'TION. n. f. [from accubo, to lye down to, Lat.] The antient posture of leaning at meals.

It will appear, that accubation, or lying down at meals, was a gesture used by very many nations. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. v.

TO ACCU'MB. v. a. [accumbo, Lat.] To lie at the table, according to the ancient manner. *Dict.TO ACCU'MULATE. v. a. [from accumulo, Lat.] To heap one thing upon another; to pile up, to heap together. It is used either literally, as, to accumulate money, or, figuratively, as, to accumulate merit or wickedness.

If thou dost slander her, and torture me,

Never pray more; abandon all remorse;

On horrors head horrors accumulate;

For nothing canst thou to damnation add. Shakesp. Othello.

Crusht by imaginary treason's weight,

Which too much merit did accumulate. Sir John Denham.

ACCUMULA'TION. n. f. [from accumulate.]

1. The act of accumulating.

Some, perhaps, might otherwise wonder at such an accumulation of benefits, like a kind of embroidering, or lifting of one favour upon another. Wotton.

One of my place in Syria, his lieutenant,

For quick accumulation of renown,

Which he achiev'd by th' minute, lost his favour.

Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

2. The

2. The state of being accumulated.

By the regular returns of it in some people, and their freedom from it after the morbid matter is exhausted, it looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of it, as of other humours in the body, growing perhaps on some people as corns.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

ACCUMULATIVE. adj. [from accumulate.]

1. That which accumulates.
2. That which is accumulated.

If the injury meet not with meekness, it then acquires another accumulative guilt, and stands answerable not only for its own positive ill, but for all the accidental, which it causes in the sufferer.

Government of the Tongue, § 4.

ACCUMULATOR. n. f. [from accumulate.] He that accumulates; a gatherer or heaper together.

Injuries may fall upon the passive man, yet there would be no broils and quarrels, the great accumulators and multipliers of injuries; which demonstrates how unjustly meekness is charged with so much as accidental production of them.

Decay of Piety.

ACCURACY. n. f. [from accuratio, Lat.] Exactness, nicety.

The man who hath the stupid ignorance, or hardened effrontery! to insult the revealed will of God; or the petulant conceit to turn it into ridicule; or the arrogance to make his own perfections the measure of the Divinity; or, at best, that can collate a text, or quote an authority, with an insipid accuracy; or demonstrate a plain proposition, in all the formality of A's and B's; these now are the only men worth mentioning.

Delany.

We consider the uniformity of the whole design, accuracy of the calculations, and skill in restoring and comparing passages of ancient authors.

Arbuthnot on Coins, Pref.

ACCURATE. adj. [from accuratus, Lat.]

1. Exact, as opposed to negligence or ignorance, applied to persons.
2. Exact, without defect or failure, applied to things.

No man living has made more accurate trials than Reaumur, that brightest ornament of France.

Colson Elements of Nat. Phil.

ACCURATELY. adv. [from accurate.] In an accurate manner; exactly, without error, nicely.

The sine of incidence is either accurately, or very nearly, in a given ratio to the sine of refraction.

Newt. Opt. ax. v.

That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter, should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom.

Bentley's Sermons.

ACCURATENESS. n. f. [from accurate.] Exactness, nicety.

But sometime after, suspecting that in making this observation I had not determined the diameter of the sphere with sufficient accurateness, I repeated the experiment.

Newton's Opt.

To ACCURSE. v. a. [See CURSE.] To doom to misery; to invoke misery upon any one.

As if it were an unlucky comet, or as if God had so accursed it, that it should never shine to give light in things concerning our duty any way towards him.

Hooker, b. iii. § 4.

ACCURSED. part. adj.

1. That which is cursed or doomed to misery.

'Tis the most certain sign the world's accurst,

That the best things corrupted are and worst.

Denb. Poems.

2. That which deserves the curse; execrable; hateful; detestable; and, by consequence, wicked; malignant.

Some holy angel

Fly to the court of England, and unfold

His message ere he come; that a swift blessing

May soon return to this our suffering country,

Under a hand accurs'd!

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The chief part of the misery of wicked men, and those accursed spirits, the devils, is this, that they are of a disposition contrary to God.

Tillotson, Sermon iv.

They, like the seed from which they sprung, accurst,

Against the gods immortal hatred nurs'd.

Dryden's Ovid.

ACCUSABLE. adj. [from the verb accuse.] That which may be censured; blamable; culpable.

There would be a manifest defect, and her improvisation justly accusable; if animals, so subject unto diseases from bilious causes, should want a proper conveyance for choler.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ACCUSATION. n. f. [from accuse.]

1. The act of accusing.

Thus they in mutual accusation spent

The fruitless hours, but neither self-condemning,

And of their vain contest appear'd no end.

Milt. Par. Lost.

2. The charge brought against any one by the accuser.

You read

These accusations, and these grievous crimes

Committed by your person, and your followers.

Shakespeare's Richard II.

All accusation, in the very nature of the thing, still supposing, and being founded upon some law: for where there is no law, there can be no transgression; and where there can be no transgression, I am sure there ought to be no accusation.

South.

3. In the sense of the courts —

A declaration of some crime preferred before a competent judge, by the intervention of an inscription lawfully made, in order to inflict some judgment on the guilty person.

ACCUSATIVE. n. adj. [from accusativus, Lat.] A term of grammar, signifying the relation of the noun, on which the action implied in the verb terminates.

ACCUSATORY. adj. [from accuse.] That which produceth or containeth an accusation.

In a charge of adultery, the accuser ought to set forth, in the accusatory libel, some certain and definite time.

Ayl. Parerg.

To ACCUSE. v. a. [from accuso, Lat.]

1. To charge with a crime. It requires the particle of before the subject of accusation.

He stripp'd the bears-foot of its leafy growth;

And, calling western winds, accus'd the spring of sloth.

Dryden's Virgil, Georg. iv. l. 205.

The professors are accused of all the ill practices which may seem to be the ill consequences of their principles.

2. It sometimes admits the particle for.

Never send up a leg of a fowl at supper, while there is a cat or dog in the house, that can be accused for running away with it: But, if there happen to be neither, you must lay it upon the rats, or a strange greyhound.

Swift's Directions to the Cook.

3. To blame or censure, in opposition to applause or justification.

Their conscience bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing or else excusing one another.

Rom. ii. 15.

Your valour would your sloth too much accuse,

And therefore, like themselves, they princes choose.

Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

ACCUSER. n. f. [from accuse.] He that brings a charge against another.

There are some persons forbidden to be accusers, on the score of their sex, as women; others, of their age, as pupils and infants; others, upon the account of some crimes committed by them; and others, on the score of some filthy lucre to propose to gain thereby; others, on the score of their conditions, as libertines against their patrons; and others, through a suspicion of calumny, as having once already given false evidence; and, lastly, others on account of their poverty, as not being worth more than fifty aurei.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

—That good man, who drank the pois'nous draught,

With mind serene, and could not wish to see

His vile accuser drink as deep as he.

Dryd. Juv. Sat. xiii.

If the person accused maketh his innocence plainly to appear upon his trial, the accuser is immediately put to an ignominious death; and, out of his goods and lands, the innocent person is quadruply recompensed.

Gulliver's Travels.

To ACCUSTOM. v. a. [from accoutumer, Fr.] To habituate, to enure, with the particle to. It is used chiefly of persons.

How shall we breathe in other air

Less pure, accusom'd to immortal fruits?

Par. Lost, b. xi.

It has been some advantage to accusom one's self to books of the same edition.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind, p. i. c. 17.

ACCUSTOMABLE. adj. [from accustom.] Of long custom or habit; habitual, customary.

Animals even of the same original, extraction, and species, may be diversified by accusomable residence in one climate, from what they are in another.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ACCUSTOMABLY. adv. According to custom.

Touching the king's fines accusomably paid for the purchasing of writs original, I find no certain beginning of them, and do therefore think that they also grew up with the chancery.

Bacon's Alienation.

ACCUSTOMANCE. n. f. [from accoutumance, Fr.] Custom, habit, use.

Through accusomance and negligence, and perhaps some other causes, we neither feel it in our own bodies, nor take notice of it in others.

Boyle's Works.

ACCUSTOMARILY. adv. In a customary manner; according to common or customary practice.

ACCUSTOMARY. adj. [from accustom.] Usual, practised; according to custom.

ACCUSTOMED. [from accustom.] According to custom; frequent; usual.

Look how she rubs her hands. — It is an accusomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands: I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.

Shakefp. Macbeth.

ACE. n. f. [As not only signified a piece of money, but any integer, from whence is derived the word ace, or unit. Thus As signified the whole inheritance.

Arbuthnot on Coins.]

1. An unit; a single point on cards or dice.

When lots are shuffled together in a lap, urn, or pitcher; or if a man blindfold casts a die, what reason in the world can he have to presume, that he shall draw a white stone rather than a black, or throw an ace rather than a six.

South Sermons.

2. A small quantity.

He will not bate an ace of absolute certainty; but however doubtful or improbable the thing is, coming from him it must go for an indisputable truth.

Government of the Tongue, § 11.

I'll not wag an ace farther: the whole world shall not bribe me to it. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
ACE'PHALOUS. n. a. [ἀκεφαλός, Gr.] Without a head. Dict.
ACE'RB. adj. [acerbus, Lat.] Acid, with an addition of roughness, as most fruits are before they are ripe. Quincy.
ACE'RBITY. n. f. [acerbitas, Lat.]
 1. A rough sower taste.
 2. Applied to men, sharpness of temper; severity.

True it is, that the talents for criticism, namely, smartness, quick censure, vivacity of remark, indeed all but acerbity, seem rather the gifts of youth than of old age. Pope's Intr. to Dun.
TO ACER'VATE. v. a. [acervo, Lat.] To heap up. Dict.
ACERVA'TION. n. f. [from acervate.] The act of heaping together.
ACE'ROUSE. adj. Full of heaps. Dict.
ACE'SCENT. adj. [acescens, Lat.] That which has a tendency to sourness or acidity.

The same persons, perhaps, had enjoyed their health as well with a mixture of animal diet, qualified with a sufficient quantity of acescents; as, bread, vinegar, and fermented liquors. Arbutnot on Aliments.
ACETO'SE. adj. That which has in it acids or vinegar. Dict.

ACETO'SITY. n. f. [from acetose.] The state of being acetose, or of containing vinegar. Dict.
ACE'TOUS. adj. [from acetum, vinegar, Lat.] Having the quality of vinegar, sour.

Raisins, which consist chiefly of the juice of grapes, inspissated in the skins or husks by the avolation of the superfluous moisture through their pores, being distilled in a retort, did not afford any vinous, but rather an acetous spirit. Boyle of Spirits.
ACHE. n. f. [ace, Sax. æce, Gr. now generally written ake, and in the plural akes, of one syllable; the primitive manner being preserved chiefly in poetry, for the sake of the measure.]
 A continued pain. See AKE.

I'll rack thee with old cramps;
 Fill all thy bones with aches, make thee roar,
 That beasts shall tremble at thy din. Shakespeare's Tempest.
 A coming shew'r your shooting corns presage,
 Old aches throb, your hollow tooth will urge. Swift's Misc.

TO ACHE. v. n. [See ACHE.] To be in pain.
 Upon this account, our senses are dulled and spent by any extraordinary intention, and our very eyes will ache, if long fixed upon any difficultly discerned object. Glanv. Scepsis, c. xiv.
TO ACHIEVE. v. a. [achever, Fr. to complete.]

1. To perform, to finish a design prosperously.
 Our toils, my friends, are crown'd with sure success:
 The greater part perform'd, achieve the less. Dryd. Æneid.
 2. To gain, to obtain.
 Experience is by industry achiev'd,
 And perfected by the swift course of time.

Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.
 Tranio, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio,
 If I achieve not this young modest girl.
Shakespeare's Taming the Shrew.
 Thou hast achiev'd our liberty, confin'd
 Within hell-gates till now. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii. l. 368.
 Show all the spoils by valiant kings achiev'd,
 And groaning nations by their arms reliev'd. Prior.

AN ACHI'EVER. n. f. He that performs; he that obtains what he endeavours after.
 A victory is twice itself, when the achiever brings home full numbers. Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

AN ACHI'EVEMENT. n. f. [achievement, Fr.]
 1. The performance of an action.
 From every coast that heaven walks about,
 Have thither come the noble martial crew,
 That famous hard achievements still pursue. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 2. The escutcheon, or ensigns armorial, granted to any man for the performance of great actions.

Then shall the war, and stern debate, and strife
 Immortal, be the business of my life;
 And in thy fane, the dusty spoils among,
 High on the burnish'd roof, my banner shall be hung;
 Rank'd with my champions bucklers, and below
 With arms revers'd, th' achievements of the foe. Dryd. Fab.
Achievement, in the first sense, is derived from achieve, as it signifies to perform; in the second, from achieve, as it imports to gain.

ACHOR. n. f. [achor, Lat. ἀχὼρ, Gr. furfur.]
 A species of the herpes; it appears with a crusty scab, which causes an itching on the surface of the head, occasioned by a salt sharp serum oozing through the skin. Quincy.

A'CID. adj. [acidus, Lat. acide, Fr.] Sour, sharp.
 Wild trees last longer than garden trees; and in the same kind, those whose fruit is acid, more than those whose fruit is sweet. Bacon's Natural History, N° 585.

Acid, or sour, proceeds from a salt of the same nature, without mixture of oil; in austere tastes the oily parts have not disentangled themselves from the salts and earthy parts; such is the taste of unripe fruits. Arbutnot on aliments.
 Liquors and substances are called acids, which being composed of pointed particles, affect the taste in a sharp and piercing manner. The common way of trying, whether any particular liquor hath in it any particles of this kind, is by mixing it with syrup of violets, which it will turn of a red colour; but if it contains alkaline or lixivial particles, it changes that syrup green. Quincy.

ACI'DITY. n. f. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; an acid taste; sharpness; sourness.
 Fishes, by the help of a dissolvent liquor, corrode and reduce their meats, skin, bones, and all, into a chylus or cremor; and yet this liquor manifests nothing of acidity to the taste. Ray on the Creation.

When the taste of the mouth is bitter, it is a sign of a redundancy of a bilious alkali, and demands a quite different diet from the case of acidity or sourness. Arbutnot on Aliments.
A'CIDNESS. n. f. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; acidity. See ACIDITY.

ACI'DULÆ. n. f. [that is, aquæ acidulæ.]
 Medicinal springs impregnated with sharp particles, as all the nitrous, chalybeate, and alum-springs are. Quincy.
 The acidulæ, or medical springs, emit a greater quantity of their minerals than usual; and even the ordinary springs, which were before clear, fresh and limpid, become thick and turbid, and are impregnated with sulphur and other minerals, as long as the earthquake lasts. Woodward's Natural History, p. 4.

TO ACI'DULATE. v. a. [aciduler, Fr.] To impregnate or tinge with acids in a slight degree.

The muriatic scurvy is evidently a diet of fresh unsalted things; watery liquors acidulated, farinaceous emollient substances, sour milk, butter, and acid fruits. Arbutnot on Alim.
TO ACKNO'WLEDGE. v. a. [a word formed, as it seems, between the Latin and English, from agnosco, and knowledge, which is deduced from the Saxon, cnapan, to know.]

1. To own the knowledge of; to own any thing or person in a particular character.
 My people do already know my mind,
 And will acknowledge you and Jessica,
 In place of lord Bassanio and myself. Shakesp. Mer. of Ven.
 None that acknowledge God, or providence,
 Their souls eternity did ever doubt. Sir John Davies.

2. To confess; as, a fault.
 For I acknowledge my transgressions; and my sin is ever before me. Psaln li. 3.
 3. To own; as, a benefit; sometimes with the particle to before the person conferring the benefit.

His spirit
 Taught them; but they his gifts acknowledg'd not. Par. Lost.
 In the first place, therefore, I thankfully acknowledge to the Almighty power the assistance he has given me in the beginning, and the prosecution of my present studies. Dryden's Æneis.
ACKNO'WLEDGING. adj. [from acknowledge.] Grateful; ready to acknowledge benefits received.

He has shewn his hero acknowledging and ungrateful, compassionate and hard-hearted; but, at the bottom, fickle and self-interested. Dryden's Virgil, Dedication.

ACKNO'WLEDGMENT. n. f. [from acknowledge.]
 1. Concession of any character in another; as, existence, superiority.

The due contemplation of the human nature doth, by a necessary connexion and chain of causes, carry us up to the unavoidable acknowledgment of the Deity; because it carries every thinking man to an original of every successive individual. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Concession of the truth of any position.
 Immediately upon the acknowledgment of the christian faith, the eunuch was baptized by Philip. Hooker, b. iii. § 1.
 3. Confession of a fault.
 4. Confession of a benefit received; gratitude.
 5. Act of attestation to any concession; such as homage.

There be many wide countries in Ireland, in which the laws of England were never established, nor any acknowledgment of subjection made. Spenser's State of Ireland.

The second is an acknowledgment to his majesty for the leave of fishing upon his coasts; and though this may not be grounded upon any treaty, yet, if it appear to be an ancient right on our side, and custom on theirs, not determined or extinguished by any treaty between us, it may with justice be insisted on. Temple's Miscellanies.

A'CME. n. f. [ἄκμῃ, Gr.]
 The height of any thing; more especially used to denote the height of a distemper, which is divided into four periods. 1. The arche, the beginning or first attack. 2. Anabasis, the growth. 3. Ame, the height. And, 4. Parame, which is the declension of the distemper. Quincy.

ACO'LOTHIST. n. f. [ακολοθίστα, Gr.] One of the lowest order in the Romish church, whose office is to prepare the elements for the offices, to light the church, &c.

In the Romish communion it is duty, according to the papal law, when the bishop sings mass, to order all the inferior clergy to appear in their proper habits; and to see that all the offices of the church be rightly performed; to ordain the acothist, to keep the sacred vessels, &c. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'COLYTE. n. f. The same with ACOLOTHIST.

A'CONITE. n. f. [aconitum, Lat.] Properly the herb wolfs-bane, but commonly used in poetical language for poison in general.

Our land is from the rage of tygers freed,
Nor nourishes the lion's angry feed;
Nor pois'nous aconite is here produc'd,
Or grows unknown, or is, when known, refus'd. Dryd. Virg.
Despair, that aconite does prove,
And certain death to others, love,
That poison never yet withstood,
Does nourish mine, and turns to blood. Granville's Poems.

A'CORN. n. f. [Æcern, Sax. from ac, an oak, and corn, corn or grain; that is, the grain of the oak.]

The seed or fruit born by the oak.

What roots old-age contracteth into errors, and how such as are but acorns in our younger brows, grow oaks in our older heads, and become inflexible. Brown's Pref. to Vulgar Errors.

Content with food which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on strawberries they fed;
Cornels and bramble-berries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryden's Ovid.

He that is nourished by the acorns he picked up under an oak, or the apples he gathered from the trees in the wood, has certainly appropriated them to himself. Locke.

ACOUSTICKS. n. f. [Ἀκουστικά, of ἀκούω, Gr. to hear.]

1. The doctrine or theory of sounds.

2. Medicines to help the hearing. Quincy.

TO ACQUAINT. v. a. [accointer, Fr.]

1. To make familiar with; applied either to persons or things.

We that acquaint ourselves with ev'ry zone,

And pass the tropicks, and behold each pole;

When we come home, are to ourselves unknown,

And unacquainted still with our own foul. Sir J. Davies.

There with thee, new welcome faint,

Like fortunes may her foul acquaint;

With thee there clad in radiant sheen. Mil. on March. Win.

Before a man can speak on any subject, it is necessary to be acquainted with it. Locke on Education, § 171.

Acquaint yourselves with things ancient and modern, natural, civil, and religious, domestic and national; things of your own and foreign countries; and, above all, be well acquainted with God and yourselves; learn animal nature, and the workings of your own spirits. Watts's Logick.

2. To inform.

But for some other reasons, my grave Sir,

Which is not fit you know, I not acquaint

My father of this business. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

I have lately received a letter from a friend in the country, wherein he acquaints me, that two or three men of the town are got among them, and have brought down particular words and phrases, which were never before in those parts. Tatler.

ACQUAINTANCE. n. f. [accointance, Fr.]

1. The state of being acquainted with; familiarity, knowledge. It is applied as well to persons as things, with the particle with.

Nor was his acquaintance less with the famous poets of his age, than with the noblemen and ladies. Dryd.

Our admiration of a famous man lessens upon our nearer acquaintance with him; and we seldom hear of a celebrated person, without a catalogue of some notorious weaknesses and infirmities. Addis. Spectator, N° 256.

Would we be admitted into an acquaintance with God: let us study to resemble him. We must be partakers of a divine nature, in order to partake of this high privilege and alliance. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. Familiar knowledge, simply without a preposition.

Brave soldier, pardon me,

That any accent breaking from my tongue,

Should 'scape the true acquaintance of mine ear. Shak. K. John.

This keeps the understanding long in converse with an object, and long converse brings acquaintance. South's Sermons.

In what manner he lived with those who were of his neighbourhood and acquaintance, how obliging his carriage was to them, what kind offices he did, and was always ready to do them, I forbear particularly to say. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. A slight or initial knowledge, short of friendship, as applied to persons.

I hope I am pretty near seeing you, and therefore I would cultivate an acquaintance; because if you do not know me when we meet, you need only keep one of my letters, and compare it with my face; for my face and letters are counterparts of my heart. Swift to Pope, Letter xii.

A long noviciate of acquaintance should precede the vows of friendship. Bolingbroke.

4. The person with whom we are acquainted; him of whom we have some knowledge, without the intimacy of friendship.

In this sense, the plural is, in some authors, acquaintance, in others acquaintances.

But she, all vow'd unto the red-cross knight,

His wand'ring peril closely did lament,

Ne in this new acquaintance could delight,

But her dear heart with anguish did torment. F. Queen, b. i.

That young men travel under some tutor, I allow well, so that he be such a one that may be able to tell them, what acquaintances they are to seek, what exercises or discipline the place yieldeth. Bacon, Essay xix.

This, my lord, has justly acquired you as many friends, as there are persons who have the honour to be known to you; meer acquaintance you have none, you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they who have conversed with you, are for ever after inviolably yours. Dryd. Juvenal, Dedicat.

We see he is ashamed of his nearest acquaintances.

Boyle against Bentley.

ACQUAINTED. [from acquaint.] Familiar, well known; not new.

Now call we our high court of parliament;

That war or peace, or both at once, may be

As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakefp. Henry IV.

ACQU'EST. n. f. [acquest, Fr. from acquerir, written by some acquist, with a view to the word acquire, or acquisita.]

Attachment, acquisition; the thing gained.

New acquests are more burden than strength. Bac. Hen. VII.

Mud, reposed near the ostia of those rivers, makes continual additions to the land, thereby excluding the sea, and preserving these shells as trophies and signs of its new acquests and encroachments. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. i.

TO ACQUIESCE. v. n. [acquiescer, Fr. acquiescere, Lat.] To rest in, or remain satisfied with, without opposition or discontent.

Neither a bare approbation of, nor a mere wishing, nor unactive complacency in; nor, lastly, a natural inclination to things virtuous and good, can pass before God for a man's willing of such things; and, consequently, if men, upon this account, will needs take up and acquiesce in an airy ungrounded persuasion, that they will those things which really they not will, they fall thereby into a gross and fatal delusion. South.

He hath employed his transcendent wisdom and power, that by these he might make way for his benignity, as the end wherein they ultimately acquiesce. Grew's Cosmolog. Sac. b. i.

ACQUIESCENCE. n. f. [from acquiesce.]

1. A silent appearance of content, distinguished on one side from avowed consent, on the other from opposition.

Neither from any of the nobility, nor of the clergy, who were thought most averse from it, there appeared any sign of contradiction to that; but an entire acquiescence in all the bishops thought fit to do. Clarendon.

2. Satisfaction, rest, content.

Many indeed have given over their pursuits after fame, either from disappointment, or from experience of the little pleasure which attends it, or the better informations or natural coldness of old-age; but seldom from a full satisfaction and acquiescence in their present enjoyments of it. Addis. Spectator, N° 256.

3. Submission.

The greatest part of the world take up their persuasions concerning good and evil, by an implicit faith, and a full acquiescence in the word of those, who shall represent things to them under these characters. South's Sermons.

ACQUIRABLE. adj. [from acquire.] That which may be acquired or obtained; attainable.

Those rational instincts, the connate principles engraven in the human soul, though they are truths acquirable and deducible by rational consequence and argumentation, yet they seem to be inscribed in the very crasis and texture of the soul, antecedent to any acquisition by industry or the exercise of the discursive faculty in man. Hales's Origin of Mankind.

If the powers of cogitation and volition, and sensation, are neither inherent in matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion or modification of it; it necessarily follows, that they proceed from some cogitative substance, some incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call spirit and soul. Bentley.

TO ACQUIRE. v. a. [acquerir, Fr. acquirere, Lat.] To gain by one's own labour or power; to obtain what is not received from nature, or transmitted by inheritance.

I've done enough. A lower place not well,

May make too great an act: for learn this, Silius,

Better to leave undone, than by our deed

Acquire too high a fame, while he, we serve, 's away.

Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

ACQU'IED. particip. adj. [from acquire.] Gained by one's self, in opposition to those things which are bestowed by nature.

We are seldom at ease, and free enough from the solicitation of our natural or adopted desires; but a constant succession of uneasinesses, out of that stock, which natural wants, or acquired habits, have heaped up, take the will in their turns. Locke.

AN ACQUIRER. n. f. [from acquire.] The person that acquires; a gainer.

AN ACQUIREMENT. n. f. [from acquire.] That which is acquired; gain; attainment. The word may be properly used in opposition to the gifts of nature.

These his acquirements, by industry, were exceedingly both enriched and enlarged by many excellent endowments of nature. Hayward on Edward VI.

By a content and acquiescence in every species of truth, we embrace embrace the shadow thereof: or so much as may palliate its just and substantial acquirements. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

It is very difficult to lay down rules for the acquirement of such a taste as that I am here speaking of. The faculty must, in some degree, be born with us. Addison. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 409.

ACQUISITION. n. f. [acquisitio, Lat.]

1. The act of acquiring or gaining.

Each man has but a limited right to the good things of the world; and the natural allowed way, by which he is to compass the possession of these things, is by his own industrious acquisition of them. South's Sermons.

2. The thing gained; acquirement.

Great Sir, all acquisition

Of glory as of empire, here I lay before

Your royal feet.

Denham's Sophy.

A state can never arrive to its period in a more deplorable crisis, than when some prince lies hovering like a vulture to dismember its dying carcase; by which means it becomes only an acquisition to some mighty monarchy, without hopes of a resurrection. Swift on the Dissensions in Athens and Rome.

ACQUISITIVE. adj. [acquisitivus, Lat.] That which is acquired or gained.

He died not in his acquisitive but in his native soil; nature herself, as it were, claiming a final interest in his body, when fortune had done with him. Wotton.

ACQUIST. n. f. [See ACQUEST.] Acquirement; attainment; gain.

His servant he with new acquist

Of true experience from this great event,

With peace and consolation hath dismiss'd. M. Sampson Agon.

TO ACQUIT. v. a. [acquiter, Fr. See QUIT.]

1. To set free.

Ne do I wish (for wishing were but vain)

To be acquit from my continual smart;

But joy her thrall for ever to remain,

And yield for pledge my poor captiv'd heart. Spens. Son. xlii.

2. To clear from a charge of guilt; to absolve; opposed to condemn, either simply with an accusative, as, the jury acquitted him, or with the particles from or of, which is more common, before the crime.

If I sin, then thou markest me, and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity. Job, x. 14.

By the suffrage of the most and best he is already acquitted, and, by the sentence of some, condemned.

Dryden's Conquest of Granada, Dedic.

He that judges, without informing himself to the utmost that he is capable, cannot acquit himself of judging amiss. Locke.

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation upon this matter. Swift.

3. To clear from any obligation.

Steady to my principles, and not dispirited with my afflictions, I have, by the blessing of God on my endeavours, overcome all difficulties; and, in some measure, acquitted myself of the debt which I owed the publick, when I undertook this work. Dryden.

4. In a similar sense, it is said, The man hath acquitted himself well; that is, he discharged his duty.

ACQUITMENT. n. f. [from acquit.] The state of being acquitted; or act of acquitting.

The word imports properly an acquitment or discharge of a man upon some precedent accusation, and a full trial and cognizance of his cause had thereupon. South's Sermons.

ACQUITTAL, n. f. in law, is a deliverance and setting free from the suspicion or guiltiness of an offence. Cowell.

The constant design of both these orators, was to drive some one particular point, either the condemnation or acquittal of an accused person, a persuasive to war, and the like. Swift.

TO ACQUITTANCE. v. n. To procure an acquittance; to acquit; a word not in present use.

But if black scandal and foul-fac'd reproach,

Attend the sequel of your imposition,

Your meer enforcement shall acquittance me

From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shak. Rich. III.

ACQUITTANCE. n. f. [from acquit.]

1. The act of discharging from a debt.

But soon shall find

Forbearance, no acquittance, ere day end

Justice shall not return, as beauty, scorn'd. Par. Lost, b. x.

2. A writing testifying the receipt of a debt.

You can produce acquittances

For such a sum, from special officers

Of Charles his father.

Shakesp. Love's Labour Lost.

They quickly pay their debt, and then

Take no acquittances, but pay again.

Donne.

They had got a worse trick than that; the same man bought and sold to himself, paid the money, and gave the acquittance. Arbuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.

A'CRE. n. f. [Æcre, Sax.] A quantity of land containing in length forty perches, and four in breadth, or four thousand eight hundred and forty square yards. Dict.

Search ev'ry acre in the high-grown field,

And bring him to our eye.

Shakespeare's K. Lear.

A'CRID. adj. [acer, Lat.] Of a hot biting taste; bitter, so as to leave a painful heat upon the organs of taste.

Bitter and acrid differ only by the sharp particles of the first, being involved in a greater quantity of oil than those of the last. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ACRIMO'NIOUS. adj. Abounding with acrimony; sharp; corrosive.

If gall cannot be rendered acrimonious, and bitter of itself, then whatever acrimony or amaritude redounds in it, must be from the admixture of melancholy. Harvey on Consumptions.

A'CRIMONY. n. f. [acrimonia, Lat.]

1. Sharpness, corrosiveness.

There be plants that have a milk in them when they are cut; as, figs, old lettuce, sow-thistles, spurge, &c. The cause may be an inception of putrefaction: for those milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they should be lenitive.

Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup> 639.

The chymists define salt, from some of its properties, to be a body fusible in the fire, congealable again by cold into brittle glebes or crystals, soluble in water, so as to disappear, not malleable, and having something in it which affects the organs of taste with a sensation of acrimony or sharpness.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Sharpness of temper, severity, bitterness of thought or language.

This made John the Baptist set himself, with so much acrimony and indignation, to baffle this senseless arrogant conceit of theirs, which made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them, and not at all belonging to them. South.

A'CRITUDE. n. f. [from acrid.] An acrid taste; a biting heat on the palate.

Green vitriol, mixed with some rays of a pale blue, from the same place; with its astringent and sweetish tastes, is joined some acritude. Grew's Musæum.

ACROAMA'TICAL. adj. [ἀκροάματι, Gr. I bear.] Of or pertaining to deep learning; the opposite of exoterical.

ACROA'TICKS. n. f. [ἀκροατικά, Gr.] Aristotle's lectures on the more nice and principal parts of philosophy, to whom none but friends and scholars were admitted by him.

ACRO'NYCAL. adj. [from ἀκρῶς, summus, and νύξ, nox; importing the beginning of night.] A term of astronomy, applied to the stars, of which the rising and setting is called acronycal, when they either appear above or sink below the horizon at the time of sunset. It is opposed to cosmical.

ACRO'NYCALLY. adv. [from acronycal.] At the acronycal time.

He is tempestuous in the summer, when he rises heliacally, and rainy in the winter, when he rises acronycally.

Dryden's Æneid, Dedicat.

A'CROSPIRE. n. f. [from ἀκρῶς and σπῆρα, Gr.] A shoot or sprout from the end of seeds before they are put in the ground.

Many corns will smilt, or have their pulp turned into a substance like thick cream; and most of those which come without extraordinary pains, will send forth their substance in an acrospire. Mort. Husbandry.

A'CROSPIRED. part. adj. Having sprouts, or having shot out.

For want of turning, when the malt is spread on the floor, it comes and sprouts at both ends, which is called acrospired, and is fit only for swine. Mort. Husbandry.

ACRO'SS. adv. [from a for at, or the French à, as it is used in à travers, and cross.] Athwart, laid over something so as to cross it.

The harp hath the concave not along the strings, but across the strings; and no harp hath the sound so melting and prolonged as the Irish harp. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N<sup>o</sup> 223.

This view'd, but not enjoy'd, with arms across,

He stood, reflecting on his country's loss.

Dryd. Fables.

There is a set of artificers, who, by the help of several poles, which they lay across each others shoulders, build themselves up into a kind of pyramid; so that you see a pile of men in the air of four or five rows rising one above another. Addis. on Italy.

AN ACRO'STICK. n. f. [from ἀκρῶς and στίχῳ, Gr.] A poem in which the first letter of every line being taken, makes up the name of the person or thing on which the poem is written.

ACRO'STICK. adj.

1. That which relates to an acrostick.

2. That which contains acrosticks.

Leave writing plays, and choose for thy command

Some peaceful province in acrostick land:

There thou may'st wings display, and altars raise,

And torture one poor word ten thousand ways.

Dryden.

ACROTERS, or ACROTARIA. n. f. [In architecture; from ἀκρον, Gr. the extremity of any body.] Little pedestals without bases, placed at the middle and the two extremes of pediments, sometimes serving to support statues.

TO ACT. v. a. [ago, actum, Lat.]

1. To be in action, not to rest.

He hangs between in doubt to act or rest. Pope's Ess. on Man.

2. To perform the proper functions.

Albeit the will is not capable of being compelled to any of its actings, yet it is capable of being made to act with more or less difficulty, according to the different impressions it receives from motives or objects.

South's Sermons.

Tis

3. To practise the arts or duties of life ; to conduct one's self.
 'Tis plain, that she who, for a kingdom now,
 Would sacrifice her love, and break her vow,
 Not out of love, but interest, aets alone,
 And would, ev'n in my arms, lie thinking of a throne.

Dryden's Conquest of Granada.

The desire of happiness, and the constraint it puts upon us to aet for it, no body accounts an abridgment of liberty. Locke.

The splendour of his office, is the token of that sacred character which he inwardly bears : and one of these ought constantly to put him in mind of the other, and excite him to aet up to it, through the whole course of his administration.

Atterbury's Sermons.

It is our part and duty to co-operate with this grace, vigorously to exert those powers, and aet up to those advantages to which it restores us. He has given eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame.

Rogers's Sermons.

4. To bear a borrowed character, as, a stage-player.
 Honour and shame from no condition rise ;
Aet well your part, there all the honour lies.

Pope's Essay on Man, ep. 4. l. 193.

5. To counterfeit ; to feign by action.
 His former trembling once again renew'd,
 With aetted fear the villain thus pursu'd.

6. To produce effects in some passive subject.
 Hence 'tis we wait the wond'rous cause to find
 How body aets upon impassive mind.

Garth's Dispensary.

The stomach, the intestines, the muscles of the lower belly, all aet upon the aliment ; besides, the chyle is not sucked, but squeezed into the mouths of the lacteals, by the action of the fibres of the guts.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

7. To actuate ; to put in motion ; to regulate the movements.
 Most people in the world are aetted by levity and humour, by strange and irrational changes.

South's Sermons.

Perhaps they are as proud as Lucifer, as covetous as Demas, as false as Judas, and, in the whole course of their conversation, aet, and are aetted, not by devotion, but design. Idem.

We suppose two distinct incommunicable consciousnesses aeting the same body, the one constantly by day, the other by night ; and, on the other side, the same consciousness aeting by intervals two distinct bodies.

Locke.

ACT. n. f. [aetum, Lat.]

1. Something done ; a deed ; an exploit, whether good or ill.
 I've done enough. A lower place, not well,
 May make too great an aet : for learn this, Silius,
 Better to leave undone than by our deed
 Acquire too high a fame, when he, we serve, 's away.

Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

The conscious wretch must all his aets reveal ;
 Loth to confess, unable to conceal ;
 From the first moment of his vital breath,
 To his last hour of unrepenting death.

Dryd. Æneid vi.

2. Agency ; the power of producing an effect.
 I will try the forces
 Of these thy compounds on such creatures as
 We count not worth the hanging ; but none human ;
 To try the vigour of them, and apply
 Allayments to their aet ; and by them gather
 Their several virtues and effects.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

3. Action ; the performance of exploits ; production of effects.
 'Tis so much in your nature to do good, that your life is but one continued aet of placing benefits on many, as the sun is always carrying his light to some part or other of the world.

Dryden's Fables, Dedicat.

Who forth from nothing call'd this comely frame,
 His will and aet, his word and work the same.

Prior.

4. The doing of some particular thing ; a step taken ; a measure executed.

This aet persuades me,
 That this remotion of the duke and her,
 Is practice only.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

5. A state of action.
 The seeds of herbs and plants at the first are not in aet, but in possibility that which they afterwards grow to be.

Hooker.

God alone excepted, who actually and everlastingly is whatsoever he may be, and which cannot hereafter be that which now he is not ; all other things besides are somewhat in possibility, which as yet they are not in aet.

Hooker, b. i.

Sure they're conscious
 Of some intended mischief, and are fled
 To put it into aet.

Denham's Sophy.

Her legs were buskin'd, and the left before ;
 In aet to shoot, a silver bow she bore.

Dryd. Fables.

6. A part of a play, during which the action proceeds without interruption.

Many never doubt but the whole condition required by Christ, the repentance he came to preach, will, in that last scene of their last aet, immediately before the exit, be as opportunely and acceptably performed, as at any other point of their lives.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

Five aets are the just measure of a play.

Roscommon.

7. A decree of a court of justice, or edict of a legislature.
 They make edicts for usury to support usurers, repeal daily any wholesome aet established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes daily to chain up and restrain the poor.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

You that are king, though he do wear the crown,
 Have caus'd him, by new aet of parliament,
 To blot out me.

Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.

8. Record of judicial proceedings.
 Judicial aets are all those matters, which relate to judicial proceedings ; and being reduced into writing by a publick notary, are recorded by the authority of the judge.

Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ACTION. n. f. [action, Fr. actio, Lat.]

1. The quality or state of acting, opposite to rest.
 O noble English, that could entertain
 With half their forces the full power of France ;
 And let another half stand laughing by,
 All out of work, and cold for action.

Shakefp. Henry V.

2. An act or thing done ; a deed.
 This action, I now go on,
 Is for my better grace.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

God never accepts a good inclination instead of a good action, where that action may be done ; nay, so much the contrary, that, if a good inclination be not seconded by a good action, the want of that action is made so much the more criminal and inexcusable.

South's Sermons.

3. Agency, operation.
 It is better therefore, that the earth should move about its own center, and make those useful vicissitudes of night and day, than expose always the same side to the action of the sun.

Bentley's Sermons.

He has settled laws, and laid down rules, conformable to which natural bodies are governed in their actions upon one another.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

4. The series of events represented in a fable.
 This action should have three qualifications. First, it should be but one action ; secondly, it should be an entire action ; and, thirdly, it should be a great action.

Addis. Spectat. N° 267.

5. Gesticulation ; the accordance of the motions of the body with the words spoken ; a part of oratory.

—He that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist,

While he that hears makes fearful action

With wrinkled brows.

Shakefp. King John.

Our orators are observed to make use of less gesture or action than those of other countries.

Addison. Spectat. N° 407.

6. [In law.] It is used with the preposition against before the person, and for before the thing.

Actions are personal, real, and mixt : action personal belongs to a man against another, by reason of any contract, offence, or cause, of like force with a contract or offence made or done by him or some other, for whose fact he is to answer. Action real is given to any man against another, that possesses the thing required or sued for in his own name, and no other man's. Action mixt is that which lies as well against or for the thing which we seek, as against the person that hath it ; called mixt, because it hath a mixt respect both to the thing and to the person.

Action is divided into civil, penal, and mixt. Action civil is that which tends only to the recovery of that which is due to us ; as, a sum of money formerly lent. Action penal is that which aims at some penalty or punishment in the party sued, be it corporal or pecuniary : as, in common law, the next friends of a man feloniously slain shall pursue the law against the murderer. Action mixt is that which seeks both the thing whereof we are deprived, and a penalty also for the unjust detaining of the same.

Action upon the case, is an action given for redress of wrongs done without force against any man, by law not specially provided for.

Action upon the statute, is an action brought against a man upon breach of a statute.

Cowell.

There was never man could have a juster action against filthy fortune than I, since all other things being granted me, her blindness is the only lett.

Sidney.

For our reward then,
 First, all our debts are paid ; dangers of law,
Actions, decrees, judgments, against us quitted.

Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

7. In the plural, in France, the same as stocks in England.
 ACTIONABLE. adj. [from action.] That which admits an action in law to be brought against it ; punishable.

After he had been thus, as a man would think, quite extinguished, his process was formed ; whereby he was found guilty of nought else, that I could learn, which was actionable, but of ambition.

Howel's Vocal Forest.

ACTIONARY, or ACTIONIST. n. f. [from action.] One that has a share in actions or stocks.

ACTION-TAKING. adj. Accustomed to resent by means of law ; litigious.

A knave, a rascal, an eater of broken meats, a filthy worsted-stocking knave ; a lily-liver'd action-taking knave.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

ACTITATION. n. f. [from actito, Lat.] Action quick and frequent.

Dict.

A C T

To A'CTIVATE. v. a. [from active.] To make active. This word is perhaps used only by the author alleged.

As snow and ice, especially being holpen, and their cold activated by nitre or salt, will turn water into ice, and that in a few hours; so it may be, it will turn wood or stiff clay into stone, in longer time. Bacon's Nat. History, N<sup>o</sup> 83.

A'CTIVE. adj. [activus, Lat.]

1. That which has the power or quality of acting.

These particles have not only a vis inertia, accompanied with such passive laws of motion, as naturally result from that force, but also they are moved by certain active principles, such as is that of gravity, and that which causes fermentation, and the cohesion of bodies. Newton's Opticks.

2. That which acts, opposed to passive, or that which suffers.

— When an even flame two hearts did touch,

His office was indulgently to fit

Actives to passives, correspondency

Only his subject was.

Donne.

If you think that by multiplying the additaments in the same proportion, that you multiply the ore, the work will follow, you may be deceived: for quantity in the passive will add more resistance than the quantity in the active will add force. Bacon's Physical Remains.

3. Busy, engaged in action; opposed to idle or sedentary, or any state of which the duties are performed only by the mental powers.

'Tis virtuous action that must praise bring forth,

Without which, flow advice is little worth;

Yet they who give good counsel, praise deserve,

Though in the active part they cannot serve. Sir J. Denham.

4. Practical; not merely theoretical.

The world hath had in these men fresh experience, how dangerous such active errors are. Hooker, Preface.

5. Nimble; agile; quick.

Some bend the stubborn bow for victory;

And some with darts their active sinews try. Dryd. Æn. vii.

6. In grammar.

A verb active is that which signifies action, as does, I teach.

Clarke's Latin Grammar.

A'CTIVELY. adv. [from active.] In an active manner; busily; nimbly. In an active signification; as, the word is used actively.

A'CTIVENESS. n. f. [from active.] The quality of being active; quickness; nimbleness. This is a word more rarely used than activity.

What strange agility and activeness do our common tumblers and dancers on the rope attain to, by continual exercise?

Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

ACTIVITY. n. f. [from active.] The quality of being active, applied either to things or persons.

Salt put to ice, as in the producing of the artificial ice, increaseth the activity of cold. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N<sup>o</sup> 73.

Our adversary will not be idle, though we are; he watches every turn of our soul, and incident of our life; and, if we remit our activity, will take advantage of our indolence. Rogers.

A'CTOR. n. f. [actor, Lat.]

1. He that acts, or performs any thing.

The virtues of either age may correct the defects of both: and good for succession, that young men may be learners, while men in age are actors. Bacon, Essay civ.

He, who writes an Encomium Neronis, if he does it heartily, is himself but a transcript of Nero in his mind, and would, no doubt, gladly enough see such pranks, as he was famous for, acted again, though he dares not be the actor of them himself. South's Sermons.

2. He that personates a character; a stage-player.

Would you have

Such an Herculean actor in the scene,

And not this hydra? They must sweat no less

To fit their properties, than t'express their parts.

Ben Johnson's Catiline.

When a good actor doth his part present,

In every act he our attention draws,

That at the last he may find just applause. Sir J. Denham.

These false beauties of the stage are no more lasting than a rain-bow; when the actor ceases to shine upon them, when he gilds them no longer with his reflection, they vanish in a twinkling. Dryd. Spanish Friar, Dedication.

A'CTRESS. n. f. [actrice, Fr.]

1. She that performs any thing.

Virgil has, indeed, admitted Fame as an actress in the Æneid; but the part she acts is very short, and none of the most admired circumstances of that divine work. Addis. Spect.

2. A woman that plays on the stage.

We sprites have just such natures

We had, for all the world, when human creatures;

And therefore I that was an actress here,

Play all my tricks in hell, a goblin there. Dryd. Tyr. Love.

A'CTUAL. adj. [actuel, Fr.]

1. That which comprises action.

In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

A C U

2. Really in act; not merely potential.

Sin, there in pow'r before

Once actual; now in body, and to dwell

Habitual habitant. Milt. Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 587.

3. In act; not purely in speculation.

For he that but conceives a crime in thought,

Contracts the danger of an actual fault:

Then what must he expect, that still proceeds

To finish sin, and work up thoughts to deeds?

Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. xiii.

ACTUALITY. n. f. [from actual.] The state of being actual.

The actuality of these spiritual qualities is thus imprisoned, though their potentiality be not quite destroyed; and thus a crass, extended, impenetrable, passive, divisible, unintelligent substance is generated, which we call matter. Cheyn. Phil. Prin.

A'CTUALLY. adv. [from actual.] In act; in effect; really.

All mankind acknowledge themselves able and sufficient to do many things, which actually they never do. South.

Read one of the chronicles written by an author of this frame of mind, and you will think you were reading a history of the kings of Israel or Judah, where the historians were actually inspired, and where, by a particular scheme of providence, the kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God. Addisn. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 483.

Though our temporal prospects should be full of danger, or though the days of sorrow should actually overtake us, yet still we must repose ourselves on God. Rogers, Sermon xix.

A'CTUALNESS. n. f. [from actual.] The quality of being actual.

A'CTUARY. n. f. [actuarius, Lat.] The register who compiles the minutes of the proceedings of a court; a term of the civil law.

Suppose the judge should say, that he would have the keeping of the acts of court remain with him, and the notary will have the custody of them with himself: certainly, in this case, the actuary or writer of them ought to be preferred.

Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

A'CTUATE. adj. [from the verb To actuate.] Put into action; animated; brought into effect.

The active informations of the intellect, filling the passive reception of the will, like form closing with matter, grew actuate into a third and distinct perfection of practice. South.

To A'CTUATE. v. a. [from ago, actum, Lat.] To put into action; to invigorate or encrease the powers of motion.

The light made by this animal depends upon a living spirit, and seems, by some vital irradiation, to be actuated into this lustre. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 6.

Such is every man, who has not actuated the grace given him, to the subduing of every reigning sin. Decay of Piety.

Men of the greatest abilities are most fired with ambition; and, on the contrary, mean and narrow minds are the least actuated by it. Addisn. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 255.

Our passions are the springs which actuate the powers of our nature. Rogers, Sermon iii.

ACTUOSE. adj. [from act.] That which hath strong powers of action; a word little used.

To A'CUATE. v. a. [acuo, Lat.] To sharpen, to invigorate with any powers of sharpness.

ACU'LEATE. adj. [aculeatus, Lat.] That which has a point or sting; prickly; that which terminates in a sharp point.

ACU'MEN. n. f. [Lat.] A sharp point; figuratively, quickness of intellects.

The word was much affected by the learned Aristarchus in common conversation, to signify genius or natural acumen.

Pope's Dunciad, b. iv. notes.

ACU'MINATED. particip. adj. Ending in a point; sharp-pointed.

This is not acuminated and pointed, as in the rest, but seemeth, as it were, cut off. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 14.

I appropriate this word, Noli me tangere, to a small round acuminated tubercle, which hath not much pain, unless it be touched or rubbed, or otherways exasperated by topicks.

Wiseman's Surgery.

ACU'TE. adj. [acutus, Lat.]

1. Sharp, ending in a point; opposed to obtuse or blunt.

Having the ideas of an obtuse and an acute angled triangle, both drawn from equal bases and between parallels, I can, by intuitive knowledge, perceive the one not to be the other, but cannot that way know whether they be equal. Locke.

2. In a figurative sense applied to men; ingenious; penetrating; opposed to dull or stupid.

The acute and ingenious author, among many very fine thoughts, and uncommon reflections, has started the notion of seeing all things in God. Locke.

3. Spoken of the senses, vigorous; powerful in operation.

Were our senses altered, and made much quicker and acuter, the appearance and outward scheme of things would have quite another face to us. Locke.

4. Acute disease. Any disease, which is attended with an increased velocity of blood, and terminates in a few days.

Quincy.

5. Acute accent; that which raises or sharpens the voice.

A'CU'TELY.

ACU'TELY. adv. [from acute.] After an acute manner; sharply; it is used as well in the figurative as primitive sense.

He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there, perhaps, as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism. Locke.

ACU'TENESS. n. f. [from acute, which see.]

1. Sharpness.

2. Force of intellects.

They would not be so apt to think, that there could be nothing added to the acuteness and penetration of their understandings. Locke.

3. Quickness and vigour of senses.

If eyes so framed could not view at once the hand and the hour-plate, their owner could not be benefited by that acuteness; which, whilst it discovered the secret contrivance of the machine, made him lose its use. Locke.

4. Violence and speedy crisis of a malady.

We apply present remedies according to indications, respecting rather the acuteness of the disease, and precipitancy of the occasion, than the rising and setting of stars.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 13.

5. Sharpness of sound.

This acuteness of sound will shew, that whilst, to the eye, the bell seems to be at rest, yet the minute parts of it continue in a very brisk motion, without which they could not strike the air. Boyle.

ADA'CTED. participial adj. [adactus, Lat.] Driven by force; a word little used. Dict.

A'DAGE. n. f. [adagium, Lat.] A maxim handed down from antiquity; a proverb.

Shallow unimproved intellects, that are confident pretenders to certainty; as if, contrary to the adage, science had no friend but ignorance. Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica, c. 2.

Fine fruits of learning! old ambitious fool,

Dar'st thou apply that adage of the school;

As if 'tis nothing worth that lies conceal'd;

And science is not science till reveal'd? Dryd. Perf. Sat. i.

ADA'GIO. n. f. [Italian.] A term used by musicians, to mark a slow time.

ADAMANT. n. f. [adamas, Lat. from  $\alpha$  and δαμνω, Gr. that is, insuperable, infrangible.]

1. A stone, imagined by writers, of impenetrable hardness.

So great a fear my name amongst them spread,

That they suppos'd I could rend bars of steel,

And spurn in pieces posts of adamant. Shakesp. Henry V.

Satan, with vast and haughty strides advanc'd,

Came tow'ring, arm'd in adamant, and gold. Parad. Lost.

Eternal Deities,

Who rule the world with absolute decrees,

And write whatever time shall bring to pass,

With pens of adamant, on plates of brass. Dryden's Fables.

2. The diamond.

Hardness, wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant all other stones, being exalted to that degree thereof, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it, the factitious stones of chymists, in imitation, being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist. Ray on the Creation.

3. Adamant is taken for the loadstone.

Let him change his lodging from one end and part of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance.

Bacon, Essay xix.

You draw me, you hard-hearted adamant!

But yet you draw not iron; for my heart

Is true as steel.

Shakespeare's Midsum Night's Dream.

ADAMANTE'AN. adj. [from adamant.] Hard as adamant.

He ran on embattel'd armies clad in iron,

And weaponless himself,

Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery

Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,

Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail

This word occurs perhaps only in this passage.

ADAMANTINE. adj. [adamantinus, Lat.]

1. Made of adamant.

Wide is the fronting gate, and rais'd on high

With adamantine columns, threatens the sky. Dryd. Æn. vi.

2. Having the qualities of adamant; as, hardness, indissolubility.

Could Eve's weak hand, extended to the tree,

In sunder rend that adamantine chain,

Whose golden links, effects and causes be,

And which to God's own chair doth fix'd remain? Davies.

An eternal sterility must have possessed the world, where all things had been fixed and fastened everlastingly with the adamantine chains of specific gravity; if the Almighty had not spoken and said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit after its kind; and it was so.

Bentley's Sermons.

In adamantine chains shall death be bound,

And hell's grim tyrant feel th' eternal wound. Pope's Messiah.

Tho' adamantine bonds the chief restrain,

The dire restraint his wisdom will defeat,

And soon restore him to his regal seat. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

A'DAM'S-APPLE. n. f. [in anatomy.] A prominent part of the throat.

To ADAPT. v. a. [adapto, Lat.] To fit one thing to another; to suit; to proportion.

'Tis true, but let it not be known,

My eyes are somewhat dimmish grown;

For nature, always in the right,

To your decays adapts my sight.

Swift's Miscellanies.

It is not enough that nothing offends the ear, but a good poet will adapt the very sounds, as well as words, to the things he treats of.

Pope's Letters.

ADAPTA'TION. n. f. [from adapt.] The act of fitting one thing to another; the fitness of one thing to another.

Some species there be of middle natures, that is, of bird and beast, as bats; yet are their parts so set together, that we cannot define the beginning or end of either, there being a commixtion of both, rather than adaptation or cement of the one unto the other. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. ii.

Their adhesion may be in part ascribed, either to some elastical motion in the pressed glass, or to the exquisite adaptation of the almost numberless, though very small, asperities of the one, and the numerous little cavities of the other; whereby the surfaces do lock in with one another, or are, as it were, clasped together. Boyle.

ADA'PTION. n. f. [from adapt.] The act of fitting.

It were alone a sufficient work to shew all the necessities, the wise contrivances, and prudent adaptions, of these admirable machines, for the benefit of the whole. Cheyne's Phil. Princip.

To ADCO'RPORATE. v. a. [from ad and corpus.] To unite one body with another; more usually wrote accorporate; which see.

To ADD. v. a. [addo, Lat.]

1. To join something to that which was before.

Mark if his birth makes any difference,

If to his words it adds one grain of sense. Dryd. Conq. of Gran.

They, whose muses have the highest flown,

Add not to his immortal memory,

But do an act of friendship to their own.

Dryd.

2. To perform the mental operation of adding one number or conception to another.

Whatsoever positive ideas a man has in his mind, of any quantity, he can repeat it, and add it to the former, as easily as he can add together the ideas of two days, or two years. Locke.

AD'DABLE. adj. [from add.] That which may be added. Addible is more proper.

The first number in every addition is called the addable number, the other, the number or numbers added, and the number invented by the addition, the aggregate or sum.

Cocker's Arithmetick.

To ADDE'CIMATE. v. a. [addecimo, Lat.] To take or ascertain tithes. Dict.

To ADDE'EM. v. a. [from deem.] To esteem; to account. This word is now out of use.

She scorns to be addeem'd so worthless-base,

As to be mov'd to such an infamy.

Daniel's Civil Wars.

A'DDER. n. f. [Ætzer, Ætzer, Nadder, as it seems from εἰτερον, Sax. poison.] A-serpent, a viper, a poisonous reptile; perhaps of any species. In common language, adders and snakes are not the same.

Or is the adder better than the eel,

Because his painted skin contents the eye. Shak. As you like it.

An adder did it; for, with doubler tongue

Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.

Shakespeare's Midsum. Night's Dream.

The adder teaches us where to strike, by her curious and fearful defending of her head. Taylor of living holy.

A'DDER'S-GRASS. n. f. The name of a plant, imagined by Skinner to be so named, because serpents lurk about it.

A'DDER'S-TONGUE. n. f. [ophioglossum, Lat.] The name of an herb.

It hath no visible flower; but the seeds are produced on a spike, which resembles a serpent's tongue; which seed is contained in many longitudinal cells, which open, and cast forth the seeds when ripe. It grows wild in moist meadows, and is used in medicine. Millar.

The most common simples with us in England, are comfrey, bugle, agrimony, sanicle, paul's-betony, fluellin, periwinkle, adder's-tongue. Wifeman's Surgery.

A'DDER'S-WORT. n. f. An herb so named, on account of its virtue, real or supposed, of curing the bite of serpents.

AD'DIBLE. adj. [from add.] Possible to be added. See AD-DABLE.

The clearest idea it can get of infinity, is the confused, incomprehensible remainder of endless, addible numbers, which affords no prospect of stop, or boundary. Locke.

ADDIB'ILITY. n. f. [from addible.] The possibility of being added.

This endless addition, or addibility (if any one like the word better) of numbers, so apparent to the mind, is that which gives us the clearest and most distinct idea of infinity. Locke.

A'DDICE. n. f. [for which we corruptly speak and write adz, from adere, Sax. an axe.]

The addice hath its blade made thin and somewhat arching.

As the axe hath its edge parallel to its handle, so the addice hath its edge athwart the handle, and is ground to a basil on its inside to its outer edge. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

To ADDICT. v. a. [addico, Lat.]

1. To devote, to dedicate, in a good sense; which is rarely used. Ye know the house of Stephanus, that they have addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints. I Cor. xvi. 15.
2. It is commonly taken in a bad sense; as, he addicted himself to vice.

ADDICTEDNESS. n. f. [from addicted.] The quality or state of being addicted.

Those, that know how little I have remitted of my former addictedness to make chymical experiments, will believe, that the design was to give occasion to the more knowing artists to lay aside their reservedness. Boyle.

ADDICTION. n. f. [addictio, Lat.]

1. The act of devoting, or giving up.
2. The state of being devoted.

It is a wonder how his grace should g'ean it,

Since his addiction was to courses vain;

His companies unletter'd, rude and shallow;

His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports. Shak. Hen. V.

AN ADDITAMENT. n. f. [additamentum, Lat.] The addition, or thing added.

Iron will not incorporate with brass, nor other metals, of itself, by simple fire: so as the enquiry must be upon the calcination, and the additament, and the charge of them. Bacon.

In such a palace there is first the case or fabrick, or moles of the structure itself; and, besides that, there are certain additaments that contribute to its ornament and use; as, various furniture, rare fountains and aqueducts, curious motions of divers things appendicated to it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ADDITION. n. f. [from add.]

1. The act of adding one thing to another; opposed to diminution.

The infinite distance between the Creator and the noblest of all creatures, can never be measured, nor exhausted by endless addition of finite degrees. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Additament, or the thing added.

It will not be modestly done, if any of our own wisdom intrude or interpose, or be willing to make additions to what Christ and his Apostles have designed. Hammond's Fundam.

Some such resemblances, methinks, I find

Of our last evening's talk, in this thy dream,

But with addition strange! Milt. Paradise Lost, b. v.

The abolishing of villanage, together with the custom permitted, among the nobles, of selling their lands, was a mighty addition to the power of the commons.

Swift on the Dissensions in Athens and Rome.

3. In arithmetick.

Addition is the reduction of two or more numbers of like kind, together into one sum or total. Cocker's Arithmetick.

4. In law. A title given to a man over and above his christian name and surname, shewing his estate, degree, occupation, trade, age, place of dwelling. Cowell.

Only retain

The name, and all th' addition to a king;

The sway, revenue, execution of th' last,

Beloved sons, be yours; which to confirm,

This coronet part between you. Shakesp. King Lear.

From this time,

For what he did before Corioli, call him,

With all th' applause and clamour of the host,

Caius Marcius Coriolanus. Bear th' addition nobly ever.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

There arose new disputes upon the persons named by the king, or rather against the additions and appellations of title, which were made to their names. Clarendon, b. viii.

ADDITIONAL. adj. [from addition.] That which is added.

Our kalendar being once reformed and set right, it may be kept so, without any considerable variation, for many ages, by omitting one leap-year; i. e. the additional day, at the end of every 134 years. Holder on Time.

The greatest wits, that ever were produced in one age, lived together in so good an understanding, and celebrated one another with so much generosity, that each of them receives an additional lustre from his cotemporaries. Addison. Spectator.

They include in them that very kind of evidence, which is supposed to be so powerful; and do, withal, afford us several other additional proofs, of great force and clearness. Atter. Serm.

ADDITORY. adj. [from add.] That which has the power or quality of adding.

The additory fiction gives to a great man a larger share of reputation than belongs to him, to enable him to serve some good end or purpose. Arbuthnot's Art of political Lying.

ADDLE. adj. [from adel, a disease, Sax. according to Skinner and Junius; perhaps from ydel, idle, barren, unfruitful.] Originally applied to eggs, and signifying such as produce nothing, but grow rotten under the hen; thence transferred to brains that produce nothing.

There's one with truncheon, like a ladle,

That carries eggs too fresh or addle;

And still at random, as he goes,

Among the rabble rout bestows. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. ii.

After much solitariness, fasting, or long sickness, their brains were addle, and their bellies as empty of meat as their heads of wit. Burton on Melancholy.

Thus far the poet; but his brains grow addle:

And all the rest is purely from this noddle. Dryd. Don Seb.

To ADDLE. v. a. [from addle, adj.] To make addle; to corrupt; to make barren.

This is also evidenced in eggs, whereof the sound ones sink, and such as are addled swim; as do also those that are termed hyphenemia, or wind-eggs. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

ADDLE-PATED. adj. Having addled brains. See ADDLE.

Poor slaves in metre, dull and addle-pated,

Who rhyme below even David's psalms translated.

Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel.

To ADDRESS. v. a. [addresser, Fr. from dereçar, Span. from dirigo, directum, Lat.]

1. To prepare one's self to enter upon any action; as, he addressed himself to the work.

It lifted up its head, and did address

Itself to motion, like as it would speak. Shakesp. Hamlet.

With him the Palmer eke, in habit sad,

Himself address to that adventure hard;

So to the river's side they both together far'd. Fairy Q. b. ii.

Then Turnus, from his chariot leaping light,

Address'd himself on foot to single fight. Dryden's Æneid.

2. To get ready; to put in a state for immediate use.

By this means they fell directly on head on the English battle; whereupon the earl of Warwick addressed his men to take the flank. Sir J. Hayward.

Duke Frederick hearing, how that every day

Men of great worth resorted to this forest,

Address'd a mighty power, which were on foot,

In his own conduct purposely to take

His brother here. Shakespeare, As you like it.

To-night in Harfleur we will be your guest,

To-morrow for the march we are address. Shak. Henry V.

3. To apply to another by words, with various forms of construction.

4. Sometimes without a preposition.

Are not your orders to address the senate? Addison's Cato.

5. Sometimes with to.

Addressing to Pollio, his great patron, and himself no vulgar poet, he no longer could restrain the freedom of his spirit, but began to assert his native character, which is sublimity.

Dryden's Dedication of Virgil's Pasts.

Among the croud, but far above the rest,

Young Turnus to the beauteous maid address. Dryd. Æneid.

6. Sometimes with the reciprocal pronoun; as, he addressed himself to the general.

7. Sometimes with the accusative of the matter of the address, which may be the nominative to the passive.

The young hero had addressed his prayers to him for his assistance. Dryd. Æneid, Dedicat.

The prince himself, with awful dread possess'd,

His vows to great Apollo thus address. Dryden, Æneid vi.

His suit was common; but, above the rest,

To both the brother-princes thus address. Dryden's Fables.

8. To address, is to apply to the king in form.

The representatives of the nation in parliament, and the privy-council, address'd the king to have it recalled. Swift.

ADDRESSES. n. f. [adresse, Fr.]

1. Verbal application to any one, by way of persuasion, petition.

Henry, in knots involving Emma's name,

Had half confess'd and half conceal'd his flame

Upon this tree; and as the tender mark

Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,

Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,

That, as the wound, the passion might encrease. Prior.

Most of the persons, to whom these addresses are made, are not wise and skilful judges, but are influenced by their own sinful appetites and passions. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. Courtship.

They both behold thee with their sisters eyes,

And often have reveal'd their passion to me:

But, tell me, whose address thou favour'st most;

I long to know, and yet I dread to hear it. Addison's Cato.

About three years since, a gentleman, whom, I am sure, you yourself would have approved, made his addresses to me.

Addison. Spectator, N° 163.

3. Manner of addressing another; as, we say, a man of an happy or a pleasing address; a man of an awkward address.

4. Skill, dexterity.

I could produce innumerable instances from my own memory and observation, of events imputed to the profound skill and address of a minister, which, in reality, were either mere effects of negligence, weakness, humour, passion, or pride, or, at best, but the natural course of things left to themselves.

Swift's Thoughts on the present Posture of Affairs.

5. Manner of directing a letter; a sense chiefly mercantile.

ADDRESSES.

ADDRE'SSER. n. f. [from address.] The person that addresses or petitions.

ADDU'CENT. adj. [adducens, Lat.]

A word applied to those muscles that bring forward, close, or draw together the parts of the body to which they are annexed.

TO ADDU'LCE. v. a. [addoucir, Fr. dulcis, Lat.] To sweeten; a word not now in use.

Thus did the French ambassadors, with great shew of their king's affection, and many sugared words, seek to addulce all matters between the two kings.

A'DELING. n. a. [from ædel, Sax. illustrious.] A word of honour among the Angles, properly appertaining to the king's children: king Edward the Confessor, being without issue, and intending to make Edgar his heir, called him adeling.

ADENO'GRAPHY. n. f. [from ἀδην and γράφω, Gr.] A treatise of the glands.

ADE'MPTION. n. f. [adimo, ademptum, Lat.] Taking away; privation.

ADE'PT. n. f. [from adeptus, Lat. that is, adeptus artem.] He that is completely skilled in all the secrets of his art. It is, in its original signification, appropriated to the chymists, but is now extended to other artists.

The preservation of chastity is easy to true adepts.

ADE'PT. adj. Skilful; thoroughly versed.

If there be really such adept philosophers as we are told of, I am apt to think, that, among their arcana, they are masters of extremely potent menstrooms.

A'DEQUATE. adj. [adequatus, Lat.] Equal to; proportionate; correspondent to, so as to bear an exact resemblance or proportion. It is used generally in a figurative sense, and often with the particle to.

Contingent death seems to be the whole adequate object of popular courage; but a necessary and unavoidable coffin strikes paleness into the stoutest heart.

The arguments were proper, adequate, and sufficient to compass their respective ends.

All our simple ideas are adequate; because, being nothing but the effects of certain powers in things, fitted and ordained by God to produce such sensations in us, they cannot but be correspondent and adequate to those powers.

Those are adequate ideas, which perfectly represent their archetypes or objects. Inadequate are but a partial, or incomplete, representation of those archetypes to which they are referred.

A'DEQUATELY. adv. [from adequate.]

1. In an adequate manner; with justness of representation; with exactness of proportion.

Gratitude consists adequately in these two things: first, that it is a debt; and, secondly, that it is such a debt as is left to every man's ingenuity, whether he will pay or no.

2. It is used with the particle to.

Piety is the necessary christian virtue, proportioned adequately to the omniscience and spirituality of that infinite Deity.

A'DEQUATENESS. n. f. [from adequate.] The state of being adequate; justness of representation; exactness of proportion.

ADESPO'TICK. adj. Not absolute; not despotick.

TO ADHERE. v. n. [adhæreo, Lat.]

1. To stick to; as, wax to the finger.

2. To stick, in a figurative sense; to be consistent; to hold together.

Why every thing adheres together, that no dram of a scruple, no scruple of a scruple, no obstacle, no incredulous or unsafe circumstance—

3. To remain firmly fixed to a party, person, or opinion.

Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you;

And sure I am, two men there are not living,

To whom he more adheres.

Every man of sense will agree with me, that singularity is laudable, when, in contradiction to a multitude, it adheres to the dictates of conscience, morality, and honour.

ADHE'RENCE. n. f. [from adhere.] See ADHESION.

1. The quality of adhering, or sticking; tenacity.

2. In a figurative sense, fixedness of mind; attachment; steadiness.

Their firm adherence to their religion is no less remarkable than their dispersion; considering it as persecuted or contemned over the whole earth.

A constant adherence to one sort of diet may have bad effects on any constitution.

Plain good sense, and a firm adherence to the point, have proved more effectual than those arts, which are contemptuously called the spirit of negotiating.

ADHE'RENCY. n. f. [The same with adherence.]

1. Steady attachment.

2. That which adheres.

Vices have a native adherency of vexation.

ADHE'RENT. adj. [from adhere.]

1. Sticking to.

Close to the cliff with both his hands he clung,

And stuck adherent, and suspended hung.

2. United with.

Modes are said to be inherent or adherent, that is, proper or improper. Adherent or improper modes arise from the joining of some accidental substance to the chief subject, which yet may be separated from it; so when a bowl is wet, or a boy is clothed, these are adherent modes; for the water and the clothes are distinct substances which adhere to the bowl, or to the boy.

ADHE'RENT. n. f. [from adhere.] The person that adheres; one that supports the cause, or follows the fortune of another; a follower; a partisan.

Princes must give protection to their subjects and adherents, when worthy occasion shall require it.

A new war must be undertaken upon the advice of those, who, with their partisans and adherents, were to be the sole gainers by it.

ADHE'RER. n. f. [from adhere.] He that adheres.

He ought to be indulgent to tender consciences; but, at the same time, a firm adherer to the established church.

ADHE'SION. n. f. [adhæsiō, Lat.]

1. The act or state of sticking to something. Adhesion is generally used in the natural, and adherence in the metaphorical sense; as, the adhesion of iron to the magnet; and adherence of a client to his patron.

Why therefore may not the minute parts of other bodies, if they be conveniently shaped for adhesion, stick to one another, as well as stick to this spirit?

The rest consisting wholly in the sensible configuration, as smooth and rough; or else more, or less, firm adhesion of the parts, as hard and soft, tough and brittle, are obvious.

— Prove that all things, on occasion,

Love union, and desire adhesion.

2. It is sometimes taken, like adherence, figuratively, for firmness in an opinion, or steadiness in a practice.

The same want of sincerity, the same adhesion to vice, and aversion from goodness, will be equally a reason for their rejecting any proof whatsoever.

ADHE'SIVE. adj. [from adhesion.] Sticking; tenacious; with to.

If slow, yet sure, adhesive to the tract,

Hot-steaming up.

TO ADHI'BIT. v. a. [adhibeo, Lat.] To apply; to make use of.

ADHIBITION. n. f. [from adhibit.] Application; use.

ADJA'CENCY. n. f. [from adjaceo, Lat.]

1. The state of lying close to another thing.

2. That which is adjacent. See ADJACENT.

Because the Cape hath sea on both sides near it, and other lands, remote as it were, equidistant from it; therefore, at that point, the needle is not distracted by the vicinity of adjacencies.

ADJA'CENT. adj. [adjacens, Lat.] Lying close; bordering upon something.

It may corrupt within itself, although no part of it issue into the body adjacent.

Uniform pellucid mediums, such as water, have no sensible reflection but in their external superficies, where they are adjacent to other mediums of a different density.

ADJA'CENT. n. f. That which lies next another.

The sense of the author goes visibly in its own train, and the words receiving a determined sense from their companions and adjacents, will not consent to give countenance and colour to what must be supported at any rate.

ADIA'PHOROUS. adj. [ἀδιαφορος, Gr.] Neutral; particularly used of some spirits and salts, which are neither of an acid or alkaline nature.

Our adiaphorous spirit may be obtained, by distilling the liquor that is afforded by woods and divers other bodies.

ADIA'PHORY. n. f. [ἀδιαφορία, Gr.] Neutrality; indifference.

TO ADJECT. v. a. [adjicio, adjectum, Lat.] To add to; to put to another thing.

ADJE'CTION. n. f. [adjectio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjecting, or adding.

2. The thing adjected, or added.

That unto every pound of sulphur, an adjection of one ounce of quicksilver; or unto every pound of petre, one ounce of sal-armoniac, will much intend the force, and consequently the report, I find no verity.

ADJECTI'TIOUS. adj. [from adjection.] Added; thrown in upon the rest.

ADJECTIVE. n. f. [adjectivum, Lat.]

A word added to a noun, to signify the addition or separation of some quality, circumstance, or manner of being; as, good, bad, are adjectives, because, in speech, they are applied to nouns, to modify their signification, or intimate the manner of existence in the things signified thereby.

All the verification of Claudian is included within the compass of four or five lines; perpetually closing his sense at the end of a verse, and that verse commonly which they call golden, or two substantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them, to keep the peace.

A D J

ADJECTIVELY. adv. [from adjective.] After the manner of an adjective; a term of grammar.

ADIEU. adv. [from à Dieu, used elliptically for à Dieu je vous commende, used at the departure of friends.] The form of parting, originally importing a commendation to the Divine care, but now used, in a popular sense, sometimes to things inanimate; farewell.

Ne gave him leave to bid that aged fire

Adieu, but nimbly ran her wonted course. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble lords; you restrained yourself within the list of too cold an adieu; be more expressive to them. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

While now I take my last adieu,

Heave thou no sigh, nor shed a tear;

Left yet my half-clos'd eye may view

On earth an object worth its care.

Prior.

TO ADJOIN. v. a. [adjoindre, Fr. adjungo, Lat.] To join to; to unite to; to put to.

Corrections or improvements should be as remarks adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places, and superadded to a regular treatise. Watts's Improvem. of the Mind.

TO ADJOIN. v. n. To be contiguous to; to lye next so as to have nothing between.

Th' adjoining fane, th' assembled Greks express'd,

And hunting of the Caledonian beast. Dryden's Fables.

In learning any thing, as little should be proposed to the mind at once, as is possible; and, that being understood and fully mastered, proceed to the next adjoining, yet unknown, simple, unperplexed proposition, belonging to the matter in hand, and tending to the clearing what is principally designed.

Locke.

TO ADJOURN. v. a. [adjourner, Fr.]

1. To put off to another day, naming the time; a term used in juridical proceedings; as, of parliaments, or courts of justice.

The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness,

That we adjourn this court to further day. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

By the king's authority alone, and by his writs they are assembled, and by him alone are they prorogued and dissolved; but each house may adjourn itself. Bac. Advice to Sir G. Villiers.

2. To put off; to defer; to let stay to another time.

Then, Jupiter, thou king of gods,

Why hast thou thus adjourn'd

The graces for his merits due,

Being all to dolours turn'd.

Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Crown high the goblets with a chearful draught;

Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought.

Dryd. Æneid, vii. l. 181.

The formation of animals being foreign to my purpose, I shall adjourn the consideration of it to another occasion.

Woodward's Nat. History, p. iii.

ADJOURNMENT. n. f. [adjournement, Fr.] An assignment of a day, or a putting off till another day. Adjournment in eyre, an appointment of a day, when the justices in eyre mean to sit again.

Cowell.

We will and we will not, and then we will not again, and we will. At this rate we run our lives out in adjournments from time to time, out of a fantastical levity that holds us off and on, betwixt hawk and buzzard.

L'Estrange.

ADIPOUS. adj. [adiposus, Lat.] Fat.

Dict.

ADIT. n. f. [aditus, Lat.] A passage for the conveyance of water under ground; a passage under ground in general: a term among the minemen.

For conveying away the water, they stand in aid of sundry devices; as, adits, pumps, and wheels, driven by a stream, and interchangeably filling and emptying two buckets. Carew's Surv.

The delfs would be so flown with waters (it being impossible to make any adits or foughs to drain them) that no gins or machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry. Ray on the Creat.

ADITION. n. f. [from adeo, aditum, Lat.] The act of going to another.

Dict.

TO ADJUDGE. v. a. [adjudico, Lat.]

1. To give the thing controverted to one of the parties by a judicial sentence; with the particle to before the person.

The way of disputing in the schools leads from it, by insisting on one topical argument; by the success of which, victory is adjudged to the opponent, or defendant.

Locke.

The great competitors for Rome

Cæsar and Pompey on Pharsalian plains,

Where stern Bellona, with one final stroke,

Adjudg'd the empire of this globe to one.

Phillips.

2. To sentence, or condemn to a punishment; with to before the thing.

But though thou art adjudged to the death;

Yet I will favour thee in what I can. Shakesp. Com. of Err.

3. Simply, to judge; to decree; to determine.

He adjudged him unworthy of his friendship and favour; purposing sharply to revenge the wrong he had received.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

ADJUDICATION. n. f. [adjudicatio, Lat.] The act of judging, or of granting something to a litigant, by a judicial sentence.

TO ADJUDICATE. v. a. [adjudico, Lat.] To adjudge; to give something controverted to one of the litigants, by a sentence or decision.

A D J

TO ADJUGATE. v. a. [adjuugo, Lat.] To yoke to; to join to another by a yoke. Dict.

ADJUMENT. n. f. [adjumentum, Lat.] Help; support. Dict.

ADJUNCT. n. f. [adjunctum, Lat.]

1. Something adherent or united to another, though not essentially part of it.

Learning is but an adjunct to ourself,

And where we are, our learning likewise is.

Shakesp. Love's Labour Lost.

But I make haste to consider you as abstracted from a court, which (if you will give me leave to use a term of logick) is only an adjunct, not a propriety, of happiness. Dryd. Aureng. Ded.

The talent of discretion, as I have described it in its several adjuncts and circumstances, is no where so serviceable as to the clergy.

Swift's Miscellanies.

2. A person joined to another. This sense rarely occurs.

He made him the associate of his heir apparent, together with the lord Cottington (as an adjunct of singular experience and trust) in foreign travels, and in a business of love. Wotton.

ADJUNCT. adj. United with; immediately consequent.

So well, that what you bid me undertake,

Though that my death were adjunct to my act,

I'd do't.

Shakesp. King John.

ADJUNCTION. n. f. [adjunctio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjoining, or coupling together.

2. The thing joined.

ADJUNCTIVE. n. f. [adjunctivus, Lat.]

1. He that joins.

2. That which is joined.

ADJURATION. n. f. [adjuratio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjuring, or proposing an oath to another.

2. The form of oath proposed to another.

When these learned men saw sickness and frenzy cured, the dead raised, the oracles put to silence, the dæmons and evil spirits forced to confess themselves no gods, by persons, who only made use of prayer and adjurations in the name of their crucified Saviour; how could they doubt of their Saviour's power on the like occasions? Addison on the Christian Religion.

TO ADJURE. v. a. [adjuro, Lat.] To impose an oath upon another, prescribing the form in which he shall swear.

Thou know'st, the magistrates

And princes of my country came in person,

Solicited, commanded, threaten'd, urg'd,

Adjur'd by all the bonds of civil duty,

And of religion, press'd how just it was,

How honourable. Milton's Sampson Agonistes, l. 853.

Ye lamps of heav'n! he said, and lifted high

His hands now free, thou venerable sky!

Inviolable pow'rs! ador'd with dread,

Ye fatal fillets! that once bound this head,

Ye sacred altars! from whose flames I fled,

Be all of you adjured.

Dryden, Æneid ii.

TO ADJUST. v. a. [adjuster, Fr.]

1. To regulate; to put in order; to settle in the right form.

Your Lordship removes all our difficulties, and supplies all our wants, faster than the most visionary projector can adjust his schemes.

Swift to the Lord High Treasurer.

2. To reduce to the true state or standard; to make accurate.

The names of mixed modes, for the most part, want standards in nature, whereby men may rectify and adjust their signification; therefore they are very various and doubtful. Locke.

3. To make conformable. It requires the particle to before the thing to which the conformity is made.

As to the accomplishment of this remarkable prophecy, whoever reads the account given by Josephus, without knowing his character, and compares it with what our Saviour foretold, would think the historian had been a christian, and that he had nothing else in view, but to adjust the event to the prediction.

Addison on the Christian Religion.

ADJUSTMENT. n. f. [adjustement, Fr.]

1. Regulation; the act of putting in method; settlement.

The farther and clearer adjustment of this affair, I am constrained to adjourn to the larger treatise. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. The state of being put in method, or regulated.

It is a vulgar idea we have of a watch or clock, when we conceive of it as an instrument made to shew the hour: but it is a learned idea which the watch-maker has of it, who knows all the several parts of it, together with the various connexions and adjustments of each part.

Watts's Logick.

ADJUTANT. n. f. A petty officer, whose duty is to assist the major, by distributing the pay, and overseeing the punishment, of the common men.

TO ADJUTE. v. a. [adjuvo, adjutum, Lat.] To help; to concur; a word not now in use.

For there be

Six bachelors as bold as he,

Adjuting to his company;

And each one hath his livery.

Ben. Johnson's Under-woods.

ADJUTOR. n. f. [adjutor, Lat.] A helper.

Dict.

ADJUTORY. adj. [adjutorius, Lat.] That which helps.

Dict.

AN ADJUTRIX. n. f. [Lat.] She who helps.

Dict.

ADJUVANT. adj. [adjuvans, Lat.] Helpful; useful.

Dict.

TO

To A'DJUVATE. v. a. [adjuvo, Lat.] To help; to further; to put forward. Diët.

ADME'ASUREMENT. n. f. [See MEASURE.] The adjustment of proportions; the act or practice of measuring according to rule.

Admeasurement is a writ, which lieth for the bringing of those to a mediocrity, that usurp more than their part. It lieth in two cases: one is termed admeasurement of dower, where the widow of the deceased holdeth from the heir, or his guardian, more in the name of her dower, than belongeth to her. The other is admeasurement of pasture, which lieth between those that have common of pasture appendant to their freehold, or common by vicinage, in case any one of them, or more, do furcharge the common with more cattle than they ought. Cowell.

In some counties they are not much more acquainted with admeasurement by acre; and thereby the writs of those counties contain twice or thrice so many acres more than the land hath. Bacon's Hist. Off. Alienat.

ADMENSURA'TION. n. f. [ad and mensura, Lat.] The act, or practice, of measuring out to each his part.

ADM'NICLE. n. f. [adminiculum, Lat.] Help; support; furtherance. Diët.

ADMINI'CLAR. adj. [from adminiculum, Lat.] That which gives help. Diët.

To ADMINISTER. v. a. [administro, Lat.]

1. To give; to afford; to supply.

Let zephyrs bland

Administer their tepid genial airs;

Naught fear he from the west, whose gentle warmth

Discloses well the earth's all-teeming womb. Philips.

2. To act as the minister or agent in any employment or office; generally, but not always, with some hint of subordination, to administer the government.

For forms of government let fools contest,

Whate'er is best administer'd, is best. Pope's Essay on Man.

3. To administer justice.

4. To administer the sacraments.

Have not they the old popish custom of administering the blessed sacrament of the holy eucharist with wafer-cakes? Hooker, b. iv. § 10.

5. To administer an oath.

Swear by the duty that you owe to heav'n,

To keep the oath that we administer. Shakesp. Richard II.

6. To administer physick.

I was carried on men's shoulders, administering physick and phlebotomy. Wafers's Voyage.

7. To administer to; to contribute; to bring supplies.

I must not omit, that there is a fountain rising in the upper part of my garden, which forms a little wandering rill, and administers to the pleasure, as well as the plenty, of the place. Spectator, N° 477.

8. To perform the office of an administrator, in law. See ADMINISTATOR.

Neal's order was never performed, because the executors durst not administer. Arbuthnot and Pope's Martin. Scribler.

To ADMINISTRATE. v. a. [administro, Lat.] To exhibit; to give as physick.

They have the same effects in medicine, when inwardly administered to animal bodies. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

ADMINISTRAT'ION. n. f. [administratio, Lat.]

1. The act of administering or conducting any employment; as, the conducting the publick affairs; dispensing the laws.

I then did use the person of your father;

The image of his pow'r lay then in me:

And in th' administration of his law,

While I was busy for the commonwealth,

Your highness pleased to forget my place. Shakesp. Henry IV.

In the short time of his administration, he shone so powerfully upon me, that, like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate. Dryden's Dedication of Virgil's Pastorals.

2. The active or executive part of government.

It may pass for a maxim in state, that the administration cannot be placed in too few hands, nor the legislature in too many. Swift's Sentiments of a Church of England man.

3. Those to whom the care of publick affairs is committed.

4. Distribution; exhibition; dispensation.

There is, in sacraments, to be observed their force, and their form of administration. Hooker, b. v.

By the universal administration of grace, begun by our blessed Saviour, enlarged by his apostles, carried on by their immediate successors, and to be compleated by the rest to the world's end; all types that darkened this faith are enlightened. Sprat's Sermons.

ADMINISTRATIVE. adj. [from administrate.] That which administers; that by which any one administers.

ADMINISTRATOR. n. f. [administrator, Lat.]

1. Is properly taken for him that has the goods of a man dying intestate, committed to his charge by the ordinary, and is accountable for the same, whenever it shall please the ordinary to call upon him thereunto. Cowell.

He was wonderfully diligent to enquire and observe what became of the king of Arragon, in holding the kingdom of Castille, and whether he did hold it in his own right, or as administrator to his daughter. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. He that officiates in divine rites.

I feel my conscience bound to remember the death of Christ, with some society of christians or other, since it is a most plain command; whether the person, who distributes these elements, be only an occasional or a settled administrator. Watts's Improvement of the Mind, p. i. c. 18.

3. He that conducts the government.

The residence of the prince, or chief administrator, of the civil power. Swift's short View of Ireland.

ADMINISTRATRIX. n. f. [Lat.] She who administers in consequence of a will.

ADMINISTRATORSHIP. n. f. [from administrator.] The office of administrator.

A'DMIRABLE. adj. [admirabilis, Lat.] To be admired; worthy of admiration; of power to excite wonder; always taken in a good sense, and applied either to persons or things.

The more power he hath to hurt, the more admirable is his praise, that he will not hurt. Sidney, b. ii.

God was with them in all their afflictions, and, at length, by working their admirable deliverance, did testify that they served him not in vain. Hooker, b. iv. § 2.

What admirable things occur in the remains of several other philosophers? Short, I confess, of the rules of christianity, but generally above the lives of christians. South's Sermons.

You can at most

To an indiff'rent lover's praise pretend:

But you would spoil an admirable friend. Dryd. Aurengz.

A'DMIRABLENESS. n. f. [from admirable.] The quality of being admirable; the power of raising wonder.

ADMIRABI'LITY. n. f. [admirabilis, Lat.] The quality or state of being admirable. Diët.

A'DMIRABLY. adv. [from admirable.] So as to raise wonder; in an admirable manner.

The theatre is, I think, the most spacious of any I ever saw, and, at the same time, so admirably well contrived, that, from the very depth of the stage, the lowest sound may be heard distinctly to the farthest part of the audience, as in a whispering place; and yet, if you raise your voice as high as you please, there is nothing like an echo to cause in it the least confusion. Addison on Italy.

A'DMIRAL. n. f. [amiral, Fr. of uncertain etymology.]

1. An officer or magistrate that has the government of the king's navy, and the hearing and determining all causes, as well civil as criminal, belonging to the sea. Cowell.

2. The chief commander of a fleet.

He also, in battle at sea, overthrew Rodericus Rotundus, admiral of Spain; in which fight the admiral, with his son, were both slain, and seven of his gallies taken. Knolles's Hist. Turks.

Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all

The English youth flock to their admiral. Waller.

3. The ship which carries the admiral or commander of the fleet.

The admiral galley, wherein the emperor himself was, by great mischance struck upon a sand. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

A'DMIRALSHIP. n. f. [from admiral.] The office or power of an admiral.

ADMIRA'LTY. n. f. [ammirauté, Fr.] The power, or officers, appointed for the administration of naval affairs.

ADMIRA'TION. n. f. [admiratio, Lat.]

1. Wonder; the act of admiring or wondering.

Indu'd with human voice, and human sense.

Reasoning to admiration. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

They are imitations of the passions, which always move, and therefore, consequently, please; for, without motion, there can be no delight: which cannot be considered but as an active passion. When we view those elevated ideas of nature, the result of that view is admiration, which is always the cause of pleasure. Dryd. Dufresnoy, Pref.

There is a pleasure in admiration, and this is that which properly causeth admiration, when we discover a great deal in an object, which we understand to be excellent; and yet we see, we know not how much more beyond that, which our understandings cannot fully reach and comprehend. Tillotson's Serm.

2. It is taken sometimes in a bad sense, though generally in a good.

Your boldness I with admiration see;

What hope had you to gain a queen like me?

Because a hero forc'd me once away,

Am I thought fit to be a second prey?

Dryd.

To ADMIRE. v. a. [admiro, Lat. admirer, Fr.]

1. To regard with wonder; generally in a good sense.

'Tis here that knowledge wonders, and there is an admiration that is not the daughter of ignorance. This indeed stupidly gazeth at the unwonted effect; but the philosophic passion truly admires and adores the supreme efficient. Glanville.

2. It is sometimes used, in more familiar speech, for to regard with love.

3. It is used, but rarely, in an ill sense.

You have displac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting

With most admir'd disorder: Shakesp. Macbeth.

To

To ADMIRE. v. n. To wonder; sometimes with the particle at.
The eye is already so perfect, that I believe the reason of a man would easily have rested here, and admir'd at his own contrivance.
Ray on the Creation.

An ADMIRER. n. s. [from admire.]

1. The person that wonders, or regards with admiration.
Neither Virgil nor Horace would have gained so great reputation, had they not been the friends and admirers of each other.
Addison. Spectator.

Who most to shun or hate mankind pretend,

Seek an admirer, or would fix a friend. Pope's Essay on Man.

2. In common speech, a lover.

ADMIRINGLY. adv. [from admire.] With admiration; in the manner of an admirer.

The king very lately spoke of him admiringly and mournfully.
Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

We may yet further admiringly observe, that though men usually give freeliest where they have not given before, and make it an excuse of their desistance from giving, that they have given it otherwise.
Boyle.

ADMISSEIBLE. adj. [admitto, admissum, Lat.] That which may be admitted.

Suppose that this supposition were admissible, yet this would not any way be inconsistent with the eternity of the divine nature and essence.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ADMISSION. n. s. [admissio, Lat.]

1. The act or practice of admitting.

There was also enacted that charitable law, for the admission of poor suitors without fee; whereby poor men became rather able to vex, than unable to sue.
Bacon's Henry VII.

By means of our solitary situation, and our rare admission of strangers, we know most part of the habitable world, and are ourselves unknown.
Bacon's New Atlantis.

2. The state of being admitted.

My father saw you ill designs pursue;

And my admission shew'd his fear of you. Dryd. Aurengzebe.

God did then exercise man's hopes with the expectations of a better paradise, or a more intimate admission to himself.
South's Sermons.

3. Admittance; the power of entering, or being admitted.

All springs have some degree of heat, none ever freezing, no not in the longest and severest frosts; especially those, where there is such a fire and disposition of the strata as gives free and easy admission to this heat.
Woodward's Natural History.

Our king descends from Jove:

And hither are we come, by his command,

To crave admission in your happy land. Dryd. Æneid vii.

4. In the ecclesiastical law.

It is, when the patron presents a clerk to a church that is vacant, and the bishop, upon examination, admits and allows of such clerk to be fitly qualified, by saying, Admitto te habilem, &c.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. The allowance of an argument; the grant of a position not fully proved.

To ADMIT. v. a. [admitto, Lat.]

1. To suffer to enter; to grant entrance.

Does not one table Bavius still admit?

2. To suffer to enter upon an office; in which sense, the phrase of admission into a college, &c. is used.

The treasurer found it no hard matter so far to terrify him, that, for the king's service, as was pretended, he admitted, for a six-clark, a person recommended by him.
Clarendon.

3. To allow an argument or position.

Suppose no weapon can thy valour's pride
Subdue, that by no force thou may'st be won,
Admit no steel can hurt or wound thy side,
And be it heav'n hath thee such favour done. Fairfax, b. ii.
This argument is like to have the less effect on me, seeing I cannot easily admit the inference.
Locke.

4. To allow, or grant in general; sometimes with the particle of.

If you once admit of a latitude, that thoughts may be exalted, and images raised above the life, that leads you insensibly from your own principles to mine. Dryd. on Heroic Poetry.

ADMITTABLE. adj. [from admit.] The person or thing which may be admitted.

The clerk, who is presented, ought to prove to the bishop, that he is a deacon, and that he has orders; otherwise, the bishop is not bound to admit him: for, as the law then stood, a deacon was admittable.
Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ADMITTANCE. n. s. [from admit.]

1. The act of admitting; allowance or permission to enter.

It cannot enter any man's conceit to think it lawful, that every man which listeth should take upon him charge in the church; and therefore a solemn admittance is of such necessity, that, without it, there can be no church-polity. Hooker, b. iii.

As to the admittance of the weighty elastic parts of the air into the blood, through the coats of the vessels, it seems contrary to experiments upon dead bodies.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The power or right of entering.

What

If I do line one of their hands?—'tis gold

Which buys admittance. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Surely a daily expectation at the gate, is the readiest way to gain admittance into the house.
South's Sermons.

There's news from Bertran; he desires

Admittance to the king, and cries aloud,

This day shall end our fears. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

There are some ideas which have admittance only through one sense, which is peculiarly adapted to receive them. Locke.

3. Custom, or prerogative, of being admitted to great persons; a sense now out of use.

Now, Sir John, here is the heart of my purpose: you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, of great admittance, authentic in your place and person, generally allowed for your many warlike, courtlike, and learned preparations.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

4. Concession of a position.

Nor could the Pythagorean give easy admittance thereto; for, holding that separate souls successively supplied other bodies, they could hardly allow the raising of souls from other worlds.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

To ADMIX. v. a. [admisceo, Lat.] To mingle with something else.

ADMIXTION. n. s. [from admix.] The union of one body with another, by mingling them.

All metals may be calcined by strong waters, or by admixtion of salt, sulphur, and mercury.
Bacon's Physical Remains.

The elements are no where pure in these lower regions; and if there is any free from the admixtion of another, sure it is above the concave of the moon. Glanville's Scep sis Scientifica.

There is no way to make a strong and vigorous powder of saltpetre, without the admixtion of sulphur. Brown's Vulgar Err.

ADMIXTURE. n. s. [from admix.] The body mingled with another; perhaps sometimes the act of mingling.

A mass which to the eye appears to be nothing but mere simple earth, shall, to the smell or taste, discover a plentiful admixture of sulphur, alum, or some other mineral.
Woodward's Natural History, p. iv.

Whatever acrimony, or amaritude, at any time redounds in it, must be derived from the admixture of another sharp bitter substance.
Harvey on Consumptions.

To ADMONISH. v. a. [admoneo, Lat.]

To warn of a fault; to reprove gently; to counsel against wrong practices; to put in mind of a fault or a duty; with the particle of, or against, which is more rare, or the infinitive mood of a verb.

One of his cardinals, who better knew the intrigues of affairs, admonished him against that unskilful piece of ingenuity.
Decay of Piety.

He of their wicked ways

Shall them admonish, and before them set

The paths of righteousness. Milt. Par. Lost, b. xi.

But when he was admonished by his subject to descend, he came down, gently circling in the air, and singing, to the ground.
Dryden's Dedication of Virgil's Past.

ADMONISHER. n. s. [from admonish.] The person that admonishes, or puts another in mind of his faults or duty.

Horace was a mild admonisher; a court-satyr, fit for the gentle times of Augustus.
Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicat.

ADMONISHMENT. n. s. [from admonish.] Admonition; the notice by which one is put in mind of faults or duties: a word not often used.

But yet be wary in thy studious care.—

—Thy grave admonishments prevail with me.

Shakespeare's Henry V. p. i.

To th' infinitely Good we owe

Immortal thanks, and his admonishment

Receive, with solemn purpose to observe

Immutably his sovereign will, the end

Of what we are.

ADMONITION. n. s. [admonitio, Lat.] The hint of a fault or duty; counsel; gentle reproof.

They must give our teachers leave, for the saving of those souls, to intermingle sometimes, with other more necessary things, admonition concerning these not unnecessary. Hooker.

From this admonition they took only occasion to redouble their fault, and to sleep again; so that, upon a second and third admonition, they had nothing to plead for their unseasonable drowsiness.
South's Sermons.

ADMONITIONER. n. s. [from admonition.] A liberal dispenser of admonition; a general adviser. A ludicrous term.

Albeit the admonitioners did seem at first to like no prescript form of prayer at all, but thought it the best that their minister should always be left at liberty to pray, as his own discretion did serve, their defender, and his associates, have since proposed to the world a form as themselves did like. Hooker, b. v. § 27.

ADMONITORY. adj. [admonitorius, Lat.] That which admonishes.

The sentence of reason is either mandatory, shewing what must be done; or else permissive, declaring only what may be done; or, thirdly, admonitory, opening what is the most convenient for us to do.
Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity, b. i.

ADMURMURA'TION. n. s. [admurmuro, Lat.] The act of murmuring, or whispering to another.
Dict.

A D O

TO ADMO'VE. v. a. [admoveo, Lat.] To bring one thing to another.

If, unto the powder of loadstone or iron, we admove the north-pole of the loadstone, the powders, or small divisions, will erect and conform themselves thereto. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii.

ADO'. n. f. [from the verb to do, with a before it, as the French affaire, from à and faire.]

1. Trouble, difficulty.

He took Clitophon prisoner, whom, with much ado, he kept alive; the Helots being villainously cruel. Sidney, b. i.

They moved, and in the end persuaded, with much ado, the people to bind themselves by solemn oath. Hooker, Pref.

He kept the borders and marches of the pale with much ado; he held many parliaments, wherein sundry laws were made. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

With much ado, he partly kept awake;

Not suff'ring all his eyes repose to take:

And ask'd the stranger, who did reeds invent,

And whence began so rare an instrument. Dryden.

2. Buffle; tumult; business; sometimes with the particle about.
Let's follow, to see the end of this ado.

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

All this ado about Adam's fatherhood, and the greatness of its power, helps nothing to establish the power of those that govern. Locke.

3. It has a light and ludicrous sense, implying more tumult and shew of business, than the affair is worth; in this sense it is generally used.

I made no more ado, but took all their seven points in my target, thus. Shakesp. Henry IV.

We'll keep no great ado—a friend or two—

For, hark, Tybalt being slain so late,

It may be thought we held him carelessly,

Being our kinsman, if we revel much. Shakesp. Rom. and Jul.

Come, come, says Puss, without any more ado, 'tis time for me to go to breakfast; for cats don't live upon dialogues.

L'Estrange, Fab. ii.

ADOLE'SCENCE. n. f. [adolescencia, Lat.]

The age succeeding childhood, and succeeded by puberty; more largely, that part of life in which the body has not yet reached its full perfection. See ADOLESCENCY.

The sons must have a tedious time of childhood and adolescence, before they can either themselves assist their parents, or encourage them with new hopes of posterity. Bentley's Sermon.

ADOLE'SCENCY. n. f. The same with adolescence.

He was so far from a boy, that he was a man born, and at his full stature, if we believe Josephus, who places him in the last adolescence, and makes him twenty-five years old.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 8.

TO ADOPT. v. a. [adopto, Lat.]

1. To take a son by choice; to make him a son, who was not so by birth.

Were none of all my father's sisters left;

Nay, were I of my mother's kin bereft;

None by an uncle's or a grandame's side,

Yet I cou'd some adopted heir provide. Dryd. Pers. Sat vi.

2. To place any person or thing in a nearer relation, than they have by nature, to something else.

Whether, adopted to some neighb'ring star,

Thou roll'st above us, in thy wand'ring race,

Or, in procession fix'd and regular,

Mov'd with the heav'ns majestic pace;

Or call'd to more celestial bliss,

Thou tread'st, with seraphims, the vast abyss. Dryd.

We are seldom at ease from the solicitation of our natural or adopted desires; but a constant succession of uneasinesses, out of that stock, which natural wants, or acquired habits, have heaped up, take the will in their turns. Locke.

ADOPTEDLY. adv. [from adopted.] After the manner of something adopted.

Adoptedly, as school-maids change their names,

By vain, though apt, affection. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

ADOPTER. n. f. [from adopt.]

He that gives some one by choice the rights of a son.

ADOPTION. n. f. [adoptio, Lat.]

1. The act of adopting, or taking to one's self what is not native.

See the hell of having a false woman! My bed shall be abused, my coffers ransacked, my reputation gnawn at; and I shall not only receive this villainous wrong, but stand under the adoption of abominable terms, and by him that does me the wrong. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. The state of being adopted.

In which time she purpos'd,

By watching, weeping, tendance, kissing, to O'ercome you with her shew: yes, and in time

(When she had fitted you with her craft) to work

Her son into th' adoption of the crown. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

In every act of our christian worship, we are taught to call upon him under the endearing character of our Father, to remind us of our adoption, that we are made heirs of God, and joint heirs of Christ. Rogers's Sermons.

ADOPTIVE. adj. [adoptivus, Lat.]

VOL. I.

A D O

1. He that is adopted by another, and made his son.

It is impossible an elective monarch should be so free and absolute as an hereditary; no more than it is possible for a father to have so full power and interest in an adoptive son, as in a natural. Bacon's Considerations on a War with Spain.

2. He that adopts another, and makes him his son.

An adopted son cannot cite his adoptive father into court, without his leave. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ADO'RABLE. adj. [adorable, Fr.] That which ought to be adored; that which is worthy of divine honours.

On these two, viz. the love of God, and our neighbour, hang both the law and the prophets, says the adorable Author of christianity; and the Apostle says, the end of the law is charity. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

ADO'RABLENESS. n. f. [from adorable.] The quality of being adorable; worthiness of divine honours.

ADO'RABLY. adv. [from adorable.] In a manner worthy of adoration.

ADORA'TION. n. f. [adoratio, Lat.]

1. The external homage paid to the Divinity, distinct from mental reverence.

Solemn and serviceable worship we name, for distinction sake, whatsoever belongeth to the church, or publick society, of God, by way of external adoration. Hooker, b. v. § 4.

It is possible to suppose, that those who believe a supreme excellent Being, may yet give him no external adoration at all.

Stillingsfleet's Defence of Discourses on Rom. Idolatry.

2. Homage paid to persons in high place or esteem.

O ceremony, shew me but thy worth:

What is thy toll, O adoration!

Art thou nought else but place, degree, and form,

Creating awe and fear in other men?

Wherein thou art less happy, being fear'd,

Than they in fearing.

What drink'st thou oft, instead of homage sweet,

But poison'd flattery?

Shakespeare's Henry V.

TO ADORE. v. a. [adoro, Lat.]

1. To worship with external homage; to pay divine honours.

The mountain nymphs and Themis they adore,

And from her oracles relief implore. Dryden.

2. It is used, popularly, to denote a high degree of reverence or regard; to reverence; to honour; to love.

The people appear adoring their prince, and their prince adoring God. Tatler, N° 57.

ADO'REMENT. n. f. [from adore.] Adoration; worship: a word scarcely used.

The priests of elder times deluded their apprehensions with sooth-saying, and such oblique idolatries, and won their credulities to the literal and downright adorement of cats, lizzards, and beetles. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 3.

ADO'RER. n. f. [from adore.]

He that adores; a worshiper: a term generally used in a low sense; as, by lovers, or admirers.

Being so far provoked as I was in France, I would abate her nothing; though I profess myself her adorer, not her friend. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Whilst as th' approaching pageant does appear,

And echoing crouds speak mighty Venus near;

I, her adorer, too devoutly stand

Fast on the utmost margin of the land. Prior.

2. A worshipper, in a serious sense.

He was so severe an adorer of truth, as not to dissemble; or to suffer any man to think that he would do any thing, which he resolv'd not to do. Clarendon.

TO ADORN. v. a. [adorno, Lat.]

1. To dress; to deck the person with ornaments.

He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels. Isaiah, lxi. 10.

Yet 'tis not to adorn and gild each part,

That shews more cost than art;

Jewels at nose and lips, but ill appear. Cowley.

2. To set out any place or thing with decorations.

A gallery adorned with the pictures or statues of the invention of things useful to human life. Cowley.

3. To embellish with oratory or elegance of language.

This will supply men's tongues with many new things, to be named, adorned, and described, in their discourse. Sprat's History of the Royal Society.

Thousands there are in darker fame that dwell,

Whose names some nobler poem shall adorn;

For, though unknown to me, they sure fought well. Dryd.

ADO'RNMENT. n. f. [from adorn.] Ornament; embellishment; elegance

Which attribute was not given to the earth, while it was confus'd; nor to the heavens, before they had motion and adornment.

Raleigh's History of the World.

She held the very garment of Posthumus in more respect than my noble and natural person, together with the adornment of my qualities. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

ADO'WN. adv. [from a and down.] Down; on the ground.

Thrice did she sink adown in deadly sound,
And thrice he her reviv'd with busy pain. Fairy Queen, b. i.
ADO'WN. prep. Down; towards the ground; from a higher situation towards a lower.

In this remembrance Emily ere day
Arose, and dress'd herself in rich array;
Fresh as the month, and as the morning fair,
Adown her shoulders fell her length of hair. Dryd. Fables.
ADRE'AD. adv. [from a and dread; as, aside, athirst, asleep.]
In a state of fear; frighted; terrified: now obsolete.
And thinking to make all men adread to such a one an enemy, who would not spare, nor fear to kill so great a prince.
Sidney, b. ii.

ADRI'FT. adv. [from a and drift, from drive.]
Floating at random; as, any impulse may drive.
Then, shall this mount
Of paradise, by might of waves, be mov'd
Out of his place, push'd by the horned flood;
With all his verdure spoil'd, and trees adrift
Down the great river, to the opening gulf,
And there take root. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 832.

It seem'd a corps adrift to distant fight;
But at a distance who could judge aright. Dryd. Fables.
The custom of frequent reflection will keep their minds from running adrift, and call their thoughts home from useless unattentive roving.
Locke on Education, § 176.
ADRO'IT. adj. [French.] Dextrous; active; skilful.
An adroit stout fellow would sometimes destroy a whole family, with justice apparently against him the whole time.
Fervas's Introduc't. to Don Quixote.

ADRO'ITNESS. n. f. [from adroit.]
Dexterity; readiness; activity. Neither this word, nor adroit, seem yet completely naturalized.
ADRY'. adv. [from a and dry.] Athirst; thirsty; in want of drink.
He never told any of them, that he was his humble servant, but his well-wisher; and would rather be thought a malecontent, than drink the king's health when he was not adry. Spect.

ADSCIT'IOUS. adj. [adscitius, Lat.]
That which is taken in to complete something else, though originally extrinsic; supplemental; additional.
ADSTRIC'TION. n. f. [adstrictio, Lat.]
The act of binding together; and applied, generally, to medicaments and applications, which have the power of making the part contract.

To ADVANCE. v. a. [avancer, Fr.]
1. To bring forward, in the local sense.
Now morn, her rosy steps in th' eastern clime
Advancing, sow'd the earth with orient pearl. Parad. Lost.
2. To raise to preferment; to aggrandize.
The declaration of the greatness of Mordecai, whereunto the king advanced him. Esther, x. 2.

3. To improve.
What laws can be advised more proper and effectual to advance the nature of man to its highest perfection, than these precepts of christianity?
Tillotson.
4. To heighten; to grace; to give lustre to.
As the calling dignifies the man, so the man much more advances his calling. As a garment, though it warms the body, has a return with an advantage, being much more warmed by it.
South's Sermons.

5. To forward; to accelerate.
These three last were slower than the ordinary Indian wheat of itself; and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.
6. To propose; to offer to the publick.
I dare not advance my opinion against the judgment of so great an author; but I think it fair to leave the decision to the publick.
Dryden's Fables, Pref.

Some ne'er advance a judgment of their own,
But catch the spreading notion of the town. Pop. Eff. on Crit.
To ADVANCE. v. n.
1. To come forward.
At this the youth, whose vent'rous soul
No fears of magick art controul,
Advanc'd in open fight. Parnel.

2. To make improvement.
They who would advance in knowledge, and not deceive and swell themselves with a little articulated air, should not take words for real entities in nature, till they can frame clear and distinct ideas of those entities.
Locke.

ADVANCE. n. f. [from to advance.]
1. The act of coming forward.
All the foot were put into Abington, with a resolution to quit, or defend, the town, according to the manner of the enemy's advance towards it.
Clarendon, b. viii.
So, like the sun's advance, your titles show;
Which, as he rises, does the warmer grow. Waller.

2. A tendency to come forward to meet a lover; an act of invitation.
In vain are all the practis'd wiles,
In vain those eyes would love impart;
Not all th' advances, all the smiles,
Can move one unrelenting heart. Walsh.

His genius was below
The skill of ev'ry common beau;
Who, tho' he cannot spell, is wise
Enough to read a lady's eyes;
And will each accidental glance
Interpret for a kind advance. Swift's Miscell.
He has described the unworthy passion of the goddess Calypso, and the indecent advances she made to detain him from his own country. Pope's Odyssey, b. vii. notes.

3. Progression; rise from one point to another.
Our Saviour raised the ruler's daughter, the widow's son, and Lazarus; the first of these, when she had just expired; the second, as he was carried to the grave on his bier; and the third, after he had been some time buried. And having, by these gradual advances, manifested his divine power, he at last exerted the highest and most glorious degree of it; and raised himself also by his own all-quickening virtue, and according to his own express prediction. Atterbury's Sermons.

Men of study and thought, that reason right, and are lovers of truth, do make no great advances in their discoveries of it.
Locke of Human Understanding, § 3.

4. Improvement; progress towards perfection.
The principle and object of the greatest importance in the world to the good of mankind, and for the advance and perfecting of human nature. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ADVANCEMENT. n. f. [avancement, Fr.]
1. The act of coming forward.
This refinement having begun about the time of the revolution, I had some share in the honour of promoting it; and I observe, that it makes daily advancements, and, I hope, in time, will raise our language to the utmost perfection. Swift.

2. The state of being advanced; preferment.
During whose reign, the Percies of the North
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne.
Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. i.

3. The act of advancing another.
In his own grace he doth exalt himself
More than in your advancement. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

4. Improvement.
Nor can we conceive it may be unwelcome unto those honoured worthies, who endeavour the advancement of learning.
Brown's Pref. to Vulgar Errors.

ADVANCER. n. f. [from advance.]
He that advances any thing; a promoter; forwarder.
Soon after the death of a great officer, who was judged no advancer of the king's matters, the king said to his solicitor Bacon, who was his kinsman, How, tell me truly, what say you of your cousin that is gone?
Bacon's Apothegms.
Let us add only this concerning this latter sort, that they are greater advancers of defamatory designs, than the very first contrivers.
Government of the Tongue, § 5.

ADVANTAGE. n. f. [avantage, Fr.]
1. Superiority; often with of or over before a person.
In the practical prudence of managing such gifts, the laity may have some advantage over the clergy; whose experience is, and ought to be, less of this world than the others. Sprat.
All other sorts and sects of men would evidently have the advantage of us, and a much surer title to happiness than we.
Atterbury's Preface to his Sermons.

2. Superiority gained by stratagem, or unlawful means.
The common law hath left them this benefit, whereof they make advantage, and wrest it to their bad purposes.
Spenser's State of Ireland.
But specially he took advantage of the night for such privy attempts, insomuch that the bruit of his manliness was spread every-where.
2 Macc. viii. 7.

It is a noble and a pure defiance of a great malice, backed with a great interest; which yet can have no advantage of a man, but from his own expectations of something that is without him.
South's Sermons.
As soon as he was got to Sicily, they sent for him back; designing to take advantage, and prosecute him in the absence of his friends.
Swift on the Dissent. in Athens and Rome.

3. Opportunity; convenience.
I beseech you,
If you think fit, or that it may be done,
Give me advantage of some brief discourse
With Desdemona alone. Shakespeare's Othello.

4. Favourable circumstances.
Like jewels to advantage set,
Her beauty by the shade does get. Waller.
A face, which is over-flushed, appears to advantage in the deepest scarlet, and the darkest complexion is not a little alleviated by a black hood. Addison. Spectator, N° 265.
True wit is nature to advantage dress'd,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well express'd.
Pope's Essay on Criticism.

5. Gain; profit.
For thou saidst, what advantage will it be unto thee, and what profit shall I have, if I be cleansed from my sin? Jel, xxxv. 3.

Certain it is, that advantage now fits in the room of conscience, and steers all. South's Sermons.

6. Overplus; something more than the mere lawful gain.

O my gentle Hubert,
We owe thee much; within this wall of flesh
There is a soul counts thee her creditor,
And with advantage means to pay thy love.

Shakespeare's King John.

You said, you neither lend nor borrow

Upon advantage. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

7. Preponderation on one side of the comparison.

Much more should the consideration of this pattern arm us with patience against ordinary calamities; especially if we consider his example with this advantage, that though his sufferings were wholly undeserved, and not for himself but for us, yet he bore them patiently. Tillotson.

TO ADVA'NTAGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To benefit.

Convey what I set down to my lady: it shall advantage more than ever the bearing of letter did.

Shakespeare's Twelfth-Night.

The great business of the senses being to make us take notice of what hurts or advantages the body, it is wisely ordered by nature, that pain should accompany the reception of several ideas. Locke.

We should have pursued some other way, more effectual, for distressing the common enemy, and advantaging ourselves. Swift.

The trial hath endamag'd thee no way,

Rather more honour left, and more esteem;

Me naught advantag'd, missing what I aim'd. Par. Regained.

2. To promote; to bring forward; to gain ground.

To ennoble it with the spirit that inspires the Royal Society, were to advantage it in one of the best capacities in which it is improveable. Glanville's Scep sis Scientifica, Pref.

ADVA'NTAGED. adj. [from to advantage.]

Possessed of advantages.

In the most advantaged tempers, this disposition is but comparative; whereas the most of men labour under disadvantages, which nothing can rid them off. Glanv. Scep sis Scientifica.

ADVA'NTAGE-GROUND. n. f. Ground that gives superiority, and opportunities of annoyance or resistance.

This excellent man, who stood not upon the advantage-ground before, from the time of his promotion to the archbishoprick, or rather from that of his being commissioner of the treasury, exceedingly provoked, or underwent the envy, and reproach, and malice of men of all qualities and conditions; who agreed in nothing else. Clarendon.

ADVANTA'GEOUS. adj. [avantageux, Fr.]

1. Of advantage; profitable; useful; opportune; convenient.

The time of sickness, or affliction, is, like the cool of the day to Adam, a season of peculiar propriety for the voice of God to be heard; and may be improved into a very advantageous opportunity of begetting or increasing spiritual life in the soul.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

Here perhaps

Some advantageous act may be achiev'd

By sudden onset, either with hell-fire

To waste his whole creation; or possess

All as our own. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 363.

2. It is used with relation to persons, and followed by to.

Since every painter paints himself in his own works, 'tis advantageous to him to know himself, to the end that he may cultivate those talents which make his genius. Dryd. Dufresnoy.

ADVANTA'GEOUSLY. adv. [from advantageous.]

Conveniently; opportunely; profitably.

It was advantageously situated, there being an easy passage from it to Ægypt, Æthiopia, Persia, and India, by sea. Arbuth.

ADVANTA'GEOUSNESS. n. f. [from advantageous.]

Quality of being advantageous; profitableness; usefulness; convenience.

The last property, which qualifies God for the fittest object of our love, is, the advantageousness of his to us, both in the present and the future life. Boyle's Seraphic Love.

TO ADVENE. v. n. [advenio, Lat.]

To accede to something; to become part of something else, without being essential; to be superadded.

A sixth cause considered in judicature, is stiled an accidental cause; and the accidental of any act, is said to be whatever advenges to the act itself already substantiated. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ADVE'NIENT. adj. [adveniens, Lat.]

Advening; coming from outward causes; superadded.

If to suppose the soul a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsically advenient, be a great error in philosophy, almost all the world hath hitherto been mistaken.

Glanville's Vanity of Dogmatism.

Being thus divided from truth in themselves, they are yet farther removed by advenient deception; for they are daily mocked into error by subtler devisers. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

A'DVENT. n. f. [from adventus; that is, adventus Redemptoris.]

The name of one of the holy seasons, signifying the coming; that is, the coming of our Saviour; which is made the subject of our devotion during the four weeks before Christmas.

ADVE'NTINE. adj. [from advenio, adventum.]

Adventitious; that which is extrinsically added; that which comes from outward causes: a word scarcely in use.

As for the peregrine heat, it is thus far true, that, if the proportion of the adventine heat be greatly predominant to the natural heat and spirits of the body, it tendeth to dissolution or notable alteration. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup> 836.

ADVENTITIOUS. adj. [adventitius, Lat.]

That which advenges; accidental; supervenient; extrinsically added, not essentially inherent.

Diseases of continuance get an adventitious strength from custom, besides their material cause from the humours. Bacon.

Though we may call the obvious colours natural, and the others adventitious; yet such changes of colours, from whatsoever cause they proceed, may be properly enough taken in, to illustrate the present subject. Boyle on Colours.

If his blood boil, and th' adventitious fire

Rais'd by high meats, and higher wines, require

To temper and allay the burning heat;

Waters are brought, which by decoction get

New coolness. Dryd. Juvenal, Sat. v.

Of this we have an instance in the gem-kind; where, of all the many sorts reckoned up by lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original; their diversities, as to lustre, colour, and hardness, arising from the different admixture of other adventitious mineral matter. Woodward's Natural Hist.

ADVE'NTIVE. n. f. [from advenio, Lat.] The thing or person that comes from without: a word not now in use.

That the natives be not so many, but that there may be elbow-room enough for them, and for the adventives also.

Bacon's Advice to Sir George Villiers.

ADVE'NTUAL. adj. [from advent.]

Relating to the season of advent.

I do also daily use one other collect; as, namely, the collects adventual, quadragesimal, paschal, or pentecostal, for their proper seasons. Bishop Saunderson upon Submission to Usurpers.

ADVENTURE. n. f. [French.]

1. An accident; a chance; a hazard; an event of which we have no direction.

The general summoned three castles that were near: one desperate of succour, and not desirous to dispute the defence, presently yielded; but two stood upon their adventure.

Sir John Hayward.

2. In this sense is used the phrase, at all adventures; [à l'adventure, Fr.] By chance; without any rational scheme.

Blows flew at all adventures, wounds and deaths given and taken unexpected; many scarce knowing their enemies from their friends. Sir John Hayward.

Where the mind does not perceive this probable connection, there men's opinions are the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice and without direction. Locke.

3. The occasion of casual events; an enterprise in which something must be left to hazard.

For I must love, and am resolv'd, to try

My fate, or, failing in th' adventure, die. Dryden's Fables.

This noun, with all its derivatives, are frequently written without ad; as, venture, venturous.

TO ADVE'NTURE. v. n. [adventurer, Fr.]

1. To try the chance; to dare.

Be not angry,

Most mighty princess, that I have adventur'd

To try your taking of a false report. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

The tender and delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to set the sole of her foot upon the ground, for delicateness and tenderness. Deuter. xxviii. 26.

2. In an active sense, to put into the power of chance.

For my father fought for you, and adventured his life for, and delivered you out of the hand of Midian. Judges, ix. 17.

3. It is often used with the reciprocal pronoun; as, he adventured himself.

ADVENTURER. n. f. [adventurier, Fr.]

He that seeks occasions of hazard; he that puts himself in the hands of chance.

He is a great adventurer, said he,

That hath his sword through hard assay forgone,

And now hath vow'd, till he avenged be

Of that despight, never to wear none. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

The kings of England did not make the conquest of Ireland their own work; it was begun by particular adventurers, and other voluntaries, who came to seek their fortunes in Ireland.

Sir John Davies on Ireland.

In this action, highly commendable, he intended to hazard his own action, that so the more easily he might win adventurers, who else were like to be left forward. Sir W. Raleigh's Eff.

Had it not been for the British, which the late wars drew over, and of adventurers or soldiers seated here, the country had, by the last war, and plague, been left, in a manner, destitute.

Temple's Miscellanies.

Their wealthy trade from pirate's rapine free,

Our merchants shall no more adventurers be. Dryden.

ADVENTUROUS. adj. [adventurous, Fr.]

1. He that is inclined to adventures; and, consequently, bold, daring, courageous.

At land and sea, in many a doubtful fight,
Was never known a more advent'rous knight;
Who oftner drew his sword, and always for the right.

Dryd. Hind and Panther.

2. Applied to things; that which is full of hazard; which requires courage; dangerous.

But I've already troubled you too long,
Nor dare attempt a more advent'rous song.
My humble verse demands a softer theme;
A painted meadow, or a purling stream.

Addison.

ADVENTUROUSLY. adv. [from adventurous.]

After an adventurous manner; boldly; daringly.

They are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing adventurously. Shakespeare's Henry V.

ADVENTURESOME. adj. [from adventure.]

The same with adventurous: a low word, scarcely used in writing.

ADVENTURESOMENESS. n. f. [from adventuresome]

The quality of being adventuresome.

Dict.

ADVERB. n. f. [adverbium, Lat.]

A word joined to a verb or adjective, and solely applied to the use of qualifying and restraining the latitude of their signification, by the intimation of some circumstance thereof; as, of quality, manner, degree.

Clarke's Latin Grammar.

Thus we say, he runs swiftly; the bird flies aloft; he lives virtuously.

ADVERBIAL. adj. [adverbialis, Lat.]

That which has the quality or structure of an adverb.

ADVERBIALLY. adv. [adverbialiter, Lat.]

Like an adverb; in the manner of an adverb.

I should think alta was joined adverbially with tremat, did Virgil make use of so equivocal a syntax. Addis. Rem. on Italy.

ADVERSABLE. adj. [from adverse.]

Contrary to; opposite to.

Dict.

ADVERSARIA. n. f. [Lat. A book, as it should seem, in which Debtor and Creditor were set in opposition.] A common-place; a book to note in.

These parchments are supposed to have been St. Paul's adversaria. Bull's Sermons.

ADVERSARY. n. f. [adversaire, Fr. adversarius, Lat.]

An opponent; antagonist; enemy: generally applied to those that have verbal or judicial quarrels; as, controvertists or litigants: sometimes to an opponent in single combat. It may sometimes imply an open profession of enmity; as we say, a secret enemy is worse than an open adversary.

Yet am I noble, as the adversary

I come to cope.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Those rites and ceremonies of the church, therefore, which were the self-same now that they were, when holy and virtuous men maintained them against profane and deriding adversaries, her own children have in derision.

Hooker, b. i. § 1.

Mean while th' adversary of God and man,

Satan, with thoughts inflam'd, of highest design,

Puts on swift wings. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 620.

An adversary, on the contrary, makes a stricter search into us, and discovers every flaw and imperfection in our tempers. A friend exaggerates a man's virtues; an enemy inflames his crimes.

Addison. Spectator, N° 399.

ADVERSATIVE. adj. [adversativus, Lat.]

A term of grammar, applied to a word which makes some opposition or variety; as in this sentence: This diamond is orient, but it is rough. But is an adversative conjunction.

ADVERSE. adj. [adversus, Lat.]

In prose it has now the accent on the first syllable; in verse it is accented on the first by Shakespeare; on either, indifferently, by Milton; on the last, by Dryden; on the first, by Rowson.

1. Acting with contrary directions; as, two bodies in collision.

Was I for this nigh wreckt upon the sea,

And twice, by adverse winds, from England's bank

Drove back again unto my native clime. Shakefp. Henry VI.

As when two polar winds blowing adverse,

Upon the Cronian sea together drive

Mountains of ice. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 289.

With adverse blast up-turns them from the South,

Notus and Afer.

Ibid. l. 701.

A cloud of smoke envelopes either host,

And all at once the combatants are lost;

Darkling they join adverse, and shock unseen;

Courfers with courfers jostling, men with men.

Dryd.

2. Figuratively, contrary to the wish or desire; thence, calamitous; afflictive; pernicious. It is opposed to prosperous.

What if he hath decreed, that I shall first

Be try'd in humble state, and things adverse;

By tribulations, injuries, insults,

Contempts, and scorn, and snares, and violence. Par. Reg.

Some the prevailing malice of the great,

Unhappy men, or adverse fate,

Sunk deep into the gulfs of an afflicted state. Rowson.

3. Personally opponent; the person that counteracts another, or contests any thing.

Well she saw her father was grown her adverse party; and yet her fortune such, as she must favour her rivals. Sidney.

ADVERSITY. n. f. [adversité, Fr.]

Affliction; calamity; that is, opposition to our wishes.

1. The cause of our sorrow; affliction; misfortune. In this sense it may have a plural.

Let me embrace these four adversities,

For wise men say, it is the wisest course. Shakefp. Hen. VI.

2. The state of unhappiness; misery.

Sweet are the uses of adversity,

Which like the toad, ugly and venomous,

Wears yet a precious jewel in his head. Shak. As you like it.

Concerning deliverance itself from all adversity, we use not to say men are in adversity, whensoever they feel any small hinderance of their welfare in this world, but when some notable affliction or cross, some great calamity or trouble, befall them.

Hooker, b. v. § 48.

A remembrance of the good use he had made of prosperity, contributed to support his mind under the heavy weight of adversity, which then lay upon him. Atterbury's Sermons.

ADVERSLY. adv. [from adverse.]

In an adverse manner; oppositely; unfortunately.

What I think, I utter, and spend my malice in my breath. Meeting two such wealmen as you are, (I cannot call you Lycurguses) if the drink you give me touch my palate adversly, I make a crooked face at it.

Shakefp. Coriolanus.

To ADVERT. v. n. [adverto, Lat.]

To attend to; to regard; to observe; with the particle to before the object of regard.

The mind of man being not capable at once to advert to more than one thing, a particular view and examination of such an innumerable number of vast bodies, will afford matter of admiration.

Ray on the Creation.

Now to the universal whole advert;

The earth regard as of that whole a part;

In which wide frame more noble worlds abound;

Witness, ye glorious orbs, which hang around. Blackmore.

We sometimes say, To advert the mind to an object.

ADVERTENCE. n. f. [from advert.]

Attention to; regard to; consideration.

Christianity may make Archimedes his challenge; give it but where it may set its foot; allow but a sober advertence to its proposals, and it will move the whole world.

Decay of Picty.

ADVERTENCY. n. f. [from advert.]

The same with advertence. Attention; regard; heedfulness.

Too much advertency is not your talent; or else you had fled from that text, as from a rock.

Swift.

To ADVERTISE. v. a. [advertir, Fr.]

It is now spoken with the accent upon the last syllable; but appears to have been anciently accented on the second.

1. To inform another; to give intelligence; with an accusative of the person informed.

The bishop did require a respite,

Wherein he might the king his lord advertise,

Whether our daughter were legitimate.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

As I by friends am well advertised,

Sir Edmund Courtney, and the haughty prelate,

Bishop of Exeter, his elder brother,

With many more confederates are in arms.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

2. To inform; to give notice; with of before the subject of information.

The death of Solyman nothing suspected, Ferhates, understanding that Solyman expected more assured advertisement, sent unto the other Basias; unto whom he declared the death of the emperor: of which they, by another messenger, advertised Solyman; firming those letters with all their hands and seals.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

They were to advertise the chief hero of the distresses of his subjects, occasioned by his absence, to crave his succour, and solicit him to hasten his return.

Dryd. Pref. Dufresne.

3. To give notice of any thing, by means of an advertisement in the publick prints; as, He advertised his loss.

ADVERTISEMENT, or ADVERTISEMENT. n. f. [advertissement, Fr.]

1. Instruction; admonition.

'Tis all men's office to speak patience

To those, that wring under the load of sorrow;

But no man's virtue nor sufficiency,

To be so moral, when he shall endure

The like himself: therefore give me no counsel;

My griefs are louder than advertisement.

Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

2. Intelligence; information.

Then, as a cunning prince that useth spies,

If they return no news, doth nothing know;

But if they make advertisement of lies,

The prince's counsel all awry do go.

Sir John Davies.

He

A D V

He had received advertisement, that the party, which was sent for his relief from London, had received some brush in Somersetshire, which would much retard their march. Clarendon.

The drum and trumpet, by their several sounds, serve for many kinds of advertisements, in military affairs: the bells serve to proclaim a scare-fire; and, in some places, water-breaches; the departure of a man, woman, or child; time of divine service; the hour of the day; day of the month. Holder.

3. Notice of any thing published in a paper of intelligence.

ADVERTISER. n. f. [advertiseur, Fr.]

1. He that gives intelligence or information.

2. The paper in which advertisements are published.

ADVERTISING, or ADVERTISING. part. adj. [from advertise.]

Active in giving intelligence; monitory: a word not now in use.

As I was then
Advertising, and holy to your business,
 Not changing heart with habit, I am still Attornied at your service. Shakefp. Measure for Measure.

TO ADVESPERATE. v. n. [advespero, Lat.]

To draw towards evening. Dict.

ADVICE. n. f. [avis, advis, Fr. from advise, low Latin.]

1. Counsel; instruction: except that instruction implies superiority, and advice may be given by equals or inferiors.

Break we our match up, and, by my advice,
 Let us impart what we have seen to-night
 Unto young Hamlet. Shakefp. Hamlet.

O troubled, weak and coward, as thou art!
 Without thy poor advice, the lab'ring heart
 To worse extremes with swifter steps would run;
 Not sav'd by virtue, yet by vice undone. Prior.

2. Reflection; prudent consideration; as, he always acts with good advice.

What he hath won, that he hath fortified:
 So hot a speed, with such advice dispos'd,
 Such temperate order, in so fierce a course,
 Doth want example. Shakefp. King John.

3. Consultation; deliberation; with the particle with.

Great princes, for the most part, taking advice with workmen, with no less cost, set their things together. Bacon's Eff.

4. Intelligence; as, the merchants received advice of their loss.

This sense is somewhat low, and chiefly commercial.

ADVICE-BOAT. n. f. A vessel employed to bring intelligence.

ADVISABLE. adj. [from advise.] Prudent; fit to be advised.

Some judge it advisable for a man to account with his heart every day; and this, no doubt, is the best and surest course; for still the oftner, the better. South's Sermons.

It is not advisable to reward, where men have the tenderness not to punish. L'Estrange's Fables.

ADVISABLENESS. n. f. [from advisable.] The quality of being advisable, or fit; fitness; propriety.

TO ADVISE. v. a. [advise, Fr.]

1. To counsel; with the particle to before the thing advised.

If you do stir abroad, go arm'd.—
 ——— Arm'd, brother! ——— ——— Brother, I advise you to the best. Shak. K. Lear.

I would advise all gentlemen to learn merchants accounts, and not to think it a skill that belongs not to them. Locke.

When I consider the scruples and cautions I here lay in your way, methinks it looks as if I advised you to something which I would have offered at, but in effect not done. Idem.

2. To give information; to inform; to make acquainted with any thing; often with the particle of before the thing told.

You were advis'd, his flesh was capable
 Of wounds and scars; and that his forward spirit
 Would lift him, where most trade of danger rang'd.
Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

Such discourse bring on,
 As may advise him of his happy state;
 Happiness in his pow'r, left free to will. Paradise Lost.

A posting messenger dispatch'd from hence,
 Of this fair troop advis'd their aged prince. Dryden's Æneid.

TO ADVISE. v. n.

1. To consult; with the particle with before the person consulted; as, he advised with his companions.

2. To consider; to deliberate.

Advise if this be worth
 Attempting, or to sit in darkness here,
 Hatching vain empires. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

ADVISED. participial adj. [from advise.]

1. Acting with deliberation and design; prudent; wise.

Let his travel appear rather in his discourse, than in his apparel or gesture; and, in his discourse, let him be rather advised in his answers, than forward to tell stories. Bacon's Eff.

Th' Almighty Father, where he sits
 Shrin'd in his sanctuary of heav'n secure,
 Consulting on the sum of things foreseen,
 This tumult, and permitted all, advis'd. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

2. Performed with deliberation; done on purpose; acted with design.

By that which we work naturally, as, when we breathe, sleep, and move, we set forth the glory of God, as natural agents do; albeit we have no express purpose to make that our end, nor any advised determination therein to follow a law. Hooker, b. i. p. 49.

A D U

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
 I shot his fellow of the self-same flight,
 The self-same way, with more advised watch,
 To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,
 I lost found both. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.

ADVISEDLY. adv. [from advised.] Deliberately; purposely; by design; prudently.

Surprize may be made by moving things, when the party is in haste, and cannot stay to consider advisedly of that which is moved. Bacon, Essay xxiii.

Thou stillest second thoughts (which are by all allowed the best) a relapse; and talkest of a quagmire, where no man ever stuck fast; and accusest constancy of mischief in what is natural, and advisedly undertaken. Sir John Suckling.

ADVISEDNESS. n. f. [from advised.] Deliberation; cool and prudent procedure.

While things are in agitation, private men may modestly tender their thoughts to the consideration of those that are in authority; to whose care it belongeth, in prescribing concerning indifferent things, to proceed with all just advisedness and moderation. Saunderson's Judgment in one View.

ADVISEMENT. n. f. [advisement, Fr.]

1. Counsel; information.

Mote I wote,
 What strange adventure do ye now pursue?
 Perhaps my succour, or advisement meet,
 Mote stead you much your purpose to subdue. Fairy Queen.

I will, according to your advisement, declare the evils, which seem most hurtful. Spenser's State of Ireland.

2. It is taken likewise, in old writers, for prudence and circumspection. It is now, in both senses, antiquated.

ADVISER. n. f. [from advise.] The person that advises, or gives counsel; a counsellor.

Here, free from court-compliances, he walks,
 And with himself, his best adviser, talks. Waller.

They never fail of their most artful and indefatigable address, to silence this impertinent adviser, whose severity awes their excesses. Rogers's Sermons.

ADULATION. n. f. [adulation, Fr. adulatio, Lat.] Flattery; high compliment.

O be sick, great Greatness!
 And bid thy ceremony give thee cure.
 Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out,
 With titles blown from adulation? Shakefp. Henry V.

They who flattered him most before, mentioned him now with the greatest bitterness, and called him now the corrupter of the king, and betrayer of the people; without imputing the least crime to him, committed since the time of that exalted adulation, or that was not then as much known to them, as it could be now. Clarendon.

ADULATOR. n. f. [adulator, Lat.] A flatterer. Dict.

ADULATORY. adj. [adulatorius, Lat.] Flattering; full of compliments.

ADULT. adj. [adultus, Lat.] Grown up; past the age of infancy and weakness.

They would appear less able to approve themselves, not only to the confessor, but even to the catechist, in their adult age, than they were in their minority; as having scarce ever thought of the principles of their religion, since they conned them to avoid correction. Decay of Piety.

The earth, by these applauded schools, 'tis said,
 This single crop of men and women bred;
 Who grown adult, (so chance, it seems, enjoin'd)
 Did, male and female, propagate their kind. Blackmore.

ADULT. n. f. A person above the age of infancy, or grown to some degree of strength; sometimes full grown: a word used chiefly by medicinal writers.

The depression of the cranium, without a fracture, can but seldom occur; and then it happens to children, whose bones are more pliable and soft than those of adults. Sharp's Surgery.

ADULTNESS. n. f. [from adult.] The state of being adult. See ADOLESCENCE. Dict.

TO ADULTER. v. a. [adulterer, Fr. adultero, Lat.] To commit adultery with another: a word not classical.

His chaste wife
 He adulter still: his thoughts lye with a whore. Ben. Johnf.

ADULTERANT. n. f. [adulterans, Lat.] The person or thing which adulterates.

TO ADULTERATE. v. a. [adulterer, Fr. adultero, Lat.]

1. To commit adultery.

But fortune, oh!
Adulterates hourly with thine uncle John;
 And with her golden hand hath pluckt on France. Shakefp. King John.

2. To corrupt by some foreign admixture; to contaminate.

Common pot-ashes, bought of them that sell it in shops, who are not so foolishly knavish, as to adulterate them with saltpetre, which is much dearer than pot-ashes. Boyle.

Could a man be compos'd to such an advantage of constitution, tion, that it should not at all adulterate the images of his mind ; yet this second nature would alter the crasis of his understanding. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica, c. xvi.

The preſent war has ſo adulterated our tongue with ſtrange words, that it would be impoſſible for one of our great grand-fathers to know what his poſterity have been doing. Spectator.

ADULTERATE. adj. [from To adulterate.]

1. Tainted with the guilt of adultery.

I am poſſeſſ'd with an adulterate blot ;
My blood is mingled with the grime of luſt ;
Being ſtrumpeted by thy contagion. Shakeſp. Comedy of Err.
— That inceſtuous, that adulterate beaſt. Idem, Hamlet.

2. Corrupted with ſome foreign mixture.

It does indeed differ no more, than the maker of adulterate wares does from the vender of them. Governm. of the Tongue.

They will have all their gold and ſilver, and may keep their adulterate copper at home ; for we are determined not to purchaſe it with our manufactures. Swift's Miſcellanies.

ADULTERATENESS. n. ſ. [from adulterate.] The quality or ſtate of being adulterate, or counterfeit.

ADULTERATION. n. ſ. [from adulterate.]

1. The act of adulterating or corrupting by foreign mixture ; contamination.

To make the compound paſs for the rich metal ſimple, is an adulteration, or counterfeiting : but if it be done avowedly, and without diſguiſing, it may be a great ſaving of the richer metal. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N<sup>o</sup> 798.

2. The ſtate of being adulterated, or contaminated.

Such tranſlations are like the adulteration of the nobleſt wines, where ſomething of the colour, ſpirit, and flavour, will remain ; and, while they pleaſe ſome injudicious palates, do only raiſe the indignation of every good taſte. Felton on the Claſſ.

ADULTERER. n. ſ. [adulter, Lat.] The perſon guilty of adultery.

With what impatience muſt the muſe behold,
The wife by her procuring huſband ſold ;
For tho' the law makes null th' adulterer's deed
Of lands to her, the cuckold may ſucceed. Dryd. Juvenal.

ADULTERESS. n. ſ. [from adulterer.] A woman that commits adultery.

The Spartan lady replied, when ſhe was aſked, What was the puniſhment for adultereſſes ? There are no ſuch things here. Government of the Tongue, § 3.

A robe of tiſſue, ſtiff with golden wire ;
An upper veſt, once Helen's rich attire ;
From Argos by the ſam'd adult'reſs brought ;
With golden flow'rs and winding foliage wrought. Dryd. Vir.
ADULTERINE. n. ſ. [adulterine, Fr. adulterinus, Lat.] A child born of an adultereſs : a term of canon law.

ADULTEROUS. adj. [adulter, Lat.] Guilty of adultery.

Th' adulterous Antony, moſt large
In his abominations, turns you off,
And gives his potent regiment to a trull,
That noſes it againſt us. Shakeſp. Antony and Cleopatra.
An adulterous perſon is tied to reſtitution of the injury, ſo far as it is reparable ; and to make proviſion for the children, that they may not injure the legitimate. Taylor.

Think on whoſe faith th' adult'rous youth rely'd ;
Who promis'd, who procur'd the Spartan bride ? Dryd. Æn.
ADULTERY. n. ſ. [adulterium, Lat.] The act of violating the bed of a married perſon.

All thy domeſtic griefs at home be left,
The wife's adult'ry, with the ſervant's theft ;
And (the moſt racking thought, which can intrude)
Forget falſe friends, and their ingratitude. Dryd. Juven.

ADUMBRANT. adj. [from adumbrate.] That which gives a ſlight reſemblance.

To ADUMBRATE. v. a. [adumbro, Lat.]

To ſhadow out ; to give a ſlight likenefs ; to exhibit a faint reſemblance, like that which ſhadows afford of the bodies which they repreſent.

Heaven is deſigned for our reward, as well as reſcue ; and therefore is adumbrated by all thoſe poſitive excellencies, which can endear or recommend. Decay of Piety.

ADUMBRA'TION. n. ſ. [from adumbrate.]

1. The act of adumbrating, or giving a ſlight and imperfect repreſentation. See ADUMBRATE.

To make ſome adumbration of that we mean, the interiour is rather an impulſion or confuſion of the air, than an eluſion or ſection of the ſame. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. N<sup>o</sup> 187.

2. The ſlight and imperfect repreſentation of a thing ; a faint ſketch.

The obſervers view but the backſide of the hangings ; the right one is on the other ſide the grave : and our knowledge is but like thoſe broken ends ; at beſt a moſt confuſed adumbration. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

Thoſe of the firſt ſort have ſome adumbration of the rational nature, as vegetables have of the ſenſible. Hales's Origin.

ADUNA'TION. n. ſ. [from ad and unus, Lat.] The ſtate of being united ; union : a word of little uſe.

When, by glaciation, wood, ſtraw, duſt, and water, are ſuppoſed to be united into one lump, the cold does not cauſe any real union or adunation, but only hardening the aqueous parts of the liquor into ice ; the other bodies, being accidentally preſent in that liquor, are frozen up in it, but not really united. Boyle.

ADUNCITY. n. ſ. [aduncitas, Lat.] Crookedneſs ; flexure inwards ; hookedneſs.

There can be no queſtion, but the aduncity of the pounces, and beaks of the hawks, is the cauſe of the great and habitual immorality of thoſe animals. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

ADUNQUE. adj. [aduncus, Lat.] Crooked ; bending inwards ; hooked.

The birds that are ſpeakers, are parrots, pies, jays, daws, and ravens ; of which parrots have an adunque bill, but the reſt not. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. N<sup>o</sup> 238.

ADVOCACY. n. ſ. [from advocate.] The act of pleading ; vindication ; defence ; apology : a word in little uſe.

If any there are who are of opinion, that there are no antipodes, or that the ſtars do fall, they ſhall not want herein the applauſe or advocacy of Satan. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

ADVOCATE. n. ſ. [advocatus, Lat.]

1. He that pleads the cauſe of another in a court of judicature.

An advocate, in the general import of the word, is that perſon who has the pleading and management of a judicial cauſe. In a ſtrict way of ſpeaking, only that perſon is ſtiled advocate, who is the patron of the cauſe, and is often, in Latin, termed togatus, and, in Engliſh, a perſon of the long robe. Ayl. Par.

Learn what thou ow'ſt thy country and thy friend ;
What's requiſite to ſpare, and what to ſpend :
Learn this ; and, after, envy not the ſtore
Of the greas'd advocate that grinds the poor. Dryd. Perſeus.
2. He that pleads any cauſe, in whatever manner, as a controverſiſt or vindicator.

If ſhe dares truſt me with her little babe,
I'll ſhew't the king, and undertake to be
Her advocate to th' loudeſt. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
Of the ſeveral forms of government that have been, or are, in the world, that cauſe ſeems commonly the better, that has the better advocate, or is advantaged by freſher experience. Temple's Miſcellanies.

3. It is uſed with the particle for before the perſon or thing, in whoſe favour the plea is offered.

Foes to all living worth except your own,
And advocates for folly dead and gone. Pope's Epistles.

4. In the ſcriptural and ſacred ſenſe, it ſtands for one of the offices of our Redeemer.

Me his advocate,
And propitiation ; all his works on me,
Good, or not good, ingraft. Milton's Paradise Loſt.
ADVOCATION. n. ſ. [from advocate.] The office of pleading ; plea ; apology.

Alas ! thrice gentle Caſſio,
My advocation is not now in tune ;
My lord is not my lord ; nor ſhould I know him,
Were he in favour, as in humour, alter'd. Shakeſp. Othello.

ADVOLA'TION. n. ſ. [advolo, advolutum, Lat.] The act of flying to ſomething. Diſt.

ADVOLU'TION. n. ſ. [advolutio, Lat.] The act of rolling to ſomething.

ADVO'UTRY. n. ſ. [avoutrie, Fr.] Adultery.

He was the moſt perfidious man upon the earth, and he had made a marriage compounded between an advoutry and a rape. Bacon's Henry VII.

ADVOWE'. n. ſ. He that has the right of advowſon. See ADVOWSON.

ADVO'WSON, or ADVO'WZEN. n. ſ. [In common law.]

A right to preſent to a benefice, and ſignifies as much as ſus Patronatus. In the canon law, it is ſo termed, becauſe they that originally obtained the right of preſenting to any church, were great benefactors thereto ; and are therefore termed ſometimes Patroni, ſometimes Advocati. Cowell.

To ADURE. v. n. [aduro, Lat.] To burn up.

Such a degree of heat, which doth neither melt nor ſcorch, doth mellow, and not adure. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. N<sup>o</sup> 319.

ADUST. adj. [aduſtus, Lat.]

1. Burnt up ; hot as with fire, ſcorched.
By this means, the virtual heat of the water will enter ; and ſuch a heat as will not make the body aduſt, or fragile. Bacon.

Which with torrid heat,
And vapours as the Libyan air aduſt,
Began to parch that temperate clime. Milton's Par. Loſt.

2. It is generally now applied, in a medicinal or philoſophical ſenſe, to the complexion and humours of the body.
Such humours are aduſt, as, by long heat, become of a hot and fiery nature, as choler, and the like. Quincy.

To eaſe the ſoul of one oppreſſive weight,
This quits an empire, that embroils a ſtate.
The ſame aduſt complexion has impell'd
Charles to the convent, Philip to the field. Pope.

ADUSTED. adj. [See ADUST.]

1. Burnt ; ſcorch'd ; dried with fire.
Sulphurous and nitrous foam
They found, they mingled, and with ſubtle art,
Concocted, and aduſted, they reduc'd
To blackeſt grain, and into ſtore convey'd. Paradiſe Loſt.
2. Hot,

2. Hot, as the complexion.

In regard they are but the fruits of adusted choler, and the evaporations of a vindicative spirit, Helia needs not much care for them; besides, she must give losers leave to speak. Howell.

ADU'STIBLE. adj. [from adust.] That which may be adusted, or burnt up. Dict.

ADU'STION. n. f. [from adust.] The act of burning up, or drying, as by fire.

This is ordinarily a consequent of a burning colliquative fever; the softer parts being melted away, the heat continuing its adustion, upon the drier and fleshy parts, changes into a marcid fever. Harvey on Consumptions.

ADZ. n. f. See ADDICE.

Æ, or Æ. A diphthong of very frequent use in the Latin language, which seems not properly to have any place in the English; since the æ of the Saxons has been long out of use, being changed to e simple, to which, in words frequently occurring, the æ of the Romans is, in the same manner, altered, as in equator, equinoctial, and even in Eneas.

ÆGLOGUE. n. f. [written instead of eclogue, from a mistaken etymology.] A pastoral; a dialogue in verse between goat-herds.

Which moved him rather in æglogues otherwise to write, doubting, perhaps, his ability, which he little needed, or minding to furnish our tongue with this kind wherein it faulteth: Spenser's Pastorals.

ÆGILOPS. n. f. [αἰγῶπις, Gr. signifying goat-eyed, the goat being subject to this ailment.]

A tumour or swelling in the great corner of the eye, by the root of the nose, either with or without an inflammation: also a plant so called, for its supposed virtues against such a distemper. Quincy.

Ægilops is a tubercle in the inner canthus of the eye.

Wiseman's Surgery.

ÆGYPTI'ACUM. n. f. An ointment consisting only of honey, verdigrease and vinegar. Quincy.

ÆL, or EAL, or AL.

In compound names, as πᾶν in the Greek compounds, signifies all, or altogether. So Ælwin is a complete conqueror: Albert, all illustrious: Aldred, altogether reverend: Alfred, altogether peaceful. To these Pammachius, Pancratius, Pamphilus, &c. do in some measure answer. Gibson's Camden.

ÆLF, (which, according to various dialects, is pronounced ulf, welph, hulph, hilp, helfe, and, at this day, helpe) implies assistance. So Ælfrin is victorious, and Ælfrwald, an auxiliary governour; Ælfgisa, a lender of assistance: with which Boetius, Symmachus, Epicurus, &c. bear a plain analogy. Gibson's Camden.

ÆNIGMA. See ENIGMA.

ÆR'IAL. adj. [aërius, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the air, as consisting of it.

The thunder, when to roll

With terrour through the dark aerial hall. Paradise Lost.

From all that can with fins or feathers fly,

Thro' the aerial or the wat'ry sky. Prior.

I gathered the thickness of the air, or aerial interval, of the glasses at that ring. Newton's Opticks.

Vegetables abound more with aerial particles, than animal substances. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Produced by the air.

The gifts of heav'n my foll'wing song pursues,

Aerial honey, and ambrosial dews. Dryd. Virg. Georg.

3. Inhabiting the air.

Where those immortal shapes

Of bright aerial spirits live inspher'd,

In regions mild, of calm and serene air. Paradise Regained.

Aerial animals may be subdivided into birds and flies. Locke.

4. Placed in the air.

Here subterranean works and cities see,

There towns aerial on the waving tree. Pope's Essay on Man.

5. High; elevated in situation, and therefore in the air.

A spacious city stood, with firmest walls,

Sure mounded, and with numerous turrets crown'd,

Aerial spires, and citadels, the seat

Of kings and heroes resolute in war. Philips.

ÆRIE. n. f. [airie, Fr.]

The proper word in hawks and other birds of prey for that which we generally call a nest in other birds. Cowell.

ÆRO'LOGY. n. f. [αἰρ and λόγος, Gr.] The doctrine of the air.

ÆROMANCY. n. f. [αἰρ and μάντις, Gr.] The art of divining by the air. Dict.

ÆRO'METRY. n. f. [αἰρ and μέτρον, Gr.] The art of measuring the air. Dict.

ÆRO'SCOPY. n. f. [αἰρ and σκόπεω, Gr.] The observation of the air. Dict.

ÆTHIOPS-MINERAL. n. f.

A medicine so called, from its dark colour, prepared of quicksilver and sulphur, ground together in a marble mortar to a black powder. Such as have used it most, think its virtues not very great. Quincy.

ÆTITES. n. f. [αἴτης, an eagle.] Eagle-stone. It is about the bigness of a chestnut, and hollow, with somewhat in it that rattles upon shaking. Quincy.

ÆFA'R. adv. [from a for at, and far.] See FAR.

1. At a great distance.

So shaken as we are, so wan with care,

Find we a time for frightened peace to pant,

And breathe short-winded accents of new broils,

To be commenc'd in strouds afar remote?

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

We hear better when we hold our breath than contrary; insomuch as in listening to attain a sound afar off, men hold their breath. Bacon's Natural History, N° 284.

2. To a great distance.

Hector hastened to relieve his boy;

Dismiss'd his burnish'd helm that shone afar;

The pride of warriors, and the pomp of war. Dryd.

3. From afar; from a distant place.

The rough Vultur, furious in its course,

With rapid streams divides the fruitful grounds,

And from afar in hollow murmur sounds. Addison on Italy.

4. Afar off; remotely distant.

Much suspecting his secret ends, he entertained a treaty of peace with France, but secretly and afar off, and to be governed as occasions should vary. Sir John Hayward.

ÆFE'ARD. participial adj. [from to fear, for to fright, with a redundant.]

1. Frighted; terrified; afraid.

He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard;

And from his wide devouring oven sent

A flake of fire, that flashing in his beard;

Him all amaz'd, and almost made afear'd. Fairy Queen.

But tell me, Hal, art thou not horribly afear'd? Thou being heir apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again, as Douglas, Percy, and Glendower. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Till he cherish'd too much beard,

And make Love, or me afear'd. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.

2. It has the particle of before the object of fear.

Fear is described by Spenser to ride in armour, at the clashing whereof he looks afear'd of himself. Peacham.

It is now obsolete; the last authour whom I have found using it, is Sedley.

ÆFER. n. f. [Lat.] The southwest wind.

With adverse blast upturns them from the south;

Notus, and Afer, black with thund'rous clouds,

From Sierra Lioña. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

AFFAB'ILITY. n. f. [affabilité, Fr. affabilitas, Lat.] See AFFABLE.

The quality of being affable; easiness of manners; courteousness; civility; condescension. It is commonly used of superiours.

Hearing of her beauty and her wit,

Her affability and bashful modesty,

Her wond'rous qualities, and mild behaviour:

Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

He was of a most flowing courtesy and affability to all men, and so desirous to oblige them, that he did not enough consider the value of the obligation, or the merit of the person. Clarend.

All instances of charity, sweetness of conversation, affability, admonition, all significations of tenderness, care and watchfulness, must be expressed towards children. Taylor.

It is impossible for a publick minister to be so open and easy to all his old friends, as he was in his private condition; but this may be helped out by an affability of address. L'Estrange.

AFFABLE. adj. [affable, Fr. affabilis, Lat.]

1. Easy of manners; accostable; courteous; complaisant. It is used of superiours.

He was affable, and both well and fair spoken, and would use strange sweetness and blandishment of words, where he desired to affect or persuade any thing that he took to heart. Bacon.

Her father is Baptista Minola,

An affable and courteous gentleman. Shakesp. Tam. Shrew.

Gentle to me, and affable hath been

Thy condescension, and shall be honour'd ever

With grateful memory. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

2. It is applied to the external appearance; benign; mild; favourable.

Augustus appeared, looking round him with a serene and affable countenance upon all the writers of his age. Tatler.

AFFABLENESS. n. f. [from affable.] Courtesy; affability.

AFFABLY. adv. [from affable.] In an affable manner; courteously; civilly.

AFFABROUS. adj. [affabre, Fr.] Skillfully made; complete; finished in a workman-like manner. Dict.

AFFABULA'TION. n. f. [affabulatio, Lat.] The moral of a fable. Dict.

AFFA'IR. n. f. [affaire, Fr.] Business; something to be managed or transacted. It is used for both private and publick matters.

I was not born for courts or great affairs;

I pay my debts, believe, and say my prayers. Pope.

A good acquaintance with method will greatly assist every one in ranging, disposing, and managing all human affairs.

Watts's Logick.

What

What St. John's skill in state affairs,
 What Ormond's valour, Oxford's cares,
 To aid their sinking country lent,
 Was all destroy'd by one event. Swift.
 To AFFE'AR. v. n. [from affier, Fr.] To confirm; to give a sanction to; to establish: an old term of law.

Bleed, bleed, poor country!
 Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure;
 For goodness dares not check thee!
 His title is affear'd. Shakesp. Macbeth.

AFFE'CT. n. f. [from the verb affect.]

1. Affection; passion; sensation.
 It seemeth that as the feet have a sympathy with the head;
 so the wrists have a sympathy with the heart; we see the af- fects and passions of the heart and spirits are notably disclosed by the pulse. Bacon's Natural History, N° 97.

2. Quality; circumstance.
 I find it difficult to make out one single ulcer, as authors describe it, without other symptoms or effects joined to it. Wisem.
 This is only the antiquated word for affection.

To AFFE'CT. v. a. [affecter, Fr. afficio, affectum, Lat.]

1. To act upon; to produce effects in any other thing.

The sun
 Had first his precept so to move, so shine,
 As might affect the earth with cold, and heat,
 Scarce tolerable. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x:

The generality of men are wholly governed by names, in matters of good and evil; so far as these qualities relate to, and affect, the actions of men. South's Sermons:

Yet even those two particles do reciprocally affect each other with the same force and vigour, as they would do at the same distance in any other situation imaginable. Bentley's Sermons.

2. To move the passions.
 As a thinking man cannot but be very much affected with the idea of his appearing in the presence of that Being, whom none can see and live; he must be much more affected, when he considers, that this Being whom he appears before, will examine the actions of his life, and reward or punish him accordingly. Addison. Spectator, N° 513:

3. To aim at; to endeavour after: spoken of persons.
 Atrides broke
 His silence next, but ponder'd ere he spoke:
 Wife are thy words, and glad I would obey,
 But this proud man affects imperial sway. Dryden's Iliad:

4. To tend to; to endeavour after: spoken of things.
 The drops of every fluid affect a round figure, by the mutual attraction of their parts; as, the globe of the earth and sea affects a round figure, by the mutual attraction of its parts by gravity. Newton's Opticks.

5. To be fond of; to be pleased with; to love; to regard with fondness.

That little which some of the heathen did chance to hear, concerning such matter as the sacred Scripture plentifully containeth, they did in wonderful fort affect. Hooker, b. i.

There is your crown;
 And he that wears the crown immortally,
 Long guard it yours! If I affect it more,
 Than as your honour, and as your renown,
 Let me no more from this obedience rise. Shak. Henry IV:

Think not that wars we love, and strife affect;
 Or that we hate sweet peace. Fairfax, b. ii.

None but a woman could a man direct
 To tell us women what we most affect. Dryd. Wife of Bath.

6. To make a shew of something; to study the appearance of any thing; with some degree of hypocrisy.

Another nymph, amongst the many fair,
 Before the rest affected still to stand,
 And watch'd my eye preventing my command. Prior.
 These often carry the humour so far, till their affected coldness and indifference quite kills all the fondness of a lover.

Addison. Spectator, N° 171:

The conscious husband, whom like symptoms seize,
 Charges on her the guilt of their disease;
Affecting fury, acts a madman's part,
 He'll rip the fatal secret from her heart. Granville:

7. To imitate in an unnatural and constrained manner.
 Spenser, in affecting the ancients, writ no language; yet I would have him read for his matter, but as Virgil read Ennius.

Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

8. To convict of some crime; to attain with guilt: a phrase merely juridical.

By the civil law, if a dowry with a wife be promised and not paid, the husband is not obliged to allow her alimony:
 But if her parents shall become insolvent by some misfortune, she shall have alimony, unless you can affect them with fraud, in promising what they knew they were not able to perform.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

AFFECTA'TION. n. f. [affectatio, Lat.] The act of making an artificial appearance.

In things of their own nature indifferent, if either councils or particular men have at any time, with sound judgment, mis-liked conformity between the church of God and infidels, the cause thereof hath been somewhat else than only affectation of dissimilitude. Hooker, b. iv. § 7:

It has been, from age to age, an affectation to love the pleasure of solitude, among those who cannot possibly be supposed qualified for passing life in that manner. Spectator, N° 264.

AFFE'CTED. participial adj. [from affect.]

1. Moved; touched with affection; internally disposed or inclined.

No marvel then if he were ill affected;
 'Tis they have put him on the old man's death,
 To have th' expence and waste of his revenues.

He was assured, that the model they seemed affected to in their directory, was not like to any of their foreign reformed churches now in the world. Clarendon.

2. Studied with over-much care, or with hypocritical appearance.

These antick, lisping, affected phantasies, these new tuners of accents. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

3. In a personal sense, full of affectation; as, an affected lady.

AFFE'CTEDLY. adv. [from affected.] In an affected manner;
 hypocritically; with more appearance than reality.

Perhaps they are affectedly ignorant; they are so willing it should be true, that they have not attempted to examine it.

Government of the Tongue, § 5.

Some indeed have been so affectedly vain, as to counterfeit immortality, and have stolen their death, in hopes to be esteemed immortal. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 10.

By talking so familiarly of one hundred and ten thousand pounds, by a tax upon a few commodities, it is plain, you are either naturally or affectedly ignorant of our condition. Swift.

AFFE'CTEDNESS. n. f. [from affected.] The quality of being affected, or of making false appearances.

AFFE'CTION. n. f. [affection, Fr. affectio, Lat.]

1. The state of being affected by any cause, or agent. This general sense is little in use.

Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
 Some that are mad if they behold a cat;
 And others, when the bag-pipe sings i' th' nose,
 Cannot contain their urine, for affection.

Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

2. Passion of any kind.

Then gan the Palmer thus: most wretched man,
 That to affections does the bridle lend;
 In their beginning they are weak and wan,
 But soon through sufferance grow to fearful end. Fairy Q.

Impute it to my late solitary life, which is prone to affec- tions. Sidney, b. i.

Affections, as joy, grief, fear, and anger, with such like, being, as it were, the sundry fashions and forms of appetite, can neither rise at the conceit of a thing indifferent, nor yet choose but rise at the sight of some things. Hooker, b. i.

To speak truth of Cæsar,

I have not known when his affections sway'd
 More than his reason. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

Zeal ought to be composed of the highest degrees of pious affections; of which some are milder and gentler, some sharper and more vehement. Sprat's Sermons.

I can present nothing beyond this to your affections, to excite your love and desire. Tillotson.

3. Love; kindness; good-will to some person; often with to, or towards, before the person.

I have acquainted you
 With the dear love I bear to fair Anne Page,
 Who mutually hath answer'd my affection.

Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

My king is tangl'd in affection to

A creature of the queen's lady Anne Bullen. Sh. Henry VIII.

What warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors? Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Make his interest depend upon mutual affection and good correspondence with others. Collier on General Kindness.

Nor at first sight, like most, admires the fair;

For you he lives, and you alone shall share

His last affection, as his early care. Pope.

4. Good-will to any object; zeal; passionate regard.

I have reason to distrust mine own judgment, as that which may be overborn by my zeal and affection to this cause.

Bacon's Holy War.

Set your affection upon my words; desire them, and ye shall be instructed. Wisdom, vi. 11.

His integrity to the king was without blemish, and his af- fection to the church so notorious, that he never deserted it. Clarendon.

All the precepts of christianity command us to moderate our passions, to temper our affections towards all things below.

Temple.

Let not the mind of a student be under the influence of warm affection to things of sense, when he comes to the search of truth. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

5. State of the mind, in general.

There grows,

In my most ill compos'd affection, such

A stanchless avarice, that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shak. Macbeth.

The man that hath no musick in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils;
The motions of his spirit are dull as night,
And his affections dark as Erebus:

Let no such man be trusted. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

6. Quality; property.

The certainty and accurateness which is attributed to what they deliver, must be restrained to what they teach, concerning those purely mathematical disciplines, arithmetick and geometry, where the affections of quantity are abstractedly considered. Boyle.

The mouth being necessary to conduct the voice to the shape of its cavity, necessarily gives the voice some particular affection of sound in its passage before it come to the lips. Holder's Elements of Speech.

God may have joined immaterial souls to other kinds of bodies, and in other laws of union; and, from those different laws of union, there will arise quite different affections, and natures, and species of the compound beings. Bentley's Sermons.

7. State of the body, as acted upon by any cause.

It seemed to me a venereal gonorrhæa, and others thought it arose from some scorbutical affection. Wiseman's Surgery.

8. Lively representation in painting.

Affection is the lively representment of any passion whatsoever, as if the figures stood not upon a cloth or board, but as if they were acting upon a stage. Wotton's Architecture.

AFFECTIONATE. adj. [affectionné, Fr. from affection.]

1. Full of affection; strongly moved; warm; zealous.

In their love of God, and desire to please him, men can never be too affectionate; and it is as true, that, in their hatred of sin, men may be sometimes too passionate. Sprat's Sermons.

2. Strongly inclined to; disposed to; with the particle to.

As for the parliament, it presently took fire, being affectionate, of old, to the war of France. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. Fond; tender.

He found me fitting, beholding this picture, I know not with how affectionate countenance, but, I am sure, with a most affectionate mind. Sidney.

Away they fly

Affectionate, and undesiring bear

The most delicious morsel to their young. Thomson's Spring.

4. Benevolent; tender.

When we reflect on all this affectionate care of providence for our happiness, with what wonder must we observe the little effect it has on men. Rogers's Sermons.

AFFECTIONATELY. adv. [from affectionate.] In an affectionate manner; fondly; tenderly; benevolently.

AFFECTIONATENESS. n. f. [from affectionate.] The quality or state of being affectionate; fondness; tenderness; good-will; benevolence.

AFFECTIONED. adj. [from affection.]

1. Affected; conceited. This sense is now obsolete.

An affectioned ass that cons state without book, and utters it by great swaths. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

2. Inclined; mentally disposed.

Be kindly affectioned one to another. Rom. xii. 10.

AFFECTIONOUSLY. adv. [from affection.] In an affecting manner. Diët.

AFFECTIVE. adj. [from affection.] That which affects; that which strongly touches. It is generally used for painful.

Pain is so uneasy a sentiment, that very little of it is enough to corrupt every enjoyment: and the effect God intends this variety of ungrateful and affective sentiments should have on us, is to reclaim our affections from this valley of tears. Rogers.

AFFECTUOSITY. n. f. [from affectuous.] Passionateness. Diët.

AFFECTUOUS. adj. [from affect.] Full of passion; as, an affectuous speech: a word little used.

TO AFFERE. v. a. [affier, Fr.] A law term, signifying to confirm. See AFFEARD.

AFFERORS. n. f. [from affere.]

Such as are appointed in court-leets, &c. upon oath, to mulct such as have committed faults arbitrarily punishable, and have no express penalty set down by statute. Cowell.

AFFIANCE. n. f. [affiance, from affier, Fr.]

1. A marriage-contract.

At last such grace I found, and means I wrought,
That I that lady to my spouse had won,
Accord of friends, consent of parents fought,
Affiance made, my happiness begun. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. Trust in general; confidence; secure reliance.

The duke is virtuous, mild, and too well given
To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.—

—Ah! what's more dangerous than this fond affiance?
Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrowed.

Shakesp. Henry VI.

3. Trust in the divine promises and protection. To this sense it is now almost confined.

It receives him into a covenant of grace, where there is pardon reached out to all truly penitent sinners, and assistance promised, and engaged, and bestowed upon very easy conditions, VOL. I.

viz. humility, prayer, and affiance in him. Hammond's Fund.

There can be no surer way to success, than by disclaiming all confidence in ourselves, and referring the events of things to God with an implicit affiance. Atterbury's Sermons.

TO AFFIANCE. v. a. [from the noun affiance.]

1. To betroth; to bind any one by promise to marriage.

To me, sad maid, or rather widow sad,

He was affianced long time before,

And sacred pledges he both gave and had;

False, errant knight, infamous, and foreswore. Fairy Queen.

Her should Angelo have married; was affianced to her by oath, and the nuptial appointed; between which time of the contract, and limit of the solemnity, his brother was wrecked, having, in that vessel, the dowry of his sister. Sh. Meas. for M.

2. To give confidence.

Stranger! whoe'er thou art, securely rest,

Affianc'd in my faith, a friendly guest. Pope's Odyssey.

AFFIANCER. n. f. [from affiance.] He that makes a contract of marriage between two parties. Diët.

AFFIDA'TION. } n. f. [from affido, Lat. See AFFIED.] Mutual

AFFIDA'TURE. } contract; mutual oath of fidelity. Diët.

AFFIDA'VIT. n. f. [affidavit signifies, in the language of the common law, be made oath.] A declaration upon oath.

You said, if I return'd next 'size in Lent,

I should be in remitter of your grace;

In th' interim my letters should take place

Of affidavits. Donne.

Count Rechteren should have made affidavit, that his servants had been affronted, and then Monsieur Mesnager would have done him justice. Spectator, N° 481.

AFFI'ED. participial adj. [from the verb affy, derived from affido, Lat. Bracton using the phrase affidare mulieres.] Joined by contract; affianced.

Be we affied, and such assurance ta'en,

As shall with either part's agreement stand.

Shakesp. Taming of a Shrew.

AFFILIA'TION. n. f. [from ad and filius, Lat.] Adoption; the act of taking a son. Chambers.

AFFINAGE. n. f. [affinage, Fr.] The act of refining metals by the cupel. Diët.

AFFI'NED. adj. [from affinis, Lat.] Joined by affinity to another; related to another.

If partially affi'd, or leagu'd in office,

Thou dost deliver more or less than truth,

Thou art no soldier. Shakesp. Othello.

AFFI'NITY. n. f. [affinité, Fr. from affinis, Lat.]

1. Relation by marriage; relation contracted by the husband to the kindred of the wife, and by the wife to those of the husband. It is opposed to consanguinity, or relation by birth.

In this sense it has sometimes the particle with, and sometimes to, before the person to whom the relation is contracted.

And Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, and took Pharaoh's daughter. 1 Kings, iii. 1.

They had left none alive, who had set his hand to their servitude, by the blindness of rage killing many guiltless persons, either for affinity to the tyrant, or enmity to the tyrant-killers. Sidney, b. ii.

A breach first with Spain, and not long after with France itself, notwithstanding so strait an affinity, so lately treated with the one, and actually accomplished with the other; as if indeed (according to that pleasant maxim of state) kingdoms were never married. Wotton.

2. Relation to; connexion with; resemblance to: spoken of things.

The British tongue, or Welsh, as we now call it, was in use only in this island, having great affinity with the old Gallick. Camden.

All things that have affinity with the heavens, move upon the center of another, which they benefit. Bacon, Essay xxiv.

The art of painting hath wonderful affinity with that of poetry. Dryd. Dufresnoy. Pref.

Man is more distinguished by devotion than by reason, as several brute creatures discover something like reason, though they betray not any thing that bears the least affinity to devotion. Addison. Spect. N° 201.

TO AFFIRM. v. n. [affirmo, Lat.] To declare; to tell confidently: opposed to the word deny.

Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,

That the land Salike lies in Germany,

Between the floods of Sala and of Elbe. Shakesp. Henry V.

TO AFFIRM. v. a. To ratify or approve a former law, or judgment: opposed to reverse or repeal.

The house of peers hath a power of judicature in some cases, properly to examine and then to affirm; or, if there be cause, to reverse the judgments which have been given in the court of king's bench. Bacon's Advice to Sir G. Villiers.

In this sense we say, to affirm the truth.

AFFIRMABLE. adj. [from affirm.] That which may be affirmed.

Those attributes and conceptions that were applicable and affirmable of him when present, are now affirmable and applicable to him though past. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

AFFIRMANCE. n. f. [from affirm.] Confirmation: opposed to repeal.

This statute did but restore an ancient statute, which was itself also made but in affirmance of the common law. Bacon.

AFFIRMANT. n. f. [from affirm.] The person that affirms; a declarer. Dict.

AFFIRMATION. n. f. [affirmatio, Lat.]

1. The act of affirming or declaring: opposed to negation or denial.

This gentleman vouching, upon warrant of bloody affirmation, his to be more virtuous, and less attemptable, than any of our ladies. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

2. The position affirmed.

That he shall receive no benefit from Christ, is the affirmation, whereon his despair is founded; and one way of removing this dismal apprehension, is, to convince him, that Christ's death, if he perform the condition required, shall certainly belong to him. Hammond's Fundamentals.

3. Confirmation: opposed to repeal.

The learned in the laws of our land observe, that our statutes sometimes are only the affirmation, or ratification, of that which, by common law, was held before. Hooker.

AFFIRMATIVE. adj. [from affirm.]

1. That which affirms, opposed to negative; in which we use the affirmative, that is, the affirmative position.

For the affirmative, we are now to answer such proofs of theirs as have been before alleged. Hooker.

Whether there are such beings or not, 'tis sufficient for my purpose, that many have believed the affirmative.

Dryden's Preface to Tyrannick Love.

2. That which can or may be affirmed: a sense used chiefly in science.

As in algebra, where affirmative quantities vanish or cease, there negative ones begin: so in mechanics, where attraction ceases, there a repulsive virtue ought to succeed. Newt. Opt.

3. Applied to persons; he who has the habit of affirming with vehemence; positive; dogmatical.

Be not confident and affirmative in an uncertain matter, but report things modestly and temperately, according to the degree of that persuasion, which is, or ought to be, begotten by the efficacy of the authority, or the reason, inducing thee. Taylor.

AFFIRMATIVELY. adv. [from affirmative.] In an affirmative manner; on the positive side; not negatively.

The reason of man hath no such restraint: concluding not only affirmatively, but negatively; not only affirming, there is no magnitude beyond the last heavens, but also denying, there is any vacuity within them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

AFFIRMER. n. f. [from affirm.] The person that affirms.

If by the word virtue, the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man, and the denier, by the word virtue, means only courage, or, at most, our duty toward our neighbour, without including, in the idea of it, the duty which we owe to God. Watts's Logick.

To AFFIX. v. a. [affigo, affixum, Lat.] To unite to the end, or à posteriori; to subjoin.

He that has settled in his mind determined ideas, with names affixed to them, will be able to discern their differences one from another. Locke.

If men constantly affixed applause and disgrace where they ought, this principle would have a very good influence on the publick conduct of men; though on secret villanies it lays no restraint. Rogers's Sermons.

AFFIX. n. f. [affixum, Lat.] A term of grammar; something united to the end of a word.

In the Hebrew language, the noun has its affixa, to denote the pronouns possessive or relative. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

AFFIXION. n. f. [from affix.]

1. The act of affixing.

2. The state of being affixed. Dict.

AFFLATION. n. f. [afflo, afflatum, Lat.] The act of breathing upon any thing. Dict.

AFFLATUS. n. f. [Lat.] Communication of the power of prophecy. Dict.

To AFFLICT. v. a. [afflicto, afflictum, Lat.]

1. To put to pain; to grieve; to torment.

In the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, ye shall afflict your souls, and do no work at all, whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger that sojourneth among you. Leviticus, xvi. 29.

Give not over thy mind to heaviness, and afflict not thyself in thine own counsel. Ecclesiastes, xxx. 21.

For a father afflicted with untimely mourning, when he hath made an image of his child soon taken away, now honoured him as a God, which was then a dead man, and delivered to those that were under him, ceremonies and sacrifices. Wisdom.

It teacheth us, how God thought fit to plague and afflict them, it doth not appoint in what form and manner we ought to punish the sin of idolatry in others. Hooker, b. v. § 17.

O coward conscience! how dost thou afflict me?

The lights burn blue—Is it not dead midnight?

Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh.

Shakesp. Richard III.

A melancholy tear afflicts my eye,

And my heart labours with a sudden sigh. Prior.

2. The passive to be afflicted, has often at before the causal noun. The mother was so afflicted at the loss of a fine boy, who was her only son, that she died for grief of it. Addison. Spect.

AFFLICTEDNESS. n. f. [from afflicted.] The state of affliction, or of being afflicted; sorrowfulness; grief.

AFFLICTER. n. f. [from afflict.] The person that afflicts.

AFFLICTION. n. f. [afflictio, Lat.]

1. The cause of pain or sorrow; calamity.

To the flesh, as the Apostle himself granteth, all affliction is naturally grievous: therefore nature, which causeth fear, teacheth to pray against all adversity. Hooker, b. v. § 48.

We'll bring you to Windsor, to one Mr. Brook, that you have cozened of money; I think, to repay that money will be a biting affliction. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. The state of sorrowfulness; misery: opposed to prosperity.

Besides you know,

Prosperity's the very bond of love,
Whose fresh complexion, and whose heart together
Affliction alters. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Where shall we find the man that bears affliction,
Great and majestic in his griefs, like Cato? Addison. Cato.

Some virtues are only seen in affliction, and some in prosperity. Addison. Spectator, N° 257.

AFFLICTIVE. adj. [from afflict.] That which causes affliction; painful; tormenting.

They found martyrdom a duty dressed up indeed with all that was terrible and afflictive to human nature, yet not at all the less a duty. South.

Nor find

Where to retire themselves, or where appease
Th' afflictive keen desire of food, expos'd
To winds, and storms, and jaws of savage death. Philips.
Restless Proserpine—

— On the spacious land and liquid main,
Spreads slow disease, and darts afflictive pain. Prior.

AFFLUENCE. n. f. [affluence, Fr. affluentia, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to any place; concurrence. It is almost always used figuratively.

I shall not relate the affluence of young nobles from hence into Spain, after the voice of our prince being there had been noised. Wotton.

2. Exuberance of riches; stream of wealth; plenty.

Those degrees of fortune, which give fulness and affluence to one station, may be want and penury in another. Rogers.

Let joy or ease, let affluence or content,
And the gay conscience of a life well spent,
Calm ev'ry thought, inspire ev'ry grace. Pope.

AFFLUENCY. n. f. The same with affluence.

AFFLUENT. adj. [affluent, Fr. affluens, Lat.]

1. Flowing to any part.

These parts are no more than foundation-piles of the ensuing body; which are afterwards to be increased and raised to a greater bulk by the affluent blood, that is transmitted out of the mother's body. Harvey on Consumptions.

2. Abundant; exuberant; wealthy.

I see thee, Lord and end of my desire,
Loaded and blest with all the affluent store,
Which human vows at smoking shrines implore. Prior.

AFFLUENTNESS. n. f. [from affluent.] The quality of being affluent. Dict.

AFFLUX. n. f. [affluxus, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to some place; affluence.

2. That which flows to another place.

The cause hereof cannot be a supply by procreations; ergo, it must be by new affluxes to London out of the country. Graunt.

The infant grows bigger out of the womb, by agglutinating one afflux of blood to another. Harvey on Consumptions.

AFFLUXION. n. f. [affluxio, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to a particular place.

2. That which flows from one place to another.

An inflammation either simple, consisting of an hot and sanguineous affluxion, or else denominable from other humours, according unto the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm or choler. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To AFFORD. v. a. [affourrer, affourager, Fr.]

1. To yield or produce; as, the soil affords grain; the trees afford fruits. This seems to be the primitive signification.

2. To grant, or confer any thing; generally in a good sense, and sometimes in a bad, not properly.

So soon as Maurmon there arrived, the door

To him did open, and afforded way. Fairy Queen.

This is the consolation of all good men, unto whom his ubiquity affordeth continual comfort and security; and this is the affliction of hell, to whom it affordeth despair and remediless calamity. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 2.

3. To be able to sell. It is used always with reference to some certain price; as, I can afford this for less than the other.

They fill their magazines in times of the greatest plenty, that so they may afford cheaper, and increase the public revenue at a small expence of its members. Addison on Italy.

4. To be able to bear expences; as, traders can afford more finery in peace than war.

The same errors run through all families, where there is wealth enough to afford that their sons may be good for nothing.
Swift on Modern Education.

TO AFFOREST. v. a. [afforestare, Lat.] To turn ground into forest.

It appeareth, by Charta de Foresta, that he afforested many woods and wastes, to the grievance of the subject, which by that law were disafforested.
Sir John Davies on Ireland.

AFFORESTATION. n. f. [from afforest.]

The charter de Foresta was to reform the encroachments made in the time of Richard I. and Henry II. who had made new afforestations, and much extended the rigour of the forest laws.
Hales's Common Law of England.

TO AFFRANCHISE. v. a. [affrancher, Fr.] To make free.

TO AFFRAY. v. a. [effrayer, or effriger, Fr. which Menage derives from frayer; perhaps it comes from frigus.]

To fright; to terrify; to strike with fear. This word is not now in use.

The same to wight he never won't disclose,

But when as monsters huge he would dismay,

Or daunt unequal armies of his foes,

Or when the flying heavens he would affray. Fairy Queen.

AFFRAY, or AFFRAYMENT. n. f. [from the verb.]

A tumultuous assault of one or more persons upon others; a law term. A battle: in this sense it is written fray.

AFFRICTION. n. f. [affriccio, Lat.] The act of rubbing one thing upon another.

I have divers times observed, in wearing silver-hilted swords, that, if they rubbed upon my cloaths, if they were of a light-coloured cloth, the affriccion would quickly blacken them; and, congruously hereunto, I have found pens blacked almost all over, when I had a while carried them about me in a silver case.
Boyle.

TO AFFRIGHT. v. a. [See FRIGHT.]

1. To affect with fear; to terrify: it generally implies a sudden impression of fear.

Thy name affrights me, in whose sound is death.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

God-like his courage seem'd, whom nor delight

Could soften, nor the face of death affright.

Waller.

He, when his country (threaten'd with alarm)

Requires his courage and his conqu'ring Arm,

Shall, more than once, the Punic bands affright. Dryd. Æn.

2. It is used in the passive, sometimes with at before the thing feared.

Thou shalt not be affrighted at them: for the Lord thy God is among you.

Deut. vii. 21.

3. Sometimes with the particle with before the thing feared.

As one affright

With hellish fiends, or furies mad uproar,

He then uprose.

Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 5.

AFFRIGHT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Terror; fear. This word is chiefly poetical.

As the moon, clothed with cloudy night,

Does shew to him, that walks in fear and sad affright. F. 2.

Wide was his parish, not contracted close

In streets, but here and there a straggling house;

Yet still he was at hand, without request,

To serve the sick; to succour the distress'd:

Tempting, on foot, alone, without affright,

The dangers of a dark tempestuous night.

Dryd. Fab.

2. The cause of fear; a terrible object.

I see the gods

Upbraid our sufferings, and would humble them,

By sending these affrights, while we are here,

That we might laugh at their ridiculous fear. B. Johns. Catil.

The war at hand appears with more affright,

And rises ev'ry moment to the fight.

Dryden's Æneid.

AFFRIGHTFUL. adj. [from affright.] Full of affright or terror; terrible.

We shall find there is an absence of all that is destructive or affrightful to human nature.

Decay of Piety.

AFFRIGHTMENT. n. f. [from affright.]

1. The impression of fear; terror.

Hearing she was at rest, he attended till she should awake of herself; which she did with the affrightment of a dream. Wotton.

Passionate words or blows from the tutor, fill the child's mind with terror and affrightment; which immediately takes it wholly up, and leaves no room for other impression. Locke.

2. The state of fearfulness.

Whether those that, under any anguish of mind, return to affrightments or doubtings, have not been hypocrites. Hammond.

TO AFFRONT. v. a. [affronter, Fr. that is, ad frontem stare; ad frontem & contumeliam allidere, to insult a man to his face.]

1. To meet face to face; to encounter. This seems the genuine and original sense of the word, which was formerly indifferent to good or ill.

We have closely sent for Hamlet hither,

That he, as 'twere by accident, may here

Affront Ophelia.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

The seditious, the next day, affronted the king's forces at the entrance of a highway; whom when they found both ready and resolute to fight, they desired enterparlance, and in the meantime they began to fortify.

Sir John Hayward.

2. To meet, in an hostile manner, front to front.

His holy rites and solemn feasts profan'd,

And with their darkness durst affront his light. Parad. Lost.

3. To offer an open insult; to offend avowedly. With respect to this sense, it is observed by Cervantes, that, if a man strikes another on the back, and then runs away, the person so struck is injured, but not affronted; an affront always implying a justification of the act.

But harm precedes not sin only our foe,

Tempting affronts us with his foul esteem

Of our integrity.

Milton's Paradise Lost, l. ix.

I would learn the cause, why Torrismond,

Within my palace walls, within my hearing,

Almost within my sight, affronts a prince,

Who shortly shall command him. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

This brings to mind Faustina's fondness for the gladiator, and is interpreted as satire. But how can one imagine, that the Fathers would have dared to affront the wife of Aurelius. Addison.

AFFRO'NT. n. f. [from the verb affront.]

1. Insult offered to the face; contemptuous or rude treatment.

He would often maintain Plantianus, in doing affronts to his son.

Bacon's Essays.

You've done enough; for you design'd my chains:

The grace is vanish'd, but th' affront remains. Dryd. Aureng.

He that is found reasonable in one thing, is concluded to be so in all; and to think or say otherwise, is thought so unjust an affront, and so senseless a censure, that no body ventures to do it.

Locke.

There is nothing which we receive with so much reluctance as advice: we look upon the man who gives it us, as offering an affront to our understanding, and treating us like children or ideots.

Addison. Spectator, N° 512.

2. Outrage; act of contempt, in a more general sense.

Oft have they violated

The temple, oft the law with foul affronts,

Abominations rather.

Milton's Paradise Regained.

3. Open opposition; encounter: a sense not frequent, though regularly deducible from the derivation.

Far beyond

The sons of Anak, famous now and blaz'd,

Fearless of danger, like a petty god

I walk'd about admir'd of all, and dreaded

On hostile ground, none daring my affront. Samson Agonist.

4. Disgrace; shame. This sense is rather peculiar to the Scottish dialect.

Antonius attacked the pirates of Crete, and, by his too great presumption, was defeated; upon the sense of which affront he died with grief.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

AFFRO'NTER. n. f. [from affront.] The person that affronts.

AFFRO'NTING. participial adj. [from affront.] That which has the quality of affronting.

Among words which signify the same principal ideas, some are clean and decent, others unclean; some are kind, others are affronting and reproachful, because of the secondary idea which custom has affixed to them.

Watts's Logic.

TO AFFUSE. v. a. [affundo, affusum, Lat.] To pour one thing upon another.

I fruitlessly poured on them acid liquors, to try if they contained any volatile salt or spirit, which would probably have discovered itself, by making an ebullition with the affused liquor.

Boyle.

AFFUSION. n. f. [affusio, Lat.] The act of pouring one thing upon another.

Upon the affusion of a tincture of galls, it immediately became as black as ink.

Grew's Museum.

TO AFFY. v. a. [affier, Fr. affidare mulierem, Bracton.] To betroth in order to marriage.

Wedded be thou to the hags of hell,

For daring to affy a mighty lord

Unto the daughter of a worthless king. Shakesp. Henry VI.

TO AFFY. v. n. To put confidence in; to put trust in.

Marcus Andronicus, so I do affy

In thy uprightness and integrity,

That I will here dismiss my loving friends. Shak. Tit. Andr.

AFIELD. adv. [from a and field. See FIELD.] To the field.

We drove afield, and both together heard

What time the grey fly winds her sultry horn,

Batt'ring our flocks with the fresh dews of night.

Milton.

Afield I went, amid the morning dew,

To milk my kine, for so should housewives do.

Gay.

AFLA'T. adv. [from a and flat. See FLAT.] Level with the ground.

When you would have many new roots of fruit-trees, take a low tree, and bow it, and lay all his branches aflat upon the ground, and cast earth upon them; and every twig will take root.

Bacon's Natural History.

AFLA'T. adv. [from a and float. See FLOAT.] Floating; born up in the water: in a figurative sense, within view; in motion.

There

A F R

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries.
On such a full sea are we now afloat;
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

Take any passion of the soul of man, while it is predominant and afloat, and, just in the critical height of it, nick it with some lucky or unlucky word, and you may as certainly over-rule it to your own purpose, as a spark of fire, falling upon gun-powder, will infallibly blow it up. South.

There are generally several hundred loads afloat, for they begin to cut above twenty-five leagues up the river above Hall; and there are other rivers that flow into the Inn, which bring in their contributions. Addison's Italy.

AFO'OT. adv. [from a and foot.]

1. On foot; not on horseback.

He thought it best to return, for that day, to a village not far off; and dispatching his horse in some sort, the next day early, to come afoot thither. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. In action; as, a design is afoot.

I pr'ythee, when thou see'st that act afoot,
Ev'n with the very comment of thy soul
Observe mine uncle. Idem, ibid.

3. In motion.

Of Albany's and Cornwall's pow'rs you heard not—
'Tis said they are afoot. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

AFO'RE. prep. [from a and fore. See BEFORE.]

1. Before; nearer in place to any thing; as, he stood afore him.

2. Sooner in time.

If your diligence be not speedy, I shall be there afore you.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

AFO'RE: adv.

1. In time foregone or past.

Whosoever should make light of any thing afore spoken or written, out of his own house a tree should be taken, and he thereon be hanged. Ezdras, vi. 22.

If he never drank wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit. Shakespeare's Tempest.

2. First in the way.

Æmilia, run you to the citadel,
And tell my lord and lady what hath hap'd;
Will you go on afore? Shakespeare's Othello.

3. In front; in the fore-part.

Approaching nigh, he reared high afore
His body monstrous, horrible and vast. Fairy Queen.

AFO'REGOING. participial adj. [from afore and going.] Going before.

AFOREHAND: adv. [from afore and hand.]

1. By a previous provision.

Many of the particular subjects of discourse are occasional, and such as cannot aforehand be reduced to any certain account. Government of the Tongue.

2. Provided; prepared; previously fitted.

For it will be said, that in the former times, whereof we have spoken, Spain was not so mighty, as now it is; and England, on the other side, was more aforehand in all matters of power. Bacon's Considerations on War with Spain.

AFO'REMENTIONED. adj. [from afore and mentioned.] Mentioned before.

Among the nine other parts, five are not in a condition to give alms or relief to those aforementioned; being very near reduced themselves to the same miserable condition. Addison.

AFO'RENAMED. adj. [from afore and named.] Named before.

Imitate something of circular form, in which, as in all other aforenamed proportions, you shall help yourself by the diameter. Peacham on drawing.

AFO'RESAID. adj. [from afore and said.] Said before.

It need not go for repetition, if we resume again that which we said in the aforesaid experiment concerning annihilation. Bacon's Natural History, N° 771.

AFO'RETIME. adv. [from afore and time.] In time past.

O thou that art waxen old in wickedness, now thy sins which thou hast committed aforetime, are come to light. Susanna.

AFRA'ID. participial adj. [from the verb affray: it should therefore properly be written with ff.]

1. Struck with fear; terrified; fearful.

So persecute them with thy tempest, and make them afraid with thy storm. Psalms lxxxiii. 15.

2. It has often the particle of before the object of fear.

There, loathing life, and yet of death afraid,
In anguish of her spirit, thus she pray'd. Dryden's Fables.

If, while this wearied flesh draws fleeting breath,
Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
It hap'ly be thy will, that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great Sire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.

AFRE'SH. adv. [from a and fresh. See FRESH.] Anew; again, after intermission.

The Germans now using no such light horsemen, but serving upon great horses, and charged with heavy armour, received great hurt by these light skirmishes; the Turks, with their light horses, easily shunning their charge, and again, at their pleasure, charging them afresh, when they saw the heavy horses almost weary. Knolles's History of the Turks.

A F T

When once we have attained these ideas, they may be excited afresh by the use of words. Watts's Logick.

A FRONT. adv. [from a and front.] In front; in direct opposition to the face.

These four came all afront, and mainly thrust at me.

Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

A'FTER. prep. [æf'ter, Sax.]

1. Following in place. After is commonly applied to words of motion; as, he came after, and stood behind him. It is opposed to before.

What says lord Warwick, shall we after them?—

— After them! nay, before them, if we can. Shak. Henry VI.

2. In pursuit of.

After whom is the king of Israel come out? After whom dost thou pursue? After a dead dog, after a flea. 1 Sam. xxiv. 14.

3. Behind.

Sometimes I placed a third prism after a second, and sometimes also a fourth after the third, by all which the image might be often refracted sideways. Newton's Opticks.

4. Posterior in time.

Good after ill, and after pain delight;

Alternate, like the scenes of day and night. Dryden's Fab.

We shall examine the ways of conveyance of the sovereignty of Adam to princes that were to reign after him. Locke.

5. According to.

He that thinketh Spain our over-match, is no good mintman, but takes greatness of kingdoms according to bulk and currency, and not after their intrinsic value. Bacon.

6. In imitation of.

There are, among the old Roman statues, several of Venus, in different postures and habits; as there are many particular figures of her made after the same design. Addison's Italy.

This allusion is after the oriental manner: thus in the psalms, how frequently are persons compared to cedars. Pope's Od. notes.

A'FTER. adv.

1. In succeeding time. It is used of time mentioned as succeeding some other. So we cannot say, I shall be happy after, but hereafter; but we say, I was first made miserable by the loss, but was after happier.

Far be it from me, to justify the cruelties which were at first used towards them, which had their reward soon after. Bacon.

The chief were those who, from the pit of hell

Roaming to seek their prey on earth, durst fix

Their seats long after next the seat of God. Paradise Lost.

2. Following another.

Let go thy hold, when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes upward, let him draw thee after. Shakespeare's King Lear.

AFTER is compounded with many words, but almost always in its genuine and primitive signification; some, which occurred, will follow, by which others may be explained.

A'FTER ACCEPTATION. [from after and acceptation.] A sense afterwards, not at first admitted.

'Tis true, some doctors in a scantier space,

I mean, in each apart, contract the place:

Some, who to greater length extend the line,

The church's after acceptation join. Dryd. Hind and Panther.

A'FTERAGES. n. s. [from after and ages.] Successive times; posterity. This word has no singular.

Not the whole land, which the Chusites should, or might in future time, conquer; seeing, in afterages, they became lords of many nations. Raleigh's History of the World.

Nor to philosophers is praise deny'd,

Whose wise instructions afterages guide. Sir J. Denham.

What an opinion will afterages entertain of their religion, who bid fair for a gibbet, by endeavouring to bring in a superstition, which their forefathers perished in flames to keep out. Addison's Freeholder, N° 1.

A'FTER ALL. When all has been taken into the view; when there remains nothing more to be added; at last; in fine; in conclusion.

They have given no good proof in asserting this extravagant principle; for which, after all, they have no ground or colour, but a passage or two of scripture, miserably perverted, in opposition to many express texts. Atterbury's Sermons.

But, after all, if they have any merit, it is to be attributed to some good old authors, whose works I had leisure to study. Pope on Pastoral Poetry.

A'FTERBIRTH. n. s. [from after and birth.] The membrane in which the birth was involved, which is brought away after; the secundine.

The exorbitances or degenerations of that, whether from a hurt in labour, or from part of the after-birth left behind, produce such virulent distempers of the blood, as make it cast out a tumour. Wifeman's Surgery.

A'FTERCLAP. n. s. [from after and clap.] Unexpected events happening after an affair is supposed to be at an end.

A F T

For the next morrow's meed they closely went,
For fear of afterclaps to prevent. Spens. Hub. Tale.
It is commonly taken in an ill sense.

AFTERCOST. n. f. [from after and cost.] The latter charges;
the expence incurred after the original plan is executed.
You must take care to carry off the land-floods and streams, before you attempt draining; lest your aftercost and labour prove unsuccessful. Mortimer's Husbandry.

AFTERCROP. n. f. [from after and crop.] The second crop or harvest of the same year.
Aftercrops I think neither good for the land, nor yet the hay good for cattle. Mortimer's Husbandry.

AFTER-DINNER. n. f. [from after and dinner.] The hour passing just after dinner, which is generally allowed to indulgence and amusement.
Thou hast nor youth nor age,
But, as it were, an afterdinner's sleep,
Dreaming on both. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

AFTER-ENDEAVOUR. n. f. [from after and endeavour.] Endeavours made after the first effort or endeavour.
There is no reason why the sound of a pipe should leave traces in their brains, which, not first, but by their after-en- deavours, should produce the like sounds. Locke.

AFTER-ENQUIRY. n. f. [from after and enquiry.] Enquiry made after the fact committed, or after life.
You must either be directed by some that take upon them to know, or to take upon yourself that, which, I am sure, you do not know, or lump the after-enquiry on your peril; and how you shall speed in your journey's end, I think, you'll never return to tell me. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

TO AFTEREYE. v. a. [from after and eye.] To keep one in view; to follow in view.
Thou shouldst have made him
As little as a crow, or less, ere left
To aftereye him. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

AFTERGAME. n. f. [from after and game.] The scheme which may be laid, or the expedients which are practised after the original design has miscarried; methods taken after the first turn of affairs.
This earl, like certain vegetables, did bud and open slowly; nature sometimes delighting to play an aftergame, as well as fortune, which had both their turns and tides in course. Wotton.

The fables of the ax-handle and the wedge, serve to precaution us not to put ourselves needlessly upon an aftergame, but to weigh beforehand what we say and do. L'Estrange's Fab.

Our first design, my friend, has prov'd abortive;
Still there remains an aftergame to play. Addison's Cato.

AFTERHOURS. n. f. [from after and hours.] The hours that succeed.
So smile the heav'ns upon this holy act,
That afterhours with sorrow chide us not.
Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

AFTER-LIVER. n. f. [from after and live.] He that lives in succeeding times.
By thee my promise sent Unto myself, let after-livers know. Sidney, b. ii.

AFTERLOVE. n. f. [from after and love.] The second or later love.
Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If but the first, how heinous ere it be,
To win thy after-love, I pardon thee. Shakesp. Richard II.

AFTERMATH. n. f. [from after, and math, from mow.] The latter math; the second crop of grass mown in autumn. See AFTERCROP.

AFTERNOON. n. f. [from after and noon.] The time from the meridian to the evening.
A beauty-waining and distressed widow,
Ev'n in the afternoon of her best days,
Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

However, keep the lively taste you hold
Of God; love him now, but fear him more;
And, in your afternoons, think what you told
And promis'd him at morning-prayer before. Donne.

Such, all the morning, to the pleadings run;
But when the bus'ness of the day is done,
On dice, and drink, and drabs, they spend the afternoon.
Dryden's Persius, Sat. i.

AFTERPAINS. n. f. [from after and pain.] The pains after birth, by which women are delivered of the secundine.

AFTERPART. n. f. [from after and part.] The latter part.
The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and safe; and, in the afterpart, reason and foresight begin a little to take place, and mind a man of his safety and improvement. Locke.

AFTERPROOF. n. f. [from after and proof.] Evidence posterior to the thing in question.
All know, that he likewise at first was much under the expectation of his afterproof; such a solar influence there is in the solar aspect. Wotton.

AFTERTASTE. n. f. [from after and taste.] A taste remaining

A G A

upon the tongue after the draught, which was not perceived in the act of drinking.

AFTERTHOUGHT. n. f. [from after and thought.] Reflections after the act; expedients formed too late. It is not properly to be used for secondthought.
Expence, and afterthought, and idle care;
And doubts of motely hue, and dark despair;
Suspensions, and fantastical surmise,
And jealousy suffus'd with jaundice in her eyes,
Discolouring all the view'd, in tawny dress'd,
Downlook'd, and with a cuckow on her fit. Dryd. Fables.

AFTER-TIMES. n. f. [from after and time.] Succeeding times.
See AFTERAGES.
You promis'd once, a progeny divine
Of Romans, rising from the Trojan line,
In aftertimes should hold the world in awe,
And to the land and ocean give the law. Dryd. Virg. Æn.

AFTERTOSSING. n. f. [from after and toss.] The motion of the sea after a storm.
Confusions and tumults are only the impotent remains of an unnatural rebellion, and are no more than the aftertossings of a sea, when the storm is laid. Addison's Freeholder, N° 25.

AFTERWARD. adv. [from after, and peard, Sax.] In succeeding time; sometimes written afterwards, but less properly.
Uses not thought upon before, may afterward spring up, and be reasonable causes of retaining that, which former confiderations did formerly procure to be instituted. Hooker.

An anxious distrust of the divine goodness, makes a man more and more unworthy of it; and miserable beforehand, for fear of being so afterward. L'Estrange.

AFTERWIT. n. f. [from after and wit.] The contrivance of expedients after the occasion of using them is past. See AFT-TERTHOUGHT.
There is no recalling of what's gone and past; so that after- wit comes too late, when the mischief is done. L'Estrange.

AFTER-WRATH. n. f. [from after and wrath.] Anger when the provocation seems past.
I hear him mock
The luck of Cæsar, which the gods give men
T' excuse their after-wrath. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

AGA. n. f. The title of a Turkish military officer.

AGA'IN. adv. [agen, Sax.]

1. A second time; once more; marking the repetition of the same thing.
The poor remnant of human seed, which remained in their mountains, peopled their country again slowly, by little and little. Bacon's New Atalantis.
Go now, deluded man, and seek again
New toils, new dangers, on the dusty plain. Dryd. Æn.
Some are already retired into foreign countries; and the rest, who possess lands, are determined never to hazard them again, for the sake of establishing their superstition. Swift.
2. On the other hand; marking some opposition or contrariety.
His wit encreased upon the occasion; and so much the more, if the occasion were sharpened with danger. Again, whether it were the shortness of his foresight, or the strength of his will, certain it is, that the perpetual trouble of his fortunes could not have been without defects in his nature. Bacon.
Those things that we know not what to do withal, if we had them, and those things, again, which another cannot part with, but to his own loss and shame, are the very conditions of this fable. L'Estrange's Fables.
3. On another part; marking a transition to some new confideration.
Behold yon mountain's hoary height,
Made higher with new mounts of snow;
Again, behold the winter's weight
Oppress the lab'ring woods below. Dryden.
4. In return, noting re-action, or reciprocal action; as, his fortune worked upon his nature, and his nature again upon his fortune.
5. Back; in restitution.
When your head did but ake,
I knit my handkerchief about your brows;
The best I had, a princess wrought it me,
And I did never ask it you again. Shakesp. King John.
6. In return for any thing; in recompence.
That he hath given will he pay again. Prov. xix. 27.
7. In order of rank or succession; marking distribution.
Question was asked of Demosthenes, What was the chief part of an orator? He answered, Action. What next? Action. What next, again? Action. Bacon's Essays.
The cause of the holding green, is the close and compact substance of their leaves, and the pedicles of them: and the cause of that again is either the tough and viscous juice of the plant, or the strength and heat thereof. Bacon's Nat. History.
8. Besides; in any other time or place.
They have the Walloons, who are tall soldiers; yet that is but a spot of ground. But, on the other side, there is not in the world again such a spring and seminary of brave military people, as in England, Scotland, and Ireland. Bacon.

9. Twice as much ; marking the same quantity once repeated.
There are whom heav'n has blest with store of wit,
Yet want as much again to manage it ;
For wit and judgment ever are at strife,
Tho' meant each other's aid, like man and wife. Pope.
I should not be sorry to see a chorus on a theatre, more than as large and as deep again as ours, built and adorned at a king's charges. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
10. Again and again ; with frequent repetition ; often.
This is not to be obtained by one or two hasty readings ;
it must be repeated again and again, with a close attention to the tenour of the discourse. Locke's Essay on St. P. Epistles.
11. In opposition ; by way of resistance.
Who art thou that answerest again ? Rom. ix. 20.
12. Back ; as, returning from some message.
Bring us word again which way we shall go. Deut. i. 22.
- AGA'INST. prep. [ængeon, ongeon, Sax.]
1. In opposition to any person.
And he will be a wild man ; his hand will be against every man, and every man's hand against him. Gen. xvi. 12.
2. Contrary ; opposite, in general.
That authority of men should prevail with men either against or above reason, is no part of our belief. Hooker.
He is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair.
Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.
We might work any effect without and against matter ; and this not holpen by the co-operation of angels or spirits, but only by the unity and harmony of nature. Bacon's Natural Hist.
The preventing goodness of God does even wrest him from himself, and save him, as it were, against his will. South.
The god, uneasy till he slept again,
Resolv'd, at once, to rid himself of pain ;
And, tho' against his custom, call'd aloud,
Exciting Morpheus from the sleepy crowd. Dryden.
Men often say a thing is against their conscience, when really it is not. Swift's Miscellanies.
3. In contradiction to any opinion.
After all that can be said against a thing, this will still be true, that many things possibly are, which we know not of ;
and that many more things may be than are : and if so, after all our arguments against a thing, it will be uncertain whether it be or not. Tillotson.
The church-clergy have written the best collection of tracts against popery, that ever appeared in England. Swift.
4. With contrary motion or tendency ; used of material action.
Boils and plagues
Plaster you o'er, that you may be abhorr'd
Farther than seen, and one infect another
Against the wind a mile. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
The kite being a bird of prey, and therefore hot, delighteth in the fresh air ; and many times flieth against the wind, as trouts and salmon swim against the stream. Bacon.
5. Contrary to rule or law.
If aught against my life
Thy country sought of thee, it sought unjustly,
Against the law of nature, law of nations. M. Sam. Agon.
Against the public sanctions of the peace,
Against all omens of their ill success ;
With fates averse, the rout in arms resort,
To force their monarch, and insult the court. Dryden's Æn.
6. Opposite to, in place.
Against the Tiber's mouth, but far away. Dryden.
7. To the hurt of another.
And when thou think'st of her eternity,
Think not that death against her nature is ;
Think it a birth : and when thou go'st to die,
Sing like a swan, as if thou went'st to bliss. Sir J. Davies.
8. In provision for ; in expectation of.
This mode of speaking against, or in opposition to a time of misfortune, but by degrees acquired a neutral sense.
Thence she them brought into a stately hall,
Wherein were many tables fair dispreed,
And ready dight with drapets festival,
Against the viands should be minstred. Fairy Queen.
The like charge was given them against the time they should come to settle themselves in the land promised unto their fathers. Hooker, b. v. § 11.
Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes,
Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning singeth all night long :
And then they say no spirit walks abroad ;
The nights are wholesome, then no planets strike,
No fairy tales, no witch hath power to charm ;
So hallowed and so gracious is the time. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
To that purpose, he made haste to Bristol, that all things might be ready against the prince came thither. Clarendon.
Against the promis'd time provides with care,
And hastens in the woof, the robes he was to wear. Dryd.
All which I grant to be reasonably and truly said, and only desire they may be remembered against another day. Stillingsf.

- A'GALAXY. n. f. [from a and γάλα, Gr.] Want of milk. Dist.
- AGA'PE. adv. [from a and gape.] Staring with eagerness ; as, a bird gapes for meat.
In himself was all his state ;
More solemn than the tedious pomp that waits
On princes, when their rich retinue long
Of horses led, and grooms besmeared with gold,
Dazzles the crowd, and sets them all agape. Paradise Lost.
Dazzle the crowd, and set them all agape. Philips.
The whole crowd stood agape, and ready to take the doctor at his word. Spectator, N° 572.
- A'GARICK. n. f. [agaricum, Lat.] A drug of use in physick, and the dying trade. It is divided into male and female ; the male is used only in dying, the female in medicine : the male grows on oaks, the female on larches.
There are two excrescences which grow upon trees ; both of them in the nature of mushrooms : the one the Romans call boletus, which groweth upon the roots of oaks, and was one of the dainties of their table ; the other is medicinal, that is called agarick, which groweth upon the tops of oaks ; though it be affirmed by some, that it groweth also at the roots. Bacon.
- AGA'ST. adj. [This word, which is usually, by later authours, written aghaft, is, not improbably, the true word derived from agaze, which has been written aghaft, from a mistaken etymology. See AGHAST.]
Struck with terror ; amazed ; frighted to astonishment.
Thus roving on
In confus'd march forlorn, th' advent'rous bands,
With shudd'ring horror pale, and eyes agast,
View'd first their lamentable lot, and found
No rest. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 616.
- A'GATE. n. f. [agate, Fr. achates, Lat.] A precious stone of the lowest class, often clouded with beautiful variegations.
In shape no bigger than an agate stone,
On the forefinger of an alderman. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.
Agates are only varieties of the flint kind ; they have a grey horny ground, clouded, lineated, or spotted with different colours, chiefly dusky, black, brown, red, and sometimes blue.
Woodward's Method of Fossils.
- A'GATY. adj. [from agate.] Partaking of the nature of agate.
An agaty flint was above two inches in diameter ; the whole covered over with a friable cretaceous crust. Woodward.
- TO AGA'ZE. v. a. [from a and gaze, to set a gazing ; as, amaze, amuse, and others.] To strike with amazement ; to stupify with sudden terror. The verb is now out of use.
So as they travell'd, so they gan espy
An armed knight toward them gallop fast,
That seemed from some feared foe to fly,
Or other grisly thing that him agast. Fairy Queen.
- AGA'ZED. participial adj. [from agaze ; which see.] Struck with amazement ; terrified to stupidity.
Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him ;
Here, there, and every where, enrag'd he flew :
The French exclaim'd ; " The devil was in arms !"
All the whole army stood agazed on him. Shak. Henry VI.
- AGE. n. f. [age, Fr. anciently eage, or aage ; it is deduced by Menage, from ætatum, of ætas ; by Junius, from aa, which, in the Teutonic dialects, signified long duration.]
1. Any period of time attributed to something as the whole, or part, of its duration : in this sense, we say, the age of man, the several ages of the world, the golden or iron age.
One man in his time plays many parts,
His life being seven ages. Shakespeare.
And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt seventeen years ; so the whole age of Jacob was an hundred forty and seven years.
Genesis, xlvii. 28.
2. A succession or generation of men.
Hence, lastly, springs care of posterities,
For things their kind would everlasting make.
Hence is it, that old men do plant young trees,
The fruit whereof another age shall take. Sir J. Davies.
Next, to the Son,
Destin'd Restorer of mankind, by whom
New heav'n, and earth, shall to the ages rise,
Or down from heav'n descend. Milton's Paradise Lost.
No declining age
E'er felt the raptures of poetic rage. Roscommon.
3. The time in which any particular man, or race of men, lived, or shall live ; as, the age of heroes.
4. The space of a hundred years ; a secular period ; a century.
5. The latter part of life ; old-age ; oldness.
You see how full of change his age is : the observation we have made of it hath not been little ; he always loved our sister most, and with what poor judgment he hath now cast her off. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Boys must not have th' ambitious care of men,
Nor men the weak anxieties of age. Roscommon.
And on this forehead, where your verse has laid,
The loves delighted, and the graces play'd ;
Insulting age will trace his cruel way,
And leave sad marks of his destructive sway. Prior.

6. Maturity; ripeness; full strength of life.

A solemn admission of proselytes, all that either, being of age, desire that admission for themselves, or that, in infancy, are by others presented to that charity of the church. Hammond.

We thought our fires, not with their own content,

Had, ere we came to age, our portion spent. Dryd.

7. In law.

In a man, the age of fourteen years is the age of discretion; and twenty-one years is the full age: In a woman, at seven years of age, the lord her father may distrain his tenants for aid to marry her; at the age of nine years, she is dowable; at twelve years, she is able finally to ratify and confirm her former consent given to matrimony; at fourteen, she is enabled to receive her land into her own hands, and shall be out of ward at the death of her ancestor; at sixteen, she shall be out of ward, though, at the death of her ancestor, she was within the age of fourteen years; at twenty-one, she is able to alienate her lands and tenements. At the age of fourteen, a stripling is enabled to choose his own guardian; at the age of fourteen, a man may consent to marriage. Cowell.

A'GED. adj. [from age. It makes two syllables in poetry.]

1. Old; stricken in years; applied generally to animate beings.

If the comparison do stand between man and man, which shall hearken unto other, with the aged, for the most part, are best experienced, least subject to rash and unadvised passions.

Hooker, b. v. § 7:

Novelty is only in request; and it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course, as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertaking. Shakefp. Measure for Measure.

Kindness itself too weak a charm will prove,

To raise the feeble fires of aged love. Prior.

2. Old; applied to inanimate things. This use is rare, and commonly with some tendency to the prosopopœia.

The people did not more worship the images of gold and ivory, than they did the groves; and the same Quintilian faith of the aged oaks. Stillingfleet's Defence of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

A'GEDLY. adv. [from aged.] After the manner of an aged person.

AGE'N. adv. [agen, Sax.] Again; in return. See AGAIN.

This word is only written in this manner, though it be in reality the true orthography, for the sake of rhyme.

Thus Venus: Thus her son reply'd agen;

None of your sisters have we heard or seen. Dryden's Æn.

A'GENCY. n. f. [from agent.]

1. The quality of acting; the state of being in action; action.

A few advances there are in the following papers, tending to assert the superintendence and agency of providence in the natural world. Woodward's Preface to Nat. History.

2. The office of an agent or factor for another; business performed by an agent.

Some of the purchasers themselves may be content to live cheap in a worse country, rather than be at the charge of exchange and agencies. Swift.

A'GENT. adj. [agens, Lat.] That which acts; opposed to patient, or that which is acted upon.

This success is oft truly ascribed unto the force of imagination upon the body agent; and then, by a secondary means, it may upon a diverse body; as, for example, if a man carry a ring, or some part of a beast, believing strongly that it will help him to obtain his love, it may make him more industrious, and again more confident and persisting than otherwise he would be. Bacon's Natural History, N° 902.

A'GENT. n. f.

1. An actor; he that acts; he that professes the faculty of action.

Where there is no doubt, deliberation is not excluded as impertinent unto the thing, but as needless in regard of the agent, which seeth already what to resolve upon. Hooker.

To whom nor agent, from the instrument,

Nor pow'r of working, from the work is known: Davies.

Heav'n made us agents free to good or ill,

And forc'd it not, tho' he foresaw the will.

Freedom was first bestow'd on human race,

And prescience only held the second place. Dryden.

A miracle is a work exceeding the power of any created agent, consequently being an effect of the divine omnipotence. South's Sermons.

2. A substitute; a deputy; a factor; a person employed to transact the business of another.

— All hearts in love, use your own tongues;

Let every eye negotiate for itself,

And trust no agent. Shakespeare.

They had not the wit to send to them, in any orderly fashion, agents or chosen men, to tempt them, and to treat with them. Bacon's Henry VII.

Remember, Sir, your fury of a wife,

Who, not content to be reveng'd on you,

The agents of your passion will pursue. Dryden's Aureng.

3. That which has the power of operating, or producing effects upon another thing.

They produced wonderful effects, by the proper application of agents to patients. Temple.

AGGENERATION. n. f. [from ad and generatio, Lat.] The state of growing or uniting to another body.

To make a perfect nutrition, there is required a transmutation of nutriment; now where this conversion or aggeneration is made, there is also required, in the aliment, a similarity of matter. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To A'GGERATE. v. a. [from agger, Lat.] To heap up. Dict.

AGGERO'SE. adj. [from agger, Lat.] Full of heaps. Dict.

To AGGLOMERATE. v. a. [agglomer, Lat.]

1. To gather up in a ball, as thread.

2. To gather together.

To AGGLOMERATE. v. n.

Besides, the hard agglomerating salts,

The spoil of ages, would impervious choke

Their secret channels. Thomson's Autumn.

AGGLUTINANTS. n. f. [from agglutinate.] Those medicines of applications which have the power of uniting parts together.

To AGGLUTINATE. v. n. [from ad and gluten, glue, Lat.] To unite one part to another; to join together, so as not to fall asunder. It is a word almost appropriated to medicine.

It has got room enough to grow into its full dimensions, which is performed by the daily ingestion of food that is digested into blood; which being diffused through the body, is agglutinated to those parts that were immediately agglutinated to the foundation-parts of the womb. Harvey on Consumptions.

AGGLUTINATION. n. f. [from agglutinate.] Union; cohesion; the act of agglutinating; the state of being agglutinated.

The occasion of its not healing by agglutination, as the other did, was from the alteration the ichor had begun to make in the bottom of the wound. Wise's Surgery.

AGGLUTINATIVE. adj. [from agglutinate.] That which has the power of procuring agglutination.

Rowl up the member with the agglutinative rowler. Wise.

To AGGRANDIZE. v. a. [aggrandiser, Fr.] To make great; to enlarge; to exalt; to improve in power, honour, or rank. It is applied to persons generally, sometimes to things.

If the king should use it no better than the pope did, only to aggrandize covetous churchmen, it cannot be called a jewel in his crown. Ayliffe's Parergon.

These furnish us with glorious springs and mediums, to raise and aggrandize our conceptions, to warm our souls, to awaken the better passions, and to elevate them even to a divine pitch, and that for devotional purposes. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

A'GGRANDIZEMENT. n. f. [aggrandissement, Fr.] The state of being aggrandized; the act of aggrandizing.

A'GGRANDIZER. n. f. [from aggrandize.] The person that aggrandizes or makes great another.

To AGGRA'TE. v. a. [aggratare, Ital.] To please; to treat with civilities: a word not now in use.

And in the midst thereof, upon the floor,

A lovely bevy of fair ladies fate,

Courted of many a jolly paramour;

The which them did in modest wise amate,

And each one sought his lady to aggrate. Fairy Queen.

To A'GGRAVATE. v. a. [aggravo, Lat.]

1. To make heavy; used only in a metaphorical sense; as, to aggravate an accusation, or a punishment.

A grove hard by, sprung up with this their change,

His will who reigns above! to aggravate

Their penance, laden with fruit, like that

Which grew in paradise, the bait of Eve

Us'd by the tempter. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

Ambitious Turnus in the press appears,

And aggravating crimes augment their fears. Dryd. Æneid.

2. To make any thing worse, by the addition of some particular circumstance, not essential.

This offence, in itself so heinous, was yet in him aggravated by the motive thereof, which was not malice or discontent, but an aspiring mind to the papacy. Bacon's Henry VII.

AGGRAVATION. n. f. [from aggravate.]

1. The act of aggravating, or making heavy.

2. The extrinsic circumstances or accidents, which encrease the guilt of a crime, or the misery of a calamity.

If it be weigh'd

By itself, with aggravations not furcharg'd,

Or else with just allowance counterpois'd,

I may, if possible, thy pardon find

The easier towards me, or thy hatred less. M. Samfs. Ag.

He, to the sins which he commits, hath the aggravation superadded of committing them against knowledge, against conscience, against fight of the contrary law. Hammond's Fundam.

A'GGREGATE. adj. [aggregatus, Lat.] Framed by the collection of any particular parts into one mass, body, or system.

They had, for a long time together, produced many other inept combinations, or aggregate forms of particular things, and nonsensical systems of the whole. Ray on the Creation.

A'GGREGATE. n. f. [from the verb.] The complex or collective result of the conjunction or acervation of many particulars.

The reason of the far greatest part of mankind, is but an aggregate of mistaken phantasms, and, in things not sensible, a constant delusion. Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica.

A great number of such living and thinking particles could not possibly, by their mutual contact, and pressing, and striking, compose one greater individual animal, with one mind and understanding, and a vital consension of the whole body; any more than a swarm of bees, or a crowd of men and women, can be conceived to make up one particular living creature, compounded and constituted of the aggregate of them all. Bentl.
To AGGREGATE. v. a. [aggrego, Lat.] To collect together; to heap many particulars into one mass.
The aggregated soil
Death, with his mace petrified, cold, and dry,
As with a trident, smote. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

AGGREGATION. n. f. [from aggregate.]

1. The collection, or act of collecting many particulars into one whole.

The water resident in the abyss is, in all parts of it, stored with a considerable quantity of heat, and more especially in those where these extraordinary aggregations of this fire happen. Woodward's Nat. History.

2. The whole composed by the coacervation of many particulars; an aggregate.

3. Collection, or state of being collected.
Their individual imperfections being great, they are moreover enlarged by their aggregation; and being erroneous in their single numbers, once huddled together, they will be error itself. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

To AGGRESS. v. n. [aggredior, aggressum, Lat.] To commit the first act of violence; to begin the quarrel.

The rage dispers'd, the glorious pair advance
With mingl'd danger, and collected might,
To turn the war, and tell aggressing France,
How Britain's sons, and Britain's friends can fight. Prior.

AGGRESSION. n. f. [aggressio, Lat.] The first act of injury; commencement of a quarrel by some act of iniquity.

There is no resisting of a common enemy, without an union for a mutual defence; and there may be also, on the other hand, a conspiracy of common enmity and aggression. L'Estr.

AGGRESSOR. n. f. [from aggress.] The person that first commences hostility; the assaulter or invader, opposed to the defendant.

Fly in nature's face?
But how, if nature fly in my face first?
Then nature's the aggressor: Let her look to't.
Dryden's Spanish Friar.

It is a very unlucky circumstance, to be obliged to retaliate the injuries of such authours, whose works are so soon forgotten, that we are in danger already of appearing the first aggressors. Pope and Swift's Preface to Miscellanies.

AGGRIEVANCE. n. f. [See GRIEVANCE.] Injury; hardship inflicted; wrong endured.

To AGGRIEVE. v. a. [from gravis, Lat. See To grieve.]

1. To give sorrow; to cause grief; to vex. It is not improbable, that to grieve was originally neuter, and aggrieve the active.

But while therein I took my chief delight,
I saw, alas! the gaping earth devour
The spring, the place, and all clean out of sight:
Which yet aggrieves my heart even to this hour. Spenser.

2. To impose some hardships upon; to harass; to hurt in one's right. This is a kind of juridical sense; and whenever it is used now, it bears some allusion to forms of law.

Sewall, archbishop of York, much aggrieved with some practices of the pope's collectors, took all patiently. Cambden.

The landed man finds himself aggrieved, by the falling of his rents, and the streightening of his fortune; whilst the monied man keeps up his gain, and the merchant thrives and grows rich by trade. Locke.

Of injur'd fame, and mighty wrongs receiv'd, Cloë complains, and wond'rously's aggriev'd. Granville.

To AGGRO'UP. v. a. [aggregare, Ital.] To bring together into one figure; to crowd together: a term of painting.

Bodies of divers natures, which are aggrouped (or combined) together, are agreeable and pleasant to the sight; as also those things which appear to be performed with ease. Dryd. Dufr.

AGHA'ST. adj. [either the participle of agaze, (see AGAZE.) and then to be written agazed; or agast, or from a and gast, a ghost, which the present orthography favours; perhaps they were originally different words.]

Struck with horror, as at the sight of a spectre; stupified with terror. It is generally applied to the external appearance.

Who sighing fore, as if her heart in twaine
Had riven been, and all her heart-strings braut,
With dreary drooping eyne look'd up like one aghast. Spens.

The aged earth aghast,
With terror of that blast,
Shall from the surface to the centre shake. Mil. Chr. Nat.

Aghast he wak'd, and, starting from his bed,
Cold sweat in clammy drops his limbs o'erspread. Dryd. Æn.

I laugh to think how your unshaken Cato
Will look aghast, while unforeseen destruction
Pours in upon him thus from every side. Addison. Cato

A'GILE. adj. [agile, Fr. agilis, Lat.] Nimble; ready; having the quality of being speedily put in motion; active.

With that he gave his able horse the head,
And bending forward struck his agile heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade,
Up to the rowel-head. Shakesp. Henry IV.

The immediate and agile subservience of the spirits to the empire of the mind or soul. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To guide its actions with informing care,
In peace to judge, to conquer in the war,
Render it agile, witty, valiant, sage,
As fits the various course of human age. Prior.

A'GILENESS. n. f. [from agile.] The quality of being agile; nimbleness; readiness for motion; quickness; activity; agility.

AGILITY. n. f. [agilitas, Lat. from agilis, agile.] Nimbleness; readiness to move; quickness; activity.

A limb over-strained by lifting a weight above its power, may never recover its former agility and vigour. Watts.

AGILLOCHUM. n. f. Aloes-wood.

A tree in the East-Indies, brought to us in small bits, of a very fragrant scent. It is hot, drying, and accounted a strengthener of the nerves in general. The best is of a blackish purple colour, and so light as to swim upon water. Quincy.

A'GIO. n. f. [an Italian word, signifying ease or convenience.]

A mercantile term, used chiefly in Holland and Venice, for the difference between the value of bank notes, and the current money. Chambers.

To AGIST. v. a. [from giste, Fr. a bed or resting-place, or from gister, i. e. stabulari.]

To take in and feed the cattle of strangers in the king's forest, and to gather the money. The officers that do this, are called agistors, in English guest or gift-takers. Their function is termed agistment; as, agistment upon the sea banks. This word agist is also used, for the taking in of other men's cattle into any man's ground, at a certain rate per week. Blount.

AGISTMENT. n. f. [See AGIST.]

It is taken by the canon lawyers in another sense than is mentioned under agist. They seem to intend by it, a modus or composition, or mean rate, at which some right or due may be reckoned: perhaps it is corrupted from addouissement, or adjustment.

AGISTOR. n. f. [from agist.] An officer of the king's forest. See AGIST.

A'GITABLE. n. f. [from agitate; agitabilis, Lat.] That which may be agitated, or put in motion; perhaps that which may be disputed. See AGITATE, and AGITATION.

To A'GITATE. v. a. [agito, Lat.]

1. To put in motion; to shake; to move nimbly; as, the surface of the waters is agitated by the wind; the vessel was broken by agitating the liquor.

2. To be the cause of motion; to actuate; to move.

Where dwells this sov'reign arbitrary soul,
Which does the human animal controul,
Informs each part, and agitates the whole? Blackmore.

3. To affect with perturbation; as, the mind of man is agitated by various passions.

4. To stir; to bandy from one to another; to discuss; to controvert; as, to agitate a question.

Though this controversy be revived, and hotly agitated among the moderns; yet I doubt whether it be not, in a great part, a nominal dispute. Boyle on Colours.

AGITATION. n. f. [from agitate, agitatio, Lat.]

1. The act of moving, or shaking any thing.

Putrefaction asketh rest; for the subtle motion which putrefaction requireth, is disturbed by any agitation. Bacon.

2. The state of being moved or agitated; as, the waters, after a storm, are sometime in a violent agitation.

3. Discussion; controversial examination.

A kind of a school question is started in this fable, upon reason and instinct: and whether this deliberative proceeding of the crow, was not rather a logical agitation of the matter. L'Estrange's Fables.

4. Violent motion of the mind; perturbation; disturbance of the thoughts.

A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching. In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking, and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say? Shakesp. Macbeth.

His mother could no longer bear the agitations of so many passions as thronged upon her. Tatler, N° 55.

5. Deliberation; contrivance; the state of being consulted upon.

The project now in agitation for repealing of the test act, and yet leaving the name of an establishment to the present national church, is inconsistent. Swift's Miscell.

AGITA'TOR. n. f. [from agitate.] He that agitates any thing; he who manages affairs: in which sense seems to be used the agitators of the army.

A'GLET. n. f. [A word which some derive from αἴγλη, splendour, but which is apparently to be deduced from aiguette, Fr. a tag to a point, and that from aigu, sharp.]

A tag of a point curved into some representation of an animal, generally of a man.

He thereupon gave for the garter a chain worth 200 l. and his gown address'd with aglets, esteemed worth 25 l. Hayward.

Why, give him gold enough, and marry him to a puppet, or an aglet baby, or an old trot, and ne'er a tooth in her head.

Shakefp. Taming of the Shrew.

2. The pendants at the ends of the chieftes of flowers, as in tulips.

A'GMINAL. adj. [from agmen, Lat.] Belonging to a troop. Dict.
A'GNAIL. n. f. [from ange, grieved, and nagle, a nail.]

A disease of the nails; a whitlow; an inflammation round the nails.

AGNA'TION. n. f. [from agnatus, Lat.] Descent from the same father, in a direct male line, distinct from cognition, or consanguinity, which includes descendants from females.

AGNI'TION. n. f. [from agnitis, Lat.] Acknowledgment.

To AGNI'ZE. v. a. [from agnosco, Lat.] To acknowledge; to own; to avow. This word is now obsolete.

I do agnize

A natural and prompt alacrity

I find in hardness; and do undertake

This present war against the Ottomites. Shakefp. Othello.

AGNOMINA'TION. n. f. [from agnominatio, Lat.] Allusion of one word to another, by resemblance of sound.

The British continueth yet in Wales, and some villages of Cornwall, intermingled with provincial Latin, being very significative, copious, and pleasantly running upon agnominations, although harsh in aspirations. Camden.

AGNUS CASTUS. n. f. [Lat.] The name of the tree commonly called the Chaste Tree, from an imaginary virtue of preserving chastity.

Of laurel some, of woodbine many more,

And wreathes of agnus castus others bore. Dryden.

AGO. adv. [from agan, Sax. past or gone; whence writers formerly used, and in some provinces the people still use, agone for ago.]

Past; as, long ago; that is, long time has past since. Reckoning time towards the present, we use since; as, it is a year since it happened: reckoning from the present, we use ago; as, it happened a year ago. This is not, perhaps, always observed.

Be of good comfort: for the great supply,

That was expected by the Dauphin here,

Are wreck'd three nights ago on Godwin sands. Sh. K. John.

This both by others and myself I know,

For I have serv'd their sovereign long ago;

Oft have been caught within the winding train. Dryd. Fab.

I shall set down an account of a discourse I chanced to have with one of them some time ago. Addison. Freeholder.

AGO'G. adv. [a word of uncertain etymology; the French have the term à gogo, in low language; as, ils vivent à gogo, they live to their wish: from this phrase our word may be, perhaps, derived.]

1. In a state of desire; in a state of imagination; heated with the notion of some enjoyment; longing.

As for the sense and reason of it, that has little or nothing to do here; only let it sound full and round, and chime right to the humour, which is at present agog, (just as a big, long, rattling name is said to command even adoration from a Spaniard) and, no doubt, with this powerful, senseless engine, the rabble-driver, shall be able to carry all before him. South's Sermons.

2. It is used with the verbs to be, or to set; as, he is agog, or you may set him agog.

The gawdy gossip, when she's set agog,

In jewels dress'd, and at each ear a bob,

Goes flaunting out, and, in her trim of pride,

Thinks all she says or does, is justify'd. Dryd. Juv. Sat. 6.

This maggot has no sooner set him agog, but he gets him a ship, freights her, builds castles in the air, and conceits both the Indies in his coffers. L'Estrange.

3. It has the particles on, or for, before the object of desire.

On which the saints are all agog,

And all this for a bear and dog. Hudibras, cant. ii.

They generally straggle into these parts about this time of the year; and set the heads of our servant-maids so agog for husbands, that we do not expect to have any business done as it should be, whilst they are in the country. Addison. Spectator.

AGO'NE. adv. [from agan, Sax.] Agone; past. See AGO.

Is he such a princely one,

As you speak him long agone? Ben. Johnson's Fairy Prince.

A'GONISM. n. f. [from agonismus, Gr.] Contention for a prize. Dict.

AGO'ING. participial adj. [from a and going.] In action.

Their first movement, and impressed motions, demanded the impulse of an almighty hand to set them first agoing. Tatler.

A'GONIST. n. f. [from agonistes, Gr.] A contender for prizes. Dict.

AGONISTES. n. f. [from agonistes, Gr.] A prize-fighter; one that contends at any public solemnity for a prize. Milton has so stiled his tragedy, because Sampson was called out to divert the Philistines with feats of strength.

AGONISTICAL. adj. [from agonistes.] Relating to prize-fighting. Dict.

To A'GONIZE. v. n. [from agonizo, low Latin, agonizō, Gr. agoniser, Fr.] To feel agonies; to be in excessive pain.

VOL. I.

Dost thou behold my poor distracted heart,

Thus rent with agonizing love and rage,

And ask me what it means? Art thou not false? Rowe's J. Sh.

Or touch, if, tremblingly alive all o'er,

To smart and agonize at ev'ry pore? Pope's Essay on Man.

AGONOTHE'TICK. adj. [from agon and theîk, Gr.] Proposing public contentions for prizes; giving prizes; presiding at publick games. Dict.

A'GONY. n. f. [from agon, Gr. agon, low Lat. agonie, Fr.]

1. The pangs of death; properly the last contest between life and death.

Never was there more pity in saving any than in ending me, because therein my agony shall end. Sidney, b. ii.

Thou who for me did feel such pain,

Whose precious blood the cross did stain,

Let not those agonies be vain. Roscommon.

2. Any violent or excessive pain of body or mind.

Betwixt them both, they have me done to dy,

Through wounds and strokes, and stubborn handeling,

That death were better than such agony,

As grief and fury unto me did bring. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Thee I have mis'd, and thought it long, depriv'd

Thy presence, agony of love! till now

Not felt, nor shall be twice. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

3. It is particularly used in devotions for our Redeemer's conflict in the garden.

To propose our desires, which cannot take such effect as we specify, shall, notwithstanding, otherwise procure us his heavenly grace, even as this very prayer of Christ obtained angels to be sent him as comforters in his agony. Hooker, b. v.

AGO'OD. adv. [from a and good.] In earnest; not fictitiously.

At that time I made her weep agood,

For I did play a lamentable part. Shak. Two Gent. of Ver.

AGO'UTY. n. f. An animal of the Antilles, of the bigness of a rabbit, with bright red hair, and a little tail without hair.

He has but two teeth in each jaw, holds his meat in his forepaws like a squirrel, and has a very remarkable cry. When he is angry, his hair stands on end, and he strikes the earth with his hindfeet, and, when chafed, he flies to a hollow tree, whence he is expelled by smoke. Trevoux.

To AGRA'CE. v. a. [from a and grace.] To grant favours to; to confer benefits upon: a word not now in use.

She granted, and that knight so much agrac'd,

That she him taught celestial discipline. Fairy Queen.

AGRA'MMATIST. n. f. [from a, priv. and gramma, Gr.] An illiterate man. Dict.

AGRA'RIAN. adj. [from agrarius, Lat.] Relating to fields or grounds; a word seldom used but in the Roman history, where there is mention of the agrarian law.

To AGRE'ASE. v. a. [from a and grease.] To daub; to grease; to pollute with filth.

The waves thereof so slow and sluggish were,

Engross'd with mud, which did them foul agreease. Fairy Q.

To AGRE'E. v. n. [from agreer, Fr. from gré, liking or good-will; gratia and gratus, Lat.]

1. To be in concord; to live without contention; not to differ.

The more you agree together, the less hurt can your enemies do you. Pope's View of Epic Poetry.

2. To grant; to yield to; to admit; with the particles to or upon.

And persuaded them to agree to all reasonable conditions.

2 Maccabees, xi. 14.

We do not prove the origin of the earth from a chaos; seeing that is agreed on by all that give it any origin. Burnet's Theo.

3. To settle terms by stipulation; to accord.

Agree with thine adversary quickly, whilst thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison. Matt. v. 25.

4. To settle a price between buyer and seller.

Friend, I do thee no wrong: didst not thou agree with me for a penny. Matt. xx. 13.

5. To be of the same mind or opinion.

He exceedingly provoked, or underwent the envy, and reproach, and malice of men of all qualities and conditions, who agreed in nothing else. Clarendon.

Milton is a noble genius, and the world agrees to confess it.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

6. To settle some point among many.

Strifes and troubles would be endless, except they gave their common consent all to be ordered by some whom they should agree upon. Hooker, b. i.

If judicious men, skilled in chymical affairs, shall agree to write clearly, and keep men from being stunned by dark or empty words, it is hoped, they will be reduced either to write nothing, or books that may teach us something. Boyle.

7. To be consistent; not to contradict.

For many bare false witness against him, but their witness agreed not together. Mark, xiv. 56.

They that stood by said again to Peter, surely thou art one of them: for thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto. Mark, xiv. 70.

Which testi nomy I the less scruple to allege, because it agrees very well with what has been affirmed to me by a physician at Moscow.

Boyle's History of Colours.

8. To suit with ; to be accommodated to.

Thou feedest thine own people with angels food, and didst send them from heaven bread agreeing to every taste. Wisdom.

His principles could not be made to agree with that constitution and order, which God had settled in the world ; and, therefore, must needs clash with common sense and experience.

Locke.

9. To cause no disturbance in the body.

I have often thought, that our prescribing asses milk in such small quantities, is injudicious ; for, undoubtedly, with such as it agrees with, it would perform much greater and quicker effects, in greater quantities.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

To AGREE. v. a.

1. To put an end to a variance.

He saw from far, or seemed for to see,

Some troublous uproar, or contentious fray,

Whereto he drew in haste it to agree. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. To make friends ; to reconcile.

The mighty rivals, whose destructive rage

Did the whole world in civil arms engage,

Are now agreed.

Roscommon.

AGREEABLE. adj. [agreeable, Fr.]

1. Suitable to ; consistent with. It has the particle to, or with.

What you do, is not at all agreeable either with so good a christian, or so reasonable and so great a person. Temple.

That which is agreeable to the nature of one thing, is many times contrary to the nature of another. L'Estrange.

As the practice of all piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason, so is it likewise the interest both of private persons and of publick societies. Tillotson.

Agreeable hereunto, perhaps it might not be amiss, to make children, as soon as they are capable of it, often to tell a story.

Locke on Education.

2. Pleasing ; that is suitable to the inclination, faculties, or temper. It is used in this sense both of persons and things.

And while the face of outward things we find

Pleasing and fair, agreeable and sweet,

These things transport.

Sir J. Davies.

I recollect in my mind the discourses which have passed between us, and call to mind a thousand agreeable remarks, which he has made on these occasions. Addison. Spectator, N° 241.

3. It has also the particle to.

The delight which men have in popularity, fame, submission, and subjection of other men's minds, seemeth to be a thing, in itself, without contemplation of consequence, agreeable and grateful to the nature of man. Bacon's Natural Hist.

AGREEABLENESS. n. f. [from agreeable.]

1. Consistency with ; suitability to ; with the particle to.

Pleasant tastes depend not on the things themselves, but their agreeableness to this or that particular palate, wherein there is great variety. Locke.

2. The quality of pleasing. It is used in an inferior sense, to mark the production of satisfaction, calm and lasting, but below rapture or admiration.

There will be occasion for largeness of mind and agreeableness of temper. Collier of Friendship.

It is very much an image of that author's writing, who has an agreeableness that charms us, without correctness ; like a mistress, whose faults we see, but love her with them all. Pope.

3. Resemblance ; likeness ; sometimes with the particle between.

This relation is likewise seen in the agreeableness between man and the other parts of the universe ; and that in sundry respects. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

AGREEABLY. adv. [from agreeable.]

1. Consistently with ; in a manner suitable to.

They may look into the affairs of Judea and Jerusalem, agreeably to that which is in the law of the Lord. 1 Esd. xviii. 12.

2. Pleasingly.

I did never imagine, that so many excellent rules could be produced so advantageously and agreeably. Swift.

AGREED. participial adj. [from agree.] Settled by consent.

When they had got known and agreed names, to signify those internal operations of their own minds, they were sufficiently furnished to make known by words all their ideas. Locke.

AGREEINGNESS. n. f. [from agree.] Consistence ; suitability.

AGREEMENT. n. f. [agreement, Fr. in law Latin agreementum, which Coke would willingly derive from aggregatio mentium.]

1. Concord.

What agreement is there between the hyena and the dog ? and what peace between the rich and the poor ? Ecclus. xiii. 18.

2. Resemblance of one thing to another.

Expansion and duration have this farther agreement, that though they are both considered by us as having parts, yet their parts are not separable one from another. Locke.

3. Compact ; bargain ; conclusion of controversy ; stipulation.

And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand ; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it. Isaiah, xxviii. 18.

Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me, and then eat ye every man of his own vine, and every one of his fig-tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his cistern.

2 Kings, xviii. 31.

Frog had given his word, that he would meet the above-mentioned company at the Salutation, to talk of this agreement. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

AGRE'STICK, or AGRE'STICAL. adj. [from agrestis, Lat.]

Having relation to the country ; rude ; rustick. Dict.

AGRICOLA'TION. n. f. [from agricola, Lat.] Culture of the ground. Dict.

A'GRICULTURE. n. f. [agricultura, Lat.] The art of cultivating the ground ; tillage ; husbandry.

He strictly adviseth not to begin to sow before the setting of the stars ; which notwithstanding, without injury to agriculture, cannot be observed in England. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

That there was tillage bestowed upon the ground, Moses does indeed intimate in general ; as also, what sort of tillage that was, is not expressed : I hope to shew, that their agriculture was nothing near so laborious and troublesome, nor did it take up so much time as ours doth. Woodward's Nat. History.

The disposition of Ulysses inclined him to war, rather than the more lucrative, but more secure, method of life, by agriculture and husbandry. Pope's Odyssey ; notes.

A'GRIMONY. n. f. [agrimonia, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The leaves are rough, hairy, pennated, and grow alternately on the branches ; the flower-cup consists of one leaf, which is divided into five segments ; the flowers have five or six leaves, and are formed into a long spike, which expand in form of a rose ; the fruit is oblong, dry, and prickly, like the burdock ; in each of which are contained two kernels.

The species are ; 1. The common or medicinal agrimony.

2. The sweet-smelling agrimony. 3. Lesser agrimony, with a white flower.

The first is common in the hedges, in many parts, and is the sort commonly used in medicine. It will grow in almost any soil or situation ; and is increased by parting the roots in autumn, or by sowing the seeds soon after they are ripe. Mill.

AGRO'UND. adv. [from a and ground.]

1. Stranded ; hindered by the ground from passing farther.

With our great ships we durst not approach the coast, we having been all of us aground. Sir W. Raleigh's Essays.

Say what you seek, and whether were you bound ?

Were you, by stress of weather, cast aground ? Dryden's Æn.

2. It is likewise figuratively used, for being hindered in the progress of affairs ; as, the negotiators were aground at that objection.

A'GUE. n. f. [aigu, Fr. acute.] An intermitting fever, with cold fits succeeded by hot. The cold fit is, in popular language, more particularly called the ague, and the hot the fever.

Our castle's strength

Will laugh a siege to scorn. Here let them lie,

Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Though

He feels the heats of youth, and colds of age,

Yet neither tempers nor corrects the other ;

As if there were an ague in his nature,

That still inclines to one extreme.

Denham's Sophy.

A'GUED. adj. [from ague.] Struck with an ague ; shivering ; chill ; cold : a word in little use.

All hurt behind, backs red, and faces pale,

With flight and agued fear ! mind and charge home.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

A'GUE FIT. n. f. [from ague and fit.] The paroxysm of the ague.

This ague fit of fear is overblown ;

An easy task it is to win our own.

Shakesp. Richard II.

A'GUE PROOF. adj. [from ague and proof.] Proof against agues ; able to resist the causes which produce agues, without being affected.

When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter ; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding ; there I found 'em, there I smelt 'em out. Go to, they are not men o' their words ; they told me I was every thing : 'tis a lie ; I am not ague proof. Shakespeare's King Lear.

A'GUE-TREE. n. f. [from ague and tree.] A name sometimes given to saffraas. Dict.

To AGU'ISE. v. a. [from a and guise. See GUISE.] To dress ; to adorn ; to deck : a word now not in use.

At other whiles she would devise,

As her fantastick wit did most delight ;

Sometimes her head she fondly would aguise

With gaudy garlands, or fresh flowers dight

About her neck, or rings of rushes plight.

Fairy Queen.

A'GUISH. adj. [from ague.] Having the qualities of an ague.

So calm, and so serene, but now,

What means this change on Myra's brow ?

Her aguish love now glows and burns,

Then chills and shakes, and the cold fit returns. Granville.

A'GUISHNESS. n. f. [from aguish.] The quality of resembling an ague.

A I D

AH. interjection.

1. A word noting sometimes dislike and censure.

Ab! sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil doers, children that are corrupters, they have forsaken the Lord. Isaiah, i. 4.

2. Sometimes contempt and exultation.

Let them not say in their hearts, Ab! so we would have it: let them not say, we have swallowed him up. Psalms xxxv. 25.

3. Sometimes, and most frequently, compassion and complaint.

In youth alone, unhappy mortals live;
But, ab! the mighty bliss is fugitive:
Discolour'd sickness, anxious labour come,
And age and death's inexorable doom. Dryd. Virg. Georg. iii.

Ab me! the blooming pride of May,
And that of beauty, are but one:
At morn both flourish bright and gay,
Both fade at evening, pale, and gone. Prior.

4. When it is followed by that, it expresses vehement desire.

In goodness, as in greatness, they excell;
Ab that! we loved ourselves but half so well. Dryd. Juven.

AHA', AHA'! interjection. A word intimating triumph and contempt.

They opened their mouth wide against me, and said, Aba, aba! our eye hath seen it. Psalms xxxv. 21.

AHE'AD. adv. [from a and head.]

1. Farther onward than another: a sea term.

And now the mighty Centaur seems to lead,
And now the speedy dolphin gets ahead. Dryden's Æn.

2. Headlong; precipitant: used of men.

It is mightily the fault of parents, guardians, tutors, and governors, that so many men miscarry. They suffer them at first to run ahead, and, when perverse inclinations are advanced into habits, there is no dealing with them. L'Estrange's Fab.

AHE'IGHT. adv. [from a and height.] Aloft; on high.

But have I fall'n or no?—

—From the dread summit of this chalky bourn!
Look up abeight, the shrill-gorg'd lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard. Shakespeare's King Lear.

AHOUE'AI. n. f. The name of a plant.

It hath funnel-shaped flowers of one leaf, divided into several parts at the top; the pointal, which rises from the cup, is fixed, like a nail, to the inner part of the flower, and becomes a pear-shaped fleshy fruit, inclosing a three-cornered nut.

There are two species of this plant abounding on the continent of South America: the first grows to the height of our common cherry-tree; its leaves are three or four inches long, and almost two inches broad; the wood of it stinks most abominably, and the kernel of the nut is a most deadly poison; to expel which, the Indians know no antidote, nor will they use the wood for fuel. The second sort, with an oleander leaf, and a yellow flower, does not grow higher than ten or twelve feet; its fruit is of a beautiful red colour when ripe, and equally poisonous with the former. Both plants abound in every part with a milky juice. Millar.

To AID. v. a. [aider, Fr. from adjutare, Lat.] To help; to support; to succour.

Into the lake he leapt, his lord to aid,
(So love the dread of danger doth despise)
And of him catching hold, him strongly staid
From drowning. Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. 6.

Neither shall they give any thing unto them that make war upon them, or aid them with victuals, weapons, money, or ships. Maccabees, viii. 26.

By the loud trumpet, which our courage aids,
We learn that found as well as sense persuades. Roscommon.

AID. n. f. [from To aid.]

1. Help; support.

The memory of useful things may receive considerable aid, if they are thrown into verse. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

Your patrimonial stores in peace possess;
Undoubted all your filial claim confess:
Your private right should impious power invade,
The peers of Ithaca would arm in aid. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

2. The person that gives help or support; a helper.

Thou hast said, it is not good that man should be alone;
let us make unto him an aid, like unto himself. Tobit, viii. 6.

3. In law.

A subsidy. Aid is also particularly used in matter of pleading, for a petition made in court, for the calling in of help from another, that hath an interest in the cause in question; and is likewise both to give strength to the party that prays in aid of him, and also to avoid a prejudice accruing toward his own right, except it be prevented: as, when a tenant for term of life, courtesy, &c. being impleaded touching his estate, he may pray in aid of him in the reversion; that is, entreat the court, that he may be called in by writ, to allege what he thinks good for the maintenance both of his right and his own. Cowell.

AIDANCE. n. f. [from aid.] Help; support: a word little used.

Oft have I seen a timely parted ghost,
Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,
Being all descended to the lab'ring heart,

A I M

Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,

Attracts the same for aidance 'gainst the enemy. Sh. Hen. VI.

AIDANT. adj. [aidant, Fr.] Helping; helpful.

All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate
In the good man's distress. Shakesp. King Lear.

AIDER. n. f. [from aid.] He that brings aid or help; a helper; an ally.

All along as he went, were punished the adherents and aiders of the late rebels. Bacon's Henry VII.

AIDLESS. adj. [from aid and less, an inseparable particle.] Helpless; unsupported; undefended.

Alone he enter'd
The mortal gate o' the city, which he painted
With shunless destiny: aidless came off,
And, with a sudden re-enforcement, struck
Corioli, like a planet. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Had met

Already, ere my best speed could prevent,
The aidless innocent lady, his wish'd prey. Milt. Comus.

AIGULET. n. f. [aigulet, Fr.] A point with tags; points of gold at the end of fringes.

Which all above besprinkled was throughout
With golden aigulets that glister'd bright,
Like twinkling stars, and all the skirt about
Was hemm'd with golden fringes. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

To AIL. v. a. [eglan, Sax. to be troublesome.]

1. To pain; to trouble; to give pain.

And the angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and said unto her, what aileth thee, Hagar? fear not: for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is. Gen. xxi. 17.

2. It is used, in a sense less determinate, for to affect in any manner; as, something ails me that I cannot sit still; what ails the man that he laughs without reason?

Love smil'd, and thus said, Want join'd to desire is unhappy;
But if he nought do desire, what can Heraclitus ail? Sidney.

What ails me, that I cannot lose thy thought!
Command the empress hither to be brought,
I, in her death, shall some diversion find,
And rid my thoughts at once of woman-kind. Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

3. To feel pain; to be incommoded.

4. It is remarkable, that this word is never used but with some indefinite term, or the word nothing; as, What ails him? What does he ail? He ails something; he ails nothing. Something ails him; nothing ails him. Thus we never say, a fever ails him, or he ails a fever, or use definite terms with this verb.

AIL. n. f. [from the verb.] A disease.

Or heal, O Nerves, thy obscener ail. Pope.

AILMENT. n. f. [from ail.] Pain; disease.

Little ailments oft attend the fair,
Not decent for a husband's eye or ear. Granville.

I am never ill, but I think of your ailments, and repine that they mutually hinder our being together. Swift's Letters.

AILING. participial adj. [from To ail.] Sickly; full of complaints.

To AIM. v. a. [It is derived by Skinner from esmer, to point at; a word which I have not found.]

1. To endeavour to strike with a missile weapon; to direct towards; with the particle at.

Aim'st thou at princes, all amaz'd they said,
The last of games? Pope's Odyssey.

2. To point the view, or direct the steps towards any thing; to tend towards; to endeavour to reach or obtain; with to formerly, now only with at.

Lo, here the world is bliss; so here the end
To which all men do aim, rich to be made,
Such grace now to be happy is before thee laid. Fairy Q.
Another kind there is, which although we desire for itself, as health, and virtue, and knowledge, nevertheless they are not the last mark whereat we aim, but have their further end whereunto they are referred. Hooker, b. i.

Sworn with applause, and aiming still at more,
He now provokes the sea gods from the shore. Dryden's Æn.
Religion tends to the ease and pleasure, the peace and tranquillity of our minds, which all the wisdom of the world did always aim at, as the utmost felicity of this life. Tillotson.

3. To direct the missile weapon; more particularly taken for the act of pointing the weapon by the eye, before its dismissal from the hand.

And proud Ideus, Priam's charioteer,
Who shakes his empty reins, and aims his airy spear. Dryd.

4. To guess.

AIM. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The direction of a missile weapon.

Ascanius, young and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain of his aim;
But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his parting sides. Dryden, Æn. vii. l. 691.

2. The point to which the thing thrown is directed.

That

- That arrows fled not swifter toward their aim,
Than did our soldiers, aiming at their safety,
Fly from the field. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.
3. In a figurative sense, a purpose; a scheme; an intention; a design.

He trusted to have equall'd the most High,
If he oppos'd: and, with ambitious aim
Against the throne, and monarchy of God,
Rais'd impious war. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. i. l. 41.

- But see, how oft ambitious aims are crost,
And chiefs contend till all the prize is lost. Pope.
4. The object of a design; the thing after which any one endeavours.

The safest way is to suppose, that the epistle has but one aim, till, by a frequent perusal of it, you are forced to see there are distinct independent parts. Locke's Essay on St. Paul's Epistles.

5. Conjecture; guess.
- It is impossible, by aim, to tell it; and, for experience and knowledge thereof, I do not think that there was ever any of the particulars thereof. Spenser on Ireland.

There is a history in all mens lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd;
The which observ'd, a man may prophecy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things,
As yet not come to life, which, in their seeds
And weak beginnings, lie intreasur'd. Shakesp. Henry IV.

AIR. n. f. [air, Fr. air, Lat.]

1. The element encompassing the terraqueous globe.
- If I were to tell what I mean by the word air, I may say, it is that fine matter which we breathe in and breathe out continually; or it is that thin fluid body, in which the birds fly, a little above the earth; or it is that invisible matter, which fills all places near the earth, or which immediately encompasses the globe of earth and water. Watts's Logick.

2. The state of the air; or the air considered with regard to health.
- There be many good and healthful airs, that do appear by habitation and other proofs, that differ not in smell from other airs. Bacon's Natural History, N° 904.

3. Air in motion; a small gentle wind.
- Fresh gales, and gentle airs,
Whisper'd it to the woods, and from their wings
Flung rose, flung odours from the spicy shrub Disporting! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii. l. 515.
- But safe repose, without an air of breath,
Dwells here, and a dumb quiet next to death. Dryden.
- Let vernal airs through trembling osiers play,
And Albion's cliffs rebound the rural lay. Pope's Pastorals.

4. Blast.
- All the stor'd vengeance of heaven fall
On her ingrateful top! strike her young bones,
You taking airs, with lameness. Shakesp. King Lear.

5. Any thing light or uncertain; that is as light as air.
- O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!
Who builds his hope in air of your fair looks,
Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast,
Ready, with ev'ry nod, to tumble down
Into the fatal bowels of the deep. Shakesp. Rich. III.

6. The open weather; air unconfined.
- The garden was inclos'd within the square,
Where young Emilia took the morning air. Dryd. Fables.

7. Vent; utterance; emission into the air.
- I would have ask'd you, if I durst for shame,
If still you lov'd? you gave it air before me.
But ah! why were we not both of a sex?
For then we might have lov'd without a crime. Dryd. D. Seb.

8. Publication; exposure to the publick view and knowledge.
- I am sorry to find it has taken air, that I have some hand in these papers. Pope's Letters.

9. Intelligence; information.
- It grew also from the airs, which the princes and states abroad received from their ambassadors and agents here; which were attending the court in great number. Bacon's Henry VII.

10. Poetry; a song.
- And the repeated air
Of sad Electra's poet, had the pow'r
To save th' Athenian walls from ruin bare. Parad. Regain.

11. Musick, whether light or serious.
- This musick crept by me upon the waters,
Allaying both their fury and my passion,
With its sweet air. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Call in some musick; I have heard, soft airs
Can charm our senses, and expel our cares. Denb. Sophy.

The same airs, which some entertain with most delightful transports, to others are importune. Glanville's Scepssis Scient.

Since we have such a treasury of words, so proper for the airs of musick, I wonder that persons should give so little attention. Addison's Spectator, N° 406.

Born on the swelling notes, our souls aspire,
While solemn airs improve the sacred fire;
And angels lean from heav'n to hear! Pope's St. Cecilia.

— When the soul is sunk with cares,
Exalts her in enlivening airs. Pope's Cecilia.

12. The mien, or manner, of the person.
- Her graceful innocence, her ev'ry air,
Of gesture, or least action, over-aw'd
His malice. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 459.

For the air of youth
Hopeful and chearful, in thy blood shall reign
A melancholy damp of cold and dry,
To weigh thy spirits down; and last consume
The balm of life. Milt. Par. Lost, b. xi. l. 452.

But, having the life before us, besides the experience of all they knew, it is no wonder to hit some airs and features, which they have missed. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

There is something wonderfully divine in the airs of this picture. Addison on Italy.

Yet should the Graces all thy figures place,
And breathe an air divine on ev'ry face. Pope.

13. An affected or laboured manner or gesture; as, a lofty air, a gay air.

Whom Ancus follows, with a fawning air;
But vain within, and proudly popular. Dryd. Æn. vi.

There are of these sort of beauties, which last but for a moment; as, the different airs of an assembly, upon the sight of an unexpected and uncommon object, some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, a look of gravity, and a thousand other such like things. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Their whole lives were employed in intrigues of state, and they naturally give themselves airs of kings and princes, of which the ministers of other nations are only the representatives. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

To curl their waving hairs,
Assist their blushes, and inspire their airs. Pope.

He assumes and affects an entire set of very different airs;
he conceives himself a being of a superiour nature. Swift.

14. Appearance.
- As it was communicated with the air of a secret, it soon found its way into the world. Pope's Ded. to Rape of the Lock.
15. [In horsemanship.] Airs denote the artificial or practised motions of a managed horse. Chambers.

To AIR. v. a. [from the noun air.]

1. To expose to the air.
- Fleas breed principally of straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture, or the chamber and bed-straw kept close, and not aired. Bacon's Natural History, N° 696.

We have had, in our time, experience twice or thrice, when both the judges that sat upon the jail, and numbers of those that attended the business, or were present, sickened upon it, and died. Therefore, it were good wisdom, that, in such cases, the jail were aired, before they were brought forth.

Bacon's Natural History, N° 914.

As the ants were airing their provisions one winter, up comes a hungry grasshopper to them, and begs a charity.
L'Estrange's Fables.

Or wicker-baskets weave, or air the corn,
Or grinded grain, betwixt two marbles turn. Dryd. Virgil.

2. To take the air, or enjoy the open air, with the reciprocal pronoun.

Nay, stay a little——
Were you but riding forth to air yourself,
Such parting were too petty. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

I ascended the highest hills of Bagdat, in order to pass the rest of the day in meditation and prayer. As I was here airing myself on the tops of the mountains, I fell into a profound contemplation on the vanity of human life. Addison. Spect.

3. To open to the air; as, clothes.
- The others make it a matter of small commendation in itself, if they, who wear it, do nothing else but air the robes, which their place requireth. Hooker, b. v. § 29.

4. To air liquors; to warm them by the fire: a term used in conversation.

5. To make nests. In this sense, it is derived from aery, a nest.
It is now out of use.

You may add their busy, dangerous, discourteous, yea, and sometimes spiteful stealing, one from another, of the eggs and young ones; who, if they were allowed to air naturally and quietly, there would be store sufficient, to kill not only the partridges, but even all the good housewives chickens in a country. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

AIRBLADDER. n. f. [from air and bladder.]

1. Any cuticle or vesicle filled with air.
- The pulmonary artery and vein pass along the surfaces of these airbladders, in an infinite number of ramifications.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The bladder in fishes, by the contraction and dilatation of which, they vary the properties of their weight to that of their bulk, and rise or fall.

Though the airbladder in fishes seems necessary for swimming, yet some are so formed as to swim without it. Cudworth.

AIRBUILT. adj. [from air and build.] Built in the air, without any solid foundation.

Hence the fool's paradise, the statesman's scheme,
The airbuilt castle, and the golden dream,

The maid's romantick wish, the chymist's flame,
And poet's vision of eternal fame. Pope's Dunciad, b. iii.

AIR-DRAWN. adj. [from air and drawn.] Drawn or painted in air.

This is the very painting of your fear,

This is the air-drawn dagger, which, you said,

Led you to Duncan.

Shakesp. Macbeth.

A'IRER. n. f. [from To air.] He that exposes to the air.

A'IRHOLE. n. f. [from air and hole.] A hole to admit the air.

A'IRINESS. n. f. [from airy.]

1. Openness; exposure to the air.

2. Lightness; gaiety; levity.

The French have indeed taken worthy pains to make claf-fick learning speak their language; if they have not succeeded, it must be imputed to a certain talkativeness and airiness represented in their tongue, which will never agree with the sedateness of the Romans, or the solemnity of the Greeks. Felton.

A'IRING. n. f. [from air.] A short journey or ramble to enjoy the free air.

This little fleet serves only to fetch them wine and corn, and to give their ladies an airing in the summer-season. Add. on It.

A'IRLESS. adj. [from air.] Without communication with the the free air.

Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brags,

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,

Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakesp. J. Cæsar.

A'IRLING. n. f. [from air, for gayety.] A young, light, thoughtless, gay person.

Some more there be, slight airlings, will be won

With dogs, and horses, and perhaps a whore. B. John. Catil.

A'IRPUMP. n. f. [from air and pump.]

A machine by whose means the air is exhausted out of proper vessels. The principle on which it is built, is the elasticity of the air; as that on which the waterpump is founded, is on the gravity of the air. The invention of this curious instrument is ascribed to Otto de Guerick, consul of Magdebourg, who exhibited his first publick experiments before the emperour and the states of Germany, in 1654. But his machine laboured under several defects, in the force necessary to work it, which was very great, and the progress very slow; besides, it was to be kept under water, and allowed of no change of subjects for experiments. However, Mr. Boyle, with the assistance of Dr. Hooke, removed several of these inconveniencies; though, still, the working of this pump was laborious, by reason of the pressure of the atmosphere at every exsuction, after a vacuum was nearly obtained. This labour has been since removed by Mr. Hawksbee; who, by adding a second barrel and piston, to rise as the other fell, and fall as it rose, made the pressure of the atmosphere on the descending one, of as much service as it was of disservice in the ascending one. Vream made a further improvement in Hawksbee's air-pump, by reducing the alternate motion of the hand and winch to a circular one. Chambers.

For the air that, in exhausted receivers of airpumps, is exhaled from minerals, and flesh, and fruits, and liquours, is as true and genuine as to elasticity and density, or rarefaction, as that we respire in; and yet this factitious air is so far from being fit to be breathed in, that it kills animals in a moment, even sooner than the very absence of all air, or a vacuum itself.

Bentley's Sermons.

A'IRSHAFT. n. f. [from air and shaft.] A passage for the air into mines and subterraneous places.

By the sinking of an airshaft, the air hath liberty to circulate, and carry out the steams both of the miners breath and the damps, which would otherwise stagnate there. Ray.

A'IRY. adj. [from air; aëreus, Lat.]

1. Composed of air.

The first is the transmission, or emission, of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies; as, in odours and infections: and this is, of all the rest, the most corporeal. Bacon.

2. Relating to the air; belonging to the air.

There are fishes that have wings, that are no strangers to the airy region. Boyle.

3. High in air.

Whole rivers here forsake the fields below,
And, wond'ring at their height, through airy channels flow. Addison.

4. Light as air; thin; unsubstantial; without solidity.

I hold ambition of so airy and light a quality, that it is but a shadow's shadow. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Still may the dog the wand'ring troops constrain

Of airy ghosts, and vex the guilty train;

And, with her grisly lord, his lovely queen remain. Dr. Æn.

5. Without reality; without any steady foundation in truth or nature; vain; trifling.

Nor think with wind

Of airy threats to awe whom yet with deeds

Thou can'st not. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Nor (to avoid such meanness) soaring high,

With empty sound, and airy notions, fly. Roscommon.

I have found a complaint concerning the scarcity of money, which occasioned many airy propositions for the remedy of it.

Temple's Miscellanies.

6. Fluttering; loose; as if to catch the air; full of levity.

But the epick poem is too stately to receive those little ornaments. The painters draw their nymphs in thin and airy habits; but the weight of gold and of embroideries is reserved for queens and goddesses. Dryd. Æneid, Dedicat.

By this name of ladies, he means all young persons, slender, finely shaped, airy, and delicate: such as are nymphs and Naiads. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

7. Gay; sprightly; full of mirth; vivacious; lively; spirited; light of heart.

He that is merry and airy at shore, when he sees a sad and a loud tempest on the sea, or dances briskly when God thunders from heaven, regards not when God speaks to all the world.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

AISLE. n. f. [Thus the word is written by Addison, but perhaps improperly; since it seems deducible only from either aile, a wing, or allée, a path; and is therefore to be written aile.]

The walks in a church, or wings of a quire.

The abbey is by no means so magnificent as one would expect from its endowments. The church is one huge nef, with a double aisle to it; and, at each end, is a large quire. Addison.

AIT, or EYGH. n. f. [supposed, by Skinner, to be corrupted from islet.] A small island in a river.

A'JUTAGE. n. f. [ajutage, Fr.] An additional pipe to water-works. Dict.

To AKE. v. n. [from αἶμα, Gr. and therefore more grammatically written ache. See ACHE.]

1. To feel a lasting pain, generally of the internal pains; distinguished from smart, which is commonly used of uneasiness in the external parts; but this is no accurate account.

To sue, and be deny'd, such common grace,

My wounds ake at you!

Shakesp. Timon.

Let our finger ake, and it endues

Our other healthful members with a sense

Of pain.

Shakesp. Othello.

Were the pleasure of drinking accompanied, the very moment, with that sick stomach and aking head, which, in some men, are sure to follow, I think, no body would ever let wine touch his lips.

Locke.

His limbs must ake, with daily toils oppress,

Ere long-wish'd night brings necessary rest.

Prior.

2. It is frequently applied, in an improper sense, to the heart; as, the heart akes; to imply grief or fear. Shakespeare has used it, still more licentiously, of the soul.

Here shame dissuades him, there his fear prevails,

And each, by turns, his aking heart affails. Addis. Ov. Met.

My soul akes

To know when two authorities are up,

Neither supreme, how soon confusion

May enter.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

AKIN. adj. [from a and kin.]

1. Related to; allied to by blood; used of persons.

I do not envy thee, dear Pamela; only I could wish, that, being thy sister in nature, I were not so far off akin in fortune.

Sidney, b. ii.

2. Allied to by nature; partaking of the same properties; used of things.

The cankered passion of envy is nothing akin to the silly envy of the ass. L'Estrange, Fab. xxxviii.

Some limbs again in bulk or stature

Unlike, and not akin by nature,

In concert act, like modern friends,

Because one serves the other's ends.

Prior.

He separates it from questions with which it may have been complicated, and distinguishes it from questions which may be akin to it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind, p. i. c. 13.

AL, ATTLE, ADLE, do all seem to be corruptions of the Saxon Æpel, noble, famous; as also, Alling and Adling, are corruptions of Æpelung, noble, splendid, famous. Gibson's Camden.

Al, Ald, being initials, are derived from the Saxon Ealb, ancient; and so, oftentimes, the initial all, being melted by the Normans, from the Saxon ealb. Idem, ibid.

A'LABASTER. n. f. [αλάβαστρον.]

A kind of soft marble, easier to cut, and less durable, than the other kinds; some is white, which is most common; some of the colour of horn, and transparent; some yellow, like honey, marked with veins. The ancients used it to make boxes for perfumes. Savary.

Yet I'll not shed her blood,

Nor scar that whiter skin of hers than snow,

And smooth as monumental alabaster.

Shakesp. Othello.

A'LABASTER. adj. Made of alabaster.

I cannot forbear reckoning part of an alabaster column, found in the ruins of Livia's portico. It is of the colour of fire, and may be seen over the high altar of St. Maria in Campitello; for they have cut it into two pieces, and fixed it, in the shape of a cross, in a hole of the wall; so that the light passing through it, makes it look to those in the church, like a huge transparent cross of amber. Addison on Italy.

ALA'CK. interject. [This word seems only the corruption of alas.] Alas; an expression of sorrow.

Alack! when once our grace we have forgot,
Nothing goes right; we would, and we would not.
Shakefp. Measure for Measure.

At thunder now no more I start,
Than at the rumbling of a cart:
Nay, what's incredible, alack!
I hardly hear a woman's clack. Swift.
ALA'CKADAY. interjection. [This, like the former, is for alas the day.] A word noting sorrow and melancholy.
ALA'CRIOUSLY. adv. [from alacrius, supposed to be formed from alacris; but of alacrius I have found no example.]
Cheerfully; without dejection.

Epaminondas alacriously expired, in confidence that he left behind him a perpetual memory of the victories he had achieved for his country. Government of the Tongue, § 4.
ALA'CRITY. n. f. [alacritas, Lat.] Cheerfulness, expressed by some outward token; sprightliness; gayety; liveliness; cheerful willingness.

Wherefore, in the end, these orders were, on all sides, assented unto with no less alacrity of mind, than cities, unable to hold out any longer, are wont to shew when they take conditions, such as it liketh him to offer them, which hath them in the narrow straits of advantage. Hooker's Preface.

Give me a bowl of wine;
I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have. Sh. Rich. III.
But glad, that now his sea should find a shore,
With fresh alacrity, and force renew'd,
Springs upward. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 1011.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to fly:
With such alacrity they bore away,
As if, to praise them all, the states stood by. Dryd. Ann. Mir.
ALAM'IRE. n. f. The lowest note but one in Guido Aretine's scale of musick.

ALAMO'DE. adv. [à la mode, Fr.] According to the fashion: a low word. It is used likewise by shopkeepers for a kind of thin silken manufacture.

ALA'ND. adv. [from a for at, and land.] At land; landed; on the dry ground.

He only, with the prince his cousin, were cast aland, far off from the place whither their desires would have guided them. Sidney, b. ii.

Three more, fierce Eurus, in his angry mood,
Dash'd on the shallows of the moving sand,
And, in mid ocean, left them moor'd aland. Dryd. Virg. Æn.
ALARM. n. f. [from the French, à l'arme, to arms; as, crier à l'arme, to call to arms.]

1. A cry by which men are summoned to their arms; as, at the approach of an enemy.

When the congregation is to be gathered together, you shall blow, but you shall not sound an alarm. Numbers, x. 7.

Behold, God himself is with us for our captain, and his priests with sounding trumpets, to cry alarms against you. 2 Chron. xiii. 12.

The trumpets loud clangour
Excites us to arms,
With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms. Dryden's Cæcilia.

Taught by this stroke, renounce the wars alarms,
And learn to tremble at the name of arms. Pope's Iliad.

2. A cry, or notice, of any danger approaching; as, an alarm of fire.

3. Any tumult or disturbance.

Is it then true, as distant rumours run,
That crowds of rivals, for thy mothers charms,
Thy palace fill with insults and alarms. Pope's Odyss. b. iii.

To ALA'RM. v. a. [from alarm, the noun.]

1. To call to arms; to disturb; as, with the approach of an enemy.

The wasp the hive alarms
With louder hums, and with unequal arms. Addison.

2. To surprise with the apprehension of any danger.

When rage misguides me, or when fear alarms,
When pain distresses, or when pleasure charms. Tickell on Add.

3. To disturb in general.

His son, Cupavo, brush'd the briny flood;
Upon his stern a brawny Centaur stood,
Who heav'd a rock, and threat'ning still to throw,
With lifted hands alarm'd the seas below. Dryd. Æneid

ALARMBELL. n. f. [from alarm and bell.] The bell that is rung at the approach of an enemy.

The alarmbell rings from our Alhambra walls,
And, from the streets, sound drums and ataballes.

Dryden's Conquest of Granada.

ALA'RMING. particip. adj. [from alarm.] Terrifying; awakening; surprising; as, an alarming message; an alarming pain.

ALARMPOST. n. f. [from alarm and post.] The post or place appointed to each body of men, to appear at, when an alarm shall happen.

ALA'RUM. n. f. [corrupted, as it seems, from alarm. See ALARM.]

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments,
Our stern alarums chang'd to merry meetings. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Hence too, that she might better hear,
She sets a drum at either ear;
And loud or gentle, harsh or sweet,
Are but th' alarums which they beat. Prior.

To ALA'RUM. v. a. [corrupted from To alarm. See ALARM.]

Withered murder
(Alarum'd by his sentinel the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch) thus with his stealthy pace,
With Tarquin's ravishing strides, tow'rs his design Moves like a ghost. Shakefp. Macbeth.

ALA's. interject. [belas, Fr. eylaes, Dutch.]

1. A word expressing lamentation, when we use it of ourselves.

But yet, alas! O but yet alas! our haps be but hard haps. Sidney, b. i.

Alas! how little from the grave we claim?
Thou but preserv'st a form, and I a name. Pope's Epist.

2. A word of pity, when used of other persons.

Alas! poor Protheus, thou hast entertain'd
A fox to be the shepherd of thy lambs.

Shakefp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

3. A word of sorrow and concern, when used of things.

Thus saith the Lord God, Smite with thine hand, and stamp with thy foot, and say, Alas! for all the evil abominations of the house of Israel. Ezekiel, vi. 11.

Alas! both for the deed, and for the cause!
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 461.

Alas! for pity of this bloody field;
Piteous indeed must be, when I, a spirit,
Can have so soft a sense of human woes. Dryd. K. Arthur.

ALAS THE DAY. interject. Ah, unhappy day!

Alas the day! I never gave him cause. Shakefp. Othello.

Alas a day! you have ruined my poor mistress: you have made a gap in her reputation; and can you blame her, if she make it up with her husband? Congreve's Old Bachelor.

ALAS THE WHILE. interject. Ah, unhappy time!

All as the sheep, such was the shepherd's look;
For pale and wan he was, (alas the while!)
May seem he loved, or else some care he took. Spens. Pastor.

ALA'TE. adv. [from a and late.] Lately; no long time ago.

ALB. n. f. [album, Lat.] A surplice; a white linen vestment worn by priests.

ALBE'IT. adv. [a coalition of the words all be it so. Skinner.]

Although; notwithstanding; though it should be.

This very thing is cause sufficient, why duties belonging to each kind of virtue, albeit the law of reason teach them, should, notwithstanding, be prescribed even by human law. Hooker.

Of one, whose eyes,
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears, as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakefp. Othello.

He, who has a probable belief, that he shall meet with thieves in such a road, thinks himself to have reason enough to decline it, albeit he is sure to sustain some loss, though yet considerable, inconvenience by his so doing. South's Sermons.

ALBUGINEOUS. adj. [albugo, Lat. the white of an egg.]

Eggs, I observe, will freeze in the albugineous part thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

I opened it by incision, giving vent first to an albugineous, then to white concocted matter: upon which the tumour sunk. Wise's Surgery.

ALBUGO. n. f. [Lat.] A disease in the eye, by which the cornea contracts a whiteness. The same with leucoma.

ALBURN COLOUR. n. f. See AUBURN.

ALCAHEST. n. f. An Arabick word, to express an universal dissolvent, which was pretended to by Paracelsus and Helmont. Quincy.

ALCA'ID. n. f. [from al, Arab. and كركر, the head.]

1. In Barbary, the governor of a castle.

Th' alcid
Shuns me, and, with a grim civility,
Bows, and declines my walks. Dryd. Don Sebastian.

2. In Spain, the judge of a city, first instituted by the Saracens.

Du Cange.

ALC'ANNA. n. f. An Egyptian plant used in dying; the leaves making a yellow, infused in water, and a red in acid liquours.

The root of alcanna, though green, will give a red stain. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ALCHY'MICAL. adj. [from alchemy.] Relating to alchemy; produced by alchemy.

The rose noble, then current for six shillings and eight pence, the alchemists do affirm as an unwritten verity, was made by projection or multiplication alchymical of Raymond Lully in the tower of London. Camden's Remains.

ALCHY'MICALLY. adv. [from alchymical.] In the manner of an alchemist; by means of alchemy.

Raymond Lully would prove it alchymically. Camden.

AL'CHYMIST. n. f. [from alchemy.] One who pursues or professes the science of alchemy.

A L D

To solemnize this day, the glorious sun
Stays in his course, and plays the alchymist,
Turning, with splendour of his precious eye,
The meagre cloddy earth to glitt'ring gold. Shak. K. John.
Every alchymist knows, that gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time, without any change; and that after it has been divided by corrosive liquours, into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear in its own form. Grew.

ALCHYMY. n. f. [of al, Arab. and χημια.]

1. The more sublime and occult part of chymistry, which proposes, for its object, the transmutation of metals, and other important operations.

There is nothing more dangerous than this licentious and deluding art, which changeth the meaning of words, as alchymy doth, or would do, the substance of metals, maketh of any thing what it listeth, and bringeth, in the end, all truth to nothing.

Hooker, b. v. § 58.

O he fits high in all the people's hearts;
And that which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richest alchymy,
Will change to virtue, and to worthiness. Shakeſp. J. Caesar,
Princes do but play us; compared to this,
All honours mimic, all wealth alchymy. Donne.

2. A kind of mixed metal used for spoons, and kitchen utensils.
The golden colour may be some mixture of orpiment, such as they use to brass in the yellow alchymy. Bacon.

White alchymy is made of pan-brass one pound, and arsenicum three ounces; or alchymy is made of copper and auripigmentum. Bacon's Physical Remains.

They bid cry,

With trumpets regal sound, the great result:

Tow'rd the four winds, four speedy cherubim

Put to their mouths the sounding alchymy,

By herald's voice explain'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

ALCOHOL. n. f. An Arabick term used by chymists for a high rectified dephlegmated spirit of wine, or for any thing reduced into an impalpable powder. Quincy.

If the same salt shall be reduced into alcohol, as the chymists speak, or an impalpable powder, the particles and intercepted spaces will be extremely lessened. Boyle.

Sal volatile oleosum will coagulate the serum on account of the alcohol, or rectified spirit which it contains. Arbuthnot.

ALCOHOLIZATION. n. f. [from alcoholize.] The act of alcoholizing or rectifying spirits; or of reducing bodies to an impalpable powder.

TO ALCOHOLIZE. v. a. [from alcohol.]

1. To make an alcohol; that is, to rectify spirits till they are wholly dephlegmated.

2. To comminute powder till it is wholly without roughness.

ALCORAN. n. f. [al and koran, Arab.] The book of the Mahometan precepts, and credenda.

If this would satisfy the conscience, we might not only take the present covenant, but subscribe to the council of Trent; yea, and to the Turkish alcoran; and swear to maintain and defend either of them. Sanderſon against the Covenant.

ALCOVE. n. f. [alcoba, Span.]

A recess, or part of a chamber, separated by an estrade, or partition of a column, and other correspondent ornaments; in which is placed a bed of state, and sometimes seats to entertain company. Trevoux.

The weary'd champion lulls in soft alcoves,

The noblest boast of thy romantick groves.

Oft, if the muse presage, shall he be seen

By Rosamonda fleeting o'er the green,

In dreams be hail'd by heroes' mighty shades,

And hear old Chaucer warble through the glades. Tickell.

Deep in a rich alcove the prince was laid,

And slept beneath the pompous colonnade. Pope's Odyssey.

ALDER. n. f. [alnus, Lat.] A tree having leaves resembling those of the hazel; the male flowers, or katkins, are produced at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree; the fruit is squamose, and of a conical figure.

The species are; 1. The common or round-leaved alder.

2. The long-leaved alder. 3. The scarlet alder.

These trees delight in a very moist soil, where few others will thrive, and are a great improvement to such lands. They may be also planted on the sides of brooks, and cut for poles every third or fourth year. The wood is used by turners, and will endure long under ground, or in water. These trees are propagated either by planting layers, or truncheons, about three feet in length, in February or March. Millar.

Without the grot, a various silver scene

Appear'd around, and groves of living green;

Poplars and alders ever quivering play'd,

And nodding cypress form'd a fragrant shade. Pope's Odyſſ.

ALDERLIEVE. adj. superl. [from ald, alder, old, elder, and lieve, dear, beloved.] Most beloved; which has held the longest possession of the heart.

The mutual conference that my mind hath had,

By day, by night, waking, and in my dreams,

In courtly company, or at my beads,

With you, mine alderlieveſt sovereign;

A L E

Makes me the bolder to salute my king

With ruder terms.

Shakeſp. Henry VI. p. ii.

A'LDERMAN. n. f. [from ald, old, and man.]

1. The same as senator. Cowell. A governour or magistrate, originally, as the name imports, chosen on account of the experience which his age had given him.

Tell him, myself, the mayor, and aldermen,

Are come to have some conference with his grace. Sh. R. III.

Though my own aldermen conferr'd my bays,

To me committing their eternal praise;

Their full-fed heroes, their pacifick may'rs,

Their annual trophies, and their monthly wars. Pope's Dun.

2. In the following passage it is, I think, improperly used.

But if the trumpeter's clangour you abhor,

And dare not be an alderman of war,

Take to a shop, behind a counter lie.

Dryd. Juv. Sat.

A'LDERMANLY. adv. [from alderman.] Like an alderman; belonging to an alderman.

These, and many more, suffered death, in envy to their virtues and superiour genius, which emboldened them, in exigencies (wanting an aldermanly discretion) to attempt service out of the common forms. Swift's Miscellanies.

A'LDERN. adj. [from alder.] Made of alder.

Then aldern boats first plow'd the ocean;

The sailors number'd then, and nam'd each star. May's Virg.

ALE. n. f. [eale, Sax.]

1. A liquor made by infusing malt [See MALT.] in hot water, and then fermenting the liquor.

I'll scratch your heads; you must be seeing christenings.

Do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals?

Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

The fertility of the soil in grain, and its being not proper for vines, put the Egyptians upon drinking ale, of which they were the inventors. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. A merry meeting used in country places.

And all the neighbourhood, from old records

Of antick proverbs drawn from Whitſon lords,

And their authorities at wakes and ales,

With country precedents, and old wives tales,

We bring you now.

Ben. Johnson.

A'LEBERRY. n. f. [from ale and berry.] A beverage made by boiling ale with spice and sugar, and sops of bread: a word only used in conversation.

ALE BREWER. n. f. [from ale and brewer.] One that professes to brew ale.

The summer-made malt brews ill, and is disliked by most of our ale brewers. Mortimer's Husbandry.

A'LECONNER. n. f. [from ale and con.] An officer in the city of London, whose business is to inspect the measures of publick houses. Four of them are chosen or rechosen annually by the common-hall of the city; and whatever might be their use formerly, their places are now regarded only as sine-cures for decayed citizens.

A'LECOST. n. f. [perhaps from ale, and costus, Lat.] The name of an herb. Diſc.

ALE'CTRYOMANCY, or ALE'CTOROMANCY. n. f. [ἀλεκτρυον and μαντис.] Divination by a cock. Diſc.

A'LEGAR. n. f. [from ale and eager, four.] Sour ale; a kind of acid made by ale, as vinegar by wine, which has lost its spirit.

A'LEGER. adj. [allegre, Fr. alacris, Lat.] Gay; chearful; sprightly: a word not now used.

Certainly, this berrycoffee, the root and leaf betle, and leaf tobacco, of which the Turks are great takers, do all condense the spirits, and make them strong and aleger. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

A'LEHOOF. n. f. [from ale and hoof, head.] Groundivy, so called by our Saxon ancestors, as being their chief ingredient in ale. See GROUNDIVY.

Alehoof, or groundivy, is, in my opinion, of the most excellent and most general use and virtue, of any plants we have among us. Temple.

A'LEHOUSE. n. f. [from ale and house.] A house where ale is publickly sold; a tipling-house. It is distinguished from a tavern, where they sell wine.

Thou most beauteous inn,

Why should hard-favour'd grief be lodg'd in thee,

When triumph is become an alehouse guest? Sh. Rich. II.

One would think it should be no easy matter to bring any man of sense in love with an alehouse; indeed of so much sense, as seeing and smelling amounts to; there being such strong encounters of both, as would quickly send him packing, did not the love of good fellowship reconcile to these nuisances. South.

Thee shall each alehouse, thee each gilhouse mourn,

And answer'ing ginshops sower sighs return. Pope's Dun.

A'LEHOUSE KEEPER. n. f. [from alehouse and keeper.] He that keeps ale publickly to sell.

You resemble perfectly the two alehouse keepers in Holland, who were at the same time burgomasters of the town, and taxed one another's bills alternately. Bolingbroke to Swift.

A'LEKNIGHT. n. f. [from ale and knight.] A pot-companion;
a tippler: a word now out of use.

The old aleknights of England were well depainted out of him, in the ale-house colours of that time, in this manner. Camden.

ALEMBICK.

ALEMBICK. n. f. A vessel used in distilling, consisting of a vessel placed over a fire, in which is contained the substance to be distilled, and a concave closely fitted on, into which the fumes arise by the heat; this cover has a beak or spout, into which the vapours rise, and by which they pass into a serpentine pipe, which is kept cool by making many convolutions in a tub of water; here the vapours are condensed, and what entered the pipe in fumes, comes out in drops.

Though water may be rarefied into invisible vapours, yet it is not changed into air, but only scattered into minute parts; which meeting together in the alembick, or in the receiver, do presently return into such water as they constituted before. Boyle.

ALENGTH. adv. [from a for at, and length.] At full length; along; stretched along the ground.

ALERT. adj. [alerte, Fr. perhaps from alacris, but probably from à l'art, according to art or rule.]

1. In the military sense, on guard; watchful; vigilant; ready at a call.
2. In the common sense, brisk; pert; petulant; smart; implying some degree of censure and contempt.

I saw an alert young fellow, that cocked his hat upon a friend of his, and accosted him after the following manner: Well, Jack, the old prig is dead at last. Addison. Spect. N° 403.

ALERTNESS. n. f. [from alert.] The quality of being alert; sprightliness; pertness.

That alertness and unconcern for matters of common life, which a campaign or two would infallibly have given him.

Addison. Spectator.

ALETASTER. n. f. [from ale and taster.] An officer appointed in every courtleet, and sworn to look to the affize and the goodness of bread and ale, or beer, within the precincts of that lordship. Cowell.

ALEVAT. n. f. [from ale and vat.] The tub in which the ale is fermented.

ALEWASHED. adj. [from ale and wash.] Steeped or soaked in ale.

What a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp, will do among foaming battles and alewashed wits, is wonderful to be thought on. Shakesp. Henry V.

ALEWIFE. n. f. [from ale and wife.] A woman that keeps an alehouse.

Perhaps he will swagger and hector, and threaten to beat and butcher an alewife, or take the goods by force, and throw them the bad halfpence. Swift's Draper's Letters.

ALEXANDERS. n. f. [Smyrnium, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The flowers are produced in umbels, consisting of several leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose; these rest upon the empalement, which afterward becomes an almost globular fruit, composed of two pretty thick seeds, sometimes shaded like a crescent, gibbous, and streaked on one side, and plain on the other.

The species are; 1. Common Alexanders. 2. Foreign Alexanders, with a round leaf, &c.

The first of these sorts, which is that ordered by the college for medicinal use, grows wild in divers parts of England, and may be propagated by sowing their seeds upon an open spot of ground in August. Millar.

ALEXANDER'S FOOT. n. f. The name of an herb.

ALEXANDRINE. n. f. A kind of verse borrowed from the French, first used in a poem called Alexander. They consist, among the French, of twelve and thirteen syllables, in alternate couplets; and, among us, of twelve.

Our numbers should, for the most part, be lyrical. For variety, or rather where the majesty of thought requires it, they may be stretched to the English heroick of five feet, and to the French Alexandrine of six. Dryd.

Then, at the last, an only couplet fraught
With some unmeaning thing they call a thought,
A needless Alexandrine ends the song,
That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along.

Pope's Essay on Criticism.

ALEXIPHARMICK. adj. [from ἀλεξίω and φάρμακον.] That which drives away poison; antidotal; that which opposes infection.

That some antidotal quality it may have, we have no reason to deny; for since elke's hoofs and horns are magnified for epilepsies, since not only the bone in the heart, but the horn of a deer, is alexipharmick. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ALEXITERICAL, or ALEXITERICK. adj. [from ἀλεξίω.] That which drives away poison; that which resists in fevers.

ALGATES. adv. [from all and gate. Skinner. Gate is the same as via; and still used for way in the Scottish dialect.] On any terms; every way: now obsolete.

Nor had the boaster ever risen more,
But that Rinaldo's horse ev'n then down fell,
And with the fall his leg oppress'd so fore,
That, for a space, there must he algates dwell. Fairfax.

ALGEBRA. n. f. [An Arabick word of uncertain etymology; derived, by some, from Geber the philosopher; by some, from gefr, parchment; by others, from algebiſta, a bone-setter; by Ménage, from algiatarat, the restitution of things broken.]

This is a peculiar kind of arithmetick, which takes the quantity fought, whether it be a number or a line, or any other quantity, as if it were granted, and, by means of one or more quantities given, proceeds by consequence, till the quantity at first only supposed to be known, or at least some power thereof, is found to be equal to some quantity or quantities which are known, and consequently itself is known. The origin of this art is very obscure. It was in use, however, among the Arabs, long before it came into this part of the world; and they are supposed to have borrowed it from the Persians, and the Persians from the Indians. The first Greek author of algebra was Diophantus, who, about the year 800, wrote thirteen books. In 1494, Lucas Pacciolus, or Lucas de Burgos, a cordelier, printed a treatise of algebra, in Italian, at Venice. He says, that algebra came originally from the Arabs, and never mentions Diophantus; which makes it probable, that that author was not yet known in Europe; whose method was very different from that of the Arabs, observed by Pacciolus and his first European followers. His algebra goes no farther than simple and quadratick equations; and only some of the others advanced to the solution of culick equations. After several improvements by Vieta, Oughtred, Harriot, Descartes, Sir Isaac Newton brought this art to the height at which it still continues. Trevoux. Chambers.

It would surely require no very profound skill in algebra, to reduce the difference of ninepence in thirty shillings. Swift.

ALGEBRAICK. } adj. [from algebra.]
ALGEBRAICAL. }

1. Relating to algebra; as, an algebraical treatise.
2. Containing operations of algebra; as, an algebraical computation.

ALGEBRAIST. n. f. [from algebra.] A person that understands or practises the science of algebra.

When any dead body is found in England, no algebraist or uncipherer can use more subtle suppositions, to find the demonstration or cipher, than every unconcerned person doth to find the murderers. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

Confining themselves to describe almost nothing else but the synthetick and analytick methods of geometricians and algebraists, they have too much narrowed the rules of method, as though every thing were to be treated in mathematical forms. Watts's Logic.

ALGID. adj. [algidus, Lat.] Cold; chill. Dict.

ALGIDITY, } n. f. [from algid.] Chilness; cold. Dict.
ALGIDNESS. }

ALGIFIC. adj. [from algor, Lat.] That which produces cold. Dict.

ALGOR. n. f. [Lat.] Extreme cold; chilness. Dict.

ALGORISM, } n. f. Arabick words, which are used to imply
ALGORITHM. } the six operations of arithmetick, or the science of numbers. Dict.

ALGOSE. adj. [from algor, Lat.] Extremely cold; chill. Dict.

ALIAS. adv. A Latin word, signifying otherwise; often used in the trials of criminals, whose danger has obliged them to change their names; as, Simpson alias Smith, alias Baker; that is, otherwise Smith, otherwise Baker.

ALIBLE. adj. [alibilis, Lat.] Nutritive; nourishing; that which may be nourished. Dict.

ALIEN. adj. [alienus, Lat.]

1. Foreign, or not of the same family or land.
The mother plant admires the leaves unknown
Of alien trees, and apples not her own. Dryd. Virg. Georg.
But who can tell, what pangs, what sharp remorse,
Torment the Boian prince? from native soil
Exil'd by fate, torn from the tender embrace
Of weeping comfort, and depriv'd the sight
Of his young guiltless progeny, he seeks Inglorious shelter in an alien land. Philips.

2. Estranged from; not allied to; adverse to; with the particle from, and sometimes to, but improperly.

To declare my mind to the disciples of the fire, by a similitude not alien from their profession. Boyle.

The sentiment that arises, is a conviction of the deplorable state of nature, to which sin reduced us; a weak, ignorant creature, alien from God and goodness, and a prey to the great destroyer. Rogers's Sermons.

They encouraged persons and principles, alien from our religion and government, in order to strengthen their faction. Swift's Miscellanies.

A'LIEN. n. f. [alienus, Lat.]

1. A foreigner; not a denison; a man of another country or family; not allied; a stranger.

In whomsoever these things are, the church doth acknowledge them for her children; them only she holdeth for aliens and strangers, in whom these things are not found. Hooker.

If it be prov'd against an alien,
He seeks the life of any citizen,
The party, 'gainst the which he doth contrive,
Shall seize on half his goods. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

The mere Irish were not only accounted aliens, but enemies, and altogether out of the protection of the law; so as it was no capital offence to kill them. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

Thy place in council thou hast rudely lost,
Which by thy younger brother is supply'd,
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood. Shak. Henry IV.

Their

Their famous lawgiver condemned the persons, who sat idle in divisions dangerous to the government, as aliens to the community, and therefore to be cut off from it. Addison. Freeholder.

2. In law.

An alien is one born in a strange country, and never enfranchised. A man born out of the land, so it be within the limits beyond the seas, or of English parents out of the king's obedience, so the parents, at the time of the birth, be of the king's obedience, is not alien. If one born out of the king's allegiance, come and dwell in England, his children (if he beget any here) are not aliens, but denizens. Cowell.

To A'LIEN. v. a. [aliener, Fr. alieno, Lat.]

1. To make any thing the property of another.

If the son alien those lands, and then repurchase them again in fee, now the rules of descents are to be observed, as if he were the original purchaser. Hale's History of Common Law.

2. To estrange; to turn the mind or affection; to make averse to; with from.

The king was wonderfully disquieted, when he found, that the prince was totally aliened from all thoughts of, or inclination to, the marriage. Clarendon.

A'LIENABLE. adj. [from To alienate.] That of which the property may be transferred.

Land is alienable, and treasure is transitory, and both must, at one time or other, pass from him, either by his own voluntary act, or by the violence and injustice of others, or at least by fate. Dennis's Letters.

To A'LIENATE. v. a. [aliener, Fr. alieno, Lat.]

1. To transfer the property of any thing to another.

The countries were once christian, and members of the church, and where the golden candlesticks did stand, though now they be utterly alienated, and no christians left. Bacon.

2. To withdraw the heart or affections; with the particle from, where the first possessor is mentioned.

The manner of mens writing must not alienate our hearts from the truth. Hooker's Preface.

Be it never so true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a small thing persuadeth them to change their opinions. Hooker, Dedication.

His eyes survey'd the dark idolatries

Of alienated Judah. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 457.

Any thing that is apt to disturb the world, and to alienate the affections of men from one another, such as cross and distasteful humours, is, either expressly, or by clear consequence and deduction, forbidden in the New Testament. Tillotson.

Her mind was quite alienated from the honest Castilian, whom she was taught to look upon as a formal old fellow. Add. Spectator.

A'LIENATE. adj. [alienatus, Lat.] Withdrawn from; stranger to; with the particle from.

They are most damnably wicked; impatient for the death of the queen; ready to gratify their ambition and revenge, by all desperate methods; wholly alienate from truth, law, religion, mercy, conscience, or honour. Swift's Miscellanies.

ALIENATION. n. f. [alienatio, Lat.]

1. The act of transferring property.

The beginning of this ordinance was for the maintenance of their lands in their posterity, and for excluding all innovation or alienation thereof unto strangers. Spenser's State of Ireland.

God put it into the heart of one of our princes, towards the close of her reign, to give a check to that sacrilege. Her successor passed a law, which prevented absolutely all future alienations of the church revenues. Atterbury.

Great changes and alienations of property, have created new and great dependencies. Swift on Athens and Rome.

2. The state of being alienated; as, the estate was wasted during its alienation.

3. Change of affection.

It is left but in dark memory, what the case of this person was, and what was the ground of his defection, and the alienation of his heart from the king. Bacon's Henry VII.

4. Applied to the mind, it means disorder of the faculties.

Some things are done by man, though not through outward force and impulsion, though not against, yet without their wills; as in alienation of mind, or any like inevitable utter absence of wit and judgment. Hooker, b. i. p. 23.

ALI'FEROUS. adj. [from ala and fero, Lat.] Having wings. D.

ALI'GEROUS. adj. [aliger, Lat.] Having wings; winged. Dict.

To ALI'GGE. v. a. [from a, and lig, to lye down.] To lay; to allay; to throw down; to subdue: an old word even in the time of Spenser, now wholly forgotten.

Thomalin, why fitten we so,

As weren overwent with woe:

Upon so fair a morrow,

The joyous time now nigheth fast,

That shall aligge this bitter blast,

And flake the winter sorrow. Spenser's Pastorals.

To ALI'GHT. v. n. [alighen, Sax. af-lichten, Dutch.]

1. To come down, and stop. The word implies the idea of descending; as, of a bird from the wing; a traveller from his horse or carriage, and generally of resting or stopping.

There ancient night arriving, did alight

From her high weary waine. Fairy Queen, b. i. c. v.

There is alighted at your gate

A young Venetian. Shakef. Merchant of Venice.

Slackness breeds worms; but the sure traveller,

Though he alights sometimes, still goeth on. Herbert.

When marching with his foot he walks till night;

When with his horse he never will alight. Denham.

When Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore,

His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore;

The first that fail'd in air, 'tis sung by Fame,

To the Cumean coast at length he came,

And here alighting built this costly frame. Dryden's Æneid.

When he was admonished by his subject to descend, he came down gently and circling in the air, and singing to the ground. Like a lark, melodious in her mounting, and continuing her song till she alights; still preparing for a higher flight at her next fall. Dryden.

When finish'd was the fight,

The victors from their lusty steeds alight;

Like them dismounted all the warlike train. Dryd. Fables.

Should a spirit of superiour rank, a stranger to human nature, alight upon the earth, what would his notions of us be?

Addison. Spectator.

2. It is used also of any thing thrown or falling; to fall upon.

But storms of stones from the proud temple's height,

Pour down, and on our batter'd helms alight. Dryd. Æneid.

ALI'KE. adv. [from a and like.] With resemblance; without difference; in the same manner; in the same form.

The darkness hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike to thee.

Psalms cxxxix. 12.

With thee conversing, I forget all time;

All seasons, and their change, all please alike. Parad. Lost.

Riches cannot rescue from the grave,

Which claims alike the monarch and the slave. Dryd. Juv.

Let us unite at least in an equal zeal for those capital doctrines, which we all equally embrace, and are alike concerned to maintain. Atterbury's Preface to his Sermons.

Two handmaids wait the throne: alike in place,

But differing far in figure and in face. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

ALIMENT. n. f. [alimentum, Lat.] Nourishment; that which nourishes; nutriment; food.

New parts are added to our substance; and as we die, we are born daily; nor can we give an account, how the aliment is so prepared for nutrition, or by what mechanism it is distributed. Glanville's Scepis Scientifica, Pref.

All bodies which, by the animal faculties, can be changed into the fluids and solids of our bodies, are called aliments. But, to take it in the largest sense, by aliment, I understand every thing which a human creature takes in common diet; as, meat, drink; and seasoning, as, salt, spice, vinegar, &c. Arbuthnot.

ALIMENTAL. adj. [from aliment.] That which has the quality of aliment; that which nourishes; that which feeds.

The sun, that light imparts to all, receives

From all his alimental recompense,

In humid exhalations. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Except they be watered from higher regions, these weeds must lose their alimental sap, and wither themselves. Brown's Preface to Vulgar Errors.

Th' industrious, when the sun in Leo rides,

And darts his sultriest beams, portending drought,

Forget not, at the foot of ev'ry plant,

To sink a circling trench, and daily pour

A just supply of alimental streams,

Exhausted sap recruiting. Philips.

ALIMENTARINESS. n. f. [from alimentary.] The quality of being alimentary, or of affording nourishment. Dict.

ALIMENTARY. adj. [from aliment.]

1. That which belongs or relates to aliment.

The solution of the aliment by mastication is necessary; without it, the aliment could not be disposed for the changes, which it receives as it passeth through the alimentary duct. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. That which has the quality of aliment, or the power of nourishing.

I do not think that water supplies animals, or even plants, with nourishment, but serves for a vehicle to the alimentary particles, to convey and distribute them to the several parts of the body. Ray on the Creation.

Of alimentary roots, some are pulpy and very nutritious; as, turneps and carrots. These have a fattening quality, which they manifest in feeding of cattle. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ALIMENTATION. n. f. [from aliment.] The power of affording aliment; the quality of nourishing.

Plants do nourish; inanimate bodies do not: they have an accretion, but no alimentation. Bacon's Natural History, N° 54.

ALIMO'NIOUS. adj. [from alimony.] That which nourishes: a word very little in use.

The plethora renders us lean, by suppressing our spirits, whereby they are incapacitated of digesting the alimonious humours into flesh. Harvey on Consumptions.

A'LIMONY. n. f. [alimonia, Lat.]

Alimony signifies that legal proportion of the husband's estate, which, by the sentence of the ecclesiastical court, is allowed to

ALK

the wife for her maintenance, upon the account of any separation from him, provided it be not caused by her elopement or adultery. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Before they settled hands and hearts,

Till alimony or death them parts. Hudibras, p. iii. c. iii.

A'LIQUANT. adj. [aliquantus, Lat.] Parts of a number, which, however repeated, will never make up the number exactly; as, 3 is an aliquant of 10, thrice 3 being 9, four times 3 making 12.

A'LIQUOT. adj. [aliquot, Lat.] Aliquot parts of any number or quantity, such as will exactly measure it without any remainder: as, 3 is an aliquot part of 12, because, being taken four times, it will just measure it.

A'LISH. adj. [from ale.] Resembling ale; having qualities of ale: They let it stand five days before they put it into the cask, stirring it and beating down the yeast into it; this gives it the sweet alish taste. Mortimer's Husbandry.

A'LITURE. n. f. [alitura, Lat.] Nourishment. Dict.

ALI'VE. adj. [from a and live.]

1. In the state of life; not dead.

Nor well alive, nor wholly dead they were,
But some faint signs of feeble life appear. Dryd. Fables.

Not youthful kings in battle seiz'd alive,
Not scornful virgins who their charms survive. Pope.

2. In a figurative sense, unextinguished; undestroyed; active; in full force.

Those good and learned men had reason to wish, that their proceedings might be favoured, and the good affection of such as inclined toward them, kept alive. Hooker, b. v.

3. Cheerful; sprightly; full of alacrity.

She was not so much alive the whole day, if she slept more than six hours. Clarissa.

4. In a popular sense, it is used only to add an emphasis, like the French du monde; as, the best man alive; that is, the best, with an emphasis.

And to those brethren said, rise, rise by-live,
And unto battle do yourselves address;
For yonder comes the proudest knight alive,
Prince Arthur, flower of grace and nobles. Fairy Queen.
The earl of Northumberland, who was the proudest man alive, could not look upon the destruction of monarchy with any pleasure. Clarendon, b. viii.

John was quick and understood his business very well; but no man alive was more careless in looking into his accounts.

Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

ALKAHEST. n. f. A word used first by Paracelsus, and adopted by his followers, to signify an universal dissolvent, or liquor, which has the power of resolving all things into their first principles.

ALKALE'SCENT. adj. [from alkali.] That which has a tendency to the properties of an alkali.

All animal diet is alkalescent or anti-acid. Arbuthnot on Alim.

A'L KALI. n. f. [The word alkali comes from an herb, called by the Egyptians kali; by us glasswort.] This herb they burnt to ashes, boiled them in water, and, after having evaporated the water, there remained at the bottom a white salt; this they called sal kali, or alkali. It is corrosive, producing putrefaction in animal substances, to which it is applied. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Any substance, which, when mingled with acid, produces effervescence and fermentation. See ALKALIZATE.

A'L KALINE. adj. [from alkali.] That which has the qualities of alkali.

Any watery liquor will keep an animal from starving very long, by diluting the fluids, and consequently keeping them from this alkaline state, which is confirmed by experience; for people have lived twenty-four days upon nothing but water. Arbuthnot upon Aliments.

TO ALKA'LIZATE. v. a. [from alkali.] To make bodies alkaline, by changing their nature, or by mixing alkalies with them.

ALKA'LIZATE. adj. [from alkali.] That which has the qualities of alkali; that which is impregnated with alkali.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that, which it discovers, being dissolved in hot water, is different, being of kin to that of other alkalizable salts. Boyle.

The colour of violets seems to be of that order, because their syrup, by acid liquours, turns red, and, by urinous and alkalizable, turns green. Newton's Opticks.

ALKALIZA'TION. n. f. [from alkali.] The act of alkalizing, or impregnating bodies with alkali.

A' LKANET. n. f. [Anchusa, Lat.] The name of a plant. This plant is a species of bugloss, with a red root, brought from the southern parts of France, and used in medicine. It will grow in almost any soil, and must be sown in March. Mil.

A' LKEKE'NGI. n. f. A medicinal fruit or berry, produced by a plant of the same denomination; popularly also called winter-cherry; of considerable use as an astringent, dissolvent, and diuretick. The plant bears a near resemblance to Solanum, or Nightshade; whence it is frequently called in Latin by that name, with the addition or epithet of vesicarium. Chambers.

ALKE'RMES. n. f. In medicine, a term borrowed from the

ALL

Arabs, denoting a celebrated remedy, of the form and consistence of a confection; whereof the kermes berries are the basis. The other ingredients are pippin-cyder, rose-water, sugar, ambergrease, musk, cinnamon, aloes-wood, pearls, and leaf-gold; but the sweets are usually omitted. The confectio alkermes is chiefly made at Montpellier, which supplies most part of Europe therewith. The grain, which gives it the denomination, is nowhere found so plentifully as there. Chambers.

ALL. adv. [See ALL, adj.]

1. Quite; completely.

How is my love all ready forth to come. Spenser's Epithal.

Know, Rome, that all alone Marcus did fight

Within Corioli gates. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

And swore so loud,

That, all amaz'd, the priest let fall the book. Sh. Tam. Shrew.

They could call a comet a faxed star, which is all one with stella crinita, or cometa. Camden's Remains.

For a large conscience is all one,

And signifies the same with none. Hudibras, p. iii. c. i.

Balm, from a silver box distill'd around,

Shall all bedew the roots, and scent the sacred ground. Dryd.

I do not remember he any where mentions expressly the title of the first-born, but all along keeps himself under the shelter of the indefinite term, heir. Locke.

Justice, indeed, may be furnished out of this element, as far as her sword goes; and courage may be all over a continued blaze, if the artist pleases. Addison. Guardian, N° 103.

If e'er the miser durst his farthings spare,

He thinly spreads them through the publick square,

Where, all beside the rail, rang'd beggars lie,

And from each other catch the doleful cry. Gay's Trivia.

2. Altogether; wholly; without any other consideration.

I am of the temper of most kings, who love to be in debt, are all for present money, no matter how they pay it afterward. Dryd. Fab. Preface.

3. Only; without admission of any thing else.

When I shall wed,

That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry

Half my love with him, half my care and duty.

Sure I shall never marry, like my sister,

To love my father all.

4. Although. This sense is truly Teutonic, but now obsolete:

Do you not think th' accomplishment of it

Sufficient work for one man's simple head,

All were it as the rest but simply writ. Spenser, Son. xxxii.

5. It is sometimes a word of emphasis; nearly the same with just.

A shepherd's swain, say, did thee bring,

All as his straying flock he fed;

And, when his honour hath thee read,

Crave pardon for thy hardy head. Spenser's Pastorals.

ALL. adj. [Æll, Æal, ealle, alle. Sax. oll, Welsh; al, Dutch; alle, Germ. alles, Gr.]

1. The whole number; every one:

Brutus is an honourable man;

So are they all, all honourable men. Shakesp. Jul. Cæsar.

To graze the herb all leaving,

Devour'd each other. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

The great encouragement of all, is the assurance of a future reward. Tillotson, Sermon vi.

2. The whole quantity; every part.

Six days thou shalt labour, and do all thy work. Deut. v. 13.

Political power, I take to be a right of making laws with penalties, and of employing the force of the community in the execution of such laws, and in the defence of the commonwealth; and all this only for the publick good. Lacke.

3. The whole duration of time.

On whose pastures cheerful spring,

All the year doth sit and sing;

And, rejoicing, smiles to see,

Their green backs wear his livery. Crashaw.

4. The whole extent of place.

Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice. Shak. Merch. of Venice.

ALL. n. f.

1. The whole; opposed to part, or nothing.

And will she yet debase her eyes on me;

On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety?

On me that halt, and am misshapen thus? Shak. Rich. III.

Nought's had, all's spent,

Where our desire is got without content. Shak. Macbeth.

The youth shall study, and no more engage

Their flatt'ring wishes for uncertain age;

No more with fruitless care, and cheated strife,

Chace fleeting pleasure through the maze of life;

Finding the wretched all they here can have,

But present food, and but a future grave. Prior.

Our all is at stake, and irretrievably lost, if we fail of success. Addison on the State of the War.

2. Every thing.

Then shall we be news-cramm'd.—All the better; we shall be the more remarkable. Shakesp. As you like it.

Up

Up with my tent, here will I lie to night;
But where to morrow? — Well, all's one for that. Sh. R. III.
All the fitter, Lentulus: our coming
Is not for salutation; we have bus'ness. Ben. Johnf. Catiline.
That is, every thing is the better, the same, the fitter.
Sceptre and pow'r, thy giving, I assume;
And glad her shall resign, when in the end
Thou shalt be all in all, and I in thee.
For ever; and in me all whom thou lov'st. Parad. Lost.
They all fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it so little foothold, that the first blast of wind laid it flat upon the ground, nest, eagles, and all. L'Estrange.
They that do not keep up this indifferency for all but truth, put coloured spectacles before their eyes, and look through false glaffes. Locke.
A torch, snuff and all, goes out in a moment, when dipped in the vapour. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
All is much used in composition; but, in most instances, it is merely arbitrary; as, all-commanding. Sometimes the words compounded with it, are fixed and classical; as, Almighty.
When it is connected with a participle, it seems to be a noun; as, all-surrounding: in other cases, an adverb; as, all- accomplished, or completely accomplished.
Of these compounds, a small part of those which may be found is inserted.
ALL-BEARING. adj. [from all and bear.] That which bears every thing; omniparous.
Thus while he spoke, the sovereign plant he drew,
Where on th' all-bearing earth unmark'd it grew. Pope's Od.
ALL-CHEERING. adj. [from all and cheer.] That which gives gayety and cheerfulness to all.
Soon as the all-cheering fun
Should, in the farthest east, begin to draw
The shady curtains from Aurora's bed. Sh. Romeo and Jul.
ALL-COMMANDING. adj. [from all and command.] Having the sovereignty over all.
He now sets before them the high and shining idol of glory, the all-commanding image of bright gold. Raleigh's History.
ALL-COMPOSING. adj. [from all and compose.] That which quiets all men, or every thing.
Wrapt in embow'ring shades, Ulysses lies,
His woes forgot! but Pallas now addrest,
To break the bands of all-composing rest. Pope's Odyssey, b. vi.
ALL-CONQUERING. adj. [from all and conquer.] That which subdues every thing.
Second of Satan sprung, all-conquering death!
What think'st thou of our empire now? Paradise Lost, b. x.
ALL-CONSUMING. adj. [from all and consume.] That which consumes every thing.
By age unbroke—but all-consuming care
Destroys perhaps the strength, that time would spare. Pope.
ALL-DEVOURING. adj. [from all and devour.] That which eats up every thing.
Secure from flames, from envy's fiercer rage,
Destructive war, and all-devouring age. Pope's Essay on Crit.
ALL-FOURS. n. f. [from a'l and four.] A low game at cards, played by two; so named from the four particulars by which it is reckoned, and which, joined in the hand of either of the parties, are said to make all fours.
ALL-HAIL. n. f. [from all, and hail, for health.] All health. This is therefore not a compound, though, perhaps usually reckoned among them.
All hail, ye fields, where constant peace attends!
All hail, ye sacred, solitary groves!
All hail, ye books, my true, my real friends,
Whose conversation pleases and improves. Walsh.
ALL-HALLOWN. n. f. [from all and hallow, to make holy.] The time about Allsaintsday.
Farewell, thou latter spring! farewell,
All-hallown summer. Shakespeare. Henry IV. p. i.
ALLHALLOWTIDE. n. f. [See ALL-HALLOWN.] The term near Allsaints, or the first of November.
Cut off the bough about Allhallowtide, in the bare place, and set it in the ground, and it will grow to be a fair tree in one year. Bacon's Natural History, N° 427.
ALL-HEAL. n. f. [Panax, Lat.] A species of ironwort; which see.
ALL-JUDGING. adj. [from all and judge.] That which has the sovereign right of judgment.
I look with horror back,
That I detest my wretched self, and curse
My past polluted life. All-judging heav'n,
Who knows my crimes, has seen my sorrow for them.
Rowe's Jane Shore.
ALL-KNOWING. adj. [from all and know.] Omniscient; all-wise.
Shall we repine at a little misplaced charity, we, who could no way foresee the effect; when an all-knowing, all-wise Being, showers down every day his benefits on the unthankful and undeserving? Atterbury's Sermons.
ALL-MAKING. adj. [from all and make.] That created all;
omnifick. [See ALL-SEEING.]
ALL-POWERFUL. adj. [from all and powerful.] Almighty; omnipotent; possessed of infinite power. 2

O all-powerful Being, the least motion of whose will can create or destroy a world; pity us, the mournful friends of thy distressed servant. Swift.
ALL-SAINTS DAY. n. f. The day on which there is a general celebration of the saints. The first of November.
ALL-SEER. n. f. [from a'l and see.] He that sees or beholds every thing; he whose view comprehends all things.
That high All-seer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest, what I begg'd in jest. Shak. Rich. III.
ALL-SEEING. adj. [from all and see.] That beholds every thing.
The same First Mover certain bounds has plac'd,
How long those perishable forms shall last;
Nor can they last beyond the time assign'd
By that all-seeing and all-making mind. Dryd. Fables.
ALL-SOULS DAY. n. f. The day on which supplications are made for all souls by the church of Rome; the second of November.
This is all souls day, fellows, is it not?—
It is, my lord.—
Why then, all souls day is my body's doomday. Shak. R. III.
ALL-SUFFICIENT. adj. [from all and sufficient.] Sufficient to every thing.
The testimonies of God are perfect, the testimonies of God are all-sufficient unto that end for which they were given Hooker.
He can more than employ all our powers in their utmost elevation; for he is every way perfect and all-sufficient. Norris.
ALL-WISE. adj. [from all and wise.] Possess of infinite wisdom.
There is an infinite, eternal, all-wise Mind governing the affairs of the world. South.
Supreme, all-wise, eternal, potentate!
Sole authour, sole disposer of our fate! Prior.
ALLANTO'IS, or ALLANTO'IDES. n. f. [from αλλας, a gut, and ειδος, shape.] The urinary tunick placed between the amnion and chorion, which, by the navel and urachus, or passage by which the urine is conveyed from the infant in the womb, receives the urine that comes out of the bladder. Quincy.
TO ALLA'Y. v. a. [from alloyer, Fr. to mix one metal with another in order to coinage; it is therefore derived by some from à la loi, according to law; the quantity of metals being mixed according to law; by others, from allier, to unite; perhaps from allocare, to put together.]
1. To mix one metal with another, to make it fitter for coinage. In this sense, most authours preserve the original French orthography, and write alloy. See ALLOY.
2. To join any thing to another, so as to abate its predominant qualities.
Being brought into the open air,
I would alloy the burning quality
Of that fell poison. Shakespeare. King John.
No friendly offices shall alter or alloy that rancour, that frets in some hellish breasts, which, upon all occasions, will foam out at its foul mouth in slander and invective. South.
3. To quiet; to pacify; to repress. The word, in this sense, I think not to be derived from the French alloyer, but to be the English word lay, with a before it, according to the old form.
If, by your art, you have Put the wild waters in this roar, alloy them. Shak. Tempest.
ALLA'Y. n. f. [alloy, Fr.]
1. The metal of a baser kind mixed in coins, to harden them, that they may wear less. Gold is allayed with silver and copper, two carats to a pound Troy; silver with copper only, of which eighteen pennyweight is mixed with a pound. Cowel thinks the alloy is added, to countervail the charge of coining; which might have been done only by making the coin less.
For fools are stubborn in their way,
As coins are harden'd by th' alloy. Hudibras, p. iii. c. 22.
2. Any thing which, being added, abates the predominant qualities of that with which it is mingled; in the same manner, as the admixture of baser metals alloy the qualities of the first mass.
Dark colours easily suffer a sensible alloy, by little scattering light. Newton's Opticks.
3. Alloy being taken from baser metals, commonly implies something worse than that with which it is mixed.
The joy has no alloy of jealousy, hope and fear. Roscommon.
ALLA'YER. n. f. [from alloy.] The person or thing which has the power or quality of allaying.
Phlegm and pure blood are reputed allayers of acrimony; and, upon that account, Avicen countermands letting blood in choleric bodies; because he esteems the blood a frænum bilis, or a bridle of gall, obtunding its acrimony and fierceness.
Harvey on Consumptions.
ALLA'YMENT. n. f. [from alloy.] That which has the power of allaying or abating the force of another.
If I could temporize with my affection,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,
The like allayment would I give my grief. Sh. Troilus and Cr.
ALLEGATION. n. f. [from allege.]
1. Affirmation; declaration.
2. The thing alleged or affirmed.
Hath he not twit our sovereign lady here
With ignominious words, though darkly coucht?

A L L

As if she had suborned some to swear
False allegations, to o'erthrow his state. Shakesp. Henry VI.

3. An excuse; a plea.
I omitted no means in my power, to be informed of my errors; and I expect not to be excused in any negligence on account of youth, want of leisure, or any other idle allegations.
Pope's Preface to his Works.

To ALLE'GE. v. a. [allego, Lat.]
1. To affirm; to declare; to maintain.
2. To plead as an excuse, or produce as an argument.
Surely the present form of church-government is such, as no law of God, or reason of man, hath hitherto been alleged, of force sufficient to prove they do ill, who, to the utmost of their power, withstand the alteration thereof. Hooker's Preface.
If we forsake the ways of grace or goodness, we cannot allege any colour of ignorance, or want of instruction; we cannot say we have not learned them, or we could not. Sprat.
He hath a clear and full view, and there is no more to be alleged for his better information. Locke.

ALLE'GEABLE. adj. [from allege.] That which may be alleged.
Upon this interpretation all may be solved, that is allegeable against it. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 7.

ALLE'GEMENT. n. f. [from allege.] The same with allegation. D.

ALLE'GER. n. f. [from allege.] He that alleges.
Which narrative, if we may believe it as confidently as the famous alleger of it, Pamphilio, appears to do, would seem to argue, that there is, sometimes, no other principle requisite, than what may result from the lucky mixture of the parts of several bodies. Boyle.

ALLE'GIANCE. n. f. [allegiance, Fr.] The duty of subjects to the government.
I did pluck allegiance from mens hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king. Shak. Henry IV.
We charge you on allegiance to ourselves,
To hold your slaughter hands, and keep the peace.
Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. i.
The house of commons, to whom every day petitions are directed by the several counties of England, professing all allegiance to them, govern absolutely; the lords concurring, or rather submitting to whatsoever is proposed. Clarendon.

ALLE'GIANT. adj. [from allege.] Loyal; conformable to the duty of allegiance: a word not now used.
For your great graces
Heap'd upon me, poor undeserver, I
Can nothing render but allegiant thanks,
My pray'rs to heav'n for you. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

ALLEGRO'Rick. adj. [from allegory.] After the manner of an allegory; not real; not literal.
A kingdom they portend thee; but what kingdom,
Real or allegorick, I discern not. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.

ALLEGRO'RICAL. adj. [from allegory.] In the form of an allegory; not real; not literal; mystical.
When our Saviour said, in an allegorical and mystical sense, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you; the hearers understood him literally and grossly. Bentley's Sermons.
The epithet of Apollo for shooting, is capable of two applications; one literal, in respect of the darts and bow, the ensigns of that god; the other *allegorica*l, in regard to the rays of the sun. Pope's Preface to Iliad.

ALLEGRO'RICALLY. adv. [from allegory.] After an allegorical manner.
Virgil often makes Iris the messenger of Juno, allegorically taken for the air. Peacham on Drawing.
The place is to be understood allegorically; and what is thus spoken by a Phæacian with wisdom, is, by the Poet, applied to the goddess of it. Pope's Odyssey, b. viii. notes.

ALLEGRO'RICALNESS. n. f. [from allegorical.] The quality of being allegorical. Diët.

To ALLEGORIZE. v. a. [from allegory.] To turn into allegory; to form an allegory; to take in a sense not literal.
He hath very wittily allegorized this tree, allowing his supposition of the tree itself to be true. Raleigh's History.
As some would allegorize these signs, which we noted before; so others would confine them to the destruction of Jerusalem. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
An alchymist shall reduce divinity to the maxims of his laboratory, explain morality by sal, sulphur, and mercury; and allegorize the scripture itself, and the sacred mysteries thereof into the philosopher's stone. Locke.

ALLEGORY. n. f. [ἀλληγορία.] A figurative discourse, in which something other is intended, than is contained in the words literally taken; as, wealth is the daughter of diligence, and the parent of authority.
Neither must we draw out our allegory too long, lest either we make ourselves obscure, or fall into affectation, which is childish. Ben. Johnson's Discovery.
This word nympha meant nothing else but, by allegory, the vegetative humour or moisture that quickeneth and giveth life to trees and flowers, whereby they grow. Peacham.

ALLE'GRO. n. f. A word, denoting one of the six distinctions of time. It expresses a sprightly motion, the quickest of all, except Presto. It originally means gay, as in Milton.

ALLELU'JAH. n. f. [This word is falsely written for Hallelujah, הלל and יהוה.] A word of spiritual exultation, used in hymns; it signifies, Praise God.
He will set his tongue to those pious divine strains, which may be a proper prælude to those allelujahs he hopes eternally to sing. Government of the Tongue.

ALLEMANDE. n. f. [Ital.] A grave kind of musick. Diët.

To ALLEVIATE. v. a. [a levo, Lat.]
1. To make light; to ease; to soften.
Most of the distempers are the effects of abused plenty and luxury, and must not be charged upon our Maker; who, notwithstanding, hath provided excellent medicines, to alleviate those evils which we bring upon ourselves. Bentley's Sermons.
2. To extenuate, or soften; as, he alleviates his fault by an excuse.

ALLEVIA'TION. n. f. [from alleviate.]
1. The act of making light; of allaying, or extenuating.
All apologies for, and alleviations of faults, though they are the heights of humanity, yet they are not the favours, but the duties of friendship. South's Sermons.
2. That by which any pain is eased, or fault extenuated.
This loss of one fifth of their debts and income will sit heavy on them, who shall feel it, without the alleviation of any profit. Locke.

A'LEY. n. f. [allée, Fr.]
1. A walk in a garden.
And all within were walks and alleys wide,
With footing worn, and leading inward far. Fairy Queen.
It is common from experience, that where alleys are close gravelled, the earth putteth forth the first year knotgrasses, and after spiregrasses. Bacon's Natural History, No 565.
Yonder alleys green,
Our walk at noon, with branches overgrown. Parad. Lost.
Come, my fair love, our morning's task we lose;
Some labour ev'n the easiest life would choose:
Ours is not great: the dangling bows to crop,
Whose too luxuriant growth our alleys stop. Dryden.
The thriving plants, ignoble broomsticks made,
Now sweep those alleys they were born to shade. Pope.

2. A passage in towns narrower than a street.
A back friend, a shoulder clapper, one that commands
The passages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands.
Shakesp. Comedy of Errors.

ALLI'ANCE. n. f. [alliance, Fr.]
1. The state of connection with another by confederacy; a league. In this sense, our histories of Queen Anne mention the grand alliance.
2. Relation by marriage.
A bloody Hymen shall th' alliance join Betwixt the Trojan and th' Ausonian line. Dryden's Æneid.
3. Relation by any form of kindred.
For my father's sake,
In honour of a true Plantagenet,
And, for alliance' sake, declare the cause
My father lost his head. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. i.

4. The act of forming or contracting relation to another; the act of making a confederacy.
Dorset, your son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home
To high promotions. Shakesp. Richard III.
Adrastus soon, with gods averse, shall join
In dire alliance with the Theban line;
Thence strife shall rise, and mortal war succeed. Pope.

5. The persons allied to each other.
I would not boast the greatness of my father,
But point out new alliances to Cato. Addison's Cato.

ALLI'CIENCY. n. f. [alicio, Lat. to entice or draw.] The power of attracting anything; magnetism; attraction.
The feigned central alliciency is but a word, and the manner of it still occult. Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica.

To ALLIGATE. v. a. [alligo, Lat.] To tie one thing to another; to unite.

ALLIGA'TION. n. f. [from alligate.]
1. The act of tying together; the state of being so tied.
2. The arithmetical rule that teaches to adjust the price of compounds, formed of several ingredients of different value.

ALLIGA'TOR. n. f. The crocodile. This name is chiefly used for the crocodile of America, between which, and that of Africa, naturalists have laid down this difference, that one moves the upper, and the other the lower jaw; but this is now known to be chimerical, the lower jaw being equally moved by both. See CROCODILE.
In his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stuff'd, and other skins
Of ill-shap'd fishes. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.
Aloft in rows large poppy-heads were strung,
And here a scaly alligator hung. Garth's Dispensary.

A'LLIGATURE. n. f. [from alligate.] The link, or ligature, by which two things are joined together. Diët.

ALLI'SION.

ALLI'SION. n. f. [allido, allisum, Lat.] The act of striking one thing against another.

There have not been any islands of note, or considerable extent, torn and cast off from the continent by earthquakes, or severed from it by the boisterous allision of the sea. Woodward.

ALLOCA'TION. n. f. [alloco, Lat.]

1. The act of putting one thing to another.

2. The admission of an article in reckoning, and addition of it to the account.

3. An allowance made upon an account; a term used in the exchequer. Chambers.

ALLOCU'TION. n. f. [allocutio, Lat.] The act of speaking to another.

ALLO'DIAL. adj. [from allodium.] Held without any acknowledgment of superiority; not feudal; independent.

ALLO'DIUM. n. f. [A word of very uncertain derivation, but most probably of German original.]

A possession held in absolute independence, without any acknowledgment of a lord paramount. It is opposed to fee, or feudum, which intimates some kind of dependance. There are no allodial lands in England, all being held either mediately or immediately of the king.

ALLO'NGE. n. f. [allonge, Fr.] A pass or thrust with a rapier, so called from the lengthening of the space taken up by the fencer.

To ALLO'o. v. a. [This word is generally spoke halloo, and is used to dogs, when they are incited to the chase or battle; it is commonly imagined to come from the French allons; perhaps from all lo, look all; shewing the object.] To set on; to incite a dog, by crying alloo.

Alloo thy furious mastiff; bid him vex

The noxious herd, and print upon their ears

A sad memorial of their past offence. Philips.

A'LLOQUY. n. f. [alloquium, Lat.] The act of speaking to another; converse; conversation. Dict.

To ALLO'T. v. a. [from lot.]

1. To distribute by lot.

2. To grant.

Five days we do allot thee for provision,

To shield thee from disasters of the world;

And, on the sixth, to turn thy hated back

Upon our kingdom. Shakesp. King Lear.

I shall deserve my fate, if I refuse

That happy hour, which heaven allots to peace. Dryden.

3. To distribute; to parcel out; to give each his share.

Since fame was the only end of all their new enterprizes and studies, a man cannot be too scrupulous in allotting them their due portion of it. Tatler, N° 81.

ALLO'TMENT. n. f. [from allot.] That which is allotted to any one; the part; the share; the portion granted.

There can be no thought of security or quiet in this world, but in a resignation to the allotments of God and nature. L'Estr.

Though it is our duty to submit with patience to more scanty allotments, yet thus much we may reasonably and lawfully ask of God. Rogers's Sermons.

ALLO'TTERY. n. f. [from allot.] That which is granted to any particular person in a distribution. See ALLO'TMENT.

Allow me such exercises as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor allottery my father left me by testament.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

To ALLO'W. v. a. [allouer, Fr. from allaudare.]

1. To admit; as, to allow a position; not to contradict; not to oppose.

The principles, which all mankind allow for true, are innate; those, that men of right reason admit, are the principles allowed by all mankind. Locke.

The pow'r of musick all our hearts allow;

And what Timotheus was, is Dryden now. Pope's Ess. Crit.

As to what is alleged, that some of the Presbyterians declared openly against the king's murder, I allow it to be true. Swift.

2. To grant; to yield; to own any one's title to.

We will not, in civility, allow too much sincerity to the professions of most men; but think their actions to be interpreters of their thoughts. Locke.

I will help you to enough of them, and shall be ready to allow the pope as little power here as you please. Swift.

3. To grant licence to; to permit.

Let's follow the old earl, and get the beldam

To lead him where he would; his roguish madnefs

Allows itself to any thing. Shakespeare's King Lear.

But as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak, not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts. I Theff. ii. 4.

They referred all laws, that were to be passed in Ireland, to be considered, corrected and allowed first by the state of England. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

4. To give a sanction to; to authorize.

There is no slander in an allow'd fool. Shakesp. Tw. Night.

5. To give to; to pay to.

Ungrateful then! if we no tears allow

To him that gave us peace and empire too. Waller.

6. To appoint for; to set out to a certain use; as, he allowed his for the third part of his income.

VOL. I.

7. To make abatement, or provision; or to settle any thing, with some concessions or cautions, regarding something else.

If we consider the different occasions of ancient and modern medals, we shall find they both agree in recording the great actions and successes in war; allowing still for the different ways of making it, and the circumstances that attended it. Addison.

ALLO'WABLE. adj. [from allow.]

1. That which may be admitted without contradiction.

It is not allowable, what is observable in many pieces of Raphael, where Magdalen is represented, before our Saviour, washing his feet, on her knees; which will not consist with the text. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. That which is permitted or licensed; lawful; not forbidden.

In actions of this sort, the very light of nature alone may discover that which is so far forth in the sight of God allowable. Hooker, b. ii. § 8.

I was, by the freedom allowable among friends, tempted to vent my thoughts with negligence. Boyle on the Scriptures.

Reputation becomes a signal and a very peculiar blessing to magistrates; and their pursuit of it is not only allowable, but laudable. Atterbury's Sermons.

ALLO'WABLENESS. n. f. [from allowable.] The quality of being allowable; lawfulness; exemption from prohibition.

I cannot think myself engaged to discourse of lots, as to their nature, use, and allowableness, in matters of recreation; which is indeed impugned by some, though better defended by others. South's Sermons.

ALLO'WANCE. n. f. [from allow.]

1. Admission without contradiction.

Without the notion and allowance of spirits, our philosophy will be lame and defective in one main part of it. Locke.

2. Sanction; licence; authority.

That which wisdom did first begin, and hath been with good men long continued, challengeth allowance of them that succeed, although it plead for itself nothing. Hooker, b. v. § 7.

You sent a large commission

To Gregory de Cassado, to conclude,

Without the king's will, or the state's allowance;

A league between his highness and Ferrara. Shak. Henry VIII.

3. Permission; freedom from restraint.

They should therefore be accustomed betimes to consult and make use of their reason, before they give allowance to their inclinations. Locke.

4. A settled rate; or appointment for any use.

The victual in plantations ought to be expended almost as in a besieged town; that is, with certain allowance. Bacon.

And his allowance was a continual allowance given him of the king; a daily rate for every day all his life. 2 Kings, xxv. 30.

5. Abatement from the strict rigour of a law, or demand.

The whole poem, though written in that which they call heroick verse, is of the Pindarick nature, as well in the thought as the expression; and, as such, requires the same grains of allowance for it. Dryden.

Parents never give allowances for an innocent passion. Swift.

6. Established character; reputation.

His bark is stoutly timber'd, and his pilot

Of very expert and approved allowance;

Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death,

Stand in bold awe. Shakesp. Othello.

ALLO'Y. n. f. [See ALLAY.]

1. Baser metal mixed in coinage.

That precise weight and fineness, by law appropriated to the pieces of each denomination, is called the standard. Fine silver is silver without the mixture of any baser metal. Alloy is baser metal mixed with it. Locke.

For let another piece be coined of the same weight, wherein half the silver is taken out, and copper, or other alloy, put into the place, every one knows it will be worth but half as much; for the value of the alloy is so inconsiderable as not to be reckoned. Locke.

2. Abatement; diminution.

The pleasures of sense are probably relished by beasts in a more exquisite degree, than they are by men; for they taste them sincere and pure always, without mixture or alloy. Atterbury's Sermons.

ALLUBE'SCENCY. n. f. [allubescencia, Lat.] Willingness; content. Dict.

To ALLUDE. v. n. [alludo, Lat.] To have some reference to a thing, without the direct mention of it; to hint at; to insinuate. It is used of persons; as, he alludes to an old story; or of things, as, the lampoon alludes to his mother's faults.

These speeches of Jerom and Chrysostom do seem plainly to allude unto such ministerial garments as were then in use. Hooker, b. v. § 29.

True it is, that many things of this nature be alluded unto, yea, many things declared. Hooker, b. iv. § 2.

Then just proportions were taken, and every thing placed by weight and measure: and this I doubt not was that artificial structure here alluded to. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

ALLU'MINOR. n. f. [allumer, Fr. to light.] One who colours or paints upon paper or parchment; because he gives graces, light an ornament, to the letters or figures coloured. Corwell.

To ALLURE. v. a. [laurer, Fr. looren, Dutch, belønen, Sax.] To entice to any thing whether good or bad; to draw towards any thing by enticement.

Unto laws that men make for the benefit of men, it hath seemed always needful to add rewards, which may more allure unto good, than any hardness deterreth from it, and punishments, which may more deter from evil, than any sweetness thereto allureth. Hooker, b. i. p. 28.

Above them all

The golded sun, in splendour likest heav'n, Allur'd his eye. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 572.

Each flatt'ring hope, and each alluring joy. Lyttleton.

ALLURE. n. f. [from the verb allure.] Something set up to entice birds, or other things, to it. We now write lure.

The rather to train them to his allure, he told them both often, and with a vehement voice, how they were over-topped and trodden down by gentlemen. Sir John Hayward.

ALLUREMENT. n. f. [from allure.]

That which allures, or has the force of alluring: enticement; temptation of pleasure.

Against allurements, custom, and a world

Offended; fearless of reproach, and scorn,

Or violence.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

—Adam, by his wife's allurements, fell. Par. Reg. b. ii.

To shun th' allurements is not hard

To minds resolv'd, forewarn'd, and well prepar'd;

But wond'rous difficult, when once beset,

To struggle through the straits, and break th' involving net.

Dryden.

ALLURER. n. f. [from allure.] The person that allures; enticer; enveigler.

ALLURINGLY. adv. [from allure.] In an alluring manner; enticingly.

ALLURINGNESS. n. f. [from alluring.] The quality of alluring or enticing; incitation; temptation by proposing pleasure.

ALLUSION. n. f. [allusio, Lat.] That which is spoken with reference to something supposed to be already known, and therefore not expressed; a hint; an implication. It has the particle to.

Here are manifest allusions and footsteps of the dissolution of the earth, as it was in the deluge, and will be in its last ruin.

Burnet's Theory.

This last allusion gall'd the Panther more,

Because indeed it rubb'd upon the fore.

Dryden.

Expressions now out of use, allusions to customs lost to us, and various particularities, must needs continue several passages in the dark.

Locke's Essay on St. Paul's Epistles.

ALLUSIVE. adj. [alludo, allusum, Lat.] Hinting at something not fully expressed.

Where the expression in one place is plain, and the sense affixed to it agreeable to the proper force of the words, and no negative objection requires us to depart from it; and the expression, in the other, is figurative or allusive, and the doctrine, deduced from it, liable to great objections; it is reasonable, in this latter place, to restrain the extent of the figure and allusion, to a consistency with the former.

Rogers's Sermons.

ALLUSIVELY. adv. [from allusive.] In an allusive manner; by implication; by insinuation.

The Jewish nation, that rejected and crucified him, within the compass of one generation, were, according to his prediction, destroyed by the Romans, and preyed upon by those eagles, (Matt. xxiv. 28.) by which, allusively, are noted the Roman armies, whose ensign was the eagle. Hammond's Pr. Cat.

ALLUSIVENESS. n. f. [from allusive.] The quality of being allusive.

ALLUVION. n. f. [alluvio, Lat.]

1. The carrying of any thing to something else by the motion of the water.

2. The thing carried by water to something else.

The civil law gives the owner of land a right to that increase which arises from alluvion, which is defined an insensible increment, brought by the water.

ALLUVIOUS. adj. [from alluvion.] That which is carried by water to another place, and lodged upon something else.

To ALLY. v. a. [allier, Fr.]

1. To unite by kindred, friendship, or confederacy.

All these septa are allied to the inhabitants of the North, so as there is no hope that they will ever serve faithfully against them.

Spenser on Ireland.

Wants, frailties, passions, closer still ally

The common interest, or endear the tie. Pope's Essay on Man.

To the sun ally'd,

From him they draw the animating fire. Thomson's Summer.

2. To make a relation between two things, by similitude, or resemblance, or any other means.

Two lines I cannot excuse: they are indeed remotely allied to Virgil's sense; but they are too like the tenderness of Ovid.

Dryden.

ALLY. n. f. [allie, Fr.] One united by some means of connexion; as, marriage; friendship; confederacy.

We could hinder the accession of Holland to France, either as subjects, with great immunities for the encouragement of trade, or as an inferior and dependent ally under their protection.

Temple.

ALMACANTAR. n. f. [An Arabick word, written variously by various authors; by D'Herbelot, almocantar; by others, almucantar.] A circle drawn parallel to the horizon. It is generally used in the plural, and means a series of parallel circles drawn through the several degrees of the meridian.

ALMACANTAR'S STAFF. n. f. An instrument commonly made of pear-tree or box, with an arch of fifteen degrees, used to take observations of the sun, about the time of its rising and setting, in order to find the amplitude, and consequently the variation of the compass.

Chambers.

ALMANACK. n. f. [Derived, by some, from the Arabick, al, and manab, Heb. to count, or compute; but others, from al, Arabick, and man, a month, or manand, the course of the months; by others, from a Teutonic original, al and maan, the moon, an account of every moon, or month: all of them are probable.]

A calendar; a book in which the revolutions of the seasons, with the return of feasts and fasts, is noted for the ensuing year.

It will be said, this is an almanack for the old year; all hath been well; Spain hath not assailed this kingdom.

Bacon.

This astrologer made his almanack give a tolerable account of the weather, by a direct inversion of the common prognosticators.

Government of the Tongue.

Beware the woman too, and shun her sight,

Who in these studies does herself delight;

By whom a greasy almanack is born,

With often handling like chaff amber worn. Dryd. Juvenal.

I'll have a fasting almanack printed on purpose for her use.

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

ALMANDINE. n. f. [Fr. almandina, Ital.] A ruby coarser and lighter than the oriental, and nearer the colour of the garnet.

Dict.

ALMIGHTINESS. n. f. [from almighty.] Unlimited power; omnipotence; one of the attributes of God.

It serveth to the world for a witness of his almightiness, whom we outwardly honour with the chiefest of outward things.

Hooker, b. v. § 15.

In creating and making existent the world universal, by the absolute act of his own word, his power and almightiness.

Sir Walter Raleigh.

In the wilderness, the bittern and the stork, the unicorn and the elk, live upon his provisions, and revere his power, and feel the force of his almightiness.

Taylor's Rule of holy living.

ALMIGHTY. adj. [from all and mighty.] Of unlimited power; omnipotent.

The Lord appeared unto Abram, and said unto him, I am the almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect.

Genesis, xvii. 1.

He wills you in the name of God almighty,

That you divest yourself, and lay apart

The borrow'd glories, that, by gift of heav'n,

By law of nature and of nations' long

To him and to his heirs.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

ALMOND. n. f. [amand, Fr. derived by Menage from amandala, a word in low Latin; by others, from Allemand, a German; supposing that almonds come to France from Germany.]

The nut of the almond tree, either sweet or bitter.

Pound an almond, and the clear white colour will be altered into a dirty one, and the sweet taste into an oily one.

Locke.

ALMOND TREE. n. f. [amygdalus, Lat.]

It has leaves and flowers very like those of the peach tree, but the fruit is longer and more compressed; the outer green coat is thinner and drier when ripe, and the shell is not so rugged.

The species are, 1. The common large almond. 2. The sweet almond, with tender shells. 3. The bitter almond. 4. The white flowering almond.

The three first sorts are chiefly cultivated in England, for the beauty of their flowers; and the first sort yields large quantities of fruit yearly, little inferior to what we receive from abroad, if not kept too long. They are propagated in July, by inoculating a bud into a plum stock, for wet ground, or an almond or peach stock for dry. The fourth is a greater curiosity; it will not succeed on a plum, but must be budded on a peach or almond.

Miller.

Like to an almond tree, you're mounted high

On top of green Selinus, all alone,

With blossoms brave bedecked daintily,

Whose tender locks do tremble every one,

At every little breath that under heav'n is blown. Fairy Q.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,

If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,

The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign;

Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

ALMONDS OF THE THROAT, or TONSILS, called improperly Almonds of the ears; are two round glands placed on the sides of the basis of the tongue, under the common membrane of the fauces; each of them has a large oval sinus, which opens into the fauces, and in it are a great number of lesser ones, which discharge themselves through the great sinus of a mucous and the slippery matter into the fauces, larynx, and œsophagus, for the moistening and lubricating those parts. When the œsophagus muscle acts, it compresses the almonds, and they frequently are the occasion of a sore throat. Quincy.

A L M

The tonsils, or Almonds of the Ears, are also frequently swelled in the king's evil; which tumour may be very well reckoned a species of it. Wifeman's Surgery.

A'LMOND-FURNACE, or A'LMAN-FURNACE, called also the Sweep, is a peculiar kind of furnace used in refining, to separate metals from cinders and other foreign substances. Chambers.

A'LMONER, or ALMNER. n. f. [eleemosynarius, Lat.] The officer of a prince, or other person, employed in the distribution of charity. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

I enquired among the Jacobins for an almoner; and the general fame has pointed out your reverence as the worthiest man.

A'LMONRY. n. f. [from a'moner.] The place where the almoner resides, or where the alms are distributed.

ALMO'ST. adv. [from all and most; that is, most part of all. Skinner.] Nearly; well nigh; in the next degree to the whole, or to universality.

Who is there almost, whose mind, at some time or other, love or anger, fear or grief, has not so fastened to some clog, that it could not turn itself to any other object. Locke.

There can be no such thing or notion, as an almost infinite; there can be nothing next or second to an omnipotent God. Bentley's Sermons.

Atlas becomes unequal to his freight,

And almost faints beneath the glowing weight. Addis. Ovid.

ALMS. n. f. [in Saxon, elmyr, from eleemosyna, Lat.] What is given gratuitously in relief of the poor. It has no singular.

My arm'd knees,

Which bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his

That hath received an alms.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The poor beggar hath a just demand of an alms from the rich man; who is guilty of fraud, injustice and oppression, if he does not afford relief according to his abilities. Swift.

ALMS-BASKET. n. f. [from alms and basket.] The basket in which provisions are put to be given away.

There sweepings do as well,

As the best order'd meal;

For who the relish of these guests will fit,

Needs set them but the alms-basket of wit.

Ben. Johnson.

We'll stand up for our properties, was the beggar's song that lived upon the alms-basket. L'Estrange's Fables.

ALMSDEED. n. f. [from alms and deed.] An act of charity; a charitable gift.

This woman was full of good works, and almsdeeds which she did. Acts, ix. 36.

Hard favour'd Richard, where art thou?

Thou art not here: murder is thy almsdeed;

Petitioner for blood thou ne'er put'st back.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

ALMS-GIVER. n. f. [from a'ls and giver.] He that gives alms; he that supports others by his charity.

He built and endowed many religious foundations, besides his memorable hospital of the Savoy. And yet was he a great alms-giver in secret, which shewed that his works in publick were dedicated rather to God's glory than his own. Bacon.

ALMSHOUSE. n. f. [from alms and house.] A house devoted to the reception and support of the poor; an hospital for the poor.

The way of providing for the clergy by tithes, the device of almshouses for the poor, and the sorting out of the people into their several parishes, are manifest unto men of understanding. Hooker's Preface.

And to relief of lazars, and weak age

Of indigent faint souls, past corporal toil,

A hundred almshouses right well supplied. Shakesp. Henry V.

Many penitents, after the robbing of temples, and other violences of rapine, build an hospital, or some alms-house, out of the ruins of the church, and the spoils of widows and orphans. L'Estrange's Fables.

Behold yon almshouse, neat, but void of state,

Where age and want sit smiling at the gate.

Pope.

ALMSMAN. n. f. [from alms and man.] A man who lives upon alms; who is supported by charity.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads;

My gorgeous palace, for a hermitage;

My gay apparel for an almsman's gown.

Shakesp. Rich. II.

A'LMUG-TREE. n. f. A tree mentioned in scripture.

Of its wood were made musical instruments, and it was used also in rails, or in a staircase. The Rabbins generally render it coral, others ebony, brazil, or pine. In the Septuagint it is translated wrought wood, and in the Vulgate, Ligna Thyina. But coral could never answer the purposes of the almugim; the pine-tree is too common in Judea to be imported from Ophir; and the Thyinum, or citron-tree, much esteemed by the ancients for its fragrance and beauty, came from Mauritania. By the wood almugim, or algumim, or, simply, gummim, taking al for a kind of article, may be understood oily and gummy sorts of wood, and particularly the trees which produce gum ammoniac, or gum arabick; and is, perhaps, the same with the Shittim wood mentioned by Moses. Calmet.

A L O

And the navy also of Hiram that brought gold from Ophir, brought in from Ophir great plenty of almug-trees and precious trees. 1 Kings, x. 11.

A'LNAGAR, A'LNAGER, or A'LINEGER. n. f. [from alnage.]

A measurer by the ell; a sworn officer, whose business formerly was to inspect the assize of woollen cloth, and to fix the seals appointed upon it for that purpose; but there are now three officers belonging to the regulation of cloth-manufactures, the searcher, measurer, and alneger. Dict.

A'LNAGE. n. f. [from aulnage, or ainage, Fr.] Ell-measure, or rather the measuring by the ell or yard. Dict.

A'LNIGHT. n. f. [from all and night.]

There is a service which they call alnigh, which is a great cake of wax, with the wick in the midst; whereby it cometh to pass, that the wick fetcheth the nourishment farther off. Pacon's Natural History, No 372.

A'LOES. n. f. [𐤀𐤋𐤍, as it is supposed.] A term applied to three different things.

1. A precious wood used, in the East, for perfumes, of which the best sort is of higher price than gold, and was the most valuable present given by the king of Siam, in 1686, to the king of France. It is called Tambac, and is the heart, or innermost part, of the aloetree; the next part to which is called Calem-bac, which is sometimes imported into Europe, and, though of inferior value to the Tambac, is much esteemed: the part next the bark is termed, by the Portuguese, Pao d'aquila, or eagle-wood; but some account the eagle-wood not the outer part of the Tambac, but another species. Our knowledge of this wood is yet very imperfect. Savary.

2. Aloes is a tree which grows in hot countries, and even in the mountains of Spain.

The leaves are thick, succulent, and generally beset with spines on the edges; the flower consists of one leaf, is tubulous, and cut into six segments at the top, like the hyacinth; the fruit is oblong and cylindrical, divided into three cells, containing flat, and, for the most part, semicircular seeds.

The species are 39; 1. The common large American aloe.

2. The narrow-leaved aloe, from Vera Cruz. 3. The American aloe, which produces young plants out of the flower stems, &c.

Many of these plants, in English gardens, are natives of the East and West Indies; but the most curious are brought from the Cape of Good Hope.

The first of these aloes is very hardy, and has endured the air, in mild winters, in a very dry soil, and under a south wall; but they may be kept in a common greenhouse, giving them very little moisture in winter. The other sorts are preserved in an airy glass-case, with a stove. The aloes are all increased by off-sets.

Most of the African species, after the second, third, or fourth year's growth, produce flowers with us annually; but the American aloes flower but once during the life of the plant, producing the flower-stems from the centre of the plant, of a considerable size, and sometimes fifteen feet in height.

A common error, relating to the first species, is, that it never flowers till it be an hundred years old; but experience has proved, that some have flowered in fifty years. Another error is, that, when the flower opens, it makes a report like a gun. Millar.

3. Aloes is a medicinal juice extracted not from the odoriferous, but the common aloes tree, by cutting the leaves, and exposing the juice that drops from them to the sun. It is distinguished into Socotorine and Caballine, or horse aloes; the first is so called from Socotora; the second, because, being coarser, it ought to be confined to the use of farriers. It is a warm and strong cathartick, and used in most purgative compositions.

ALOE'TICAL. adj. [from aloes.] Consisting chiefly of aloes.

It may be excited by aloetical, scammoniate, or acrimonious medicines. Wifeman's Surgery.

ALOE'TICK. n. f. [from aloes.] Any medicine is so called, which chiefly consists of aloes. Quincy.

ALO'FT. adv. [lofter, to lift up, Dan. Loft air, Icelandish; so that aloft is, into the air.] On high; above; in the air: a word used chiefly in poetry.

For I have read in stories oft,

That love has wings, and soars aloft.

Suckling.

Upright he stood, and bore aloft his shield,

Conspicuous from afar, and overlook'd the field. Dryd. Fab.

The great luminary

Aloft the vulgar constellations thick,

That from his lordly eye keep distance due,

Dispenses light from far.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

A'LOGY. n. f. [alogos.] Unreasonableness; absurdity. Dict.

ALO'NE. adj. [alleen, Dutch; from al and een, or one, that is, single.]

1. Without another.

The quarrel toucheth none but us alone;

Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then. Shakesp. Henry VI.

If by a mortal hand my father's throne

Could be defended, 'twas by mine alone. Dryden, Æneid ii.

God, by whose alone power and conservation, we all live, and move, and have our being. Bentley.

2. Without company; solitary.

Eagles we see fly alone, and they are but sheep which always herd together. Sidney, b. i.

Alone, for other creature in this place
Living, or lifeless, to be found was none. Paradise Lost.
I never durst in darkness be alone. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

ALO'NE. adv.

1. This word is seldom used but with the word let, if even then it be an adverb, and implies sometimes an ironical prohibition, to help a man who is able to manage the affair himself.

Let us alone to guard Corioli,
If they set down before's; 'fore they remove,
Bring up your army. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Let you alone, cunning artificer;
See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben. Jonst. Catil.

2. To let alone; to forbear; to leave unfinished.
His client stole it, but he had better have let it alone; for he lost his cause by his jest. Addison. Spectator, N° 408.

ALO'NG. adv. [au longue, Fr.]

1. At length.
Some rowl a mighty stone; some laid along,
And, bound with burning wires, on spokes of wheels are hung.
Dryden, Æneid vi.

2. Through any space measured lengthwise.
A firebrand carried along, leaveth a train of light behind it.
Bacon's Natural History, N° 274.

Where Ufens glides along the lowly lands,
Or the black water of Pomptina stands. Dryd. Æneid vii.

3. Throughout; in the whole; with all prefixed.
They were all along a cross, untoward sort of people. South.
Solomon, all along in his Proverbs, gives the title of fool to a wicked man. Tillotson.

4. Joined with the particle with; in company; joined with.
I your commission will forthwith dispatch,
And he to England shall along with you. Shakefp. Hamlet.

Hence then! and Evil go with thee along,
'Thy offspring, to the place of evil, Hell;
'Thou and thy wicked crew! Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.

Religious zeal is subject to an excess, and to a defect, when something is mingled with it, which it should not have; or when it wants something that ought to go along with it. Sprat.

5. Sometimes with is understood.
Command thy slaves: my free-born soul disdains
A tyrant's curb; and restive breaks the reins.
Take this along; and no dispute shall rise
(Though mine the woman) for my ravish'd prize. Dryden.

6. Forward; onward. In this sense it is derived from allons, French.

Come then, my friend, my genius, come along,
Thou master of the poet and the song. Pope.

ALO'NGST. adv. [a corruption, as it seems, from along.] Along;
through the length.

The Turks did keep strait watch and ward in all their ports thereabout alongst the sea-coast. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

ALO'OF. adv. [all off, that is, quite off.]

1. At a distance; with the particle from. It generally implies a small distance, such as is within view or observation.

Then bad the knight this lady yede aloof,
And to an hill herself withdrew aside,
From whence she might behold the battle's proof,
And else be safe from danger far descried. Fairy Queen, b. i.

As next in worth,
Came singly where he stood, on the bare strand,
While the promiscuous croud stood yet aloof. Parad. Lost.

The noise approaches, though our palace stood aloof from streets, encompass'd with a wood. Dryden.

2. Applied to persons, it often insinuates caution and circumspection.

Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel,
And make the cowards stand aloof at bay. Shak. Henry VI.

Going northwards, aloof, as long as they had any doubt of being pursued, at last when they were out of reach, they turned and crossed the ocean to Spain. Bacon.

The king would not, by any means, enter the city, until he had aloof seen the cross set up upon the greater tower of Granada, whereby it became Christian ground. Bacon's Hen. VII.

Two pots stood by a river, one of brass, the other of clay.
The water carried them away; the earthen vessel kept aloof from t'other. L'Estrange's Fables.

The strong may fight aloof; Ancæus try'd
His force too near, and by presuming dy'd. Dryd. Fables.

3. In a figurative sense, it is used to import art or cunning in conversation, by which a man holds the principal question at a distance.

Nor do we find him forward to be founded;
But with a crafty madness keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to some confession
Of his true state. Shakefp. Hamlet.

4. It is used metaphorically of persons that will not be seen in a design.

It is necessary the queen join; for, if she stand aloof, there will be still suspicions: it being a received opinion in the world, that she hath a great interest in the king's favour and power.

Suckling.

3

5. It is applied to things not properly belonging to each other.

Love's not love,
When it is mingled with regards that stand
aloof from th' entire point. Shakefp. King Lear.

ALO'UD. adv. [from a and loud.] Loudly; with a strong voice;
with a great noise.

Strangled he lies! yet seems to cry aloud,
To warn the mighty, and instruct the proud;
That of the great, neglecting to be just,
Heav'n in a moment makes an heap of dust. Waller.

Then heav'n's high monarch thund' red thrice aloud,
And thrice he shook aloft a golden cloud. Dryd. Æneid vii.

ALO'W. adv. [from a and low.] In a low place; not aloft.

And now alow, and now aloft they fly,
As born through air, and seem to touch the sky. Dryden.

ALPHA. n. f. The first letter in the Greek alphabet, answering to our A; therefore used to signify the first.

I am alpha and omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty. Revelat.

ALPHABET. n. f. [from ἄλφα, alpha, and βῆτα, beta, the two first letters of the Greeks.] The order of the letters, or elements of speech.

Thou shalt not sigh,
Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign,
But I of these will rest an alphabet,
And by still practice learn to know thy meaning.

Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

The letters of the alphabet, formed by the several motions of the mouth, and the great variety of syllables composed of letters, and formed with almost equal velocity, and the endless number of words capable of being framed out of the alphabet, either of more syllables, or of one. Holder.

Taught by their nurses, little children get
This saying, sooner than their alphabet. Dryd jun. Juw.

TO ALPHABET. v. a. [from alphabet, noun.] To range in the order of the alphabet.

ALPHABETICAL. } adj. [from alphabet; alphabetique, Fr.] In the ALPHABETICK. } order of the alphabet; according to the series of letters.

I have now by me, digested in an alphabetical order, all the counties, corporations, and boroughs in Great Britain, with their respective tempers. Swift.

ALPHABETICALLY. adv. [from alphabetical.] In an alphabetical manner; according to the order of the letters.

I had once in my thoughts to contrive a grammar, more than
I can now comprise in short hints; and a dictionary, alphabetically containing the words of the language, which the deaf person is to learn. Holder's Elements of Speech.

ALRE'ADY. adv. [from all and ready.] At this present time, or at some time past; opposed to futurity; as, Will he come soon?
He is come already. Will it be done? It is done already.

Touching our uniformity, that which hath been already answered, may serve for answer to that exception. Hooker.

You warn'd me still of loving two;
Can I love him, already loving you? Dryd. Indian Emp.

See, the guards, from yon far eastern hill
Already move, no longer stay afford;
High in the air, they wave the flaming sword,
Your signal to depart. Dryden's State of Innocence.

I confine myself to methods for the advancement of piety, which are in the power of a prince limited like ours, by a strict execution of the laws already in force. Swift.

Methinks, already I your tears survey,
Already hear the horrid things they say,
Already see you a degraded toast,
And all your honour in a whisper lost! Pope.

ALS. adv. [als, Dutch.] Also; likewise: a word now out of use.

The golden sun his glistering head gan shew,
And sad remembrance now the prince amoves
With fresh desire his voyage to pursue;
Als Una earn'd her travel to renew. Fairy Queen, b. i.

ALSO. adv. [from all and so.]

1. In the same manner; likewise.

In these two, no doubt, are contained the causes of the great deluge, as according to Moses, so also according to necessity; for our world affords no other treasures of water. Burnet's Theo.

2. Also is sometimes nearly the same with and, and only conjoins the members of the sentence.

God do so to me, and more also. I Samuel, xiv. 44.

ALTAR. n. f. [altare, Lat. It is observed by Junius, that the word altar is received, with christianity, in all the European languages; and that altare is used by one of the Fathers, as appropriated to the Christian worship, in opposition to the ara of gentilism.]

1. The place where offerings to heaven are laid.
The goddess of the nuptial bed,
Tir'd with her vain devotions for the dead,
Resolv'd the tainted hand should be repell'd,
Which incense offer'd, and her altar held. Dryd. Fab.

2. The table in Christian churches where the communion is administered.

Her

Her grace rose, and, with modest paces,
Came to the altar, where she kneel'd, and, faintlike,
Cast her fair eyes to heav'n, and pray'd devoutly.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

ALTARAGE. n. f. [altaragium, Lat.] An emolument arising to the priest from oblations, through the means of the altar.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

ALTAR-CLOTH. n. f. [from altar and cloth.] The cloth thrown over the altar in churches.

I should set down the wealth, books, hangings, and altar-cloths, which our kings gave this abbey. Peacham on Drawing.

TO ALTER. v. a. [alterer, Fr. from alter, Lat.]

1. To change; to make otherwise than it is. To alter, seems more properly to imply a change made only in some part of a thing; as, to alter a writing, may be, to blot or interpolate it; to change it, may be, to substitute another in its place.

Do you note

How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden?

How long her face is drawn? how pale she looks,

And of an earthly cold?

Shak. Hen. VIII.

Acts appropriated to the worship of God by his own appointment, must continue so, till himself hath otherwise declared: for who dares alter what God hath appointed?

Stillingsfleet's Defence of Disc. on Romish Idolatry.

2. To take off from a persuasion or sect.

For the way of writing plays in verse, I find it troublesome and slow; but I am no way altered from my opinion of it, at least with any reasons which have opposed it. Dryden.

TO ALTER. v. n. To become otherwise than it was; as, the weather alters from bright to cloudy.

ALTERABLE. adj. [from alter; alterable, Fr.] That which may be altered or changed by something else; distinct from changeable, or that which changes, or may change itself.

That alterable respects are realities in nature, will never be admitted by a considerate discernor. Glanville.

Our condition in this world is mutable and uncertain, alterable by a thousand accidents, which we can neither foresee nor prevent. Rogers.

I wish they had been more clear in their directions to him upon that mighty point, Whether the settlement of the succession in the House of Hanover be alterable or no? Swift.

ALTERABLENESS. n. f. [from alterable.] The quality of being alterable, or admitting change from external causes.

ALTERABLY. adv. [from alterable.] In such a manner as may be altered.

ALTERANT. adj. [alterant, Fr.] That which has the power of producing changes in any thing.

And whether the body be alterant or altered, evermore a perception precedeth operation; for else all bodies would be alike one to another. Bacon's Natural History.

ALTERATION. n. f. [from alter; alteration, Fr.]

1. The act of altering or changing.

Alteration, though it be from worse to better, hath in it inconveniencies, and those weighty. Hooker.

2. The change made.

Why may we not presume, that God doth even call for such change or alteration, as the very condition of things themselves doth make necessary. Hooker, b. ii. § 10.

So he, with difficulty and labour hard,

Mov'd on:

But he once past, soon after, when man fell,

Strange alteration! Sin, and death, amain

Following his track (such was the will of heav'n!)

Pav'd after him a broad and beaten way. Parad. Lost, b. ii.

No other alteration will satisfy; nor this neither, very long, without an utter abolition of all order. South.

Appius Claudius admitted to the senate the sons of those who had been slaves; by which, and succeeding alterations, that council degenerated into a most corrupt body. Swift.

ALTERATIVE. adj. [from alter.]

Medicines called alterative, are such as have no immediate sensible operation, but gradually gain upon the constitution, by changing the humours from a state of distemperature to health. They are opposed to evacuants. Quincy.

When there is an eruption of humour in any part, it is not cured merely by outward applications, but by such alterative medicines as purify the blood. Government of the Tongue.

ALTERCATION. n. f. [altercation, Fr. from altercor, Lat.] Debate; controversy; wrangle.

By this hot pursuit of lower controversies amongst men professing religion, and agreeing in the principal foundations thereof, they conceive hope, that, about the higher principles themselves, time will cause altercation to grow. Hooker.

Their whole life was, in a manner, little else than a perpetual wrangling and altercation; and that, many times, rather for victory and ostentation of wit, than a sober and serious search of truth. Hakewell on Providence.

ALTERN. adj. [alternus, Lat.] Acting by turns, in succession each to the other.

And God made two great lights, great for their use

To man; the greater to have rule by day,

The less by night, altern.

Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.

VOL. I.

ALTERNACY. n. f. [from alternate.] Action performed by turns.

ALTERNATE. adj. [alternus, Lat.] Being by turns; one after another; reciprocal.

Friendship consists properly in mutual offices, and a generous strife in alternate acts of kindness. South.

Hear how Timotheus' various lays surprise,

And bid alternate passions fall and rise!

While, at each change, the son of Lybian Jove

Now burns with glory, and then melts with love. Pope.

ALTERNATE ANGLES. [In geometry.] Are the internal angles made by a line cutting two parallels, and lying on the opposite sides of the cutting line; the one below the first parallel, and the other above the second.

ALTERNATE RATIO, or PROPORTION, is where the antecedent of one is to its consequent, as the antecedent of another to its consequent; the very same ratio, in this case, holding alternately in respect of the antecedents to each other, and the consequents to each other. Chambers.

ALTERNATE. n. f. [from alternate, adj.] That which happens alternately; vicissitude.

And rais'd in pleasure, or repos'd in ease,

Grateful alternates of substantial peace,

They bless the long nocturnal influence shed

On the crown'd goblet, and the genial bed. Prior.

TO ALTERNATE. v. a. [alternus, Lat.]

1. To perform alternately.

Those who, in their course,

Melodious hymns about the sov'reign throne

Alternate all night long. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

2. To change one thing for another reciprocally.

The most high God, in all things appertaining unto this life, for sundry wise ends, alternates the disposition of good and evil. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. iii.

ALTERNATELY. adv. [from alternate.] In reciprocal succession, so that each shall be succeeded by that which it succeeds, as, light follows darkness, and darkness follows light.

The princess Melesinda, bath'd in tears,

And tosd' alternately with hopes and fears,

Would learn from you the fortunes of her lord. Dryden.

Unhappy man! whom sorrow thus and rage

To different ills alternately engage. Prior.

The rays of light are, by some cause or other, alternately disposed to be reflected or refracted for many vicissitudes. Newton.

ALTERNATENESS. n. f. [from alternate.] The quality of being alternate, or of happening in reciprocal succession. Dict.

ALTERNATION. n. f. [from alternate.] The reciprocal succession of things.

The one would be oppressed with constant heat, the other with insufferable cold; and so the defect of alternation would utterly impugn the generation of all things. Brown's Vul. Err.

ALTERNATIVE. n. f. [alternatif, Fr.] The choice given of two things; so that if one be rejected, the other must be taken.

A strange alternative——

Must ladies have a doctor, or a dance?

Young.

ALTERNATIVELY. adv. [from alternative.] In alternate manner; by turns; reciprocally.

An appeal alternatively made may be tolerated by the civil law as valid. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ALTERNATIVENESS. n. f. [from alternative.] The quality or state of being alternative; reciprocation. Dict.

ALTERNITY. n. f. [from altern.] Reciprocal succession; vicissitude; turn; change of one thing for another; reciprocally.

They imagine, that an animal of the vastest dimensions, and longest duration, should live in a continual motion, without the alternity and vicissitude of rest, whereby all other animals continue. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. viii. c. 1.

ALTHOUGH. conj. [from all and though. See THOUGH.] Notwithstanding; however it may be granted; however it may be that.

We all know, that many things are believed, although they be intricate, obscure, and dark; although they exceed the reach and capacity of our wits; yea, although in this world they be no way possible to be understood. Hooker, b. v. § 22.

Me the gold of France did not seduce,

Although I did admit it as a motive

The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakesp. Hen. V.

The stress must be laid upon a majority; without which the laws would be of little weight, although they be good additional securities. Swift.

ALTIGRADE. adj. [from altus and gradior, Lat.] Rising on high. Dict.

ALTILOQUENCE. n. f. [altus and loquor, Lat.] High speech; pompous language.

ALTIMETRY. n. f. [altimetria, Lat. from altus and μέτρον.] The art of taking or measuring altitudes or heights, whether accessible, or inaccessible, generally performed by a quadrant.

ALTISONANT. } adj. [altisonus, Lat.] High sounding; pompous or lofty in sound. Dict.

ALTITUDE. n. f. [altitudo, Lat.]

1. Height of place; space measured upward.

Ten masts attach'd make not the altitude,
Which thou hast perpendicularly fall'n. Shak. King Lear.
Some define the perpendicular altitude of the highest mountains to be four miles; others but fifteen furlongs. Brown.
She shines above, we know, but in what place,
How near the throne, and heav'n's imperial face,
By our weak opticks is but vainly guess'd;
Distance and altitude conceal the rest. Dryden.

2. The elevation of any of the heavenly bodies above the horizon.
Even unto the latitude of fifty-two, the efficacy thereof is not much considerable, whether we consider its ascent, meridian, altitude, or abode above the horizon. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
Has not a poet more virtues and vices within his circle, cannot he observe them and their influences in their several situations, in their oppositions and conjunctions, in their alti- tudes and depreffions? Rymer's Tragedies of last Age.

3. Situation with regard to lower things.
Those members which are pairs, stand by one another in equal altitude, and answer on each side one to another. Ray.
4. Height of excellence; superiority.
Your altitude offends the eyes
Of those who want the power to rise.
The world, a willing stander-by,
Inclines to aid a specious lye. Swift.

5. Height of degree; highest point.
He did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
- A' TIVOLANT. adj. [altivolans, Lat. from altus and vol.] High flying. Dict.

- A' LTOGETHER. adv. [from all and together.]
1. Completely; without restriction; without exception.
It is in vain to speak of planting laws, and plotting policy, till they be altogether subdued. Spenser's State of Ireland.
We find not in the world any people that hath lived altoge- ther without religion. Hooker, b. v. § 18.
If death and danger are things that really cannot be endured, no man could ever be obliged to suffer for his conscience, or to die for his religion; it being altogether as absurd to imagine a man obliged to suffer, as to do impossibilities. South.
I do not altogether disapprove of the manner of interweaving texts of scripture through the style of your sermon. Swift.
  2. Conjunctly; in company. This is rather all together.
Cousin of Somerset, join you with me,
And altogether with the duke of Suffolk,
We'll quickly hoist duke Humphry from his feat.
Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

A'LUDEL. n. f. [from a and lutum; that is, without lute.]
Aludels are subliming pots used in chemistry, without bottoms, and fitted into one another, as many as there is occasion for, without luting. At the bottom of the furnace is a pot that holds the matter to be sublimed; and, at the top is a head, to retain the flowers that rise up. Quincy.

A' LUM. n. f. [a'lumen, Lat.]
A kind of mineral salt, of an acid taste, leaving in the mouth a sense of sweetness, accompanied with a considerable degree of astringency. The ancient naturalists allow of two sorts of alum, natural and factitious. The natural is found in the island of Milo, being a kind of whitish stone, very light, friable, and porous, and streaked with filaments resembling silver. The fac-titious alum is prepared in different manners, according to the different materials of which it is made. Hence arise red, Roman, and citron alums; also plumose, saccharine, and burnt alums. England, Italy, and Flanders, are the countries where alum is principally produced; and the English roche-alum is made from a bluish mineral stone, frequent in the hills of Yorkshire and Lancashire. Alum is used in medicine as an absorbent; but, being apt to excite vomiting, it is seldom prescribed inwardly. It is used outwardly in astringent lotions, and is an ingredient in several dentifrices and cosmeticks. It is a principal ingredient in dying and colouring; neither of which can be well performed without it. It serves to bind the colour upon the stuffs, and has the same uses there, that gum water and glutinous oils have in painting. It also disposes stuffs to take the colour, and adds a degree of briskness and delicacy to it. This effect of alum seems to proceed from its styptick or astringent quality, by which it binds the finer parts of colours together, and prevents their exhaling. Hence also it preserves paper, that has been dipped in its water, from sinking when wrote upon.

Saccharine alum bears a near resemblance to sugar, and is a composition of common alum, with rose-water and whites of eggs boiled together, to the consistence of a paste, and thus moulded at pleasure. As it cools, it grows hard as a stone, and is used as a cosmetick.

Burnt alum is alum calcined over the fire, and thus rendered whiter, more light, and more easily pulverized.

Plumose or plume alum is a sort of saline mineral stone, of various colours, most commonly white, bordering on green, resembling Venetian talc, except that, instead of scales, it rises in threads or fibres, resembling those of a feather; whence its name from pluma, a feather. Some will have this to be the lapis amianthus of the ancients. Chambers.

By long beating the white of an egg with a lump of alum, you may bring it, for the most part, into white curds. Boyle.

ALUM STONE. n. f. A stone or calx used in surgery; perhaps alum calcined, which then becomes corrosive.

She gargled with oxycrate, and was in a few days cured, by touching it with the vitriol and alum stones. Wifeman's Surgery.

ALU'MINOUS. adj. [from alum.] Relating to alum, or consisting of alum.

Nor do we reasonably conclude, because, by a cold and alu- minous moisture, it is able a while to resist the fire, that, from a peculiarity of nature, it subsisteth and liveth in it. Brown.

The tumour may have other mixture with it, to make it of a vitriolick or aluminous nature. Wifeman's Surgery.

A' LWAYS. adv. [It is sometimes written alway, compounded of all and way; eallewæga, Sax. tuttavia, Ital.]

1. Perpetually; throughout all time; opposed to sometime, or to never.

That, which sometime is expedient, doth not always so continue. Hooker, b. iv. § 14.

Man never is, but always to be blest. Pope.

2. Constantly; without variation; opposed to sometimes, or to now and then.

He is always great, when some great occasion is presented to him. Dryden.

A. M. Stands for artium magister, or master of arts; the second degree of our universities, which, in some foreign countries, is called doctor of philosophy.

AM. The first person of the verb to be. [See TO BE.]
And God said unto Moses, I am that I am: and he said, thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I am hath sent me unto you. Exodus, iii. 14.

Come then, my soul: I call thee by that name,
Thou busy thing, from whence I know I am:
For knowing what I am, I know thou art;
Since that must needs exist, which can impart. Prior.

AMABILITY. n. f. [from amabilis, Lat.] Loveliness; the power of pleasing.

No rules can make amability, our minds and apprehensions make that; and so is our felicity. Taylor.

AMADETTO. n. f. A sort of pear [See PEAR.] so called, says
Skinner, from the name of him who cultivated it.

A' MADOT. n. f. A sort of pear. [See PEAR.]

AMA'IN. adv. [from maine, or maigne, old Fr. derived from mag- nus, Lat.] With vehemence; with vigour; fiercely; violently. It is used of any action performed with precipitation, whether of fear or courage, or of any violent effort.

Great lords, from Ireland am I come amain,
To signify that rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword. Shak. Henry VI.
What! when we fled amain, pursued, and struck
With heav'n's afflicting thunder, and besought
The deep to shelter us? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

The hills, to their supply,
Vapour and exhalation dusk and moist,
Sent up amain. Par. Lost.

From hence the boar was rous'd, and sprung amain,
Like light'ning sudden, on the warriour train,
Beats down the trees before him, shakes the ground; }
The forest echoes to the crackling sound, }
Shout the fierce youth, and clamours ring around. } Dry.

AMALGAM. } n. f. [αμα and γαμειν.] The mixture of metals
AMALGAMA. } procured by amalgamation. See AMALGA-MATION.

The induration of the amalgam appears to proceed from the new texture resulting from the coalition of the mingled ingredients, that make up the amalgam. Boyle.

TO AMA'LGAMATE. v. a. [from amalgam.]

To unite metals with quicksilver, which may be practised upon all metals, except iron and copper. The use of this operation is, to make the metal soft and ductile. Gold is, by this method, drawn over other materials by the gilders.

AMALGAMA'TION. n. f. [from amalgamate.] The act or practice of amalgamating metals.

Amalgamation is the mixing of mercury with any of the metals. The manner is thus in gold, the rest are answerable:
Take six parts of mercury, mix them hot in a crucible, and pour them to one part of gold made red hot in another cru-cible; stir these well that they may incorporate; then cast the mass into cold water, and wash it. Bacon's Physical Remains.

AMANDA'TION. n. f. [from amando, Lat.] The act of sending on a message, or employment.

AMANUE'NSIS. n. f. [Lat.] A person who writes what another dictates.

A' MARANTH. n. f. [amaranthus, Lat. from a and μαρανω.] The name of a plant.

The flowers have no petals; the cup of the flower is dry and multifid; the seeds are included in membranaceous vessels, which, when come to maturity, burst open transversely or horizontally, like purslane, each of which contains one or more roundish seeds.

Among the many species, the most beautiful are, 1. The tree amaranth. 2. The long pendulous aramanth, with reddish coloured seeds, commonly called Love lies a bleeding. All these plants must be sown on a good hotbed in February, or the beginning ginning of March. They produce large beautiful flowers, and perfect their seed in September. Millar.

2. In poetry, it is sometimes an imaginary flower, supposed, according to its name, never to fade.

Immortal amaranth! a flower which once
In paradise, fast by the tree of life,
Began to bloom; but soon, for man's offence,
'To heav'n remov'd, where first it grew, there grows,
And flow'rs aloft, shading the fount of life;
And where the river of bliss, thro' midst of heav'n,
Rowls o'er Elysian flow'rs her amber stream:
With these, that never fade, the spirits elect
Bind their resplendent locks, inwreath'd with beams.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 353.

AMARA'NTHINE. adj. [amaranthinus, Lat.] Relating to amaranths; consisting of amaranths.

By the streams that ever flow,
By the fragrant winds that blow
O'er the Elysian flow'rs,
By those happy souls who dwell
In yellow meads of Asphodel,
Or amaranthine bow'rs.

Pope's St. Cæcilia.

AMARITUDE. n. f. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterness.

What amaritude or acrimony is deprehended in choler, it acquires from a commixture of melancholy, or external malign bodies.

Harvey on Consumptions.

AMARULENCE. n. f. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterness. Dict.

AMASMENT. n. f. [from amafs.] A heap; an accumulation; a collection.

What is now in the subject, is but an amasment of imaginary conceptions, prejudices, ungrounded opinions, and infinite impostures.

Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica.

To AMA'SS. v. a. [amasser, Fr.]

1. To collect together into one heap or mass.

The rich man is not blamed, as having made use of any unlawful means to amafs riches, as having thriven by fraud and injustice.

Atterbury's Sermons.

When we would think of infinite space, or duration, we, at first step, usually make some very large idea, as perhaps of millions of ages, or miles, which possibly we double and multiply several times. All that we thus amafs together in our thoughts, is positive, and the assemblage of a great number of positive ideas of space or duration.

Locke.

2. In a figurative sense, to add one thing to another, generally with some share of reproach, either of eagerness or indiscrimination.

Such as amafs all relations, must err in some, and be unbelieved in many.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

Do not content yourselves with mere words, lest your improvements only amafs a heap of unintelligible phrases.

Watt's Improvement of the Mind.

The life of Homer has been written, by amassing of all the traditions and hints the writers could meet with, in order to tell a story of him to the world.

Pope's Essay on Homer.

To AMA'TE. v. n. [from a and mate. See MATE.]

1. To accompany; to entertain as a companion. It is now obsolete.

A lovely bevy of fair ladies fate,
Court'd of many a jolly paramour,
The which did them immodest way amate,

And each one sought his lady to aggrate. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. To terrify; to strike with horror. In this sense, it is derived from the old French, matter, to crush or subdue.

AMATO'RCULIST. n. f. [amatorculus, Lat.] A little insignificant lover; a pretender to affection. Dict.

A'MATORY. adj. [amatorius, Lat.] Relating to love; causing love.

It is the same thing whether one ravish Lucretia by force, as Tarquin, or by amatory potions, not only allure her, but necessitate her to satisfy his lust, and incline her effectually, and draw her inevitably to follow him spontaneously.

Bramham against Hobbes.

AMAUROSIS. n. f. [ἀμαυρόσις.] A dimness of sight, not from any visible defect in the eye, but from some distemperature of the inner parts, occasioning the representations of flies and dust floating before the eyes: which appearances are the parts of the retina hid and compressed by the blood-vessels being too much distended; so that, in many of its parts, all sense is lost; and therefore no images can be painted upon them, whereby the eyes, continually rolling round, many parts of objects falling successively upon them, are obscure. The cure of this depends upon a removal of the stagnations in the extremities of those arteries which run over the bottom of the eye.

Quincy.

To AMA'ZE. v. a. [from a and maze, perplexity.]

1. To confuse with terror.

Yea, I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings shall be horribly afraid for thee, when I shall brandish my sword before them, and they shall tremble at every moment; every man for his own life in the day of the fall. Ezek. xxxii. 10.

2. To put into confusion with wonder.

Go, heav'nly pair, and with your dazling virtues,
Your courage, truth, your innocence and love,
Amaze and charm mankind.

Smith's Phædr. and Hippol.

3. To put into perplexity.

That cannot choose but amaze him. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

AMA'ZE. n. f. [from the verb amaze.] Astonishment; confusion, either of fear or wonder.

Fairfax, whose name in arms thro' Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praise,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze,
And rumours loud.

Milton's Paradise Regained.

Meantime the Trojan cuts his wat'ry way,
Fix'd on his voyage thro' the curling sea,
Then casting back his eyes with dire amaze,
Sees, on the Punick shore, the mounting blaze.

Dryden.

AMA'ZEDLY. adv. [from amazed.] Confusedly; with amazement; with confusion.

I speak amazedly, and it becomes

My marvel, and my message.

Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Why

Stands Macbeth thus amazedly!

Come, sisters, cheer we up his sprights.

Macbeth.

AMA'ZEDNESS. n. f. [from amazed.] The state of being amazed; astonishment; wonder; confusion.

I was by at the opening of the farthel, heard the old shepherd deliver the manner how he found it; whereupon, after a little amazedness, we were all commanded out of the chamber.

Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

AMA'ZEMENT. n. f. [from amaze.]

1. Such a confused apprehension as does not leave reason its full force; extreme fear; horror.

He answer'd nought at all; but adding new

Fear to his first amazement, staring wide,

With stony eyes, and heartless hollow hue,

Astonish'd stood, as one that had espy'd

Infernal furies, with their chains unt'y'd.

Fairy Queen.

But look! amazement on thy mother sits;

O step between her and her fighting soul:

Conceit in weakest bodies strongest works.

Shak. Hamlet.

2. Extreme dejection.

He ended, and his words impression left

Of much amazement to th' infernal crew,

Distracted and surpris'd with deep dismay

At these sad tidings.

Milton's Paradise Regained, b. i.

3. Height of admiration.

Had you, some ages past, this race of glory

Run, with amazement we should read your story;

But living virtue, all achievements past,

Meets envy still to grapple with at last.

Waller.

4. Astonishment; wonder at an unexpected event.

They knew that it was he which sat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple, and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him.

Acts, iii. 10.

AMA'ZING. participial adj. [from amaze.] Wonderful; astonishing.

It is indeed an amazing thing to see the present desolation of Italy, when one considers what incredible multitudes of people it abounded with during the reigns of the Roman emperours.

Addison's Remarks on Italy.

AMA'ZINGLY. adv. [from amazing.] To a degree that may excite astonishment; wonderfully.

If we arise to the world of spirits, our knowledge of them must be amazingly imperfect, when there is not the least grain of sand but has too many difficulties belonging to it, for the wisest philosopher to answer.

Watt's Logick.

A'MAZON. n. f. [α and μάζω.] The Amazons were a race of women famous for valour, who inhabited Caucasus; they are so called from their cutting off their breasts, to use their weapons better. A warlike woman; a virago.

Stay, stay thy hands, thou art an amazon,

And fightest with the sword.

Shakesp. Henry VI.

AMBAGES. n. f. [Lat.] A circuit of words; a circumlocutory form of speech; a multiplicity of words; an indirect manner of expression.

They gave those complex ideas names, that they might the more easily record and discourse of things they were daily conversant in, without long ambages and circumlocutions; and that the things, they were continually to give and receive information about, might be the easier and quicker understood.

Locke.

AMBA'GIOUS. adj. [from ambages.] Circumlocutory; perplexed; tedious.

Dict.

AMBASSA'DE. n. f. [ambassade, Fr.] Embassy; character or business of an ambassador; a word not now in use.

When you disgraced me in my ambassade,

Then I degraded you from being king.

Shak. Henry VI.

AMBA'SSADOUR. n. f. [ambassadeur, Fr. embaxador, Span.] It is written differently, as it is supposed to come from the French or Spanish language; and the original derivation being uncertain, it is not easy to settle its orthography. Some derive it from the Hebrew מַשְׁכֵּן, to tell, and מַשְׁכֵּן, a messenger; others from ambactus, which, in the old Gaulish, signified a servant; whence ambascia, in low Latin, is found to signify service, and ambasciator, a servant; others deduce it from ambacht, in old

Teutonic,

Teutonic, signifying a government, and Junius mentions a possibility of its descent from ambas; and others from am for ad, and bassus, low, as supposing the act of sending an ambassador, to be in some sort an act of submission. All these derivations lead to write ambassador, not embassador.]

A person sent in a publick manner from one sovereign power to another, and supposed to represent the power from which he is sent. The person of an ambassador is inviolable.

Ambassador is, in popular language, the general name of a messenger from a sovereign power, and sometimes, ludicrously, from common persons. In the juridical and formal language, it signifies particularly a minister of the highest rank residing in another country, and is distinguished from an envoy, who is of less dignity.

Give first admittance to th' ambassadors. Shak. Hamlet.

Rais'd by these hopes, I sent no news before,

Nor ask'd you leave, nor did your faith implore;

But come, without a pledge, my own ambassador. Dryden.

Oft have their black ambassadors appear'd

Loaden with gifts, and fill'd the courts of Zama. Add. Cato.

AMBA'SSADRESS. n. f. [ambassadrice, Fr.]

1. The lady of an ambassador.

2. In ludicrous language, a woman sent on a message.

Well, my ambassadors—

Come you to menace war, and loud defiance?

Or does the peaceful olive grace your brow? Rowe's Penit.

AMBASSAGE. n. f. [from ambassador.] An embassy; the business of an ambassador.

Maximilian entertained them with dilatory answers; so as the formal part of their ambassage might well warrant their further stay. Bacon's Henry VII.

AMBER. n. f. [from ambar, Arab. whence the lower writers formed ambarum.]

A yellow transparent substance of a gummous or bituminous consistence, but a resinous taste, and a smell like oil of turpentine; chiefly found in the Baltick sea, along the coasts of Prussia. Some naturalists refer it to the vegetable, others to the mineral, and some even to the animal kingdom. Pliny describes it as a resinous juice, oozing from aged pines and firs, and discharged thence into the sea; where, undergoing some alteration, it is thrown, in this form, upon the shores of Prussia, which lie very low. He adds, that it was hence the ancients gave it the denomination of succinum, from succus, juice. This opinion of the ancient naturalist is confirmed by the observation of many of the moderns, particularly Father Camelli. Philos. Transact. N<sup>o</sup> 290. Some have imagined it a concretion of the tears of birds; others, the urine of a beast; others, the scum of the lake Cephissus, near the Atlantick; others, a congelation formed in the Baltick, and in some fountains, where it is found swimming like pitch. Others suppose it a bitumen trickling into the sea from subterraneous sources; but this opinion is also discarded, as good amber having been found in digging at a considerable distance from the sea, as that gathered on the coast. Boerhaave ranks it with camphire, which is a concrete oil of aromatick plants, elaborated by heat into a crystalline form. Amber assumes all figures in the ground; that of a pear, an almond, a pea; and, among others, there have been found letters very well formed, and even Hebrew and Arabick characters. Within some pieces of amber have been found leaves, and insects included; which seems to indicate, either that the amber was originally in a fluid state, or, that having been exposed to the sun, it was softened, and rendered susceptible of the leaves and insects. Amber, when rubbed, draws or attracts bodies to it; and, by friction, is brought to yield light pretty copiously in the dark. Some distinguish amber into yellow, white, brown, and black: but the two latter are supposed to be of a different nature and denomination; the one called jet, the other ambergris. The white is most valued for medicinal uses, and the yellow for being wrought into beads and toys, because of its transparency. Trev. Chamb.

Liquid amber, is a kind of native balsam or resin, like turpentine; clear, reddish, or yellowish; of a pleasant smell, almost like ambergris. It flows from an incision made in the bark of a fine large tree in New Spain, called by the natives osofol; but it hardens, as it grows older, into a solid form, and is brought to us in barrels. It is reputed an excellent balsam. Chambers.

If light penetrateth any clear body, that is coloured, as painted glass, amber, water, and the like, it gives the light the colour of its medium. Peacham on Drawing.

No interwoven reeds a garland made,

To hide his brows within the vulgar shade;

But poplar wreathes around his temples spread,

And tears of amber trickled down his head. Addis. Italy.

The spoils of elephants the roofs inlay,

And studded amber darts a golden ray. Pope's Odyssey.

AMBER. adj. Consisting of amber.

With scarfs, and fans, and double charge of brav'ry,

With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knav'ry.

Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

AMBER DRINK. n. f. Drink of the colour of amber, or resembling amber in colour and transparency.

All your clear amber drink is flat. Bacon's Nat. History.

AMBERGRIS. n. f. [from amber and gris, or grey; that is, grey amber.]

A fragrant drug, that melts almost like wax, commonly of a greyish or ash colour, used both as a perfume and a cordial. It is found on the sea coasts of several warm countries, and on the western coasts of Ireland. Some imagine it to be the excrement of a bird, which, being melted by the heat of the sun, and washed off the shore by the waves, is swallowed by whales, who return it back in the condition we find it. Others conclude it to be the excrement of a cetaceous fish, because sometimes found in the intestines of such animals. But we have no instance of any excrement capable of melting like wax; and if it were the excrement of a whale, it should rather be found where these animals abound, as about Greenland. Others take it for a kind of wax or gum, which distils from trees, and drops into the sea, where it congeals. Many of the orientals imagine it springs out of the sea, as naphtha does out of some fountains. Others suppose it a sea mushroom, torn up from the bottom by the violence of tempests. Others assert it to be a vegetable production, issuing out of the root of a tree, whose roots always shoot toward the sea, and discharge themselves into it. Others maintain, that ambergris is made from the honey-combs, which fall into the sea from the rocks, where the bees had formed their nests; several persons having seen pieces that were half ambergris, and half plain honey-comb; and others have found large pieces of ambergris, in which, when broke, honey-comb, and honey too, were found in the middle. Some affirm it to be a true animal concrete, formed in balls in the body of the male spermaceti whale, and lodged in a large oval bag over the testicles. But, besides that it is not one spermaceti whale in a hundred, that is found to have ambergris, Neumann, chemist to the king of Prussia, absolutely denies it to be an animal substance, as not yielding in the analysis, any one animal principle. It may indeed be found in whales, but it must have been swallowed by them. He concludes it to be a bitumen issuing out of the earth into the sea; at first of a viscous consistence, but hardening, by its mixture with some liquid naphtha, into the form in which we find it. Trevoux. Chambers.

Bermudas wall'd with rocks, who does not know

That happy island, where huge lemons grow,

Where shining pearl, coral, and many a pound,

On the rich shore, of ambergris is found. Waller.

AMBER SEED, or musk seed, resembles millet, is of a bitterish taste, and brought dry from Martinico and Egypt. The Egyptians use it internally as a cordial. It gives a grateful scent to the breath after eating. Chambers.

AMBER TREE. n. f. [frutex Africanus ambram spirans.] A shrub, whose beauty is in its small evergreen leaves, which grow as close as heath, and, being bruised between the fingers, emit a very fragrant odour. Millar.

AMBIDEXTER. n. f. [Lat.]

1. A man who has equally the use of both his hands.

Rodiginus, undertaking to give a reason of ambidexters, and left-handed men, delivereth a third opinion. Brown's Vul. Err.

2. A man who is equally ready to act on either side, in party disputes. This sense is ludicrous.

AMBIDEXTERITY. n. f. [from ambidexter.]

1. The quality of being able equally to use both hands.

2. Double dealing.

AMBIDEXTROUS. adj. [from ambidexter, Lat.]

1. Double dealing; practising on both sides.

Æsop condemns the double practices of trimmers, and all false, shuffling, and ambidextrous dealings. L'Estrange's Fab.

2. Having, with equal facility, the use of either hand

Others, not considering ambidextrous and left-handed men, do totally submit unto the efficacy of the liver. Vulgar Err.

AMBIDEXTROUSNESS. n. f. [from ambidextrous.] The quality of being ambidextrous. Dist.

AMBIENT. adj. [ambiens, Lat.] Surrounding; encompassing; investing.

This which yields or fills

All space, the ambient air wide-interfus'd. Paradise Lost.

The thickness of a plate requisite to produce any colour, depends only on the density of the plate, and not on that of the ambient medium. Newton's Opticks.

Around him dance the rosy hours,

And damasking the ground with flow'rs,

With ambient sweets perfume the morn. Fenton to L. Gower.

Illustrious virtues, who by turns have rose,

With happy laws her empire to sustain,

And with full pow'r assert her ambient main. Prior.

The ambient æther is too liquid and empty, to impel horizontally with that prodigious celerity. Bentley's Sermons.

AMBIGU. n. f. [French.] An entertainment, consisting not of regular courses, but of a medley of dishes set on together.

When straiten'd in your time, and servants few,

You'd richly then compose an ambigu;

Where first and second course, and your desert,

All in our single table have their part. King's Art of Cookery.

AMBIGUITY. n. f. [from ambiguous.] Doubtfulness of meaning; uncertainty of signification; double meaning.

With ambiguities they often entangle themselves, not marking what doth agree to the word of God in itself, and what in regard of outward accidents. Hooker, b. v.

We can clear these ambiguities,

And know their spring, their head, their true descent.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

The words are of single signification, without any ambiguity; and therefore I shall not trouble you, by straining for an interpretation, where there is no difficulty; or distinction, where there is no difference. South.

AMBIGUOUS. adj. [ambiguus, Lat.]

1. Doubtful; having two meanings; of uncertain signification.

But what have been thy answers, what but dark,

Ambiguous, and with doubtful sense deluding. Par. Regain.

Some expressions in the covenant were ambiguous, and were left so; because the persons who framed them, were not all of one mind. Clarendon, b. viii.

2. Applied to persons using doubtful expressions. It is applied to expressions, or those that use them, not to a dubious, or suspended state of mind.

Th' ambiguous god, who rul'd her lab'ring breast,

In these mysterious words his mind express;

Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest. } Dryd.

Silence at length the gay Antinous broke,

Constrain'd a smile, and thus ambiguous spoke. Pope's Odyss.

AMBIGUOUSLY. adv. [from ambiguous.] In an ambiguous manner; doubtfully; uncertainly; with double meaning.

AMBIGUOUSNESS. n. f. [from ambiguous.] The quality of being ambiguous; uncertainty of meaning; duplicity of signification.

AMBIGUOUS. n. f. [from ambo, Lat. and λογος.] Talk of ambiguous or doubtful signification. Dict.

AMBIGUOUS. adj. [from ambo and loquor, Lat.] Using ambiguous and doubtful expressions. Dict.

AMBIGUOUS. n. f. [ambiloquium, Lat.] The use of doubtful and indeterminate expressions; discourse of doubtful meaning. D.

AMBIT. n. f. [ambitus, Lat.] The compass or circuit of any thing; the line that encompasses any thing.

The tusk of a wild boar winds about almost into a perfect ring or hoop; only it is a little writhen. In measuring by the ambit, it is long or round about a foot and two inches; its basis an inch over. Grew's Museum.

AMBITION. n. f. [ambitio, Lat.] The desire of something higher than is possessed at present.

1. The desire of preferment or honour.

Who would think, without having such a mind as Antiphius, that so great goodness could not have bound gratefulness? and so high advancement not have satisfied his ambition? Sidn.

2. The desire of any thing great or excellent.

The quick'ning power would be, and so would rest;

The sense would not be only, but be well:

But wit's ambition longeth to the best,

For it desires in endless bliss to dwell. Sir J. Davies.

Urge them, while their souls

Are capable of this ambition;

Left zeal, now melted by the windy breath

Of soft petitions, pity and remorse,

Cool and congeal again to what it was. Shakesp. K. John.

3. It is used with to before a verb, and of before a noun.

I had a very early ambition to recommend my self to your Lordship's patronage. Addison.

There was an ambition of wit, and an affectation of gayety.

Pope's Preface to his Letters.

AMBITIOUS. adj. [ambitiosus, Lat.]

1. Seized or touched with ambition; desirous of advancement; eager of honours; aspiring. It has the particle of before the object of ambition.

The neighb'ring monarchs, by thy beauty led,

Contend in crowds, ambitious of thy bed:

The world is at thy choice, except but one,

Except but him thou canst not choose alone. Dryd. Fables.

You have been pleased not to suffer an old man to go discontented out of the world, for want of that protection, of which he had been so long ambitious. Dryden.

Trajan, a prince ambitious of glory, descended to the mouths of the Tigris and Euphrates, and went upon the ocean, where, seeing a vessel trading to the Indies, he had thoughts of out-doing Alexander. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. Eager to grow bigger; aspiring.

I have seen

Th' ambitious ocean swell, and rage, and foam,

To be exalted with the threatening clouds. Shakesp. J. Cas.

AMBITIOUSLY. adv. [from ambitious.] In an ambitious manner; with eagerness of advancement or preference.

With such glad hearts did our despairing men

Salute th' appearance of the prince's fleet;

And each ambitiously would claim the ken,

That with first eyes did distant safety meet. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

Here Flecknoe, as a place to fame well known,

Ambitiously design'd his Sh—'s throne. Dryden.

AMBITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from ambitious.] The quality of being ambitious.

VOL. I.

AMBITUDE. n. f. [ambio, Lat.] Compass; circuit; circumference.

TO AMBLE. v. n. [ambler, Fr. ambulo, Lat.]

1. To move upon an amble. [See AMBLE.]

It is good, on some occasions, to enjoy as much of the present, as will not endanger our futurity; and to provide ourselves of the virtuoso's saddle, which will be sure to amble, when the world is upon the hardest trot. Dryden's Virgil, Dedication.

2. To move easily, without hard shocks, or shaking.

Who ambles time withal?—A rich man that hath not the gout; for he lives merrily, because he feels no pain; knowing no burden of heavy tedious penury: him time ambles withal. Shakespeare's As you like it.

3. In a ludicrous sense, to move with submission, and by direction; as, a horse that ambles, uses a gait not natural.

A laughing, toying, wheedling, whimpering she,

Shall make him amble on a gossip's message,

And take the distaff with a hand as patient,

As ere did Hercules. Rowe's Jane Shore.

4. To walk daintily and affectedly.

I am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty,

To strut before a wanton ambling nymph. Shakesp. Ric. III.

AMBLE. n. f. [from to amble.] A pace or movement in which the horse removes both his leg on one side; as, on the far side, he removes his fore and hinder leg of the same side at one time, whilst the legs on the near side stand still; and when the far legs are upon the ground, the near side removes the fore leg and hinder leg, and the legs on the far side stand still. An amble is the first pace of young colts, but when they have strength to trot, they quit it. There is no amble in the manage; riding-masters allow only of walk, trot, and gallop. A horse may be put from a trot to a gallop without stopping; but cannot be put from an amble to a gallop without a stop, which interrupts the justness of the manage. Farrier's Dict.

AMBLER. n. f. [from to amble.] A horse that has been taught to amble; a pacer.

AMBLINGLY. adv. [from ambling.] With an ambling movement.

AMBROSIA. n. f. [αμβροσία.]

1. The imaginary food of the gods, from which every thing eminently pleasing to the smell or taste, is called ambrosia.

2. The name of a plant.

It has male sterculous flowers, produced on separate parts of the same plant from the fruit, having no visible petals; the fruit which succeeds the female flowers, is shaped like a club, and is prickly, containing one oblong seed in each.

The species are, 1. The marine or sea ambrosia. 2. Taller unfavoury sea ambrosia. 3. The tallest Canada ambrosia, with rough plane tree leaves. The first sort should be sown early in the spring, under a warm wall. The second and third are common American weeds, which should be sown upon a gentle hot-bed in the spring. None of them have much beauty to recommend them. Millar.

AMBROSIAL. adj. [from ambrosia.] Partaking of the nature or qualities of ambrosia; fragrant; delicious; delectable.

Thus while God spake, ambrosial fragrance fill'd

All heaven, and in the blessed spirits elect

Sense of new joy ineffable diffus'd. Milton's Parad. Lost.

The gifts of heaven my following song pursues,

Aerial honey, and ambrosial dews. Dryden's Virg. Georg.

To farthest shores th' ambrosial spirit flies,

Sweet to the world, and grateful to the skies. Pope.

AMBRY. n. f. [a word corrupted from almonry.]

1. The place where the almoner lives, or where alms are distributed.

2. The place where plate, and utensils for housekeeping, are kept; also a cupboard for keeping cold victuals: a word still used in the northern counties, and in Scotland.

AMBS ACE. n. f. [from ambo, Lat. and ace.] A double ace; so called when two dice turn up the ace.

I had rather be in this choice, than throw ambs ace for my life. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

This will be yet clearer, by considering his own instance of casting ambs ace, though it partake more of contingency than of freedom. Supposing the posture of the party's hand who did throw the dice, supposing the figure of the table, and of the dice themselves, supposing the measure of force applied, and supposing all other things which did concur to the production of that cast, to be the very same they were, there is no doubt but in this case the cast is necessary. Bramh. against Hobbes.

AMBULATION. n. f. [ambulatio, Lat.] The act of walking.

From the occult and invisible motion of the muscles in station, proceed more offensive lassitudes, than from ambulation.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. i.

AMBULATORY. adj. [ambulo, Lat.]

1. That which has the power or faculty of walking.

The gradient, or ambulatory, are such as require some basis, or bottom, to uphold them in their motions: such were those strange inventions, commonly attributed to Dædalus, or self-moving statues, which, unless violently detained, would of themselves run away. Wilkins's Mathemat. Magick.

2. That which happens during a passage or walk.
He was sent to conduce hither the princess Henrietta Maria, of whom his majesty had an ambulatory view in his travels.
Wotton.

3. Moveable; as, an ambulatory court; a court which removes from place to place for the exercise of its jurisdiction.

A'MBURY. n. f. A bloody wart on any part of a horse's body.
AMBUSCA'DE. n. f. [embuscade, Fr. See AMBUSH.] A private station in which men lie to surprise others; ambush.

Then waving high her torch, the signal made,
Which rous'd the Grecians from their ambuscade. Dryden.

When I behold a fashionable table set out, I fancy that gouts, fevers, and lethargies, with innumerable distempers, lie in ambuscade among the dishes. Addison. Spect. N° 195.

AMBUSCA'DO. n. f. [emboscada, Span.] A private post, in order to surprise an enemy.

Sometimes she driveth o'er a soldier's neck,
And then he dreams of cutting foreign throats,
Of breaches, ambuscadoes, Spanish blades,
Of healths five fathom deep. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

A'MBUSH. n. f. [embusche, Fr. from bois a wood; whence em-buscher, to hide in woods, ambushes being commonly laid under the concealment of thick forests.]

1. The post where soldiers or assassins are placed, in order to fall unexpectedly upon an enemy.

Charge, charge, their ground the faint Taxallans yield,
Bold in close ambush, base in open field.
Dryden's Indian Emperour.

2. The act of surprising another, by lying in wait, or lodging in a secret post.

Nor shall we need,
With dangerous expedition, to invade
Heav'n, whose high walls fear no assault or siege,
Or ambush from the deep. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.

3. The state of being posted privately, in order to surprise; the state of lying in wait.

The residue retired deceitfully towards the place of their ambush, whence issued more. Then the earl gathered his small company about him, and maintained the fight. But the enemy, whether perceiving some succours advancing, or whether intending to draw the English further into their ambush, turned away at an easy pace. Hayward.

4. Perhaps the persons placed in private stations.

For you, my noble lord of Lancaster,
Once did I lay an ambush for your life. Shakesp. Richard II.
A'MBUSHED. adj. [from ambush.] Placed in ambush; lying in wait.

Thick as the shades, there issue swarming bands
Of ambush'd men, whom, by their arms and drefs,
To be Taxallan enemies I guess. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

AMBU'SHMENT. n. f. [from ambush; which see.] Ambush;
surprise: a word now not used.

Like as a wily fox, that having spied
Where on a sunny bank the lambs do play,
Full closely creeping by the hinder side,
Lies in ambushment of his hoped prey. Spenser's Muirpotmos.

AMBU'ST. adj. [ambustus, Lat.] Burnt; scalded. Dict.

AMBU'STION. n. f. [ambustio, Lat.] A burn; a scald.

A'MEL. n. f. [email, Fr.] The matter with which the variegated works are overlaid, which we call enamelled.

The materials of glass melted with calcined tin, compose an undianaphanous body. This white amel is the basis of all those fine concretes that goldsmiths and artificers employ in the curious art of enamelling. Boyle on Colours.

AME'N. adv. [A word of which the original has given rise to many conjectures. Scaliger writes, that it is Arabick; and the Rabbies make it the compound of the initials of three words, signifying the Lord is a faithful king; but the word seems merely Hebrew, אמן, which, with a long train of derivatives, signifies firmness, certainty, fidelity.]

A term used in devotions, by which, at the end of a prayer, we mean, so be it, at the end of a creed, so it is.

One cried, God bless us! and, Amen! the other,
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands.
Listening their fear, I could not say Amen,
When they did say God bless us. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, from everlasting and to everlasting, Amen and amen. Psaln xli. 13.

AME'NABLE. adj. [amenable, Fr. amener quelqu'un, in the French courts, signifies, to oblige one to appear to answer a charge exhibited against him.] Responsible; subject so as to be liable to enquiries or accounts.

Again, because the inferiour fort were loose and poor, and not amenable to the law, he provided, by another act, that five of the best and eldest persons of every sept, should bring in all the idle persons of their surname, to be justified by the law.

Sir John Davies on Ireland.

A'MENANCE. n. f. [It seems to come from amener, Fr.] Conduct; behaviour; mien: a word disused.

For he is fit to use in all assays,
Whether for arms and warlike amenance,
Or else for wife and civil governance. Spens. Hubb. Tale.

Well kend him so far space,
Th' enchanter, by his arms and amenance,
When under him he saw his Lybian steed to prance.
Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. vi.

To AMEND. v. a. [amender, Fr. emendo, Lat.]

1. To correct; to change any thing that is wrong to something better.

2. To reform the life, or leave wickedness.

In these two cases we usually write mend. See MEND.
Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place. Jerem. vii. 3.

3. To restore passages in writers which the copiers are supposed to have depraved; to recover the true reading.

To AME'ND. v. n. To grow better. To amend differs from to improve; to improve supposes or not denies that the thing is well already, but to amend implies something wrong.

As my fortune either amends or impairs, I may declare it unto you. Sidney.

At his touch
Such sanctity hath heaven given his hand,
They presently amend. Shakesp. Macbeth.

AME'NDE. n. f. [French.] This word, in French, signifies a fine, by which recompense is supposed to be made for the fault committed. We use, in a cognate signification, the word amends.

AME'NDMENT. n. f. [amendement, Fr.]

1. A change from bad for the better.

Before it was presented on the stage, some things in it have passed your approbation and amendment. Dryd. Aureng. Pref.

Man is always mending and altering his works; but nature observes the same tenour, because her works are so perfect, that there is no place for amendments; nothing that can be reprehended. Ray on the Creation.

There are many natural defects in the understanding, capable of amendment, which are overlooked and wholly neglected. Locke.

2. Reformation of life.

Our Lord and Saviour was of opinion, that they which would not be drawn to amendment of life, by the testimony which Moses and the prophets have given, concerning the mi-series that follow sinners after death, were not likely to be persuaded by other means, although God from the dead should have raised them up preachers. Hooker, b. v. § 22.

Behold! famine and plague, tribulation and anguish, are sent as scourges for amendment. 2 Esdras, xvi. 19.

Though a serious purpose of amendment, and true acts of contrition, before the habit, may be accepted by God; yet there is no sure judgment whether this purpose be serious, or these acts true acts of contrition. Hammond's Practical Catechism.

3. Recovery of health.

Your honour's players hearing your amendment,
Are come to play a pleasant comedy. Shakesp. Tam. Shrew.

AME'NDMENT. [emendatio, Lat.] It signifies, in law, the correction of an error committed in a process, and espied before or after judgment; and sometimes after the party's seeking advantage by the error. Blount.

AME'NDER. n. f. [from amend.] The person that amends any thing.

AME'NDS. n. f. [amende, Fr. from which it seems to be accidentally corrupted.] Recompense; compensation; attonement.

If I have too austere punished you,
Your compensation makes amends. Shakesp. Tempest.

Of the amends recovered, little or nothing returns to those that had suffered the wrong, but commonly all runs into the prince's coffers. Sir W. Raleigh's Essays.

Where I a pris'ner chain'd, scarce freely draw
The air imprison'd also, close and damp,
Unwholsome draught; but here I feel amends,
The breath of heav'n fresh blowing, pure and sweet,
With day-spring born; here leave me to respire.

Milton's Sampson Agonistes.
Some little hopes I have yet remaining, that I make the world some part of amends for many ill plays, by an heroick poem. Dryden's Aureng. Preface.

If our souls be immortal, this makes abundant amends and compensation for the frailties of life, and sufferings of this state. Tillotson.

It is a strong argument for retribution hereafter, that vir-tuous persons are very often unfortunate, and vicious persons prosperous; which is repugnant to the nature of a Being, who appears infinitely wise and good in all his works; unless we may suppose that such a promiscuous distribution, which was necessary for carrying on the designs of providence in this life, will be rectified and made amends for in another. Spect. N° 483.

AME'NITY. n. f. [amenité, Fr. amœnitas, Lat.] Pleasantness; agreeableness of situation.

If the situation of Babylon was such at first, as it was in the days of Herodotus, it was rather a seat of amenity and pleasure, than conducing unto this intention. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To AME'RCE. v. a. [amercier, Fr. οφθαλμῶν μὲν ἀμείρεται, seems to give the original.]

1. To punish with a pecuniary penalty; to exact a fine; to inflict

dict a forfeiture. It is a word originally juridical, but adopted by other writers.

But I'll amerce you with so strong a fine,
That you shall all repent the loss of mine.

Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

All the suitors were considerably amerced; yet this proved but an ineffectual remedy for those mischiefs. Hale's Law of Engl.

2. Sometimes with the particle in before the fine.

They shall amerce him in an hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel. Deut. xxii. 19.

3. Sometimes it is used, in imitation of the Greek construction, with the particle of.

Millions of spirits, for his fault amerc'd

Of heav'n, and from eternal splendours flung

For his revolt.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

AMERCER. n. f. [from amerce.] He that sets a fine upon any misdemeanour; he that decrees or inflicts any pecuniary punishment or forfeiture.

AMERCEMENT. } n. f. [from amerce.] The pecuniary punishment of an offender, who stands at the mercy of the king, or other lord in his court. Cowell.

All amercements and fines that shall be imposed upon them, shall come unto themselves. Spenser's State of Ireland.

AMES ACE. n. f. [a corruption of the word ambs ace, which appears, from very old authorities, to have been early softened by omitting the b.] Two aces on two dice.

But then my study was to cog the dice,

And dext'rously to throw the lucky sice:

To shun ames ace, that swept my stakes away;

And watch the box, for fear they should convey

False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryd. Persius.

A'MESS. n. f. [corrupted from amice.] A priest's vestment. Dist.

AMETHO'DICAL. adj. [from a and method.] Out of method; without method; irregular.

AMETHYST. n. f. [ἀμέθυστος, contrary to wine, or contrary to drunkenness; so called, either because it is not quite of the colour of wine, or because it was imagined to prevent inebriation.]

A precious stone of a violet colour, bordering on purple. The oriental amethyst is the hardest, scarcest, and most valuable; it is generally of a dove colour, though some are purple, and others white like the diamond. The German is of a violet colour, and the Spanish are of three sorts; the best are the blackest or deepest violet; others are almost quite white, and some few tinged with yellow. They are found in a hill named St. Sigmunt, in Catalonia, by following the vein of reddish or black earth, or a vein in a rock so coloured, and are all hexangular, and pointed like crystal. Sometimes a great number is found sticking together, like the Bristol diamonds; but the best are found loose in the chinks of the rock. Beautiful ones are also found in the Pyreneans, and in the mountains of Auvergne. The amethyst is not extremely hard, but easy to be engraved upon, and is next in value to the emerald. Savary. Chambers.

I observed some stones that nearly approached the granate complexion; and several very nearly resembling the amethyst.

Woodward on Fossils.

A'METHYST [in heraldry] signifies the same colour in a nobleman's coat, that purpure does in a gentleman's.

AMETHYSTINE. adj. [from amethyst.] Resembling an amethyst in colour.

AMIALE. adj. [aimable, Fr.]

1. Lovely; pleasing.

That which is good in the actions of men, doth not only delight as profitable, but as amiable also. Hooker.

She told her, while she kept it,

'Twould make her amiable, subdue my father

Intirely to her love; but if she lost it,

Or made a gift of it, my father's eye

Should hold her loathed.

Shakesp. Othello.

2. Pretending love; shewing love.

Spend all, only give me so much time in exchange, as to lay amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford's wife; use your art of wooing. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

AMIALENESS. n. f. [from amiable.] The quality of being amiable; loveliness; power of raising love.

As soon as the natural gaiety and amiableness of the young man wears off, they have nothing left to commend them, but lie by among the lumber and refuse of the species. Addis. Guard.

AMIABLY. adv. [from amiable.] In an amiable manner; in such a manner as to excite love.

AMICABLE. adj. [amicabilis, Lat.] Friendly; kind. It is commonly used of more than one; as, they live in an amicable manner; but we seldom say, an amicable action, or an amicable man, though it be so used in this passage.

O grace serene! oh virtue heav'nly fair,

Divine oblivion of low-thoughted care!

Fresh blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky!

And faith, our early immortality!

Enter each mild, each amicable guest;

Receive and wrap me in eternal rest. Pope's Elo. to Abelard.

AMICABLENESS. n. f. [from amicable.] The quality of being amicable; friendliness; goodwill.

A'MICABLY. adv. [from amicable.] In an amicable manner; in a friendly way; with goodwill and concord.

They see

Through the dun mist, in blooming beauty fresh,

Two lovely youths, that amicably walkt

O'er verdant meads, and pleas'd, perhaps, revolv'd

Anna's late conquests.

Philips.

I found my subjects amicably join,

To lessen their defects, by citing mine.

Prior.

In Holland itself, where it is pretended that the variety of sects live so amicably together, it is notorious how a turbulent party, joining with the Arminians, did attempt to destroy the republic. Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England man.

A'MICE. n. f. [amictus, Lat. amict, Fr. Primum ex sex indumentis episcopo & presbyteriis communibus sunt, amictus, alba, cingulum, stola, manipulus, & planeta. Du Cange. Amictus quo collum stringitur, & pectus tegitur, castitatem interioris hominis designat; tegit enim cor, ne vanitates cogitet, stringit autem collum, ne inde ad linguam transeat mendacium. Bruno.] The first or undermost part of a priest's habit, over which he wears the alb.

Thus pass'd the night so foul, till morning fair

Came forth with pilgrim steps in amice grey. Paradise Reg.

On some a priest, succinct in amice white,

Attends.

Pope's Dunciad, b. iv. l. 441.

AMID. }

AMIDST. } prep. [from a and mid, or midst.]

1. In the midst; equally distant from either extremity.

Of the fruit

Of each tree in the garden we may eat;

But of the fruit of this fair tree, amidst

The garden, God hath said, ye shall not eat. Paradise Lost.

The two ports, the bagnio, and Donatelli's statue of the great duke, amidst the four slaves, chained to his pedestal, are very noble sights. Addison on Italy.

2. Mingled with; surrounded by; in the abmit of another thing.

Amid my flock with woe my voice I tear,

And, but bewitch'd, who to his flock would moan? Sidney.

So hills amid the air encounter'd hills,

Hurl'd to and fro, with jaculation dire. Milt. Parad. Lost.

What have I done, to name that wealthy swain,

The boar amidst my crystal streams I bring;

And southern winds to blast my flow'ry spring. Dryd. Virg.

Amata's breast the fury thus invades,

And fires with rage amid the sylvan shades. Dryd. Æneid.

3. Amongst; conjoined with.

What tho' no real voice nor sound

Amid their radiant orbs be found?

In reason's ear they all rejoice,

And utter forth a glorious voice,

For ever singing, as they shine,

"The hand that made us is divine." Addis. Spect. No 465.

AMISS. adv. [from a, which, in this form of composition, often signifies according to, and miss, the English particle, which shews any thing, like the Greek μαρκα, to be wrong; as, to miscount, to count erroneously; to misdo, to commit a crime: amiss therefore signifies not right, or out of order.]

1. Faulty; criminal.

For that which thou hast sworn to do amiss,

Is yet amiss when it is truly done.

Shakesp. King John.

2. Faultily; criminally.

We hope therefore to reform ourselves, if at any time we have done amiss, is not to sever ourselves from the church we were of before. Hooker, b. iii. § 1.

O ye powers that search

The heart of man, and weigh his inmost thoughts,

If I have done amiss, impute it not.

Addison's Cato.

3. In an ill sense.

She sigh'd withal, they constru'd all amiss,

And thought she wish'd to kill who long'd to kiss. Fairfax.

4. Wrong; improper; unfit.

Examples have not generally the force of laws, which all men ought to keep, but of counsels only and persuasions, not amiss to be followed by them, whose case is the like. Hooker.

Methinks, though a man had all science, and all principles, yet it might not be amiss to have some conscience. Tillot's Pref.

5. Wrong; not according to the perfection of the thing, whatever it be.

Your kindred is not much amiss, 'tis true;

Yet I am somewhat better born than you.

Dryden.

I built a wall, and when the masons plaid the knaves, nothing delighted me so much as to stand by, while my servants threw down what was amiss. Swift.

6. Reproachful; irreverent.

Every people, nation, and language, which speak any thing amiss against the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, shall be cut in pieces, and their houses shall be made a dunghil; because there is no other God that can deliver after this sort.

Daniel, iii. 29.

7. Impaired in health; as, I was somewhat amiss yesterday, but am well to day.

8. Amiss is marked as an adverb, though it cannot always be adverbially rendered; because it always follows the substantive to which,

which it relates, contrary to the nature of adjectives in English; and though we say the action was amiss, we never say an amiss action.

9. Amiss is used by Shakespeare as a noun substantive.

To my sick soul, as sin's true nature is,
Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss. Hamlet.

AMISSI<sup>ON</sup>. n. f. [amissio, Lat.] Loss.

TO AMIT. v. a. [amitto, Lat.] To lose: a word little in use.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquireth no new form, but rather a consistence or determination of its diffuency, and amitteth not its essence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

AMITY. n. f. [amitie, Fr. amicitia, Lat.] Friendship, whether publick between nations, opposed to war, or among the people, opposed to discord, or between private persons.

The prophet David did think, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of inviolable amity. Hooker, b. v. § 38.

The monarchy of Great Britain was in league and amity with all the world. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

You have a noble and a true conceit
Of godlike amity; which appears most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your lord. Shak. Merch. of Ven.
And ye, oh Tyrians, with immortal hate
Pursue this race, this service dedicate
To my deplored ashes; let there be

'Twixt us and them no league nor amity. Sir John Denham.

AMMONIAC. n. f. The name of a drug.

GUM AMMONIAC is brought from the East Indies, and is supposed to ooze from an umbelliferous plant. Dioscorides says, it is the juice of a kind of ferula growing in Barbary, and the plant is called agafyllis. Pliny calls the tree metopion, which, he says, grows near the temple of Jupiter Ammon, whence the gum takes its name. It ought to be in dry drops, white within, yellowish without, easily fusible, resinous, somewhat bitter, and of a very sharp taste and smell, somewhat like garlick. This gum is said to have served the ancients for incense, in their sacrifices. It enters several medicinal compositions, as an attenuant and detergent; and, outwardly applied, it is resolute and suppurative. Savary. Trevoux.

SAL AMMONIAC is a volatile salt of two kinds, ancient and modern. The ancient sort, described by Pliny and Dioscorides, was a native salt, generated in those large inns or caravanferas, where the crouds of pilgrims, coming from the temple of Jupiter Ammon, used to lodge; who, in those parts, travelling upon camels, and those creatures when in Cyrene, a province of Egypt, where that celebrated temple stood, urining in the stables, or, say some, in the parched sands, out of this urine, which is remarkably strong, arose a kind of salt, denominated sometimes from the temple, Ammoniac, and sometimes from the country, Cyreniac. Since the cessation of these pilgrimages, no more of this salt is produced there; and, from this deficiency, some suspect there never was any such thing: but this suspicion is removed, by the large quantities of a salt, nearly of the same nature, thrown out by mount Ætna. The characters of the ancient sal ammoniac are, that it cools water, turns aqua fortis into aqua regia, and consequently dissolves gold.

The modern sal ammoniac is entirely factitious, and made in Egypt; where several long-necked glass bottles, being filled with foot, a little sea salt, and the urine of cattle, and having their mouths luted with a piece of wet cotton, are placed over an oven or furnace, contrived for the purpose, in a thick bed of ashes, nothing but the necks appearing, and kept there two days and a night, with a continual strong fire. The steam swells up the cotton, and forms a paste at the vent-hole, hindering the salts from evaporating; which, being confined, stick to the top of the bottle, and are, upon breaking it, taken out in those large cakes, which they send to England. Only foot exhaled from dung, is the proper ingredient in this preparation; and the dung of camels affords the strongest and best.

Our chymists imitate the Egyptian sal ammoniac, by adding one part of common salt to five of urine; with which some mix that quantity of foot, and putting the whole in a vessel, they raise from it, by sublimation, a white, friable, farinaceous substance, which they call sal ammoniac. There are various preparations of this salt used in pharmacy; as, sublimate of sal ammoniac, and flowers of sal ammoniac, used as sudorificks, diureticks, and good aperients; volatile sal ammoniac, used against malignant fevers, as a sudorifick, and in pocket bottles; spirit of sal ammoniac, of various kinds. Chambers.

AMMONIACAL. adj. [from ammoniac.] Having the properties of ammoniac salt.

Human blood calcin'd, yields no fixed salt; nor is it a sal ammoniac; for that remains immutable after repeated distillations; and distillation destroys the ammoniacal quality of animal salts, and turns them alkaline: so that it is a salt neither quite fixed, nor quite volatile, nor quite acid, nor quite alkaline, nor quite ammoniacal; but soft and benign, approaching nearest to the nature of sal ammoniac. Arbuthnot.

AMMUNITION. n. f. [supposed by some to come from amonitio, which, in the barbarous ages, seems to have signified supply of provision; but it, surely, may be more reasonably derived from munitio, fortification; chofes a munitions, things for the fortresses.] Military stores.

They must make themselves defensible against strangers; and must have the assistance of some able military man, and convenient arms and ammunition for their defence. Bacon.

The colonel staid to put in the ammunition he brought with him; which was only twelve barrels of powder, and twelve hundred weight of match. Clarendon, b. viii.

All the rich mines of learning ransackt are,
To furnish ammunition for this war. Denham.

But now his stores of ammunition spent,
His naked valour is his only guard:
Rare thunders are from his dumb cannon sent,
And solitary guns are scarcely heard. Dryden's Annus Mir.

AMMUNITION BREAD. n. f. Bread for the supply of the armies or garrisons.

AMNESTY. n. f. [ἀμνηστία.] An act of oblivion; an act by which crimes against the government, to a certain time, are so obliterated, that they can never be brought into charge.

I never read of a law enacted to take away the force of all laws, by which a man may safely commit upon the last of June, what he would infallibly be hanged for, if he committed it on the first of July; by which the greatest criminals may escape, provided they continue long enough in power, to antiquate their crimes, and, by stifling them a while, deceive the legislature into an amnesty. Swift.

AMNICOLIST. n. f. [amnicola, Lat.] Inhabiting near a river. D.

AMNIGENOUS. n. f. [amnigenus, Lat.] Born of a river. Dict.

AMNION. } n. f. [Lat. perhaps from ἀμνιον.]

AMNIOS. } The innermost membrane with which the foetus in the womb is most immediately covered, and with which the rest of the secundines, the chorion, and alantois, are ejected after birth. It is whiter and thinner than the chorion. It also contains a nutritious humour, separated by glands for that purpose, with which the foetus is preserved. It is outwardly clothed with the urinary membrane, and the chorion, which sometimes stick so close to one another, that they can scarce be separated. It has also its vessels from the same origin as the chorion. Quincy.

AMOMUM. n. f. [Lat.] A sort of fruit.

The commentators on Pliny and Dioscorides differ about the ancient amomum; but the generality of them suppose it to be a fruit different from ours. Scaliger is confident, that the amomum was no fruit; but the wood, which bore some resemblance to a bunch of grapes, and was used in embalming of bodies; whence the name mummy was given to bodies embalmed with it. The modern amomum appears to be the sison, or sium, of the ancients, or bastard stone-parisley. It resembles the muscat grape, grows in clusters, and is about the thickness of a pea, round, membranous, and divided into three cells, that contain several brown angular grains, of a very strong aromatick taste and smell. This fruit is brought from the East Indies, and makes part of the composition of treacle. It is of a hot spicy taste and smell. There is likewise another paler seed, named amomum; but neither are in much repute in physick. Trevoux. Chambers.

AMO'NG. } prep. [among, gemang, Saxon.]

AMO'NGST. } 1. Mingled with; placed with other persons or things; on every side.

Amongst strawberries sow here and there some borage-seed; and you shall find the strawberries under those leaves far more large than their fellows. Bacon's Natural Hist. N° 441.

The voice of God they heard,
Now walking in the garden, by soft winds
Brought to their ears, while day declin'd: they heard,
And from his presence hid themselves, among
The thickest trees, both man and wife. Paradise Lost.

2. Conjoined with others, so as to make part of the number.
I have then, as you see, observed the failings of many great wits amongst the moderns, who have attempted to write an epic poem. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicat.

There were, among the old Roman statues, several of Venus in different postures and habits; as there are many particular figures of her made after the same design. Addison on Italy.

AMORIST. n. f. [from amour.] An innamorato; a galant; a man professing love.

Female beauties are as fickle in their faces as their minds; though casualties should spare them, age brings in a necessity of decay; leaving doters upon red and white, perplexed by uncertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness, and her beauty, both which are necessary to the amorist's joys and quiet. Boyle. Dict.

AMORO'SO. n. f. [Ital.] A man enamoured.

AMOROUS. adj. [amorofo, Ital.]

1. In love; enamoured; with the particle of before the thing loved; in Shakespeare, on.

Sure, my brother is amorous on Hero; and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it.

Shakespeare's Much ado about nothing.
Apes, as soon as they have brought forth their young, keep their eyes eyes fastened on them, and are never weary of admiring their beauty: so amorous is nature of whatsoever she produces.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. Naturally inclined to love; disposed to fondness; fond.
The am'rous master own'd her potent eyes,
Sigh'd when he look'd, and trembl'd as he drew;
Each flowing line confirm'd his first surprize,
And as the piece advanc'd, the passion grew. Prior.

3. Relating, or belonging to love.
I that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an am'rous looking-glass,
I, that am rudely stamp'd. Shakesp. Rich. III.

And into all things from her air inspir'd
The spirit of love, and amorous delight. Parad. Lost, b. viii.

In the amorous net
First caught they lik'd; and each his liking chose.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 586.

O! how I long my careless limbs to lay
Under the plantane's shade, and all the day
With am'rous airs my fancy entertain,
Invoke the muses, and improve my vein! Waller.

A'MOROUSLY. adv. [from amorous.] Fondly; lovingly.

When thou wilt swim in that live-bath,
Each fish, which every channel hath,
Will amorously to thee swim,
Gladder to catch thee, than thou him. Donne.

A'MOROUSNESS. n. f. [from amorous.] The quality of being amorous; fondness; lovingness; love.

All Gynecia's actions were interpreted by Basilius, as proceeding from jealousy of his amorousness. Sidney, b. ii.

I can readily believe that Lindamor has wit, and amorousness enough, to make him find it more easy to defend fair ladies, than to defend himself against them. Boyle on Colours.

AMORT. adv. [à la mort, Fr.] In the state of the dead; dejected; depressed; spiritless.

How fares my Kate? what, sweeting, all amort?
Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

AMORTIZA'TION. } n. f. [amortissement, amortissable, Fr.] The

AMO'RTIZEMENT. } right or act of transferring lands to mortmain; that is, to some community, that never is to cease.

Every one of the religious orders was confirmed by one pope or other; and they made an especial provision for them, after the laws of amortization were devised and put in use by princes.

Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

To AMORTIZE. v. a. [amortir, Fr.] To alien lands or tenements to any corporation, guild or fraternity, and their successors; which cannot be done without licence of the king, and the lord of the manour. Blount.

This did concern the kingdom to have farms sufficient to maintain an able body out of penury, and to amortize part of the lands unto the yeomanry, or middle part of the people.

Bacon's Henry VII.

To AMO'VE. v. a. [amoveo, Lat.]

1. To remove from a post or station: a juridical sense.
2. To remove; to move; to alter: a sense now out of use.

Therewith, amoved from his sober mood,

And lives he yet, said he, that wrought this act?

And do the heavens afford him vital food? Fairy Queen.

To AMO'UNT. v. n. [monter, Fr.]

1. To rise to in the accumulative quantity; to compose in the whole; with the particle to. It is used of several sums in quantities added together.

Let us compute a little more particularly how much this will amount to, or how many oceans of water would be necessary to compose this great ocean rowling in the air, without bounds or banks. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. It is used, figuratively, of the consequence rising from any thing taken altogether.

The errors of young men are the ruin of business; but the errors of aged men amount but to this, that more might have been done, or sooner. Bacon's Essays Civil and Moral.

Judgments that are made on the wrong side of the danger, amount to no more than an affectation of skill, without either credit or effect. L'Estrange.

AMO'UNT. n. f. [from To amount.] The sum total; the result of several sums or quantities accumulated.

And now, ye lying vanities of life,

Where are you now, and what is your amount?

Vexation, disappointment, and remorse. Thomson's Winter.

AMO'UR. n. f. [amour, Fr. amor, Lat.] An affair of gallantry; an intrigue: generally used of vicious love. The ou sounds like oo in poor.

No man is of so general and diffusive a lust, as to prosecute his amours all the world over; and let it burn never so outrageously, yet the impure flame will either die of itself, or consume the body that harbours it. South's Sermons.

The restless youth search'd all the world around;

But how can Jove in his amours be found?

Addison's Ovid's Metam.

A'MPER. n. f. [amppe, Sax.] A tumour, with inflammation; bile: a word said, by Skinner, to be much in use in Essex; but, perhaps, not found in books.

VOL. I.

AMPHIBIOUS. adj. [ἄμφι and βίω.] That which partakes of two natures, so as to live in two elements; as, in air and water.

A creature of amphibious nature,
On land a beast, a fish in water. Hudibras, cant. iii.

Those are called amphibious, which live freely in the air, upon the earth, and yet are observed to live long upon water, as if they were natural inhabitants of that element; though it be worth the examination to know, whether any of those creatures that live at that ease, and by choice, a good while, or at any time upon the earth, can live, a long time together, perfectly under water. Locke.

Fishes contain much oil, and amphibious animals participate somewhat of the nature of fishes, and are oily. Arbutnot.

AMPHIBIOUSNESS. n. f. [from amphibious.] The quality of being able to live in different elements.

AMPHIBOLO'GICAL. adj. [from amphibology.] Doubtful.

AMPHIBOLO'GICALLY. adv. [from amphibological.] Doubtfully; with a doubtful meaning.

AMPHIBO'LOGY. n. f. [ἄμφιλογία.] Discourse of uncertain meaning. It is distinguished from equivocation, which means the double signification of a single word; as, noli regem occidere, timere bonum est, is amphibology; captare lepores, meaning by lepores, either hares or jests, is equivocation.

Now the fallacies, whereby men deceive others, and are deceived themselves, the ancients have divided into verbal and real; of the verbal, and such as conclude from mistakes of the word, there are but two worthy our notation; the fallacy of equivocation and amphibology. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

In defining obvious appearances, we are to use what is most plain and easy; that the mind be not misled by amphibologies, or ill conceived notions, into fallacious deductions.

Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica.

AMPHIBOLOUS. adj. [ἄμφι and βίων.] Tossed from one to another; striking each way.

Never was there such an amphibolous quarrel, both parties declaring themselves for the king, and making use of his name in all their remonstrances, to justify their actions. Howell.

AMPHI'LOGY. n. f. [ἄμφι and λόγος.] Equivocation; ambiguity. D.

AMPHISBÆ'NA. n. f. [Lat. ἀμφισβᾶνν.] A serpent supposed to have two heads.

That the amphisbæna, that is, a smaller kind of serpent, which moveth forward and backward, hath two heads, or one at either extreme, was affirmed by Nicander, and others.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii.

Scorpion, and asp, and amphisbæna dire,
Ceraustes horn'd, hydrus, and ellops drear,
And dipsas. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

AMPHISCII. n. f. [Lat. ἀμφισκιοι, of ἀμφι and σκία, a shadow.]

Those people dwelling in climates, wherein the shadows, at different times of the year, fall both ways; to the north pole, when the sun is in the southern signs, and to the south pole, when he is in the northern signs. These are the people who inhabit the torrid zone.

AMPHITHE'ATRE. n. f. [of ἀμφιθέατρον, of ἀμφι and θεάσθαι.] A building in a circular or oval form, having its area encompassed with rows of seats one above another; where spectators might behold spectacles, as stage-plays, or gladiators. The theatres of the ancients were built in the form of a semicircle, only exceeding a just semicircle by one fourth part of the diameter; and the amphitheatre is two theatres joined together; so that the longest diameter of the amphitheatre, was to the shortest, as one and a half to one.

Within, an amphitheatre appear'd
Rais'd in degrees; to sixty paces rear'd,
That when a man was plac'd in one degree,
Height was allow'd for him above to see. Dryd. Fables.

Conceive a man placed in the burning iron chair at Lyons, amid the insults and mockeries of a crowded amphitheatre, and still keeping his seat; or stretched upon a grate of iron, over coals of fire, and breathing out his soul, among the exquisite sufferings of such a tedious execution, rather than renounce his religion, or blaspheme his Saviour. Addis. on the Chr. Rel.

AMPLÉ. adj. [amplus, Lat.]

1. Large; wide; extended.

Heav'n descends

In universal bounty, shedding herbs,
And fruits, and flowers, on nature's ample lap. Thomson.

2. Great in bulk.

Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?—

She took 'em, and read 'em in my presence,

And now and then an ample tear trill'd down
Her delicate cheeks. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. Unlimited; without restriction.

Have what you ask, your presents I receive;
Land where, and when you please, with ample leave. Dryd.

4. Liberal; large; without parsimony.

If we speak of strict justice, God could no way have been bound to require man's labours in so large and ample manner as human felicity doth import; in as much as the dignity of this exceedeth so far the other's value. Hooker.

U

5. Large;

5. Large; splendid; without reservation.

To dispose the prince the more willingly to undertake his relief, the earl made ample promises, that, within so many days after the siege should be raised, he would advance his highness's levies with two thousand men. Clarendon, b. viii.

6. Diffusive; not contracted; as, an ample narrative; that is, not an epitome.

A'MPLENESS. n. f. [from ample.] The quality of being ample; largeness; splendour.

Impossible it is for a person of my condition to produce any thing in proportion either to the ampleness of the body you represent, or of the places you bear. South.

To A'MPLIATE. v. a. [amplio, Lat.] To enlarge; to make greater; to extend.

He shall solemnly look upon it, not only to destroy ours, but to establish his own; not to traduce or extenuate, but to explain and dilucidate, to add and ampliate, according to the custom of the ancients. Brown's Preface to Vulgar Errours.

AMPLIA'TION. n. f. [from ampliate.]

1. Enlargement; exaggeration; extension:

Odious matters admit not of an ampliation, but ought to be restrained and interpreted in the mildest sense. Ayliffe's Parer.

2. Diffuseness; enlargement.

The obscurity of the subject, and the prejudice and prepossession of most readers, may plead excuse for any ampliations or repetitions that may be found, whilst I labour to express myself plain and full. Holder's Elements of Speech, Preface.

To AMPLIFICATE. v. a. [amplifico, Lat.] To enlarge; to spread out; to amplify. Dict.

AMPLIFICA'TION. n. f. [amplification, Fr. amplificatio, Lat.]

1. Enlargement; extension.

2. It is usually taken in a rhetorical sense, and implies exaggerated representation, or diffuse narrative; an image heightened beyond reality; a narrative enlarged with many circumstances.

I shall summarily, without any amplification at all, shew in what manner defects have been supplied. Sir J. Davies.

Things unknown seem greater than they are, and are usually received with amplifications above their nature. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi.

Is the poet justifiable for relating such incredible amplifications? It may be answered, if he had put these extravagances into the mouth of Ulysses, he had been unpardonable; but they suit well with the character of Alcinous. Pope's Od. notes.

A'MPLIFIER. n. f. [from To amplify.] One that enlarges any thing; one that exaggerates; one that represents any thing with a large display of the best circumstances; it being usually taken in a good sense.

Dorillaus could need no amplifier's mouth for the highest point of praise. Sidney, b. ii.

To A'MPLIFY. v. a. [amplifier, Fr.]

1. To enlarge; to encrease any material substance, or object of sense.

So when a great moneyed man hath divided his chests, and coins, and bags, he seemeth to himself richer than he was: and therefore a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in several parts, and to examine it according to the several circumstances. Bacon's Essays.

All concaves that proceed from more narrow to more broad, do amplify the sound at the coming out. Bacon's Nat. History.

2. To enlarge, or extend any thing incorporeal.

For as the reputation of the Roman prelates grew up in these blind ages, so grew up in them withal, a desire of amplifying their power, that they might be as great in temporal forces, as mens opinions have formed them in spiritual matters. Raleigh.

3. To exaggerate any thing; to enlarge it by the manner of representation.

Since I have plainly laid open the negligence and errours of every age that is past, I would not willingly seem to flatter the present, by amplifying the diligence and true judgment of those servitors that have laboured in this vineyard. Davies on Irel.

Thy general is my lover; I have been

The book of his good acts; whence men have read

His fame unparallel'd, haply amplified. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

4. To enlarge; to improve by new additions.

I feel age advancing, and my health is insufficient to increase and amplify these remarks, to confirm and improve these rules, and to illuminate the several pages. Watts.

To A'MPLIFY. v. n. Frequently with the particle on.

1. To speak largely in many words; to lay one's self out in diffusion.

When you affect to amplify on the former branches of a discourse, you will often lay a necessity upon yourself of contracting the latter, and prevent yourself in the most important part of your design. Watts's Logick.

2. To form large or pompous representations.

I have sometimes been forced to amplify on others; but here where the subject is so fruitful, that the harvest overcomes the reaper, I am shortened by my chain. Dryd. Fab. Ded.

Homer amplifies, not invents; and as there was really a people called Cyclopeans, so they might be men of great stature, or giants. Pope's Odyssey, notes.

A'MPLITUDE. n. f. [amplitude, Fr. amplitudo, Lat.]

1. Extent.

Whatever I look upon, within the amplitude of heaven and earth, is evidence of human ignorance. Glanville's Scepssis.

2. Largeness; greatness.

Men should learn how severe a thing the true inquisition of nature is, and accustom themselves, by the light of particulars, to enlarge their minds to the amplitude of the world, and not reduce the world to the narrowness of their minds. Bacon.

3. Capacity.

With more than human gifts from heaven adorn'd,
Perfections absolute, graces divine,
And amplitude of mind to greatest deeds. Parad. Regained.

4. Splendour; grandeur; dignity.

In the great frame of kingdoms and commonwealths, it is in the power of princes, or estates, to add amplitude and greatness to their kingdoms. Bacon's Essays.

5. Copiousness; abundance.

You should say every thing which has a proper and direct tendency to this end; always proportioning the amplitude of your matter, and the fulness of your discourse, to your great design; the length of your time, to the convenience of your hearers. Watts's Logick.

6. Amplitude of the range of a projectile, denotes the horizontal line subtending the path in which it moved.

7. Amplitude, in astronomy, an arch of the horizon, intercepted between the true east and west point thereof, and the centre of the sun or star at its rising or setting. It is eastern or ortive, when the star rises, and western or occiduous, when the star sets. The eastern or western amplitude, are also called northern or southern, as they fall in the northern or southern quarters of the horizon.

8. Magnetical amplitude, is an arch of the horizon contained between the sun at his rising, and the east or west point of the compass; or, it is the difference of the rising or setting of the sun, from the east or west parts of the compass. Chambers.

A'MPLY. adv. [amplè, Lat.]

1. Largely; liberally.

For whose well-being,
So amply, and with hands so liberal,
Thou hast provided all things. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.

The evidence they had before was enough, amply enough, to convince them; but they were resolved not to be convinced: and to those, who are resolved not to be convinced, all motives, all arguments are equal. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. At large; without reserve.

At return
Of him so lately promis'd to thy aid,
The woman's seed; obscurely then foretold,
Now amplier known, thy Saviour, and thy Lord. Par. Lost.

3. At large; copiously; with a diffusive detail.

Some parts of a poem require to be amply written, and with all the force and elegance of words; others must be cast into shadows; that is, passed over in silence, or but faintly touched. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Pref.

To AMPUTATE. v. a. [amputo, Lat.] To cut off a limb: a word used only in chirurgery.

Amongst the cruizers in private frigates from Dunkirk, it was complained, that their surgeons were too active in amputating those fractured members. Wiseman's Surgery.

AMPUTA'TION. n. f. [amputatio, Lat.]

The operation of cutting off a limb, or other part of the body, with an instrument of steel. The usual method of performing it, in the instance of a leg, is as follows. The proper part for the operation being four or five inches below the knee, the skin and flesh are first to be drawn very tight upwards, and secured from returning by a ligature two or three fingers broad: above this ligature another loose one is passed, for the gripe; which being twisted by means of a flick, may be straitened to any degree at pleasure. Then the patient being conveniently situated, and the operator placed to the inside of the limb, which is to be held by one assistant above, and another below the part designed for the operation, and the gripe sufficiently twisted, to prevent too large an hæmorrhage, the flesh is, with a stroke or two, to be separated from the bone with the dismembering knife. Then the periosteum being also divided from the bone with the back of the knife, saw the bone asunder, with as few strokes as possible. When two parallel bones are concerned, the flesh that grows between them must likewise be separated before the use of the saw. This being done, the gripe may be slackened, to give an opportunity of searching for the large blood vessels, and securing the hæmorrhage at their mouths. After making proper applications to the stump, loosen the first ligature, and pull both the skin and the flesh, as far as conveniently may be, over the stump, to cover it; and secure them with the cross stitch made at the depth of half or three quarters of an inch in the skin. Then apply pledgets, astringents, plaisters, and other necessities. Chambers.

The Amazons, by the amputation of their right breast, had the freer use of their bow. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv.

A'MULET. n. f. [amulette, Fr. amuletum, Lat.] An appended remedy, remedy, or preservative: a thing hung about the neck, or any other part of the body, for preventing or curing of some particular diseases.

That spirits are corporeal, seems at first view a conceit derogative unto himself; yet herein he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

They do not certainly know the falsity of what they report; and their ignorance must serve you as an amulet against the guilt both of deceit and malice. Government of the Tongue.

AMURCO'SITY. n. f. [amurca, Lat.] The quality of lees or mother of any thing.

TO AMUSE. v. a. [amuser, Fr.]

1. To entertain with tranquillity; to fill with thoughts that engage the mind, without distracting it. To divert implies something more lively, and to please, something more important. It is therefore frequently taken in a sense bordering on contempt.

They think they see visions, and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations; when, indeed, they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastick ideas of a busy imagination. Decay of Piety.

I cannot think it natural for a man, who is much in love, to amuse himself with trifles. Walsh.

2. To draw on from time to time; to keep in expectation; as, he amused his followers with idle promises.

AMUSEMENT. n. f. [amusement, Fr.] That which amuses; entertainment.

Every interest or pleasure of life, even the most trifling amusement, is suffered to postpone the one thing necessary. Rogers.

During his confinement, his amusement was to give poison to dogs and cats, and see them expire by slower or quicker torments. Pope's Eth. Epist. notes.

I was left to stand the battle, while others, who had better talents than a draper, thought it no unpleasant amusement to look on with safety, whilst another was giving them diversion, at the hazard of his liberty. Swift.

AMUSER. n. f. [amuseur, Fr.] He that amuses, as with false promises. The French word is always taken in an ill sense.

AMUSIVE. adj. [from amuse.] That which has the power of amusing.

But amaz'd,

Beholds th' amusive arch before him fly,

Then vanish quite away.

Thomson's Spring.

AMYGDALATE. adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Made of almonds.

AMYGDALINE. adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Relating to almonds; resembling almonds.

AN. article. [ane, Saxon. een, Dutch, eine, German.] The article indefinite, used before a vowel, or b mute. See A.

1. One, but with less emphasis; as, there stands a house.

Since he cannot be always employed in study, reading, and conversation, there will be many an hour, besides what his exercises will take up. Locke.

2. Any, or some; as, an elephant might swim in this water.

He was no way at an uncertainty, nor ever in the least at a loss concerning any branch of it. Locke on St. Paul's Epistles.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod,

An honest man's the noblest work of God.

Pope.

3. Sometimes it signifies, like a, some particular state; but this is now disused.

It is certain, that odours do, in a small degree, nourish; especially the odour of wine; and we see men an hungred do love to smell hot bread. Bacon's Natural History.

4. An is sometimes, in old authours, a contraction of and if.

He can't flatter, he!

An honest mind and plain, he must speak truth;

An they will take it so; if not, he's plain. Shakesp. K. Lear.

5. Sometimes a contraction of and before if.

Well I know

The clerk will ne'er wear hair on's face that had it.

—— He will an' if he live to be a man.

Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

6. Sometimes it is a contraction of as if.

My next pretty correspondent, like Shakespeare's lion in Pyramus and Thisbe, roars an' it were any nightingale.

Addison. Guardian, N° 121.

ANA. adv. [ana.] A word used in the prescriptions of physick, importing the like quantity; as, wine and honey, ā or ana ℥ii; that is, of wine and honey each two ounces.

In the same weight prudence and innocence take,

Ana of each does the just mixture make.

Cowley.

He'll bring an apothecary, with a chargeable long bill of anas.

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

ANA. n. f. Books so called from the last syllables of their titles; as, Scaligerana, Thuaniana; they are loose thoughts, or casual hints, dropped by eminent men, and collected by their friends.

ANACAMPTICK. adj. [ἀνακαμπτικός.] Reflecting, or reflected: an anacamptick sound, an echo; an anacamptick hill, a hill that produces an echo.

ANACAMPTICKS. n. f. The doctrine of reflected light, or catoptricks. It has no singular.

ANACATHARTICK. n. f. [See CATHARTICK.] Any medicine that works upwards. Quincy.

ANACEPHALÆOSIS. n. f. [ἀνακεφαλαιώσις.] Recapitulation; or summary of the principal heads of a discourse. Diet.

ANA'CHORETE. } n. f. [sometimes viciously written anchorite;
ANA'CHORITE. } [ἀναχωρητής.] A monk, who, with the leave of his superiour, leaves the convent for a more austere and solitary life.

Yet lies not love dead here, but here doth sit,

Vow'd to this trench, like an anachorite.

Donne.

ANA'CHRONISM. n. f. [from ἀνά and χρόνος.] An error in computing time, by which events are misplaced with regard to each other. It seems properly to signify an error by which an event is placed too early; but is generally used for any error in chronology.

This leads me to the defence of the famous anachronism, in making Æneas and Dido cotemporaries: for it is certain, that the hero lived almost two hundred years before the building of Carthage. Dryden's Virgil, Dedicat.

ANACLA'TICKS. n. f. [ἀνά and κλάω.] The doctrine of refracted light; dioptricks. It has no singular.

ANADIPLO'SIS. n. f. [ἀναδιπλωσις.] Reduplication; a figure in rhetoric, in which the last word of a foregoing member of a period becomes the first of the following; as, he retained his virtues amidst all his misfortunes, misfortunes which only his virtue brought upon him.

ANAGOGE'TICAL. adj. [ἀναγωγικός.] That which contributes or relates to spiritual elevation, or religious raptures; mysterious; elevated above humanity. Diet.

ANAGO'GICAL. adj. [anagogique, Fr.] Mysterious; elevated; religiously exalted. Diet.

ANAGO'GICALLY. adv. [from anagogical.] Mysteriously; with religious elevation.

ANAGRAM. n. f. [ἀνά and γράμμα.] A conceit arising from the letters of a name transposed; as this, of W, i, l, l, i, a, m, N, o, r, y, attorney-general to Charles I. a very laborious man, I moyl in law.

Though all her parts be not in th' usual place,

She hath yet the anagrams of a good face:

If we might put the letters but one way,

In that lean dearth of words, what could we say? Donne.

Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame

In keen iambicks, but mild anagram.

Dryden.

ANAGRAMMATISM. n. f. [from anagram.] The act or practice of making anagrams.

The only quintessence that hitherto the alchymy of wit could draw out of names, is anagrammatism, or metagrammatism, which is a dissolution of a name truly written into his letters, as his elements, and a new connexion of it by artificial transposition, without addition, subtraction, or change of any letter into different words, making some perfect sense applicable to the person named. Camden.

ANAGRAMMATIST. n. f. [from anagram.] A maker of anagrams.

TO ANAGRAMMATIZE. v. n. [anagrammatizer, Fr.] To make anagrams.

ANALEPTICK. adj. [ἀναληπτικός.] Comforting; corroborating: a term of physick.

Analeptick medicines cherish the nerves, and renew the spirits and strength. Quincy.

ANALO'GICAL. adj. [from analogy.]

1. Used by way of analogy. It seems properly distinguished from analogous, as words from things; analogous signifies having relation, and analogical having the quality of representing relation.

It is looked on only as the image of the true God, and that not as a proper likeness, but by analogical representation.

Stillfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idolatry.

When a word, which originally signifies any particular idea or object, is attributed to several other objects, not by way of resemblance, but on the account of some evident reference to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; so a sound or healthy pulse, a sound digestion, sound sleep, are so called, with reference to a sound and healthy constitution; but if you speak of sound doctrine, or sound speech, this is by way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical. Watts's Logick.

2. Analogous; having resemblance or relation.

There is placed the minerals between the inanimate and vegetable province, participating something analogical to either.

Hales's Origin of Mankind.

ANALO'GICALLY. adv. [from analogical.] In an analogical manner; in an analogous manner.

I am convinced, from the simplicity and uniformity of the Divine Nature, and of all his works, that there is some one universal principle, running through the whole system of creatures analogically, and congruous to their relative natures.

Cheyne's Philosoph. Principles.

ANALO'GICALNESS. n. f. [from analogical.] The quality of being analogical; fitness to be applied for the illustration of some analogy.

ANA'LOGISM. n. f. [ἀναλογισμός.] An argument from the cause to the effect.

TO ANA'LOGIZE. v. a. [from analogy.] To explain by way of analogy; analogy; to form some resemblance between different things; to consider something with regard to its analogy with something else.

We have systems of material bodies, diversly figured and situated, if separately considered; they represent the object of the desire, which is analogized by attraction or gravitation.

Cheyne's Philos. Principles.

ANA'LOGOUS. adj. [ἀνά and λόγος.]

1. Having analogy; bearing some resemblance or proportion; having something parallel.

Exercise makes things easy, that would be otherwise very hard; as, in labour, watchings, heats, and colds; and then there is something analogous in the exercise of the mind, to that of the body. It is folly and infirmity that makes us delicate and froward.

L'Esrange.

Many important consequences may be drawn from the observation of the most common things, and analogous reasonings from the causes of them.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. It has the word to before the thing to which the resemblance is noted.

This incorporeal substance may have some sort of existence, analogous to corporeal extension: though we have no adequate conception hereof.

Locke.

ANALOGY. n. f. [ἀναλογία.]

1. Resemblance between things with regard to some circumstances or effects; as, learning is said to enlighten the mind; that is, it is to the mind what light is to the eye, by enabling it to discover that which was hidden before.

From God it hath proceeded, that the church hath evermore held a prescript form of common prayer, although not in all things every where the same, yet, for the most part, retaining the same analogy.

Hooker, b. v. § 25.

What I here observe of extraordinary revelation and prophecy, will, by analogy and due proportion, extend even to those communications of God's will, that are requisite to salvation.

South.

2. When the thing to which the analogy is supposed, happens to be mentioned, analogy has after it the particles to or with; when both the things are mentioned after analogy, the particle between or betwixt is used.

If the body politick have any analogy to the natural, an act of oblivion were necessary in a hot distemper'd state.

Dryd. Pref. to Absalom and Achitop.

By analogy with all other liquours and concretions, the form of the chaos, whether liquid or concrete, could not be the same with that of the present earth.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

If we make him express the customs of our country, rather than of Rome, it is either when there was some analogy betwixt the customs, or to make him more easy to vulgar understanding.

Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

3. By grammarians, it is used to signify the agreement of several words in one common mode; as, from love is formed loved, from hate, hated, from grieve, grieved.

ANA'LYSIS. n. f. [ἀνάλυσις.]

1. A separation of a compound body into the several parts of which it consists.

There is an account of dew falling, in some places, in the form of butter, or grease, which grows extremely fetid; so that the analysis of the dew of any place, may, perhaps, be the best method of finding such contents of the soil as are within the reach of the sun.

Arbuthnot.

2. A consideration of any thing in parts, so as that one particular is first considered, then another.

Analysis consists in making experiments and observations, and in drawing general conclusions from them by induction, and admitting of no objections against the conclusions, but such as are taken from experiments, or other certain truths.

Newton's Opticks.

3. A solution of any thing, whether corporeal or mental, to its first elements; as, of a sentence to the single words; of a compound word, to the particles and words which form it; of a tune, to single notes; of an argument, to simple propositions.

We cannot know any thing of nature, but by an analysis of its true initial causes; till we know the first springs of natural motions, we are still but ignorants.

Glanville's Scepſis Scientif.

ANALYTICAL. adj. [from analysis.]

1. That which resolves any thing into first principles; that which separates any compound. See ANALYSIS.

Either may be probably maintained against the inaccurateness of the analytical experiments vulgarly relied on.

Boyle.

2. That which proceeds by analysis, or by taking the parts of a compound into distinct and particular consideration.

Descartes hath here infinitely outdone all the philosophers that went before him, in giving a particular and analytical account of the universal fabrick: yet he intends his principles but for hypotheses.

Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

ANALYTICALLY. adv. [from analytical.] In such a manner as separates compounds into simples. See ANALYSIS.

ANALYTICK. adj. [ἀναλυτικόν.] The manner of resolving compounds into the simple constituent or component parts, applied chiefly to mental operations.

He was in logick a great critick,

Profoundly skill'd in analytick.

Hudibras.

Analytick method takes the whole compound as it finds it, whether it be a species or an individual, and leads us into the knowledge of it, by resolving into its first principles, or parts, its generick nature, and its special properties; and therefore it is called the method of resolution.

Watts's Logick.

TO ANALYZE. v. a. [ἀναλύνω.] To resolve a compound into its first principles. See ANALYSIS.

Chymistry enabling us to depurate bodies, and, in some measure, to analyze them, and take asunder their heterogeneous parts, in many chymical experiments, we may, better than in others, know what manner of bodies we employ; art having made them more simple or uncompounded, than nature alone is wont to present them us.

Boyle.

To analyze the immorality of any action into its last principles; if it be inquired, why such an action is to be avoided, the immediate answer is, because it is sin.

Norris's Miscell.

When the sentence is distinguished into subject and predicate, proposition, argument, act, object, cause, effect, adjunct, opposite, &c. then it is analyzed analogically and metaphysically. This last is what is chiefly meant in the theological schools, when they speak of analyzing a text of scripture.

Watts's Logick.

ANALYZER. n. f. [from To analyze.] That which has the power of analyzing.

Particular reasons incline me to doubt, whether the fire be the true and universal analyzer of mixt bodies.

Boyle.

ANAMORPHOSIS. n. f. [ἀνά and μορφή.] Deformation; a perspective projection of any thing, so that to the eye, at one point of view, it shall appear deformed, in another, an exact and regular representation. Sometimes it is made to appear confused to the naked eye, and regular, when viewed in a mirror of a certain form.

ANANAS. n. f. The pine apple.

It has a flower consisting of one leaf, divided into three parts, and funnel-shaped; the embryos produced in the tubercles, afterwards become fruit; the seeds in the tubercles are small, and almost kidney-shaped.

The species are, 1. Oval-shaped pine apple, with a whitish flesh. 2. Pyramidal pine apple, with a yellow flesh. 3. Pine apple, with smooth leaves. 4. Pine apple, with shining green leaves, and scarce any spines on their edges. 5. The olive-coloured pine.

The first sort is most common in Europe, but the fruit of the second is larger, better flavoured, and its juice not so astringent. The fifth sort is the most rare in Europe, but esteemed above all the rest. These plants are propagated by suckers; and from the crowns which grow on the top of the fruit.

Mill.

Witness thou best anana, thou the pride

Of vegetable life, beyond what'er

The poets imag'd in the golden age.

Thomſ. Summer.

ANANAS, wild. The same with penguin. See PENGUIN.

ANAPHORA. n. f. [ἀναφορά.] A figure, when several clauses of a sentence are begun with the same word, or sound; as, — Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world?

ANAPLERO'TICK. adj. [ἀναπληρώω.] That which fills up any vacancy; used of applications which promote flesh.

ANARCH. n. f. [See ANARCHY.] An authour of confusion.

Him thus the anarch old,

With fault'ring speech, and visage incompoſ'd,

Answer'd.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

ANARCHICAL. adj. [from anarchy.] Confused; without rule or government.

In this anarchical and rebellious state of human nature, the faculties belonging to the material world presume to determine the nature of subjects belonging to the supreme Spirit.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

ANARCHY. n. f. [ἀναρχία.] Want of government; a state in which every man is unaccountable; a state without magistracy.

Where eldest night

And chaos, ancestors of nature, hold

Eternal anarchy, amidst the noise

Of endless wars, and by confusion stand.

Paradise Lost.

Arbitrary power is but the first natural step from anarchy, or the savage life; the adjusting power and freedom being an effect and consequence of maturer thinking.

Swift.

ANASARCA. n. f. [from ἀνά and σαρξ.] A sort of dropsy, where the whole substance is stuffed with pituitous humours.

Quincy.

When the lymph stagnates, or is extravasated under the skin, it is called an anasarca.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

ANASARCOUS. adj. [from anasarca.] Relating to an anasarca; partaking of the nature of an anasarca.

A gentlewoman laboured of an ascites, with an anasarcous swelling on her belly, thighs, and legs.

Wiseman.

ANASTOMATICK. adj. [from ἀνά and σύνω.] That which has the quality of opening the vessels, or of removing obstructions.

ANASTOMO'SIS. n. f. [from ἀνά and σύνω.] The inosculation of vessels, or the opening of one vessel into another; as, of the arteries into the veins.

ANA-

ANASTROPHE. n. f. [ἀναστροφή], a preposterous placing, from ἀναστροφή.] A figure whereby words which should have been precedent, are postponed.

ANATHEMA. n. f. [ἀνάθεμα.]

1. A curse pronounced by ecclesiastical authority; excommunication.

Her bare anathemas fall but like so many bruta fulmina upon the schismatical; who think themselves shrewdly hurt, forsooth, by being cut off from the body, which they choose not to be of.

South's Sermons.

2. The object of the curse, or person cursed. This seems the original meaning, though now little used.

ANATHEMA'TICAL. adj. [from anathema.] That which has the properties of an anathema; that which relates to an anathema.

ANATHEMA'TICALLY. adv. [from anathematical.] In an anathematical manner.

TO ANATHEMATIZE. v. a. [from anathema.] To pronounce accursed by ecclesiastical authority; to excommunicate.

They were therefore to be anathematized after this manner, and, with detestation, branded and banished out of the church.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

ANATIFEROUS. adj. [from anas and fero, Lat.] Producing ducks.

If there be anatiferous trees, whose corruption breaks forth into barnacles; yet, if they corrupt, they degenerate into maggots, which produce not them again. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ANA'TOCISM. n. f. [anatocismus, Lat. ἀνατοκισμός.] The accumulation of interest upon interest; the addition of the interest due for money lent, to the original sum. A species of usury generally forbidden.

ANATO'MICAL. adj. [from anatomy.]

1. Relating or belonging to anatomy.

When we are taught by logick to view a thing completely in all its parts, by the help of division, it has the use of an anatomical knife, which dissects an animal body, and separates the veins, arteries, nerves, muscles, membranes, &c. and shews us the several parts which go to the composition of a complete animal.

Watts's Logick.

2. Proceeding upon principles taught in anatomy; considered as the object of anatomy.

There is a natural, involuntary distortion of the muscles, which is the anatomical cause of laughter; but there is another cause of laughter, which decency requires.

Swift.

3. Anatomized; dissected; separated.

The continuation of solidity is apt to be confounded with, and, if we will look into the minute anatomical parts of matter, is little different from, hardness.

Locke.

ANATO'MICALLY. adv. [from anatomical.] In an anatomical manner; in the sense of an anatomist; according to the doctrine of anatomy.

While some affirmed it had no gall, intending only thereby no evidence of anger or fury, others have construed anatomically, and denied that part at all.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii.

ANA'TOMIST. n. f. [ἀνατομικός.] He that studies the structure of animal bodies, by means of dissection; he that divides the bodies of animals, to discover the various parts.

Anatomists adjudged, that if nature had been suffered to run her own course, without this fatal interruption, he might have doubled his age.

Howel's Vocal Forest.

Hence when anatomists discourse,

How like brutes organs are to ours;

They grant, if higher powers think fit,

A bear might soon be made a wit;

And that, for any thing in nature,

Pigs might squeak love odes, dogs bark satire.

Prior.

TO ANA'TOMIZE. v. a. [ἀνατομέω.]

1. To dissect an animal; to divide the body into its component or constituent parts.

Our industry must even anatomize every particle of that body, which we are to uphold.

Hooker, Dedicat.

2. To lay any thing open distinctly, and by minute parts.

I speak but brotherly of him, but should I anatomize him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep, and then must look pale and wonder.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

Then dark distinctions reason's light disguis'd,

And into atoms truth anatomiz'd.

Denham.

ANA'TOMY. n. f. [ἀνατομία.]

1. The art of dissecting the body.

It is therefore in the anatomy of the mind, as in that of the body; more good will accrue to mankind, by attending to the large, open, and perceptible parts, than by studying too much such finer nerves and vessels, as will for ever escape our observation.

Pope's Essay on Man, Pref.

2. The doctrine of the structure of the body, learned by dissection.

Let the muscles be well inserted and bound together, according to the knowledge of them which is given us by anatomy.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. The act of dividing any thing, whether corporeal or intellectual.

When a moneyed man hath divided his chests, he seemeth to himself richer than he was; therefore, a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in several parts.

Bacon's Essays.

4. The body stripped of its integuments; a skeleton.

O that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth,

Then with a passion I would shake the world,

And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy,

Which cannot hear a feeble lady's voice. Shakesp. K. John.

5. By way of irony or ridicule, a thin meagre person.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,

A meer anatomy, a mountebank,

A thread-bare juggler, and a fortune-teller,

A needy hollow-ey'd, sharp-looking wretch,

A living dead man.

Shakespeare's Comedy of Errours.

A'NATRON. n. f. The scum which swims upon the molten glass in the furnace, which, when taken off, melts in the air, and then coagulates into common salt. It is likewise that salt which gathers upon the walls of vaults.

A'NBURY. n. f. See AMBURY.

A'NCESTOR. n. f. [ancestor, Lat. ancestre, Fr.] One from whom a person descends, either by the father or the mother. It is distinguished from predecessor; which is not, like ancestor, a natural, but civil denomination. An hereditary monarch succeeds to his ancestors; an elective, to his predecessors.

And she lies buried with her ancestors,

O, in a tomb where never scandal slept,

Save this of hers.

Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.

Cham was the paternal ancestor of Ninus, the father of Chus, the grandfather of Nimrod; whose son was Belus, the father of Ninus.

Raleigh's History of the World.

Obscure! why pr'ythee what am I? I know

My father, grandfire, and great grandfire too:

If farther I derive my pedigree,

I can but guess beyond the fourth degree.

The rest of my forgotten ancestors,

Were sons of earth like him, or sons of whores.

Dryden's Persius, sat. vi.

A'NCESTREL. adj. [from ancestor.] Claimed from ancestors; relating to ancestors: a term of law.

Limitation in actions ancestral, was anciently so here in England.

Hale's Law of England.

A'NCESTRY. n. f. [from ancestor.]

1. Lineage; a series of ancestors, or progenitors; the persons who compose the lineage.

Phedon I hight, quoth he; and do advance

Mine ancestry from famous Coradin,

Who first to raise our house to honour did begin. Fairy 2.

A tenacious adherence to the rights and liberties transmitted from a wise and virtuous ancestry, publick spirit, and a love of one's country, are the support and ornaments of government.

Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup> 5.

Say from what scepter'd ancestry ye claim,

Recorded eminent in deathless fame?

Pope's Odyssey.

2. The honour of descent; birth.

Title and ancestry render a good man more illustrious, but an ill one, more contemptible. Addison. Guardian, N<sup>o</sup> 123.

A'NCHENTRY. n. f. [from ancient, and therefore properly to be written ancientry.] Antiquity of a family; ancient dignity; appearance or proof of antiquity.

Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is a Scotch jig, a measure and a cinque pace; the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding mannerly modest, as a measure full of state and anchentry; and then comes repentance, and with his bad legs falls into the cinque pace faster and faster, till he sinks into his grave.

Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.

A'NCHOR. n. f. [anchora, Lat.]

1. A heavy iron, composed of a long shank, having a ring at one end to which the cable is fastened, and at the other, branching out into two arms or flocks, tending upwards, with barbs or edges on each side. Its use is to hold the ship, by being fixed to the ground.

He said, and wept; then spread his sails before

The winds, and reach'd at length the Cuman shore:

Their anchors dropt, his crew the vessels moor. Dryd. Æn.

2. It is used, by a metaphor, for any thing which confers stability or security.

Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth not into that within the veil.

Hebrews, vi. 19.

3. The forms of speech in which it is most commonly used, are, to cast anchor, to lye or ride at anchor.

The Turkish general, deceived of his expectations, and perceiving that the Rhodians would not be drawn forth to battle at sea, withdrew his fleet, when casting anchor, and landing his men, he burnt the corn.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

Ent'ring with the tide,

He dropp'd his anchors, and his oars he ply'd:

Furl'd every sail, and drawing down the mast,

His vessel moor'd, and made with haulsers fast. Dryd. Homer.

Far from your capital my ship resides
At Reithrus, and secure at anchor rides. Pope's Odyssey.
To A'NCHOR. v. n. [from anchor.]
1. To cast anchor; to lie at anchor.
The fishermen that walk upon the beach
Appear like mice; and yon tall anchoring bark
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy
Almost too small for sight. Shakesp. King Lear.
Near Calais the Spaniards anchored, expecting their land-forces, which came not. Bacon.
Or the strait course to rocky Chios plow,
And anchor under Mimos' shaggy brow. Pope's Odyssey.
2. To stop at; to rest on.
My intention, hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Isabel. Shakesp.
My tongue should to my ears not name my boys,
'Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes. Shak. R. III.
A'NCHOR. n. f. Shakespeare seems to have used this word for an-choret, or an abstemious recluse person.
To desperation turn my trust and hope!
An anchor's cheer in prison be my scope! Shakesp. Hamlet.
A'NCHOR-HOLD. n. f. [from anchor and hold.] The hold or fastness of the anchor; and, figuratively, security.
The old English could express most aptly all the conceits of the mind in their own tongue, without borrowing from any;
as for example: the holy service of God, which the Latins called religion, because it knitted the minds of men together, and most people of Europe have borrowed the same from them, they called most significantly ean-fastness, as the one and only assurance and fast anchor-hold of our souls health. Cambden.
A'NCHOR-SMITH. n. f. [from anchor and smith.] The maker or forger of anchors.
Smithing comprehends all trades, which use either forge or file, from the anchor-smith to the watchmaker; they all working by the same rules, though not with equal exactness, and all using the same tools, though of several sizes. Maxon's Mechanical Exercises.
A'NCHORAGE. n. f. [from anchor.]
1. The hold of the anchor.
Let me resolve whether there be indeed such efficacy in nurture and first production; for if that supposal should fail us, all our anchorage were loose, and we should but wander in a wild sea. Wotton.
2. The set of anchors belonging to a ship.
Lo as the bark that hath discharg'd her freight,
Returns with precious lading to the bay
From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage; Cometh Andronicus. Shakesp. Titus Andronicus.
3. The duty paid for the liberty of anchoring in a port.
A'NCHORED. participial adj. [from To anchor.] Held by the anchor.
Like a well twisted cable, holding fast
The anchor'd vessel in the loudest blast. Waller.
A'NCHORET. } n. f. [contracted from anachoret, ἀναχωρητής.] A A'NCHORITE. } recluse; a hermit; one that retires to the more severe duties of religion.
His poetry indeed he took along with him; but he made that an anchorite as well as himself. Sprat.
You describe so well your hermitical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave in a rock, with a fine spring, or any of the accommodations that befit a solitary life. Pope's Letters.
ANCHO'VY. n. f. [from anchova, Span. or anchioe, Ital. of the same signification.] A little sea-fish, much used by way of saucé, or seasoning. Scaliger describes the anchovy as of the herring kind, about the length of a finger, having a pointed snout, a wide mouth, no teeth, but gums as rough as a saw.
Others make it a sort of sardine, or pilchard; but others, with better reason, hold it a peculiar species, very different from either. It is caught in the months of May, June, and July, on the coasts of Catalonia, Provence, &c. when it constantly repairs up the Straits of Gibraltar into the Mediterranean. The fishing is chiefly in the night time; when a light being put on the stern of their little fishing vessels, the anchovies flock round, and are caught in nets. When the fishery is over, they cut off the heads, take out the galls and guts, then lay them in barrels, and salt them. Savary.
We invent new saucés and pickles, which resemble the animal ferment in taste and virtue, as the falso-acid gravies of meat; the salt pickles of fish, anchovies, oysters. Floyer on the Humours.
ANCIENT. adj. [ancien, Fr. antiquus, Lat.]
1. Old; that happened long since; of old time; not modern.
Ancient and old are distinguished; old relates to the duration of the thing itself, as, an old coat, a coat much worn; and ancient, to time in general, as, an ancient dress, a habit used in former times. But this is not always observed; for we mention old customs; but though old be sometimes opposed to modern, ancient is seldom opposed to new.
Ancient tenure is that whereby all the manours belonging to the crown, in St. Edward's or William the Conquerour's days, did hold. The number and names of which manours, as all others belonging to common persons, he caused to be written in a book, after a survey made of them, now remaining in the exchequer, and called doomday book; and such as by that book appeared to have belonged to the crown at that time, are called ancient demesnes. Cowell.

2. Old; that has been of long duration.
With the ancient is wisdom, and in length of days understanding. Job, xii. 12.
Thales affirms, that God comprehended all things, and that God was of all things the most ancient, because he never had any beginning. Raleigh's History of the World.
Industry
Gave the tall ancient forest too his axe. Thomson's Summer.
3. Past; former.
I see thy fury: if I longer stay,
We shall begin our ancient bickerings. Shakesp. Henry VI.
A'NCIENT. n. f. [from ancient, adj.] Those that lived in old time were called ancients, opposed to the moderns.
And though the ancients thus their rules invade,
As kings dispense with laws themselves have made;
Moderns, beware! or if you must offend
Against the precept, ne'er transgress its end. Pep. Ess. on Crit.
A'NCIENT. n. f. The flag or streamer of a ship, and, formerly, of a regiment.
A'NCIENT. n. f. The bearer of a flag, as was Ancient Pistol;
whence in present use, ensign.
A'NCIENTLY. adv. [from ancient.] In old times.
Not far from this is the great city of Trebifond, which, with the territory about it, anciently pertained unto this crown; now unjustly possessed, and as unjustly abused, by those who have neither title to hold it, nor virtue to rule it. Sidney, b. ii.
The colewort is not an enemy, though that were anciently received, to the vine only; but it is an enemy to any other plant, because it draweth strongly the fattest juice of the earth.
Bacon's Natural History, N° 480.
A'NCIENTNESS. n. f. [from ancient.] Antiquity; existence from old times.
The Fescenine and Saturnian were the same; they were called Saturnian from their ancientness, when Saturn reigned in Italy. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
A'NCIENTRY. n. f. [from ancient.] The honour of ancient lineage; the dignity of birth.
Of all nations under heaven, the Spaniard is the most mingled, and most uncertain. Wherefore, most foolishly do the Irish think to ennoble themselves, by wresting their ancientry from the Spaniard, who is unable to derive himself from any in certain. Spenser on Ireland.
There is nothing in the between, but getting wenches with child, wronging the ancientry, stealing, fighting.
Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
ANGLE. See ANKLE.
A'NCONY. n. f. [in the iron mills.] A bloom wrought into the figure of a flat iron bar, about three foot long, with two square rough knobs, one at each end. Chambers.
AND. conjunction.
1. The particle by which sentences or terms are joined, which it is not easy to explain by any synonymous word.
Sure his honesty
Got him small gains, but shameless flattery
And filthy beverage, and unseemly theft,
And borrow base, and some good lady's gift. Spens. Hubb.
What shall I do to be for ever known,
And make the age to come my own? Cowley.
The Danes unconquer'd offspring march behind;
And Morini, the last of human kind. Dryd.
It shall ever be my study to make discoveries of this nature in human life, and to settle the proper distinctions between the virtues and perfections of mankind, and those false colours and resemblances of them that shine alike in the eyes of the vulgar.
Addison. Tatler.
2. And sometimes signifies though, and seems a contraction of
and if.
It is the nature of extreme self-lovers, as they will set an house on fire, and it were but to roast their eggs. Bacon.
3. In and if, the and is redundant, and is omitted by all later writers.
I pray thee, Launce, an' if thou see'st my boy,
Bid him make haste. Shakesp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.
A'NDIRON. n. f. [supposed by Skinner to be corrupted from hand-iron; an iron that may be moved by the hand, or may supply the place of a hand.] Irons at the end of a fire-grate, in which the spit turns; or irons in which wood is laid to burn.
If you strike an entire body, as an andiron of brass, at the top, it maketh a more treble sound, and at the bottom a baser.
Bacon's Natural History, N° 178.
ANDRO'GYNAL. adj. [from ἀνδρ and γυν.] Having two sexes;
hermaphroditical.
ANDRO'GYNALLY. adv. [from androgynal.] In the form of her-maphrodites; with two sexes.
The examples hereof have undergone no real or new transexion, but were androgynally born, and under some kind of hermaphrodites. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
ANDRO'

A N G

ANDRO'GYNOUS. adj. The same with androgynal.
ANDRO'GYNUS. n. f. [Lat. See ANDROGYNAL.] An hermaphrodite; one that is of both sexes.
ANDRO'TOMY. n. f. [from ἀνδρ and τέμνω.] The practice of cutting human bodies. Dict.
A'NECDOTE. n. f. [ἀνέκδοτον.] Something yet unpublished; secret history.

Some modern anecdotes aver,
 He nodded in his elbow-chair. Prior.
ANEMO'GRAPHY. n. f. [ἀνέμος and γράφω.] The description of the winds.
ANEMO'METER. n. f. [ἀνέμος and μέτρον.] An instrument contrived to measure the strength or velocity of the wind.
ANEMONE. n. f. [ἀνεμώνη.] The wind flower.

Upon the top of its single stalk, surrounded by a leaf, is produced one naked flower, of many petals, with many stamina in the center; the seeds are collected into an oblong head, and surrounded with a copious down. The principal colours in anemonies, are white, red, blue, and purple sometimes curiously intermixed. Millar.

Wind flowers are distinguished into those with broad and hard leaves, and those with narrow and soft ones; of both which sorts there are great variety of colours, some being double, and others single flowered. The broad leaved anemony roots should be planted about the end of September, and the small eminences which put forth the leaves set uppermost. These with small leaves must be set after the same manner, but not put into the ground till the end of October.

Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.
 From the soft wing of vernal breezes shed,
Anemonies, auriculas, enrich'd
 With shining meal o'er all their velvet leaves. Thomson.

A'NEMOSCOPE. n. f. [ἀνέμος and σκοπεῖν.] A machine invented to foretel the changes of the wind. It has been observed, that hygrosopes made of cat's gut proved very good anemoscopes, seldom failing, by the turning the index about, to foretel the shifting of the wind. Chambers.

A'NENT. prep. A word used in the Scotch dialect.
 1. Concerning; about; as, he said nothing anent this particular.
 2. Over against; opposite to; as, he lives anent the market-house.
ANES. } n. f. The spires or beards of corn. Dict.
AWNS. }

A'NEURISM. n. f. [ἀνευρίσμα.] A disease of the arteries, in which, either by a preternatural weakness of any part of them, they become excessively dilated, or by a wound through their coats, the blood is extravasated amongst the adjacent cavities.

Sharp's Surgery.
 In the orifice, there was a throbbing of the arterial blood, as in an aneurism. Wiseman's Surgery.

A'NE'W. adv. [from a and new.]
 1. Over again; another time; repeatedly. This is the most common use.

Nor, if at mischief taken, on the ground
 Be slain, but pris'ners to the pillar bound,
 At either barrier plac'd; nor, captives made,
 Be freed, or, arm'd anew, the fight invade. Dryden's Fables.

That as in birth, in beauty you excel,
 The muse might dictate, and the poet tell:
 Your art no other art can speak; and you
 To show how well you play, must play anew. Prior.

The miseries of the civil war did, for many years, deter the inhabitants of our island from the thoughts of engaging anew in such desperate undertakings. Addison's Freeholder, N° 28.
 2. Newly; in a new manner.

He who begins late, is obliged to form anew the whole disposition of his soul, to acquire new habits of life, to practise duties to which he is utterly a stranger. Rogers's Sermons.

ANFRA'CTUOSE. } adj. [from anfractus, Lat.] Winding; mazy;
ANFRA'CTUOUS. } full of turnings and winding passages.

Behind the drum are several vaults and anfractuose cavities in the ear-bone, so to intend the least sound imaginable, that the sense might be affected with it; as we see in subterraneous caves and vaults, how the sound is redoubled. Ray.

ANFRA'CTUOUSNESS. n. f. [from anfractuus.] Fulness of windings and turnings.

ANFRA'CTURE. n. f. [from anfractus, Lat.] A turning; a mazy winding and turning. Dict.

ANGEL. n. f. [ἄγγελος; angelus, Lat.]
 1. Originally a messenger. A spirit employed by God in the administration of human affairs.

Some holy angel
 Fly to the court of England, and unfold
 His message ere he come. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 Had we such a knowledge of the constitution of man, as it is possible angels have, and it is certain his Maker has; we should have a quite other idea of his essence. Locke.

See HIERARCHY.
 2. Angel is sometimes used in a bad sense; as, angels of darkness. And they had a king over them, which was the angel of the bottomless pit. Revelat. ix. 11.

3. Angel, in scripture, sometimes means man of God, prophet.
 4. Angel is used, in the stile of love, for a beautiful person.

A N G

Heav'n blest thee!

Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on.
 Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
 5. A piece of money anciently coined and impressed with an angel, in memory of an observation of Pope Gregory, that the pagan Angli, or English, were so beautiful, that, if they were christians, they would be Angeli, or angels. The coin was rated at ten shillings.

Take an empty bason, put an angel of gold, or what you will, into it; then go so far from the bason, till you cannot see the angel, because it is not in a right line; then fill the bason with water, and you will see it out of its place, because of the reflection. Bacon's Natural History, N° 762.

Cousin, away for England; haste before,
 And, ere our coming, see thou shake the bags
 Of hoarding abbots; their imprison'd angels
 Set thou at liberty. Shakespeare's King John.

A'NGEL. adj. Resembling angels; angelical.
 I have mark'd

A thousand blushing apparitions
 To start into her face; a thousand innocent shames
 In angel whiteness bear away those blushes.

Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.
 Or virgins visited by angel powers,
 With golden crowns and wreathes of heav'nly flow'rs.

A'NGEL-LIKE. adj. [from angel and like.] Resembling an angel.
 In heav'n itself thou sure wer't drest

With that angel-like disguise. Waller.

A'NGEL SHOT. n. f. [from angel and shot.] Chain shot, being a cannon bullet cut in two, and the halves being joined together by a chain. Dict.

ANGE'LICA. n. f. [Lat. ab angelica virtute.] The name of a plant.

It has winged leaves divided into large segments; its stalks are hollow and jointed; the flowers grow in an umbel upon the tops of the stalks, and consist of five leaves, succeeded by two large channelled seeds.

The species are, 1. Common or manured angelica. 2. Greater wild angelica. 3. Shining Canada angelica. 4. Mountain perennial angelica, with columbine leaves.

The common angelica delights to grow in a very moist soil, and its seeds should be sown soon after it is ripe. This plant is used in medicine, as are its seeds; and the confectioners make a sweetmeat with its tender stalks, cut in May. The second sort grows wild; and the two last sorts may be propagated like the first. Millar.

ANGE'LICA. (Berry-bearing) [Aralia, Lat.]

The flower consists of many leaves, expanding in form of a rose, which are naked, growing on the top of the ovary: these flowers are succeeded by globular fruits, which are soft and succulent, and full of oblong seeds.

The species are, 1. Canada berry-bearing angelica. 2. Berry-bearing angelica, with a naked stalk and creeping root. 3. angelica tree.

The two first are propagated either by sowing their seeds, or by parting of their roots. The third sort grows with us to the height of seven or eight feet, and is only propagated by seeds, which are frequently brought from America. Millar.

ANGE'LICAL. adj. [angelicus, Lat.]
 1. Resembling angels.

It discovereth unto us the glorious works of God, and carrieth up, with an angelical swiftness, our eyes, that our mind, being informed of his visible marvels, may continually travel upward. Raleigh's History of the World.

2. Partaking of the nature of angels.

Others more mild
 Retreated in a silent valley, sing
 With notes angelical to many a harp,
 Their own heroick deeds, and hapless fall
 By doom of battle. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

3. Belonging to angels.
 It may be encouragement to consider the pleasure of speculations, which do ravish and sublime the thoughts with more clear angelical contentments. Wilkins's Daedalus.

ANGE'LICALNESS. n. f. [from angelical.] The quality of being angelical; resemblance of angels; excellence more than human.

ANGE'LICK. adj. [angelicus, Lat.] Partaking of the nature of angels; angelical; above human.

Here, happy creature, fair angelick Eve,
 Partake thou also. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
 My fancy form'd thee of angelick kind,

Some emanation of th' all beauteous mind. Pop. E'lo. to Abel.
A'NGELOT. n. f. A musical instrument, somewhat resembling a lute. Dict.

A'NGER. n. f. [a word of no certain etymology, but, with most probability, derived by Skinner from ange, Sax. vexed; which, however, seems to come originally from the Latin ango.]

1. Anger is uneasiness or discomposure of the mind, upon the receipt of any injury, with a present purpose of revenge. Locke.
Anger

Anger is like

A full hot horse, who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

Was the Lord displeased against the rivers? was thine anger against the rivers? was thy wrath against the sea, that thou didst ride upon thine horses and thy chariots of salvation?
Habb. iii. 8.

Anger is, according to some, a transient hatred, or at least very like it. South.

2. Pain, or smart, of a sore or swelling. In this sense it seems plainly deducible from angor.

I made the experiment, setting the moxa where the first violence of my pain began, and where the greatest anger and fore-ness still continued, notwithstanding the swelling of my foot.
Temple's Miscellanies.

To A'NGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To make angry; to provoke; to enrage.

Who would anger the meanest artisan, which carrieth a good mind? Hooker, b. iv. § 12.

Sometimes he angers me,
With telling me of the moldwarp and the ant.

There were some late taxes and impositions introduced, which rather angered than grieved the people. Clarendon.

It anger'd Turenne, once upon a day,

To see a footman kick'd that took his pay. Pope's Dial. ii.

A'NGERLY. adv. [from anger.] In an angry manner; like one offended.

Why, how now, Hecat, you look angery. Shak. Macbeth.

Such jester's dishonest indiscretion, is rather charitably to be pitied, than their exception either angery to be grieved at, or seriously to be confuted. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

ANGIO'GRAPHY. n. f. [from ἀγγεῖον and γραφω.] A description of vessels in the human body; nerves, veins, arteries, and lymphatic-ticks.

ANGIO'LOGY. n. f. [from ἀγγεῖον and λόγος.] A treatise or discourse of the vessels of a human body.

ANGIOMONOSPERMOUS. adj. [from ἀγγεῖον, μῶν, and σπέρμα.]
Such plants as have but one single seed in the seed-pod.

ANGIO'TOMY. n. f. [from ἀγγεῖον and τέμνω, to cut.] A cutting open of the vessels, as in the opening of a vein or artery.

ANGLE. n. f. [angle, Fr. angulus, Lat.] The space intercepted between two lines intersecting each other.

Angle of the centre of a circle, is an angle whose vertex, or angular point is at the centre of a circle, and whose legs are two semidiameters of that circle. Stone's Dict.

A'NGLE. n. f. [angel, Germ. and Dutch.] An instrument to take fish, consisting of a rod, a line, and a hook.

She also had an angle in her hand; but the taker was so taken, that she had forgotten taking. Sidney.

Give me mine angle, we'll to the river there,

My musick playing far off, I will betray

Tawny finn'd fish; my bended hook shall pierce

Their slimy jaws. Shakefp. Antony and Cleopatra.

The patient fisher takes his silent stand,

Intent, his angle trembling in his hand;

With looks unmov'd, he hopes the scaly breed,

And eyes the dancing cork, and bending reed. Pop. Windsf.

To A'NGLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fish with a rod and hook.

The ladies angling in the crystal lake,

Feast on the waters with the prey they take. Waller.

2. To try to gain by some insinuating artifices, as fishes are caught by a bait.

By this face,

This seeming brow of justice, did he win

The hearts of all that he did angle for. Shak. Henry IV.

The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish

Cut with her golden oars the silver stream,

And greedily devour the treacherous bait;

So angle we for Beatrice. Shak. Much ado about Nothing.

A'NGLE-ROD. n. f. [angel roede, Dutch.] The stick to which the line and hook are hung.

It differeth much in greatness; the smallest being fit for thatching of houses; the second bigness is used for angle-rods, and, in China, for beating of offenders upon the thighs.

Bacon's Natural History, No 656.

He makes a May-fly to a miracle, and furnishes the whole country with angle-rods. Addison. Spectator, No 108.

A'NGLER. n. f. [from angle.] He that fishes with an angle.

He, like a patient angler, ere he strook,

Would let them play a while upon the hook. Dryden.

Neither do birds alone, but many sorts of fishes, feed upon insects; as is well known to anglers, who bait their hooks with them. Ray on the Creation.

A'NGLICISM. n. f. [from Ang'us, Lat.] A form of speech peculiar to the English language; an English idiom.

A'NGOBER. n. f. A kind of pear. See PEAR.

A'NGRILY. adv. [from angry.] In an angry manner; furiously;
peevishly.

I will sit as quiet as a lamb;

I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,

Nor look upon the iron angrily. Shakefp. King John.

A'NGRY. adj. [from anger.]

1. Touched with anger; provoked.

Oh let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak: peradventure there shall be thirty found there. Gen. xviii. 30.

2. It seems properly to require, when the object of anger is mentioned, the particle at before a thing, and with before a person;
but this is not always observed.

Your Coriolanus is not much misfed, but with his friends;
the commonwealth doth stand, and so would do, were he angry at it. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Now therefore be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither: for God did send me before you to preserve life. Gen. xlv. 5.

I think it a vast pleasure, that whenever two people of merit regard one another, so many scoundrels envy and are angry at them. Swift.

3. Having the appearance of anger; having the effect of anger.
The north wind driveth away rain: so doth an angry countenance a backbiting tongue. Prov. xxv. 23.

4. In chirurgery, painful; inflamed; smarting.

This serum, being accompanied by the thinner parts of the blood, grows red and angry; and, wanting its due regrefs into the mass, first gathers into a hard swelling, and, in a few days, ripens into matter, and so dischargeth. Wiseman's Surgery.

A'NGUISH. n. f. [angoisse, Fr. angor, Lat.] Excessive pain either of mind or body; applied to the mind, it means the pain of sorrow, and is seldom used to signify other passions.

Not all so cheerful seemed she of fight,

As was her sister; whether dread did dwell,

Or anguish in her heart, is hard to tell. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Virtue's but anguish, when 'tis several,

By occasion wak'd, and circumstantial;

True virtue's soul, always in all deeds all. Donne.

They had persecutors, whose invention was as great as their cruelty. Wit and malice conspired to find out such deaths, and those of such incredible anguish, that only the manner of dying was the punishment, death itself the deliverance. South.

Perpetual anguish fills his anxious breast,

Not stopt by business, nor compos'd by rest;

No musick cheers him, nor no feast can please. Dryd. Juv.

A'NGUISHED. adj. [from anguish.] Seized with anguish; tortured; excessively pained.

Feel no touch

Of conscience, but of fame, and be

Anguish'd, not that 'twas sin, but that 'twas she. Donne.

A'NGULAR. adj. [from angle.] Having angles or corners; cornered.

As for the figure of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six cornered, being built upon a confused matter, from whence, as it were from a root, angular figures arise, even as in the amethyst and basalt. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

The distance of the edges of the knives from one another, a the distance of four inches from the angular point, where the edges of the knives meet, was the eight part of an inch.

Newton's Opticks..

ANGULA'RITY. n. f. [from angular.] The quality of being angular, or having corners.

A'NGULARLY. adv. [from angular.] With angles or corners.
Another part of the same solution afforded us an ice angu- larly figured. Boyle.

A'NGULARNESS. n. f. [from angular.] The quality of being angular.

A'NGULATED. adj. [from angle.] Formed with angles or corners.

Topazes, amethysts, or emeralds, which grow in the fissures, are ordinarily crystallized, or shot into angulated figures;
whereas, in the strata, they are found in rude lumps, like yellow, purple, and green pebbles. Woodward's Nat. History.

ANGULO'SITY. n. f. [from angulus.] Angularity; cornered form. Dict.

A'NGULOUS. adj. [from angle.] Hooked; angular.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, and angulous involutions; since the coherence of the parts of these will be of as difficult a conception. Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica.

ANGU'ST. adj. [angustus, Lat.] Narrow; strait. Dict.

ANGUSTA'TION. n. f. [from angustus.] The act of making narrow; straitening; the state of being narrowed.

The cause may be referred either to the grumousness of the blood, or to obstruction of the vein somewhere in its passage, by some angustation upon it by part of the tumour. Wiseman.

ANHELA'TION. n. f. [anhele, Lat.] The act of panting; the state of being out of breath.

ANHELO'SE. adj. [anhelus, Lat.] Out of breath; panting; labouring of being out of breath. Dict.

A'NIENTED. adj. [anneantir, Fr.] Frustrated; brought to nothing.

ANI'GHTS. adv. [from a for at, and night.] In the night time.

Sir Toby, you must come in earlier anights; your niece, my lady, takes great exceptions at your ill hours.

Shakefp. Twelfth Night.

A'NIL. n. f. The shrub from whose leaves and stalks indigo is prepared. A'NILE-

ANILENESS. } n. f. [anilitas, Lat.] The state of being an old
ANILITY. } woman; the old age of women.

ANIMABLE. adj. [from animate.] That which may be put into life, or receive animation. Dict.

ANIMADVERSION. n. f. [animadversio, Lat.]

1. Reproof; severe censure; blame.

He dismissed their commissioners with severe and sharp animadversions.
Clarendon, b. viii.

2. Punishment. When the object of animadversion is mentioned, it has the particle on or upon before it.

When a bill is debating in parliament, it is usual to have the controversy handled by pamphlets on both sides; without the least animadversion upon the authours. Swift.

3. In law.

An ecclesiastical censure, and an ecclesiastical animadversion, are different things; for a censure has a relation to a spiritual punishment, but an animadversion has only a respect to a temporal one; as, degradation, and the delivering the person over to the secular court. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ANIMADVERSIVE. adj. [from animadvert.] That has the power of judging.

The representation of objects to the soul, the only animadversive principle, are conveyed by motions made on the immediate organs of sense. Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica, c. 12.

ANIMADVERSIVENESS. n. f. [from animadversive.] The power of animadverting, or making judgment. Dict.

TO ANIMADVERT. v. n. [animadverto, Lat.]

1. To pass censures upon.

I should not animadvert on him, who was otherwise a painful observer of the decorum of the stage, if he had not used extreme severity in his judgment of the incomparable Shakespeare for that fault. Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.

2. To inflict punishments. In both senses with the particle upon.

If the Authour of the universe animadverts upon men here below, how much more will it become him to do it upon their entrance into a higher state of being. Grew's Cosmolog. Sacra.

ANIMADVERTER. n. f. [from animadvert.] He that passes censures, or inflicts punishments.

God is a strict observer of, and a severe animadverter upon, such as presume to partake of those mysteries, without such a preparation. South.

ANIMAL. n. f. [animal, Lat.]

1. A living creature corporeal, distinct, on the one side, from pure spirit, on the other, from mere matter.

Animals are such beings, which, besides the power of growing, and producing their like, as plants and vegetables have, are endowed also with sensation and spontaneous motion. Mr. Ray gives two schemes of tables of them.

Animals are either

Sanguineous, that is, such as have blood, which breathe either by

Lungs, having either

Two ventricles in their heart, and those either

Viviparous,

{ Aquatick, as the whale kind,

{ Terrestrial, as quadrupeds;

{ Oviparous, as birds.

But one ventricle in the heart, as frogs, tortoises, and serpents.

Gills, as all sanguineous fishes, except the whale kind.

Exsanguineous, or without blood, which may be divided into Greater, and those either,

Naked,

{ Terrestrial, as naked snails.

{ Aquatick, as the poulp, cuttle-fish, &c.

Covered with a tegument, either

{ Crustaceous, as lobsters and crab-fish.

{ Testaceous, either

{ Univalve, as limpets;

{ Bivalve, as oysters, muscles, cockles;

{ Turbinate, as periwinkles, snails, &c.

Lesser, as insects of all sorts.

Viviparous hairy animals, or quadrupeds, are either

Hoofed, which are either

{ Whole-footed or hoofed, as the horse and ass;

{ Cloven-footed, having the hoof divided into

Two principal parts, called bisulca, either

{ Such as chew not the cud, as swine;

{ Ruminant, or such as chew the cud; divided into

{ Such as have perpetual and hollow horns.

{ Beef-kind,

{ Sheep-kind,

{ Goat-kind.

{ Such as have solid, branched and deciduous horns, as the deer-kind.

Four parts, or quadrifulca, as the rhinoceros and hippotamus,

Clawed or digitate, having the foot divided into { Two parts or toes, having two nails, as the camel kind;

{ Many toes or claws; either

{ Undivided, as the elephant;

{ Divided, which have either

VOL. I.

{ Broad nails, and an human shape, as apes;

{ Narrower, and more pointed nails, which, in respect of their teeth, are divided into such as have

Many fore-teeth, or cutters in each jaw;

{ The greater, which have

{ A shorter snout and rounder head, as the cat-kind;

{ A longer snout and head, as the dog-kind.

{ The lesser, the vermin or weazel kind.

Only two large and remarkable fore-teeth, all which are phy-tivorous, and are called the hare kind. Ray.

Vegetables are proper enough to repair animals, as being near of the same specifick gravity with the animal juices, and as consisting of the same parts with animal substances, spirit, water, salt, oil, earth; all which are contained in the sap they derive from the earth. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Some of the animated substances have various organical or instrumental parts, fitted for a variety of motions from place to place, and a spring of life within themselves, as beasts, birds, fishes, and insects; these are called animals. Other animated substances are called vegetables, which have within themselves the principles of another sort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves and fruit, such as we see in plants, herbs, and trees. Watts's Logick.

2. By way of contempt, we say of a stupid man, that he is a stupid animal.

ANIMAL. adj. [animalis, Lat.]

1. That which belongs or relates to animals.

There are other things in the world of spirits, wherein our ideas are very dark and confused; such as their union with animal nature, the way of their acting on material beings, and their converse with each other. Watts's Logick.

2. Animal functions, distinguished from natural and vital, are the lower powers of the mind, as, the will, memory, and imagination.

3. Animal life is opposed, on one side, to intellectual, and, on the other, to vegetable.

4. Animal is used in opposition to spiritual or rational; as, the animal nature.

ANIMALCULE. n. f. [animalculum, Lat.] A small animal; particularly those which are in their first and smallest state.

We are to know, that they all come of the seed of animal-cules of their own kind, that were before laid there. Ray.

ANIMALITY. n. f. [from animal.] The state of animal existence.

The word animal there only signifies human animality. In the minor proposition, the word animal, for the same reason, signifies the animality of a goose: thereby it becomes an ambiguous term, and unfit to build the conclusion upon. Watts.

TO ANIMATE. v. a. [animare, Lat.]

1. To quicken; to make alive; to give life to: as, the soul animates the body; man must have been animated by a higher power.

2. To give powers to; to heighten the powers or effect of any thing.

But none, ah! none can animate the lyre,
 And the mute strings with vocal souls inspire;
 Whether the learn'd Minerva be her theme,
 Or chaste Diana bathing in the stream;
 None can record their heav'nly praise so well
 As Helen, in whose eyes ten thousand Cupids dwell. Dryd.

3. To encourage; to incite.

The more to animate the people, he stood on high, from whence he might be best heard, and cried unto them with a loud voice. Knolles's History of the Turks.

ANIMATE. adj. [from To animate.] Alive; possessing animal life.

All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them;
 but the main differences between animate and inanimate, are two: the first is, that the spirit of things animate are all contained within themselves, and are branched in veins and secret canals, as blood is; and, in living creatures, the spirits have not only branches, but certain cells or seats, where the principal spirits do reside, and whereunto the rest do resort: but the spirits in things inanimate are shut in, and cut off by the tangible parts, and are not pervious one to another, as air is in snow.

Bacon's Natural History, N° 601.

Nobler birth

Of creatures animate with gradual life,

Of growth, sense, reason, all summ'd up in man.

Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix. l. 112.

There are several topicks there used against the atheism and idolatry of the heathens; such as the visible marks of divine wisdom and goodness in the works of the creation, the vital union of souls with matter, and the admirable structure of animate bodies, and the like. Bentley's Sermons.

ANIMATED. participial adj. [from animate.] Lively; vigorous.

Warriours she fires with animated sounds;

Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds. Pope.

ANIMATENESS. n. f. [from animate.] The state of being animated. Dict.

ANIMATION. n. f. [from animate.]

1. The act of animating or enlivening.

Plants or vegetables are the principal part of the third day's work. They are the first procreat, which is the word of animation. Bacon's Natural History, cent. v.

2. The state of being enlivened.

A'NIMATIVE. adj. [from animate.] That which has the power of giving life, or animating.

ANIMA'TOR. n. f. [from animate.] That which gives life; that which implants a principle of life.

Those bodies being of a congenerous nature, do readily receive the impressions of their motor, and, if not fettered by their gravity, conform themselves to situations, wherein they best unite to their animator. Brown's Vul. Err. b. ii. c. 2.

ANIMO'SE. adj. [animositas, Lat.] Full of spirit; hot; vehement. Diët.

ANIMO'SENESS. n. f. [from animose.] Spirit; heat; vehemence of temper. Diët.

ANIMO'SITY. n. f. [animositas, Lat.] Vehemence of hatred; passionate malignity. It implies rather the disposition to break out into outrages, than the outrage itself.

They were sure to bring passion, animosity, and malice enough of their own, what evidence soever they had from others.

Clarendon, b. viii.

If there is not some method found out for allaying these heats and animosities among the fair sex, one does not know to what outrages they may proceed. Addison's Freeholder, N° 23.

No religious sect ever carried their aversions for each other to greater heights than our state parties have done; who, the more to inflame their passions, have mixed religious and civil animosities together; borrowing one of their appellations from the church. Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England man.

A'NISE. n. f. [anisum, Lat.] A species of apium or parsley, with large sweet scented seeds. This plant is not worth propagating in England for use, because the seeds can be had much better and cheaper from Italy. Millar.

The seed of this plant has a sweetish taste, intermixed with something pungent and bitter, is reputed an aromack, and prescribed not barely as a carminative against wind, but also as a pectoral, stomachick, and digestive. Chambers.

Ye pay the tithe of mint, and anise, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. Matt. xxv. 25.

A'NKER. n. f. [anker, Dut.] A liquid measure chiefly used at Amsterdam. It is the fourth part of the awm, and contains two stekans: each stekan consists of sixteen mengles; the mangle being equal to two of our wine quarts. Chambers.

A'NKLE. n. f. [ancleop, Sax. anckel, Dutch.] The joint which joins the foot to the leg.

One of his ankles was much swelled and ulcerated on the inside, in several places. Wifeman.

My simple system shall suppose,
That Alma enters at the toes;
That then she mounts by just degrees
Up to the ankles, legs and knees. Prior.

A'NKLE-BONE. n. f. [from ankle and bone.] The bone of the ankle.

The shin-bone, from the knee to the instep, is made by shadowing one half of the leg with a single shadow, the ankle-bone will shew itself by a shadow given underneath, as the knee. Peacham on Drawing.

A'NNALIST. n. f. [from annals.] A writer of annals.

I wonder my author should be offended, especially since their own annalist has given the same title to that of Syrmium. Atterb.

ANNALS. n. f. without singular number. [annales, Lat.] Histories digested in the exact order of time; narratives in which every event is recorded under its proper year.

Could you with patience hear, or I relate,
O nymph! the tedious annals of our fate!
Through such a train of woes if I should run,
The day wou'd sooner than the tale be done! Dryd. Virg.

We are assured, by many glorious examples in the annals of our religion, that every one, in the like circumstances of distress, will not act and argue thus; but thus will every one be tempted to act. Rogers's Sermons.

A'NNATS. n. f. without singular. [annates, Lat.]

1. First fruits; because the rate of first fruits paid of spiritual livings, is after one year's profit. Cowell.
2. Masses said in the Romish church for the space of a year, or for any other time, either for the soul of a person deceased, or for the benefit of a person living. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To ANNE'AL. v. a. [ælan, to heat, Saxon.]

1. To heat glass, that the colours laid on it may pierce through. But when thou dost anneal in glass thy story, — then the light and glory
More rev'rend grows, and more doth win,
Which else shews wat'rish, bleak, and thin. Herbert.

When you purpose to anneal, take a plate of iron made fit for the oven; or, for want thereof, take a blue stone, which being made fit for the aforesaid oven, lay it upon the cross bars of iron. Peacham on Drawing.

Which her own inward symmetry reveal'd,
And like a picture shone, in glass anneal'd. Dryden's Fables.

2. To heat glass after it is blown, that it may not break.

3. To heat any thing in such a manner as to give it the true temper.

To ANNE'X. v. a. [annectō, annexum, Lat. annexer, Fr.]

1. To unite to at the end; as, he annexed a codicil to his will.
2. To unite; as, a smaller thing to a greater; as, he annexed a province to his kingdom.
3. To unite à posteriori; annexion always presupposing something: thus we may say, punishment is annexed to guilt; but not guilt to punishment.

Concerning fate or destiny, of which the opinions of those learned men, that have written thereof, may be safely received, had they not thereunto annexed and fastened an inevitable necessity, and made it more general and universally powerful than it is. Raleigh's History of the World.

Nations will decline so low

From virtue, which is reason, that no wrong,
But justice, and some fatal curse annex'd,

Deprives them of their outward liberty. Milton's Par. Lost.

I mean not the authority, which is annexed to your office; I speak of that only which is inborn and inherent to your person. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

He cannot but love virtue wherever it is, and annex happiness always to the exercise of it. Atterbury's Sermons.

The temporal reward is annexed to the bare performance of the action, but the eternal to the obedience. Rogers's Sermons.

ANNE'X. n. f. [from To annex.] The thing annexed; addition. Blount.

Failing in his first attempt to be but like the highest in heaven, he hath obtained of men to be the same on earth, and hath accordingly assumed the annexes of divinity. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 10.

ANNEXA'TION. n. f. [from annex.]

1. Conjunction; addition.

If we can return to that charity and peaceable mindedness, which Christ so vehemently recommends to us, we have his own promise, that the whole body will be full of light. Matt. vi. that all other christian virtues will, by way of concomitance or annexation, attend them. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. Union; coalition; conjunction.

How these annexations of benefices first came into the church, whether by the prince's authority, or the pope's licence, is a very great dispute. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ANNE'XION. n. f. [from annex.] The act of annexing; addition.

It is necessary to engage the fears of men, by the annexion of such penalties as will overbalance temporal pleasure. Rogers.

ANNE'XMENT. n. f. [from annex.]

1. The act of annexing.
2. The thing annexed.

When it falls,

Each small annexment, petty consequence,
Attends the boist'rous ruin. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

ANNI'HILABLE. adj. [from annihilate.] That which may be reduced to nothing; that which may be put out of existence.

To ANNI'HILATE. v. a. [ad and nihilum, Lat.]

1. To reduce to nothing; to put out of existence.
- It is impossible for any body to be utterly annihilated; but that as it was the work of the omnipotency of God, to make somewhat of nothing; so it requireth the like omnipotency to turn somewhat into nothing. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 100.

Thou taught'st me, by making me
Love her, who doth neglect both me and thee,
T' invent and practise this one way, t' annihilate all three. Donne.

He despaired of God's mercy; he, by a decollation of all hope, annihilated his mercy. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 2.

Whose friendship can stand against assaults, strong enough to annihilate the friendship of puny minds; such an one has reached true constancy. South.

Some imagined, water sufficient to a deluge was created, and, when the business was done, disbanded, and annihilated. Woodward's Natural History.

2. To destroy, so as to make the thing otherwise than it was. The flood that hath altered, deformed, or rather annihilated, this place, so as no man can find any mark or memory thereof. Raleigh's History of the World.
3. To annul; to destroy the agency of any thing.

There is no reason, that any one commonwealth should annihilate that whereupon the whole world has agreed. Hooker.

ANNI'HILA'TION. n. f. [from annihilate.] The act of reducing to nothing. The state of being reduced to nothing.

God hath his influence into the very essence of things, without which their utter annihilation could not choose but follow. Hooker, b. v. § 56.

That knowledge, which as spirits we obtain,
Is to be valu'd in the midst of pain:
Annihilation were to lose heav'n more:

We are not quite exil'd, where thought can soar: Dryden.

ANNIVE'RSARY. n. f. [anniversarius, Lat.]

1. A day celebrated as it returns in the course of the year. For encouragement to follow the example of martyrs, the primitive primitive christians met at the places of their martyrdom, to praise God for them, and to observe the anniversary of their sufferings. Stillington's Defence of Disc. on Romish Idolatry.

2. The act of celebration, or performance, in honour of the anniversary day.

Donne had never seen Mrs. Drury, whom he has made immortal in his admirable anniversaries. Dryden.

3. Anniversary is an office in the Romish church, celebrated not only once a year, but which ought to be said daily through the year, for the soul of the deceased. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ANNIVERSARY. adj. [anniversarius, Lat.] Returning with the revolution of the year; annual; yearly.

The heaven whirled about with admirable celerity, most constantly finishing its anniversary vicissitudes. Ray.

They deny giving any worship to a creature, as inconsistent with christianity; but confess the honour and esteem for the martyrs, which they expressed by keeping their anniversary days, and recommending their example. Stillington's Defence.

ANNO DOMINI. [Lat.] In the year of our Lord; as, anno domini, or A. D. 1751; that is, in the seventeen hundred and fifty first year from the birth of our Saviour.

ANNOISANCE. n. f. [from annoy, but not now in use.]

It hath a double signification, being as well for any hurt done either to a publick place, as highway, bridge, or common river, or to a private, by laying any thing that may breed infection, by encroaching, or such like means; as also, for the writ that is brought upon this transgression. See NUSANCE, the word now used. Blount.

ANNOLIS. n. f. An American animal, like a lizard.

ANNOTATION. n. f. [annotatio, Lat.] Explications or remarks written upon books; notes.

It might appear very improper to publish annotations, without the text itself whereunto they relate. Boyle.

ANNOTATOR. n. f. [Lat.] A writer of notes, or annotations; a scholiast; a commentator.

I have not that respect for the annotators, which they generally meet with in the world. Felton on the Classics.

TO ANNO'UNCE. v. a. [annoncer, Fr. annuncio, Lat.]

1. To publish; to proclaim.

Of the Messiah I have heard foretold

By all the prophets; of thy birth at length

Announc'd by Gabriel with the first I knew. Paradise Reg.

2. To pronounce; to declare by a judicial sentence.

Those, mighty Jove, mean time, thy glorious care,

Who model nations, publish laws, announce

Or life or death. Prior.

TO ANNOY. v. a. [annoyer, Fr.] To incommode; to vex; to teaze; to molest.

Woe to poor man; each outward thing annoys him;

He heaps in inward grief, that most destroys him. Sidney.

Her joyous presence and sweet company,

In full content he there did long enjoy;

Ne wicked envy, nor vile jealousy,

His dear delights were able to annoy: Fairy Queen, b. i.

As one who long in populous city pent,

Where houses thick, and sewers, annoy the air,

Forth issuing on a summer's morn to breathe

Among the pleasant villages, and farms

Adjoin'd, from each thing met conceives delight.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 445.

Insects seldom use their offensive weapons, unless provoked:

let them but alone, and annoy them not. Ray on the Creation.

ANNOY. n. f. [from the verb.] Injury; molestation; trouble.

Sleep, Richmond, sleep in peace, and wake in joy;

Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoy. Shakesp. R. III.

All pain and joy is in their way;

The things we fear bring less annoy

Than fear, and hope brings greater joy;

But in themselves they cannot stay. Donne.

What then remains, but, after past annoy,

To take the good vicissitude of joy. Dryden's Fables.

ANNOYANCE. n. f. [from annoy.]

1. That which annoys; that which hurts.

A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wand'ring hair,

Any annoyance in that precious sense. Shakesp. King John.

Crows, ravens, rooks, and magpies, are great annoyances to corn. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. The state of being annoyed; or act of annoying.

The spit venom of their poisoned hearts breaketh out to the annoyance of others. Hooker, b. v. § 2.

The greatest annoyance and disturbance of mankind, has been from one of those two things, force or fraud. South.

For the further annoyance and terrour of any besieged place, they would throw into it dead bodies. Wilkins's Math. Mag.

ANNOYER. n. f. [from To annoy.] The person that annoys.

ANNUAL. adj. [annuel, Fr. from annus, Lat.]

1. That which comes yearly.

Annual for me, the grape, the rose, renew,

The juice nectareous, and the balmy dew. Pope's Ess. on M.

2. That which is reckoned by the year.

The king's majesty

Does purpose honour to you; to which

A thousand pounds a year, annual support,

Out of his grace he adds.

Shakesp. Henry VIII.

3. That which lasts only a year.

The dying in the winter of the roots of plants that are annual, seemeth to be caused by the over-expende of the sap; which being prevented, they will superannuate, if they stand warm. Bacon's Natural History, N° 448.

Every tree may, in some sense, be said to be an annual plant, both leaf, flower, and fruit, proceeding from the coat that was superinduced over the wood the last year. Ray on the Creation.

ANNUALLY. adv. [from annual.] Yearly; every year.

By two drachms, they thought it sufficient to signify a heart; because the heart at one year weigheth two drachms, that is, a quarter of an ounce; and unto fifty years annually encreaseth the weight of one drachm. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 20.

The whole strength of a nation is the utmost that a prince can raise annually from his subjects. Swift.

ANNUITANT. n. f. [from annuity.] He that possesses or receives an annuity.

ANNUITY. n. f. [annuité, Fr.]

1. A yearly rent to be paid for term of life or years. The differences between a rent and an annuity are, that every rent is going out of land; but an annuity charges only the granter, or his heirs, that have assets by descent. The second difference is, that, for the recovery of an annuity, no action lies, but only the writ of annuity against the granter, his heirs, or successors; but of a rent, the same actions lie as do of land. The third difference is, that an annuity is never taken for assets, because it is no freehold in law; nor shall be put in execution upon a statute merchant, statute staple, or elegit, as a rent may. Cowel.
2. A yearly allowance.

He was generally known to be the son of one earl, and brother to another, who supplied his expence, beyond what his annuity from his father would bear. Clarendon.

TO ANNU'L. v. a. [from nullus.]

1. To make void; to nullify; to abrogate; to abolish.

That which gives force to the law, is the authority that enacts it; and whoever destroys this authority, does, in effect, annul the law. Rogers's Sermons.

2. To reduce to nothing; to obliterate.

Light the pure work of God to me's extinct,

And all her various objects of delight

Annul'd, which might in part my grief have eas'd.

Milton's Sampson Agonistes, l. 72.

ANNULAR. adj. [from annulus, Lat.] In the form of a ring.

That they might not, in bending the arm or leg, rise up, he has tied them to the bones by annular ligaments. Cheyne.

ANNULARY. adj. [from annulus, Lat.] In the form of rings.

Because continual respiration is necessary, the wind-pipe is made with annulary cartilages, that the sides of it may not flag and fall together. Ray on the Creation.

ANNULET. n. f. [from annulus, Lat.]

1. A little ring.
2. [In heraldry.] A difference or mark of distinction, which the fifth brother of any family ought to bear in his coat of arms.
3. Annulets are also a part of the coat-armour of several families; they were anciently reputed a mark of nobility and jurisdiction, it being the custom of prelates to receive their investiture per baculum & annulum.
4. [In architecture.] The small square members, in the Dorick capital, under the quarter round, are called annulets.
5. Annulet is also used for a narrow flat moulding common to other parts of the column; so called, because it encompasses the column round. Chambers.

TO ANNUMERATE. v. a. [annumero, Lat.] To add to a former number; to unite to something beforementioned.

ANNUMERATION. n. f. [annumeratio, Lat.] Addition to a former number.

TO ANNU'NCIATE. v. a. [annuncio, Lat.] To bring tidings; to relate something that has fallen out: a word not in popular use.

ANNUNCIATION DAY. n. f. [from annunciate.] The day celebrated by the church, in memory of the angel's salutation of the blessed virgin; solemnized with us on the twenty-fifth of March.

Upon the day of the annunciation, or Lady-day, meditate on the incarnation of our blessed Saviour: and so upon all the festivals of the year. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

ANODYNE. adj. [from α and ὀδύνη.] That which has the power of mitigating pain.

Yet durst she not too deeply probe the wound,

As hoping still the nobler parts were found:

But strove with anodynes to assuage the smart,

And mildly thus her medicine did impart. Dryd. Hind and P.

Anodynes, or abaters of pain of the alimentary kind, are such things as relax the tension of the affected nervous fibres, as decoctions of emollient substances; those things which destroy the particular acrimony which occasions the pain, or what deadens the sensation of the brain, by procuring sleep. Arbuthnot.

TO ANO'INT. v. a. [oindre, enoindre; part. oint, enoint, Fr.]

1. To rub over with unctuous matter, as oil, or unguents.

Anointed let me be with deadly venom,
And die, ere men can say, God save the queen. Shak. R. III.
Thou shalt have olive trees throughout all thy coasts, but thou shalt not anoint thyself with the oil: for thine olive shall cast his fruit. Deut. xxviii. 40.

2. To smear; to be rubbed upon.

Warm waters then in brazen caldrons born,
Are pour'd to wash his body, joint by joint,
And fragrant oils the stiffen'd limbs anoint. Dryd. Æn. vi.

3. To consecrate by unction.

I would not see thy cruel nails
Pluck out his poor old eyes; nor thy fierce sister
In his anointed flesh stick boarish fangs. Shakesp. King Lear.

ANO'INTER. n. f. [from anoint.] The person that anoints.

ANO'MALISM. n. f. [from anomaly.] Anomaly; irregularity;
deviation from the common rule. Dict.

ANOMALI'STICAL. adj. [from anomaly.] Irregular; applied in astronomy to the year, taken for the time in which the earth passeth through its orbit, distinct from the tropical year.

ANO'MALOUS. adj. [α priv. and ἀνμαλῶς.] Irregular; out of rule; deviating from the general method or analogy of things:
It is applied, in grammar, to words deviating from the common rules of inflection; and, in astronomy, to the seemingly irregular motions of the planets.

There will arise anomalous disturbances not only in civil and artificial, but also in military officers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

He being acquainted with some characters of every speech, you may at pleasure make him understand anomalous pronunciation. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Metals are gold, silver, copper, tin, lead, and iron: to which we may join that anomalous body, quicksilver or mercury.

Locke's Elements of Natural Philosophy.

ANO'MALOUSLY. adv. [from anomalous.] Irregularly; in a manner contrary to rule.

Eve was not solemnly begotten, but suddenly framed, and anomalously proceeded from Adam. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ANOM'ALY. n. f. [anomalie, Fr. anomalía, Lat. ἀνωμαλία.]
Irregularity; deviation from the common rule.

If we should chance to find a mother debauching her daughter, as such monsters have been seen, we must charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and baseness of nature. South.

I do not pursue the many pseudographies in use, but intend to shew how most of these anomalies in writing might be avoided, and better supplied. Holder's Elements of Speech.

A'NOMY. n. f. [α priv. and νόμος.] Breach of law.

If sin be good, and just, and lawful, it is no more evil, it is no sin, no anomy. Bramham against Hobbes.

ANO'N. adv. [Junius imagines it to be an elliptical form of speaking for in one, that is, in one minute; Skinner from a and nean, or near; Minshew from on on.]

1. Quickly; soon; in a short time.

A little snow, tumbled about,

Anon becomes a mountain. Shakespeare's King John.

Will they come abroad anon?

Shall we see young Oberon? Ben Johnson's Fairy Prince.

However, witness, heav'n!

Heav'n, witness thou anon! while we discharge

Freely our part. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi. l. 564.

He was not without design at that present, as shall be made out anon; meaning by that device to withdraw himself. Clarend.

Still as I did the leaves inspire,

With such a purple light they shone,

As if they had been made of fire,

And spreading so, would flame anon. Waller.

2. Sometimes; now and then; at other times. In this sense is used ever and anon.

Full forty days he pass'd, whether on hill

Sometimes, anon in shady vale, each night,

Or harbour'd in one cave, is not revealed. Par. Regained.

ANO'NYMOUS. adj. [α priv. and ὄνομα.] Wanting a name.

These animalcules serve also for food to another anonymous insect of the waters. Ray on the Creation.

They would forthwith publish scandals unpunished, the authors being anonymous, the immediate publishers thereof sculk-
ing. Notes on the Dunciad.

ANO'NYMOUSLY. adv. [from anonymous.] Without a name.

I would know, whether the edition is to come out anonymously, among complaints of spurious editions? Swift.

ANORE'XY. n. f. [ἀνορεξία.] Inappetency, or loathing of food.
Quincy.

ANO'THER. adj. [from an and other.]

1. Not the same.

He that will not lay a foundation for perpetual disorder, must of necessity find another rise of government than that. Locke.

2. One more; a new addition to the former number.

—— A fourth? ——

Start eye!

What! will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom?

Another yet?—a seventh! I'll see no more. Shak. Macbeth.

3. Any other; any one else.

If one man sin against another, the judge shall judge him.

3 1 Samuel, ii. 25.

Why not of her? preferr'd above the rest,
By him with knightly deeds, and open love profess'd;
So had another been, where he his vows address'd.

Dryden's Fables.

4. Not one's self.

A man shall have diffused his life, his self, and his whole concernments so far, that he can weep his sorrows with another's eyes; when he has another heart besides his own, both to share, and to support his grief. South.

5. Widely different; much altered.

When the soul is beaten from its station, and the mounds of virtue are broken down, it becomes quite another thing from what it was before. South.

ANO'THERGAINES. adj. [See ANOTHERGUESS.] Of another kind. This word I have found only in Sidney.

If my father had not plaid the hasty fool, I might have had anothergaines husband than Dametas. Sidney.

ANO'THERGUESS. adj. [This word, which though rarely used in writing, is somewhat frequent in colloquial language, I conceive to be corrupted from another guise; that is, of a different guise, or manner, or form.] Of a different kind.

Oh Hocus! where art thou? It used to go in anothergues's manner in thy time. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

A'NSATED. adj. [ansatus, Lat.] Having handles; or something in the form of handles.

To ANSWER. v. n. [The etymology is uncertain; the Saxons had andyrpanian, but in another sense; the Dutch have antwoorden.]

1. To speak in return to a question.

Are we succour'd? are the Moors remov'd?

Answer these questions first, and then a thousand more,

Answer them altogether.

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

2. To speak in opposition.

No man was able to answer him a word. Matt. xxii. 46.

If it be said, we may discover the elementary ingredients of things, I answer, that it is not necessary that such a discovery should be practicable. Boyle.

3. To be accountable for.

Some men have sinned in the principles of humanity, and must answer for not being men. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If there be any absurdity in this, our author must answer for
it. Locke.

4. To vindicate; to give a justificatory account of.

The night, so impudently fixed for my last, made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my family. Swift.

5. To give an account.

How they have been since received, and so well improved, let those answer either to God or man, who have been the authors and promoters of such wise council. Temple.

He wants a father to protect his youth,

And rear him up to virtue. You must bear

The future blame, and answer to the world,

When you refuse the easy honest means

Of taking care of him. Southern's Innocent Adultery.

6. To correspond to; to suit with.

In water face answereth to face: so the heart of man to man.

Prov. xxvii. 19.

7. To be equivalent to; to stand for something else.

A feast is made for laughter, and wine maketh merry: but money answereth all things. Eccl. x. 19.

8. To satisfy any claim or petition.

Revenge the jeering and disdain'd contempt

Of this proud king, who studies day and night

To answer all the debt he owes unto you,

Ev'n with the bloody payments of your deaths. Sh. Hen. IV.

Men no sooner find their appetites unanswered, than they complain the times are injurious. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

9. To act reciprocally upon.

Say, dost thou yet the Roman harp command?

Do the strings answer to thy noble hand? Dryden's Persius.

10. To stand as opposite or correlative to something else.

There can but two things create love, perfection and usefulness; to which answer, on our part, 1. Admiration; and,

2. Desire: and both these are centered in love.

Taylor.

11. To bear proportion to.

He desired, that proper officers might search me; for probably I might carry several weapons, which must needs be dangerous things, if they answered the bulk of so prodigious a person. Swift's Gulliver's Travels.

12. To perform what is endeavoured or intended by the agent.

Our part is, to choose out the most deserving objects, and the most likely to answer the ends of our charity; and when that is done, all is done that lies in our power: the rest must be left to providence. Atterbury's Sermons.

13. To comply with.

He dies that touches of this fruit,

Till I and my affairs are answered. Shakesp. As you like it.

14. To succeed; to produce the wished event.

Jason followed her counsel, whereto, when the event had answered, he again demanded the fleece. Raleigh's Hist. of the W.

We see likewise, that much water draweth forth the juice of the body infused; but little water is imbibed by the body: and this

this is a principal cause, why, in operations upon bodies for their version or alteration, the trial in great quantities doth not answer the trial in small; and so deceiveth many.

Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup> 92.

15. To appear to any call, or authoritative summons; in which sense, though figuratively, the following passage may be, perhaps, taken.

Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer, with thy uncovered body, this extremity of the skies. Shakesp. K. Lear.

16. To be over-against any thing.

Fire answers fire, and, by their paly beams,

Each battle sees the other's umber'd face. Shakesp. Henry V.

A'NSWER. n. f. [from To answer.]

1. That which is said, whether in speech or writing, in return to a question, or position.

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had fore eyes: If you have more pleasure in wine than in your sight, wine is good. Locke.

How can we think of appearing at that tribunal, without being able to give a ready answer to the questions which he shall then put to us, about the poor and the afflicted, the hungry and the naked, the sick and imprisoned? Atterbury's Sermons.

2. In law, a confutation of a charge exhibited against a person.

A personal answer ought to have three qualities; it ought to be pertinent to the matter in hand; it ought to be absolute and unconditional; it ought to be clear and certain. Ayliffe's Par.

A'NSWER-JOBBER. n. f. [from answer and jobber.] He that makes a trade of writing answers.

What disgusts me from having any thing to do with answer-jobbers, is, that they have no conscience. Swift.

A'NSWERABLE. adj. [from answer.]

1. That to which a reply may be made; that which may be answered; as, the argument, though subtle, is yet answerable.
2. Obligated to give an account, or stand the trial of an accusation.

Every chief of every kindred or family should be answerable, and bound to bring forth every one of that kindred, at all times to be justified, when he should be required, or charged with any treason, felony, &c. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Will any man argue, that if a physician should manifestly prescribe poison to all his patients, he cannot be justly punished, but is answerable only to God? Swift.

He cannot think ambition more justly laid to their charge, than to other men; because that would be to make church government answerable for the errors of human nature. Swift.

3. Correspondent.

It was but such a likeness as an imperfect glass doth give, answerable enough in some features and colours, but erring in others. Sidney.

The daughters of Atlas were ladies, who, accompanying such as came to be registered among the worthies, brought forth children answerable in quality to those that begot them.

Raleigh's History of the World.

4. Proportionate.

Only add

Deeds to thy knowledge answerable; add faith,

Add virtue, patience, temperance; add love

By name to come call'd charity, the soul

Of all the rest.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

5. Suitable; suited.

The following, by certain estates of men, answerable to that which a great person himself professeth, as of soldiers to him that hath been employed in the wars, hath been a thing well taken even in monarchies. Bacon's Essays.

If answerable style I can obtain

Of my celestial patroness, who deigns

Her mighty visitation unimplor'd. Milt. Parad. Lost, b. ix.

6. Equal.

There be no kings whose means are answerable unto other mens desires. Raleigh's History of the World.

7. Relative; correlative.

That, to every petition for things needful, there should be some answerable sentence of thanks provided particularly to follow, is not requisite. Hooker, b. v. § 43.

A'NSWERABLY. adv. [from answerable.] In due proportion; with proper correspondence; suitably.

The broader seas are, if they be intire, and free from islands, they are answerably deeper. Brerewood on Languages.

It bears light, and more active sorts, into the atmosphere, to a greater or lesser height, answerably to the greater or lesser intenseness of the heat. Woodward's Nat. History.

A'NSWERABLENESS. n. f. [from answerable.] The quality of being answerable. Dict.

A'NSWERER. n. f. [from answer.]

1. He that answers; he that speaks in return to what another has spoken.

2. He that manages the controversy against one that has written first.

It is very unfair in any writer to employ ignorance and malice together; because it gives his answerer double work. Swift.

ANT. n. f. [æmetz, Sax. which Junius imagines, not without probability, to have been first contracted to æmtz, and then softened to ant.] An emmet; a pismire. A small insect that lives in great numbers together in hillocks.

VOL. I.

We'll set thee to school to an ant, to teach thee there's no lab'ring in the winter. Shakesp. King Lear.

Methinks, all cities now but ant-hills are;

Where when the several labourers I see

For children, house, provision, taking pain,

They're all but ants, carrying eggs; straw, and grain. Donne.

Learn each small people's genius, policies;

The ant's republick, and the realm of bees;

How those in common all their stores bestow,

And anarchy without confusion know. Pope's Ess. on Man.

ANT-BEAR. n. f. [from ant and bear.] An animal that feeds on ants.

Divers quadrupeds feed upon insects; and some live wholly upon them; as two sorts of tamanduas upon ants, which therefore are called in English ant-bears. Ray on Creation.

A'NT-HILL, or HILLOCK. n. f. [from ant and hill.] The small protuberances of earth in which ants make their nests.

Put blue flowers into an ant-hill, they will be stained with red; because the ants drop upon them their stinging liquour, which hath the effect of oil of vitriol. Ray on Creation.

Those who have seen ant-hillocks, have easily perceived those small heaps of corn about their nests. Addison. Guardian.

AN'T. A contraction for and it, or rather and if it; as, an't please you; that is, and if it please you.

ANTA'GONIST. n. f. [ἀντί and ἀγωνίζω.]

1. One who contends with another; an opponent. It implies generally a personal and particular opposition.

Our antagonists in these controversies may have met with some not unlike to Ithacius. Hooker's Dedication.

What was set before him,

To heave, pull, draw, and break, he still perform'd,

None daring to appear antagonist. Milton's Sampson Agon.

Is it not fit, that the history of a person should appear, till the prejudice both of his antagonists and adherents be softened and subdued. Addison. Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup> 35.

2. Contrary.

The short club consists of those who are under five feet; ours is to be composed of such as are above six. These we look upon as the two extremes and antagonists of the species; considering all these as neutrals, who fill up the middle space. Addison. Guardian, N<sup>o</sup> 108.

3. In anatomy, the antagonist is that muscle which counteracts some others.

A relaxation of a muscle must produce a spasm in its antagonist, because the equilibrium is destroyed. Arbutnot on Diet.

TO ANTA'GONIZE. v. n. [ἀντί and ἀγωνίζω.] To contend against another. Dict.

ANTA'LGICK. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and ἀλγος, pain.] That which softens pain; anodyne.

ANTANACLA'SIS. n. f. [Lat. from ἀντανάκλασις, from ἀντανακλάω, to drive back.]

1. A figure in rhetoric, when the same word is repeated in a different, if not in a contrary signification; as, In thy youth learn some craft, that in old age thou mayst get thy living without craft. Craft, in the first place, signifies science or occupation; in the second, deceit or subtilty.

2. It is also a returning to the matter at the end of a long parenthesis; as, Shall that heart (which does not only feel them, but hath all motion of his life placed in them) shall that heart, I say, &c.

Smith's Rhetoric.

ANTAPHRODI'TICK. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and ἀφροδίτη, Venus.] That which is efficacious against the venereal disease.

ANTAPOPLE'CTICK. adj. [ἀντί, against, and ἀποπληξίς, an apoplexy.] Good against an apoplexy.

ANTA'RCTICK. adj. [ἀντί, against, and ἀρκτικός, the bear or northern constellation.] The southern pole, so called, as opposite to the northern.

Downward as far as antarctick. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

They that had fail'd from near th' antarctick pole,

Their treasure safe, and all their vessels whole,

In sight of their dear country ruin'd be,

Without the guilt of either rock or sea. Waller.

ANTARTHRI'TICK. adj. [ἀντί, against, and ἀρθρίτις, the gout.] Good against the gout.

ANTASTHMA'TICK. adj. [from ἀντί and ἀσθμα.] Good against the asthma.

A'NTE. A Latin particle signifying before, which is frequently used in compositions; as, antediluvian, before the flood; ante-chamber, a chamber leading into another apartment.

A'NTEACT. n. f. [from ante and act.] A former act.

ANTEAMBULA'TION. n. f. [from ante and ambulatio, Lat.] A walking before. Dict.

TO ANTECE'DE. v. n. [from ante, before, and cedo, to go.] To precede; to go before.

It seems more consonant to reason, that the fabrick of the world did not long antecede its motion. Hale's Orig. of Mank.

ANTECE'DENCE. n. f. [from antecede.] The act or state of going before; precedence.

It is impossible that mixed bodies can be eternal, because there is necessarily a pre-existence of the simple bodies, and an

Z

an antecedence of their constitution preceding the existence of mixed bodies. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ANTECEDENT. adj. [antecedens, Lat.]

1. Going before; preceding. Antecedent is used, I think, only with regard to time; precedent, with regard both to time and place.

To assert, that God looked upon Adam's fall as a sin, and punished it, when, without any antecedent sin of his, it was impossible for him not to fall, seems a thing that highly reproaches essential equity and goodness. South.

2. It has to before the thing which is supposed to follow.

No one is so hardy as to say, God is in his debt; that he owed him a nobler being: for existence must be antecedent to merit. Collier of Envy.

Did the blood first exist, antecedent to the formation of the heart? But that is to set the effect before the cause. Bentley.

ANTECEDENT. n. f. [antecedens, Lat.]

1. That which goes before.

A duty of so mighty an influence, that it is indeed the necessary antecedent, if not also the direct cause of a sinner's return to God. South.

2. In grammar, the noun to which the relative is subjoined; as, the man who comes hither.

3. In logick, the first proposition of an enthymeme or argument, consisting only of two propositions.

Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move: if there be no fire, there will be no smoke. The first part of these propositions, or that wherein the condition is contained, is called the antecedent, the other is called the consequent. Watts's Logick.

ANTECEDENTLY. adv. [from antecedent.] In the state of antecedence, or going before; previously.

We consider him antecedently to his creation, while he yet lay in the barren womb of nothing, and only in the number of possibilities. South.

ANTECESSOR. n. f. [Latin.] One who goes before, or leads another. Diët.

ANTECHAMBER. n. f. [from ante before, and chamber; it is generally written, improperly, antichamber.] The chamber that leads to the chief apartment.

The empress has the antichambers past,

And this way moves with a disorder'd haste. Dryd. Aurengz.

His antichamber, and room of audience, are little square chambers wainscoted. Addison on Italy.

ANTECURSOR. n. f. [Latin.] One who runs before. Diët.

TO ANTEDATE. v. a. [from ante and datum, Lat.]

1. To date earlier than the real time, so as to confer a fictitious antiquity.

Now thou hast lov'd me one whole day,

To-morrow when thou leav'st, what wilt thou say?

Wilt thou then antedate some new-made vow,

Or say, that now

We are not just those persons, which we were? Donne.

By reading, a man does, as it were, antedate his life, and makes himself contemporary with the ages past. Collier's Essays.

2. To take something before the proper time.

Our joys below it can improve,

And antedate the bliss above. Pope's St. Cecilia.

ANTEDILUVIAN. adj. [from ante before, and diluvium a deluge.]

1. Existing before the deluge.

During the time of the deluge, all the stone and marble of the antediluvian earth were totally dissolved. Woodw. Nat. History.

2. Relating to things existing before the deluge.

The text intends only the line of Seth, conduceable unto the genealogy of our Saviour, and the antediluvian chronology.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 4.

ANTEDILUVIAN. n. f. One that lived before the flood.

We are so far from repining at God, that he hath not extended the period of our lives to the longevity of the antediluvians, that we give him thanks for contracting the days of our trial. Bentley's Sermons.

ANTELOPE. n. f. [The etymology is uncertain.] A goat with curled or wreathed horns.

The antelope, and wolf both fierce and fell. Fairy Queen.

ANTEMERIDIAN. adj. [from ante, before, and meridian, noon.] Before noon.

ANTEMETICK. adj. [ἀντί, against, and ἔμεω, to vomit.] That which has the power of calming the stomach; of preventing or stopping vomiting.

ANTEMUNDANE. adj. [ante, before, and mundus, the world.] That which was before the creation of the world.

ANTENUMBER. n. f. [from ante and number.] The number that precedes another.

Whatsoever virtue is in numbers, for conducing to consent of notes, is rather to be ascribed to the antenumber, than to the entire number, as that the sound returneth after six, or after twelve; so that the seventh or thirteenth is not the matter, but the sixth or the twelfth. Bacon's Natural History, N° 106.

ANTEPAST. n. f. [from ante, before, and pastum, to feed.] A foretaste; something taken before the proper time.

Were we to expect our bliss only in the satiating our appetites, it might be reasonable, by frequent antepasts, to excite our gust for that profuse perpetual meal. Decay of Piety.

A'NTEPENULT. n. f. [antepenultima, Lat.] The last syllable but two, as the syllable te in antepenult: a term of grammar.

ANTEPILEPTICK. adj. [ἀντί and ἐπιληψία.] A medicine against convulsions.

That bezoar is antidotal, lapis judaicus diuretical, coral antepileptical, we will not deny. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

TO A'NTEPONE. v. a. [antepono, Lat.] To set one thing before another; to prefer one thing to another. Diët.

ANTEPREDICAMENT. n. f. [antepredicamentum, Lat.] Something to be known in the study of logick, previously to the doctrine of the predicament.

ANTERIO'RITY. n. f. [from anteriour.] Priority; the state of being before either in time or situation.

ANTERIOUR. adj. [anterior, Lat.] Going before, either with regard to time or place.

If that be the anteriour or upper part wherein the senses are placed, and that the posteriour and lower part, which is opposite thereunto, there is no inferiour or former part in this animal; for the senses being placed at both extremes, make both ends anteriour, which is impossible. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

A'NTES. n. f. [Latin.] Pillars of large dimensions that support the front of a building.

ANTESTOMACH. n. f. [from ante, before, and stomach.] A cavity which leads into the stomach.

In birds there is no mastication or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but it is immediately swallowed into a kind of antestomach, which I have observed in piscivorous birds. Ray.

ANTHELMINTHICK. adj. [ἀντί, against, and ἐλμυνθός, a worm.] That which kills worms.

Anthelminthicks, or contrary to worms, are things which are known by experience to kill them, as oils, or honey taken upon an empty stomach. Arbuthnot on Diet.

A'NTHEM. n. f. [ἄνθυμνος, a hymn sung in alternate parts, and should therefore be written anthymn.] A holy song; a song performed as part of divine service.

God Moses first, then David did inspire,

To compose anthems for his heavenly quire. Denham.

There is no passion that is not finely expressed in those parts of the inspired writings, which are proper for divine songs and anthems. Addison. Spectator, N° 405.

ANTHOLOGY. n. f. [ἀνθολογία, from ἄνθος, a flower, and λέγω, to gather.]

1. A collection of flowers.

2. A collection of devotions in the Greek church.

3. A collection of poems.

A'NTHONY'S FIRE. n. f. A kind of erysipelas.

ANTHRAX. n. f. [ἀνθράξ, a burning coal.] A scab or blotch that is made by a corrosive humour, which burns the skin, and occasions sharp pricking pains. Quincy.

ANTHROPOLOGY. n. f. [from ἄνθρωπος, man, and λέγω, to discourse.] The doctrine of anatomy; the doctrine of the form and structure of the body of man.

ANTHROPOPATHY. n. f. [ἄνθρωπος, man, and πάθος, passion.] The sensibility of man; the passions of man.

ANTHROPOPHAGI. n. f. It has no singular. [ἄνθρωπος, man, and φάγω, to eat.]

Man-eaters; cannibals; those that live upon human flesh.

The cannibals that each other eat,

The anthropophagi, and men whose heads

Do grow beneath their shoulders. Shakesp. Othello.

ANTHROPOPHAGINIAN. n. f. A ludicrous word, formed by Shakespeare from anthropophagi, for the sake of a formidable sound.

Go, knock, and call; he'll speak like an anthropophaginian unto thee: knock, I say. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

ANTHROPOPHAGY. n. f. [ἄνθρωπος, a man, and φάγω, to eat.] The quality of eating human flesh, or man-eating.

Upon slender foundations was raised the anthropophagy of Diomedes his horses. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 6.

ANTHROPO'SOPHY. n. f. [ἄνθρωπος, man, and σοφία, wisdom.] The knowledge of the nature of man.

ANTHYPNOTICK. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and ὑπνός, sleep.] That which has the power of preventing sleep; that which is efficacious against a lethargy.

ANTHYPOCHONDRIACK. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and ὑποχονδρία.] Good against hypochondriack maladies.

ANTHYPOPHORA. n. f. [ἄνθυπόφορα.] A figure in rhetorick, which signifies a contrary illation, or inference, and is when an objection is refuted or disproved by the opposition of a contrary sentence. Smith's Rhetorick.

ANTHYSTERICK. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and ὑστερικός.] Good against hystericks.

ANTI. [ἀντί.] A particle much used in composition with words derived from the Greek, and signifies contrary to; as, antimonarchical, opposite to monarchy.

ANTIACID. adj. [from ἀντί, and acidus, four.] Contrary to sourness; alkalis.

Oils are antiacids, so far as they blunt acrimony; but as they are hard of digestion, they produce acrimony of another sort.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ANTICHACHETICK. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and κακός, a bad habit.] Things adapted to the cure of a bad constitution.

ANTICHA'MBER. n. f. This word is corruptly written for ante-chamber; which see.

ANTICHRISTIAN. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and χριστιανός.] Opposite to christianity.

That despised, abject, oppressed sort of men, the ministers, whom the world would make antichristian, and so deprive them of heaven. South.

ANTICHRISTIANISM. n. f. [from antichristian.] Opposition or contrariety to christianity.

Have we not seen many, whose opinions have fastened upon one another the brand of antichristianism? Decay of Piety.

ANTICHRISTIANITY. n. f. [from antichristian.] Contrariety to christianity.

ANTI'CHRONISM. n. f. [ἀντί, against, and χρόνος, time.] Deviation from the right order or account of time.

TO ANTICIPATE. v. a. [anticipo, Lat.]

1. To take something sooner than another, so as to prevent him that comes after.

God hath taken care to anticipate and prevent every man, to draw him early into his church; to give piety the prepossession, and so to engage him in holiness. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. To take up before the time, at which any thing might be regularly had.

I find I have anticipated already, and taken up from Boccace, before I come to him; but I am of the temper of kings, who are for present money, no matter how they pay it. Dryd. Fab.

3. To foretaste, or take an impression of something, which is not yet, as if it really was.

The life of the desperate equals the anxiety of death, who but act the life of the damned, and anticipate the desolations of hell. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 2.

Why should we
Anticipate our sorrows? 'tis like those
That die for fear of death. Denham's Sophy.

4. To prevent any thing by crowding in before it; to preclude.

Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
I am so far from pretending to instruct the profession, or anticipating their directions to such as are under their government. Arbutnot on Aliments.

If our Apostle had maintained such an anticipating principle engraven upon our souls before all exercise of reason; what did he talk of seeking the Lord, seeing that the knowledge of him was innate and perpetual. Bentley's Sermons.

ANTICIPATION. n. f. [from anticipate.]

1. The act of taking up something before its time.

The golden number gives the new moon four days too late, by reason of the aforesaid anticipation, and our neglect of it. Holder's on Time.

2. Foretaste.

It is not enough to be miserable when the time comes, unless we make ourselves so beforehand, and by anticipation. L'Estrange.

If we really live under the hope of future happiness, we shall taste it by way of anticipation and forethought, an image of it will meet our minds often, and stay there, as all pleasing expectations do. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. Opinion implanted before the reasons of that opinion can be known.

The east and west, the north and south, have the same anticipation concerning one supreme disposer of things. Stillingfleet.
What nation is there, that, without any teaching, have not a kind of anticipation, or preconceived notion of a Deity? Derham's Physico-Theology.

A'NTICK. adj. [probably from antiquus, ancient, as things out of use appear old.] Odd; ridiculously wild; buffoon in gesticulation.

What! dares the slave
Come hither cover'd with an antick face,
And flier and scorn at our solemnity? Shakesp. Rom. & Jul.
Of all our antick fights, and pageantry,
Which English idiots run in crowds to see. Dryden.
The prize was to be conferred upon the whistler, that could go through his tune without laughing, though provoked by the antick postures of a merry Andrew, who was to play tricks. Addison. Spectator, N° 179.

A'NTICK. n. f.

1. He that plays anticks; he that uses odd gesticulation: a buffoon.

Within the hollow crown,
That rounds the mortal temples of a king,
Keeps death his court; and there the antick sits,
Scoffing his state. Shakesp. Richard II.

If you should smile, he grows impatient.—
Fear not, my lord, we can contain ourselves,
Were he the veriest antick in the world. Shakesp. Tam. Shr.

2. Odd appearance.

A work of rich entail, and curious mold,
Woven with anticks, and wild imagery. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

For ev'n at first reflection the espies
Such toys, such anticks, and such vanities,
As she retires and shrinks for shame and fear. Sir J. Davies.
TO A'NTICK. v. a. [from antick.] To make anticks.

Mine own tongue
Splits what it speaks; the wild disguise hath almost Antickt us all. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

A'NTICKLY. adv. [from antick.] In an antick manner; with odd postures, or wild gesticulations.

Scrambling, outfacing, fashion-mongring boys,
That lye, and cog, and flout, deprave, and slander,
Go antickly, and shew an outward hideousness,
And speak of half a dozen dangerous words. Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.

ANTICLI'MAX. n. f. [from ἀντί and κλίμαξ.] A sentence in which the last part is lower than the first.

A certain figure which was unknown to the ancients, is called by some an anticlimax. Addison's Whig Examiner.

This distich is frequently mentioned as an example.
Next comes Dalhousley the great god of war,
Lieutenant col'nel to the earl of Mar.

ANTICONVULSIVE. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and convulsivus.] Good against convulsions.

Whatsoever produces an inflammatory disposition in the blood, produces the asthma, as anticonvulsive medicines. Floyer.

ANTICOR. n. f. [from ἀντί, against, and cor, the heart.]

A preternatural swelling of a round figure, occasioned by a sanguine and bilious humour, and appearing in a horse's breast, opposite to his heart. An anticor may kill a horse, unless it be brought to a suppuration by good remedies. Farrier's Dict.

ANTICO'URTIER. n. f. [from ἀντί, against, and courtier.] One that opposes the court.

ANTI'DOTAL. adj. [from antidote.] That which has the quality of an antidote, or the power of counteracting poison.

That bezoar is antidotal, we shall not deny. Brown's V. Err.

A'NTIDOTE. n. f. [ἀντίδοτος, Lat. a thing given in opposition to something else.]

A medicine given to expel the mischiefs of another, as of poison. Quincy.

Trust not the physician,
His antidotes are poison, and he slays
More than you rob. Shakesp. Timon.

What fool would believe that antidote delivered by Pierus against the sting of a scorpion; to sit upon an ass, with one's face towards his tail. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 7.

Poison will work against the stars: beware;
For ev'ry meal an antidote prepare. Dryden jun. Juv. Sat.

ANTIDYSENTE'Rick. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and dysenteria, a bloody flux.] Good against the bloody flux.

ANTIFE'BRILE. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and febris, a fever.] Good against fevers.

Antifebrile medicines check the ebullition. Floyer.

ANTILOGARITHM. n. f. [from ἀντί, against, and logarithm.]

The complement of the logarithm of a sine, tangent, or secant; or the difference of that logarithm from the logarithm of ninety degrees. Chambers.

ANTI'LOGY. n. f. [ἀντιλογία.] A contradiction between any words and passages in an authour. Dict.

ANTI'LOQUIST. n. f. [from ἀντί, against, and loquor, to speak.] A contradictor. Dict.

ANTIMONA'RHICAL. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and μοναρχία, government by a single person.] Against government by a single person.

When he spied the statue of king Charles in the middle of the croud, and most of the kings ranged over their heads, he concluded that an antimonarchical assembly could never choose such a place. Addison. Freeholder, N° 47.

ANTIMONA'RHICALNESS. n. f. [from antimonarchical.] The quality of being an enemy to regal power.

ANTIMO'NIAL. adj. [from antimony.] Made of antimony; having the qualities of antimony; relating to antimony.

They were got out of the reach of antimonial fumes. Grew.
Though antimonial cups prepar'd with art,
Their force to wine through ages should impart;
This dissipation, this profuse expence,
Nor shrinks their size, nor wastes their stores immense. Blackmore on the Creation.

ANTIMONY. n. f. [The stibium of the ancients, by the Greeks called σίμμις. The reason of its modern denomination is referred to Basil Valentine, a German monk; who, as the tradition relates, having thrown some of it to the hogs, observed, that, after it had purged them heartily, they immediately fattened; and therefore, he imagined, his fellow monks would be the better for a like dose. The experiment, however, succeeded so ill, that they all died of it; and the medicine was thenceforward called antimoine; antimonk.]

Antimony is a mineral substance, of a metalline nature, having all the seeming characters of a real metal, except malleability; and may be called a semimetal, being a fossile glebe of some undetermined metal, combined with a sulphurous and stony substance. Mines of all metals afford it; but chiefly those those of silver and lead; that in gold mines is reckoned best. It has also its own mines in Hungary, Germany, and France. It is found in clods or stones of several sizes, bearing a near resemblance to black lead, only being lighter and harder. Its texture is full of little shining veins or threads, like needles; brittle as glass. Sometimes veins of a red or golden colour are intermixed, which is called male antimony; that without them being denominated female antimony. It fuses in the fire, though with some difficulty; and dissolves more easily in water. When dug out of the earth, it is put into large crucibles, fused by a violent fire, and then poured into cones, which make the crude antimony of the shops. Of these cones the top is the purest part, and the base the foulest. It destroys and dissipates all metals fused with it, except gold; and is therefore useful in refining. It is a common ingredient in speculums, or burning concaves; serving to give them a finer polish. It makes a part in bell metal; and renders the sound more clear. It is mingled with tin, to make it more hard, white, and sound; and with lead, in the casting of printers letters, to render them more smooth and firm. It is a general help in the melting of metals, and especially in casting of cannon balls. In pharmacy it is used under various forms, and with various intentions, chiefly as an emetick. It had no place in medicine before the fourteenth century; and was generally neglected, till Paracelsus brought it into esteem, in the beginning of the sixteenth century; but much mischief was done by it, till the proper methods of preparing it were, after a long course of experiments, discovered. Chambers.

ANTINEPHRETICK. adj. [from ἀντι and νεφρικός.] Medicines good against diseases of the reins and kidneys.

ANTINOMY. n. f. [from ἀντι and νόμος.] A contradiction between two laws, or two articles of the same law.

ANTIPARALYTICK. adj. [from ἀντι and παραλύω.] Efficacious against the palsy.

ANTIPATHETICAL. adj. [from antipathy.] Having a natural contrariety to any thing.

The soil is fat and luxurious, and antipathetical to all venomous creatures. Howel's Vocal Forest.

ANTIPATHETICALNESS. n. f. [from antipathetical.] The quality or state of having a natural contrariety to any thing. Dict.

ANTIPATHY. n. f. [from ἀντι, against, and πάθος, feeling; antipathie, Fr.]

1. A natural contrariety to any thing, so as to shun it involuntarily; aversion; dislike. It is opposed to sympathy.

No contraries hold more antipathy,

Than I and such a knave. Shakespeare's King Lear.

To this perhaps might be justly attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies observable in men. Locke.

2. It has sometimes the particle against before the object of antipathy.

I had a mortal antipathy against standing armies in times of peace; because I took armies to be hired by the master of the family, to keep his children in slavery. Swift.

3. Sometimes to.

Ask you, what provocation I have had?

The strong antipathy of good to bad.

When truth, or virtue, an affront endures,

Th' affront is mine, my friend, and should be yours. Pope.

4. Formerly with; but improperly.

Tangible bodies have an antipathy with air; and any liquid body, that is more dense, they will draw, condense, and, in effect, incorporate. Bacon's Natural History, N° 80.

ANTIPERISTASIS. n. f. [from ἀντιπεριστάσις, formed of ἀντι and περιστάσις, to stand round.] The opposition of a contrary quality, by which the quality it opposes, becomes heightened or intended; or the action, by which a body attacked by another, collects itself, and becomes stronger by such opposition: or an intention of the activity of one quality caused by the opposition of another. Thus quicklime is set on fire by the affusion of cold water; so water becomes warmer in winter than in summer; and thunder and lightening are excited in the middle region of the air, which is continually cold, and all by antiperistasis. This is an exploded principle in the Peripatetick philosophy.

Th' antiperistasis of age

More inflam'd his am'rous rage. Cowley.

The riotous prodigal detests covetousness; yet let him find the springs grow dry, which feed his luxury, covetousness shall be called in; and so, by a strange antiperistasis, prodigality shall beget rapine. Decay of Piety.

ANTIPESTILENTIAL. adj. [from ἀντι, against, and pestilential.] Efficacious against the infection of the plague.

Perfumes correct the air before it is attracted by the lungs; or, rather, antipestilential unguents, to anoint the nostrils with. Harvey on the Plague.

ANTI'PHRASIS. n. f. [from ἀντι, against, and φράσις, a form of speech.] The use of words in a sense opposite to their proper meaning.

You now find no cause to repent, that you never dipt your hands in the bloody high courts of justice, so called only by antiphrasis. South's Dedication to his Sermons.

ANTI'PODAL. adj. [from antipodes.] Relating to the countries inhabited by the antipodes.

The Americans are antipodals unto the Indians.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 7.

ANTIPODES. n. f. It has no singular. [from ἀντι, against, and πόδες, feet.] Those people who, living on the other side of the globe, have their feet directly opposite to ours.

We should hold day with the antipodes,

If you would walk in absence of the sun.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

So shines the sun, tho' hence remov'd, as clear

When his beams warm th' antipodes, as here. Waller.

A'NTIPOPE. n. f. [from ἀντι, against, and pope.] He that usurps the popedom, in opposition to the right pope.

This house is famous in history, for the retreat of an anti-pope, who called himself Felix V. Addison on Italy.

ANTIPTO'SIS. n. f. [ἀντιπτοσις.] A figure in grammar, by which one case is put for another.

A'NTIQUARY. n. f. [antiquarius, Lat.] A man studious of antiquity; a collector of ancient things.

All those arts, rarities, and inventions, are but the relicts of an intellect defaced with sin. We admire it now, only as antiquaries do a piece of old coin, for the stamp it once bore. South's Sermons.

With sharpen'd sight pale antiquaries pore,

Th' inscription value, but the rust adore. Pope.

The rude Latin of the monks is still very intelligible; had their records been delivered in the vulgar tongue, they could not now be understood, unless by antiquaries. Swift.

A'NTIQUARY. adj. [This word is improper.] Old; antique.

Here's Nestor,

Instructed by the antiquary times;

He must, he is, he cannot but be wise.

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

TO A'NTIQUATE. v. a. [antiquo, Lat.] To put out of use; to make obsolete.

The growth of christianity in this kingdom might reasonably introduce new laws, and antiquate or abrogate some old ones, that seemed less consistent with the christian doctrines. Hale's Common Law of England.

Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable. But cannot I admire the height of his invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harshness of their sound? Dryden.

Almighty Latium, with her cities crown'd,

Shall like an antiquated fable sound. Addison on Italy.

A'NTIQUATEDNESS. n. f. [from antiquated.] The state of being antiquated, worn out of use, or obsolete.

ANTI'QUE. adj. [antique, Fr. antiquus, Lat.] It was formerly pronounced according to the English analogy, with the accent on the first syllable; but now after the French, with the accent on the last, at least in prose; the poets use it variously.]

1. Ancient; old; not modern.

Now, good Cefario, but that piece of song,

That old and antique song we heard last night.

Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

Such truth in love as th' antique world did know,

In such a stile as courts might boast of now. Waller.

2. Of genuine antiquity.

The seals which we have remaining of Julius Cæsar, which we know to be antique, have the star of Venus over them. Dryden's Virgil's Æneis, Pref.

My copper lamps at any rate,

For being true antique I bought;

Yet wisely melted down my plate,

On modern models to be wrought;

And trifles I alike pursue,

Because they're old, because they're new. Prior.

3. Of old fashion.

Forth came that ancient lord and aged queen,

Array'd in antique robes down to the ground.

And sad habiliments right well befeen. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Must he no more divert the tedious day?

Nor sparkling thoughts in antique words convey?

Smith to the Memory of Philips.

4. Odd; wild; antick.

Name not these living death-heads unto me;

For these not ancient but antique be. Donne.

And sooner may a gulling weather-spy

By drawing forth heav'n's scheme, tell certainly

What fashion'd hats or ruffs, or suits next year,

Our giddy-headed antique youth will wear. Donne.

ANTI'QUE. n. f. [from antique, adj.] An antiquity; a remain of ancient times; an ancient rarity.

I leave to Edward, now early of Oxford, my seal of Julius Cæsar; as also another seal, supposed to be a young Hercules; both very choice antiques, and set in gold. Swift's Last Will.

ANTI'QUENESS. n. f. [from antique.] The quality of being antique; an appearance of antiquity.

We may discover something venerable in the antiqueness of the work; but we would see the design enlarged, the figures reformed, and the colour laid on. Addison on the Georgicks.

ANTI-

ANTIQUITY. n. f. [antiquitas, Lat.]

1. Old times; time past long ago.

I mention Aristotle, Polybius, and Cicero, the greatest philosopher, the most impartial historian, and the most consummate statesman of all antiquity. Addison. Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup> 51.

2. The people of old times; the ancients.

That such pillars were raised by Seth, all antiquity has avowed. Raleigh's History of the World.

3. The works or remains of old times.

As for the observation of Machiavel, traducing Gregory the Great, that he did what in him lay, to extinguish all heathen antiquities: I do not find that those zeals last long; as it appeared in the succession of Sabinian, who did revive the former antiquities. Bacon's Essays.

4. Old age; a ludicrous sense.

Is not your voice broken? your wind short? your chin double? your wit fingle? and every part about you blasted with antiquity? and will you yet call yourself young? Shakespeare's Henry IV.

5. Ancientness; as, this ring is valuable for its antiquity.

ANTISCH. n. f. [It has no singular. [from ἀντι and σχίζω.] In geography, the people who inhabit on different sides of the equator, who, consequently, at noon have their shadows projected opposite ways. Thus the people of the north are Antischi to those of the south; the one projecting their shadows at noon toward the north pole, and the other toward the south pole. Chambers.

ANTISCORBU'TICAL. adj. [from ἀντι, against, and scorbutum, the scurvy.] Good against the scurvy.

The warm antiscorbutical plants, in quantities, will occasion stinking breath, and corrupt the blood. Arbuth. on Aliments.

ANTISCORBU'TICK. adj. [from ἀντι, against, and scorbutum, the scurvy.] Good against the scurvy.

The warm antiscorbuticks, animal diet, and animal salts, are proper. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ANTI'SPASIS. n. f. [from ἀντι, against, and σπᾶσμι, to draw.] The revulsion of any humour into another part.

ANTISPASMO'DICK. adj. [from ἀντι, against, and σπασμῶδης, the cramp.] That which has the power of relieving the cramp.

ANTISPA'STICK. adj. [from ἀντι and σπαστικῶς.] Medicines which cause a revulsion of the humours.

ANTISPLENE'TICK. adj. [from ἀντι and splenetic.] Efficacious in diseases of the spleen.

Antisplenetics open the obstructions of the spleen. Floyer.

ANTISTROPHE. n. f. [ἀντιστροφή, from ἀντι, the contrary way, and τροπή, turning.] In an ode supposed to be sung in parts, the second stanza of every three, or sometimes every second stanza; so called because the dance turns about.

ANTISTRUMA'TICK. adj. [from ἀντι and struma, a scrophulous swelling.] Good against the king's evil.

I prescribed him a distilled milk, with antistrumatics, and purged him. Wiseman's Surgery.

ANTI'THESIS. n. f. in the plural antitheses. [ἀντίθεσις, placing in opposition.] Opposition of words or sentiments; contrast; as in these lines:

Though gentle, yet not dull,

Strong without rage, without o'erflowing, full. Denham.

I see a chief, who leads my chosen sons,

All arm'd with points, antitheses, and puns. Pope's Dunciad.

A'NTITYPE. n. f. [ἀντίτυπος.] That which is resembled or shadowed out by the type; that of which the type is the representation. It is a term of theology. See TYPE.

When once upon the wing, he soars to an higher pitch, from the type to the antitype, to the days of the Messiah, the ascension of our Saviour, and, at length, to his kingdom and dominion over all the earth. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

He brought forth bread and wine, and was the priest of the most high God; and imitating the antitype, or the substance, Christ himself. Taylor's Worthly Communicant.

ANTITYPICAL. adj. [from antitype.] That which relates to an antitype; that which explains the type.

ANTIVENE'REAL. adj. [from ἀντι and venereal.] Good against the venereal disease.

If a lues be joined with it, you will scarce cure your patient without exhibiting antivenereal remedies. Wiseman's Surgery.

A'NTLER. n. f. [andouillier, Fr.] Properly the first branches of a stag's horns; but, popularly and generally, any of his branches.

Grown old, they grow less branched, and first lose their brow antlers, or lowest furcations next to the head.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 9.

A well grown stag, whose antlers rise

High o'er his front, his beams invade the skies. Dryden.

Bright Diana

Brought hunted wild goats heads, and branching antlers

Of stags, the fruit and honour of her toil. Prior.

ANTO'ECI. n. f. [It has no singular. [Lat. from ἀντι and οἰκίζω, to inhabit.] In geography, those inhabitants of the earth, who live under the same meridian, and at the same distance from the equator; the one toward the north, and the other to the south. Hence they have the same longitude, and their latitude is also the same, but of a different denomination. They are in the same semicircle of the meridian, but opposite parallels. They have precisely the same hours of the day and night, but opposite seasons; and the night of the one is always equal to the day of the other. Chambers.

VOL. I.

ANTONOMASIA. n. f. [from ἀντι and νόμας, a name.] A form of speech, in which, for a proper name, is put the name of some dignity, office, profession, science, or trade; or when a proper name is put in the room of an appellative. Thus a king is called his majesty; a nobleman, his lordship. We say the philosopher instead of Aristotle, and the orator for Cicero: thus a man is called by the name of his country, a German, an Italian; and a grave man is called a Cato, and a wise man a Solomon. Smith's Rhetorick.

A'NTRE. [antre, Fr. antrum, Lat.] A cavern; a cave; a den. With all my travels history:

Wherein of antres vast, and desarts idle,

It was my hent to speak.

Shakespeare. Othello.

A'NVIL. n. f. [ænville, Sax.]

1. The iron block on which the smith lays his metal to be forged. I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,

The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool. Shak. King John.

On their eternal anvils here he found

The brethren beating, and the blows go round. Dryden.

2. Any thing on which blows are laid.

Here I clip

The anvil of my sword, and do contest

Hotly and nobly.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Figuratively; to be upon the anvil, is to be in a state of formation or preparation.

Several members of our house knowing, some time ago, what was upon the anvil, went to the clergy, and desired their judgment. Swift.

ANXI'ETY. n. f. [anxietas, Lat.]

1. Trouble of mind about some future event; suspense with uneasiness; perplexity; solicitude.

To be happy, is not only to be freed from the pains and diseases of the body, but from anxiety and vexation of spirit; not only to enjoy the pleasures of sense, but peace of conscience, and tranquillity of mind. Tillotson.

2. In the medical language, depression; lowness of spirits.

In anxieties which attend fevers, when the cold fit is over, a warmer regimen may be allowed; and because anxieties often happen by spasms from wind, spices are useful. Arbuthnot.

A'NXIOUS. adj. [anxius, Lat.]

1. Disturbed about some uncertain event; solicitous.

His pensive cheek upon his hand reclin'd,

And anxious thoughts revolving in his mind.

Dryden.

With beating hearts the dire event they wait,

Anxious, and trembling for the birth of fate.

Pope.

2. Careful; full of inquietude; unquiet.

In youth alone, unhappy mortals live;

But ah! the mighty bliss is fugitive;

Discolour'd sickness, anxious labour come,

And age, and death's inexorable doom.

Dryden's Virgil.

3. Careful, as of a thing of great importance.

There being no writings we need to be solicitous about the meaning of, but those that contain truths we are to believe, or laws we are to obey, we may be less anxious about the sense of other authours. Locke.

4. It has generally for or about before the object, but sometimes of.

Who anxious of neglect, suspecting change,

Consults her pride, and meditates revenge:

Granville.

A'NXIOUSLY. adv. [from anxious.] In an anxious manner; solicitously; unquietly; carefully.

But where the loss is temporal, every probability of it needs not put us so anxiously to prevent it, since it might be repaired again. South.

Thou what befits the new lord mayor,

And what the Gallick arms will do,

Art anxiously inquisitive to know.

Dryden.

A'NXIOUSNESS. n. f. [from anxious.] The quality of being anxious; susceptibility of anxiety.

A'NY. adj. [anig, enig, Sax.]

1. Every; whoever he be; whatever it be. It is, in all its senses, applied indifferently to persons or things.

I know you are now, Sir, a gentleman born—Ay and have been so any time these four hours. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

You contented yourself with being capable, as much as any whosoever, of defending your country with your sword. Dryd.

How fit is this retreat for uninterrupted study? Any one that fees it will own, I could not have chosen a more likely place to converse with the dead in. Pope's Letters.

2. Whosoever; whatsoever; as distinguished from some other.

What warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come. Shakespeare. Merch. of Ven.

An inverted motion being begun any where below, continues itself all the whole length. Locke.

3. It is used in opposition to none.

I wound and I heal: neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand. Deut. xxxii. 39.

A'ORIST. n. f. [ἀόριστος.] Indefinite; a term in the Greek grammar.

AORTA. n. f. [ἀορτή.] The great artery which rises immediately out of the left ventricle of the heart. Quincy.

APACE. adv. [from a and pace; that is, with a great pace.]

1. Quick; speedily: used of things in motion.
Or when the flying libbard she did chace,
She could them nimbly move, and after fly apace. F. Queen.
Ay, quoth my uncle Glo'ster,
Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow apace.
And since methinks, I would not grow so fast,
Because sweet flow'rs are slow, and weeds make haste.
Shakesp. Richard III.

He promis'd in his east a glorious race;
Now sunk from his meridian, sets apace. Dryden's Aurengz.
Is not he imprudent, who, seeing the tide making haste towards him apace, will sleep till the sea overwhelm him. Tillotson.

2. With haste; applied to some action.
The baron now his diamonds pours apace;
Th' embroider'd king who shows but half his face,
And his refulgent queen. Pope's Rape of the Lock.
3. Hastily; with speed: spoken of any kind of progression from one state to another.

This second course of men,
With some regard to what is just and right,
Shall lead their lives, and multiply apace. Milton's Par. Lost,
The life and power of religion decays apace here and at home, while we are spreading the honour of our arms far and wide through foreign nations. Atterbury's Sermons.

If sensible pleasure, or real grandeur, be our end, we shall proceed apace to real misery. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.
APAGOGICAL. adj. [from ἀπαγωγή; compounded of ἀπὸ, from, and ἄγω, to bring or draw.] An apagogical demonstration is such as does not prove the thing directly; but shews the impossibility, or absurdity, which arises from denying it; and is also called reductio ad impossibile, or ad absurdum. Chambers.

- APART. adv. [apart, Fr.]
1. Separately from the rest in place.
Since I enter into that question, it behoveth me to give reason for my opinion, with circumspection; because I walk aside, and in a way apart from the multitude. Raleigh's History.
The party discerned, that the earl of Essex would never serve their turn, they resolv'd to have another army apart, that should be at their devotion. Clarendon, b. viii.
  2. In a state of distinction; as, to set apart for any use.
He is so very figurative, that he requires a grammar apart, to construe him. Dryden.
The tyrant shall demand yon sacred load,
And gold and vessels set apart for God. Prior.

3. Distinctly.
Moses first nameth heaven and earth, putting waters but in the third place, as comprehending waters in the word earth;
but afterwards he nameth them apart. Raleigh's History.
4. At a distance; retired from the other company.
So please you, madam,
To put apart these your attendants, I shall bring Emilia forth. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

APARTMENT. n. f. [appartement, Fr.] A part of the house allotted to the use of any particular person; a room; a set of rooms.
A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the foe yet known. Sir J. Denham.
Pale as death, despoil'd of his array,
Into the queen's apartment takes his way. Dryden's Fables.
The most considerable ruin is that on the eastern promontory, where are still some apartments left, very high and arched at top. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

APATHY. n. f. [α, not, and πάθος, feeling.] The quality of not feeling; exemption from passion; freedom from mental perturbation.
Of good and evil much they argued then,
Passion, and apathy, and glory, and shame.
Milton's Paradise Lost.
To remain insensible of such provocations, is not constancy, but apathy. South.
In lazy apathy let stoicks boast
Their virtue fix'd; 'tis fixed as in frost,
Contracted all, retiring to the breast;
But strength of mind is exercise, not rest. Pope.

APE. n. f. [ap, Icelandish.]

1. A kind of monkey remarkable for imitating what he sees.
I will be more newfangled than an ape, more giddy in my desires than a monkey. Shakesp. As you like it.
Writers report, that the heart of an ape worn near the heart, comforteth the heart, and increaseth audacity. It is true, that the ape is a merry and bold beast. Bacon's Natural History.
With glittering gold and sparkling gems they shine,
But apes and monkeys are the gods within. Granville.

2. An imitator; used generally in the bad sense.
Julio Romano, who, had he himself eternity, and could put breath into his work, would beguile nature of her custom: so perfectly he is her ape. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

To APE. v. a. [from ape.] To imitate, as an ape imitates human actions.

Aping the foreigners in every dress,
Which, bought at greater cost, becomes him less. Dryden.
Curse on the stripling! how he apes his fire!
Ambitiously sententious! Addison's Cato.

APE'AK, or APE'EK. adv. [probably from à pique.] In a posture to pierce the ground.
A'PEPSY. n. f. [ἀπεψία.] A loss of natural concoction. Quincy.
A'PER. n. f. [from ape.] A ridiculous imitator or mimick.
APE'RIENT. adj. [aperio, Lat. to open.] That which has the quality of opening; chiefly used in medicine for gently pur-gative.

There be bracelets fit to comfort the spirits; and they be of three intentions; refrigerant, corroborant, and aperient. Bacon.
Of the stems of plants, some contain a fine aperient salt, and are diuretick and saponaceous. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

APE'RITIVE. adj. [from aperio, Lat. to open.] That which has the quality of opening the excrementitious passages of the body.

They may make broth, with the addition of aperitive herbs.
Harvey on Consumptions.

APE'RT. adj. [apertus, Lat.] Open.
APE'RTION. n. f. [from apertus, Lat.]

1. An opening; a passage through any thing; a gap.
The next now in order are the apertions; under which term
I do comprehend doors, windows, staircases, chimneys, or other conduits: in short, all inlets or outlets. Wotton's Archit.
2. The act of opening; or state of being opened.

The plenitude of vessels, otherways called the plethora, when it happens, causeth an extravasation of blood, either by ruption or apertion of them. Wifeman's Surgery.

APE'RTLY. adv. [aperte, Lat.] Openly; without covert.
APE'RTNESS. n. f. [from apert.] Openness.

In general, the freedom, or apertness and vigour of pronouncing, and the closeness and muffling, and, as I may say, laziness of speaking, render the sound considerably different.
Holder's Elements of Speech.

A'PERTURE. n. f. [from apertus, open.]

1. The act of opening.
Hence ariseth the facility of joining a consonant to a vowel, because from an appulse to an aperture is easier, than from one appulse to another. Holder's Elements of Speech.
2. An open place.
If memory be made by the easy motion of the spirits through the opened passages, images, without doubt, pass through the same apertures. Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica, Preface.

3. The hole next the object glass of a telescope or microscope.
The concave metal bore an aperture of an inch; but the aperture was limited by an opaque circle, perforated in the middle. Newton's Opticks.
4. Enlargement; explanation: a sense seldom found.

It is too much untwisted by the doctors, and, like philosophy, made intricate by explications, and difficult by the aperture and dissolution of distinctions. Taylor's Worthy Communic.

APE'TALOUS. adj. [of α, priv. and τεῖλον, a leaf.] Without petala or flower leaves.
APE'TALOUSNESS. n. f. [from apetalous.] Being without leaves.

APEX. n. f. [apices, plur. [Lat.] The tip or point of any thing.
The apex, or lesser end of it, is broken off. Woodward.
APHÆ'RESIS. n. f. [ἀφαίρεσις.] A figure in grammar that takes away a letter or syllable from the beginning of a word.
APHE'LION. n. f. [aphelia, plur. [from ἀπὸ, and ἥλιος, the sun.]
That part of the orbit of a planet, in which it is at the point re-motest from the sun.

The reason why the comets move not in the zodiack, is, that, in their aphelia, they may be at the greatest distances from one another; and consequently disturb one another's motions the least that may be. Cheyne's Philosoph. Principles.

APHE'TA. n. f. [with astrologers.] The name of the plant, which is imagined to be the giver or disposer of life in a nativity. Dict.

APHE'TICAL. adj. [from apheta.] Relating to the apheta.
APHILA'NTHROPY. n. f. [α, without, and φιλανθρωπία, love of mankind.] Want of love to mankind.

A'PHONY. n. f. [α, without, and φωνή, speech.] A loss of speech.
Quincy.
A'PHORISM. n. f. [ἀφορισμός.] A maxim; a precept contracted in a short sentence; an unconnected position.

He will easily discern how little of truth there is in the multitude; and though sometimes they are flattered with that aphorism, will hardly believe the voice of the people to be the voice of God. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 3.
I shall at present consider the aphorism, that a man of religion and virtue is a more useful, and consequently a more valuable member of a community. Rogers's Sermons.

APHORI'STICAL. adj. [from aphorism.] In the form of an aphorism; in separate and unconnected sentences.
APHORI'STICALLY. adv. [from aphoristical.] In the form of an aphorism.

These being carried down, do seldom miss a cure of the former, as Hippocrates doth likewise aphoristically tell us.
Harvey on Consumptions.

APHRODISI'ACAL. } adj. [from ἀφροδίτη, Venus.] Relating to APHRODISI'ACK. } the venereal disease.
A'PIARY. n. f. [from apis, Lat. a bee.] The place where bees are kept.

Those who are skilled in bees, when they see a foreign swarm approaching to plunder their hives, have a trick to divert them into some neighbouring apiary, there to make what havock they please. Swift.

APICES of a flower. [Lat. from apex the top.] Little knobs that grow on the tops of the stamina, in the middle of a flower.
They are commonly of a dark purplish colour. By the microscope they have been discovered to be a sort of capsulae semina- les, or seed vessels, containing in them small globular, and often oval particles, of various colours, and exquisitely formed.

APIECE. adv. [from a for each, and piece, or share.] To the part or share of each. Quincy.

Men, in whose mouths at first sounded nothing but mortification, were come to think they might lawfully have fix or seven wives apiece. Hooker, Preface.

I have to night dispatched sixteen businesses, a month's length apiece, by an abstract of success. Shak. All's well that ends well.

One copy of this paper may serve a dozen of you, which will be less than a farthing apiece. Swift.

A'PISH. adj. [from ape.]

1. Having the qualities of an ape; imitative.
Report of fashions in proud Italy,
Whose manners still our tardy, apish nation
Limps after, in base awkward imitation. Shak. Richard II.

2. Foppish; affected.
Because I cannot flatter, and look fair,
Duck with French nods and apish courtesy,
I must be held a rancorous enemy. Shakespeare. Richard III.

3. Silly; trifling; insignificant.
All this is but apish sophistry; and, to give it a name divine and excellent, is abusive and unjust. Glanville's Sceptis Scient.

4. Wanton; playful.
Gloomy sits the queen;
Till happy chance reverts the cruel scene;
And apish folly, with her wild resort
Of wit and jest, disturbs the solemn court. Prior.

A'FISHLY. adv. [from apish.] In an apish manner; foppishly;
conceitedly.

A'FISHNESS. n. f. [from apish.] Mimickry; foppery; insignificance; playfulness.

API'TPAT. adv. [a word formed from the motion.] With quick palpitation.

O there he comes—Ay, my Hector of Troy, welcome my bully, my back; agad my heart has gone apitpat for you.

APLU'STRE. n. f. [Latin.] The ancient ensign carried in sea vessels.

The one holds a sword in her hand, to represent the Iliad, as the other has an aplustre, to represent the Odyssey, or voyage of Ulysses. Addison.

APOCALYPSE. n. f. [from ἀποκαλύπτω.] Revelation; discovery: a word used only of the sacred writings.

O for that warning voice, which he who saw
Th' apocalypse heard cry in heav'n aloud. Milton's Par. Lost.

With this throne, of the glory of the Father, compare the throne of the Son of God, as seen in the apocalypse.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

APOCALY'PTICAL. adj. [from apocalypse.] Concerning revelation; containing revelation.

If we could understand that scene, at the opening of this apocalyptic theatre, we should find it a representation of the majesty of our Saviour. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

APOCALY'PTICALLY. adv. [from apocalyptic.] In such a manner as to reveal something secret,

APOCOPE. n. f. [ἀποκοπή.] A figure in grammar, when the last letter or syllable of a word is taken away; as, ingeni for ingenii.

APOCRU'STICK. adj. [ἀποκρίστικα, from ἀποκρῶν, to drive.] Remedies endued with a repelling and astringent power, by which they prevent the too great afflux of humours to a part diseased.

Chambers.

APO'CRYPHA. n. f. [from ἀποκρύπτω, to put out of sight.]

Books whose authours are not known. It is used for the books appended to the sacred writings, which, being of doubtful authours, are less regarded.

We hold not the apocrypha for sacred, as we do the holy scripture, but for human compositions. Hooker, b. v.

APO'CRYPHAL. adj. [from apocrypha.]

1. Not canonical; of uncertain authority.
Jerom, who saith, that all writings not canonical are apocry- phal, uses not the title apocryphal, as the rest of the fathers ordinarily have done, whose custom is so to name, for the most part, only such as might not publicly be read or divulged.

Hooker, b. v. § 20.

2. Contained in the apocrypha.

To speak of her in the words of the apocryphal writers, wisdom is glorious, and never fadeth away. Addison. Spectator.

3. It is sometimes used for an account of uncertain credit.

APO'CRYPHALLY. adv. [from apocryphal.] Uncertainly; not indisputably.

APO'CRYPHALNESS. n. f. [from apocryphal.] Uncertainty;
doubtfulness of credit.

APODI'CTICAL. adj. [from ἀποδείξις, evident truth; demonstration.] Demonstrative; evident beyond contradiction.

Holding an apodictical knowledge, and an assured knowledge of it; verily, to persuade their apprehensions otherwise, were to make Euclid believe, that there were more than one centre in a circle. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 10.

We can say all at the number three; therefore the world is perfect. Tobit went, and his dog followed him; therefore there is a world in the moon, were an argument as apodictical.

Glanville's Sceptis, c. 19.

APODIXIS. n. f. [ἀποδείξις.] Demonstration. Diē.

APOGÆON. } n. f. [from ἀπὸ, from, and γῆ, the earth.] A A'POGEE. } point in the heavens, in which the sun, or a APOGEUM. } planet, is at the greatest distance possible from the earth in its whole revolution. The ancient astronomers regarding the earth as the centre of the system, chiefly regarded the apogæon and perigæon, which the moderns, making the sun the centre, change for the aphelion and perihelion. Chamb.

Thy sin is in his apogæon placed,

And when it moveth next, must needs descend. Fairfax.

It is not yet agreed in what time, precisely, the apogæum absolveth one degree. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. i.

APOLOGE'TICAL. } adj. [from ἀπολογέω, to defend.] That which APOLOGE'TICK. } is said in defence of any thing or person.

I design to publish an essay, the greater part of which is apolo- getical, for one sort of chymists. Boyle.

APOLOGE'TICALLY. adv. [from apologetical.] In the way of defence or excuse.

APO'LOGIST. n. f. [from To apologize.] He that makes an apology; a pleader in favour of another.

TO APO'LOGIZE. v. n. [from apology.]

1. To plead in favour of any person or thing.
It will be much more seasonable to reform than apologize or rhetoricate; and therefore it imports those, who dwell secure, to look about them. Decay of Piety.

2. It has the particle for before the subject of apology.
I ought to apologize for my indiscretion in the whole undertaking. Wake's Preparation for Death.

The translator needs not apologize for his choice of this piece, which was made in his childhood. Pope's Preface to Statius.

A'POLOGUE. n. f. [ἀπόλογος.] Fable; story contrived to teach some moral truth.

An apologue of Æsop is beyond a syllogism, and proverbs more powerful than demonstration. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Some men are remarked for pleasantness in raillery; others for apologues and apposite diverting stories. Locke.

APO'LOGY. n. f. [ἀπολογία, Lat. ἀπολογία.]

1. Defence; excuse. Apology generally signifies rather excuse than vindication, and tends rather to extenuate the fault, than prove innocence. This is, however, sometimes unregarded by writers.

In her face excuse

Came prologue; and apology too prompt;
Which with bland words at will she thus address'd.

Milton's Parad. Lost, b. ix. l. 854.

2. It has for before the object of excuse.
It is not my intention to make an apology for my poem:
some will think it needs no excuse, and others will receive none.

Dryden's Pref. to Abs. and Achit.

I shall neither trouble the reader, nor myself, with any apo- logy for publishing of these sermons; for if they be, in any measure, truly serviceable to the end for which they are designed, I do not see what apology is necessary; and if they be not so, I am sure none can be sufficient. Tillotson.

APOMECO'METRY. n. f. [ἀπὸ, from, μέτρον, distance, and μέτρω, to measure.] The art of measuring things at a distance.

APONEURO'SIS. n. f. [from ἀπὸ, from, and νεῦρον, a nerve.]
An expansion of a nerve into a membrane.

When a cyst rises near the orifice of the artery, it is formed by the aponeurosis that runs over the vessel, which becomes excessively expanded. Sharp's Surgery.

APO'PHASIS. n. f. [Lat. ἀπόφασις, a denying.] A figure in rhetorick, by which the orator, speaking ironically, seems to wave what he would plainly insinuate; as, Neither will I men- tion those things, which if I should, you notwithstanding could nei- ther confute or speak against them. Smith's Rhetorick.

APOPHLE'GMATICK. adj. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] That which has the quality of drawing away phlegm.

APOPHLE'GMATISM. n. f. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] A medicine of which the intention is to draw phlegm from the blood.

And so it is in apophlegmatisms and gargarisms, that draw the rheum down by the palate. Bacon's Natural Hist. N° 38.

APOPHLEGMA'TIZANT. n. f. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] Any remedy which causes an evacuation of serous or mucous humour by the nostrils, as particular kinds of sternutatories. Quincy.

A'POPHTHEGM. n. f. [ἀπόφθεγμα.] A remarkable saying; a valuable maxim uttered on some sudden occasion.

We may magnify the apophthegms, or reputed replies of wisdom,

dom,

dom, whereof many are to be seen in Laertius and Lycofthenes.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 6.

I had a mind to collect and digest such observations and apophthegms, as tend to the proof of that great assertion, All is vanity.

Prior's Pref. to Solomon.

APOPHYGE. n. f. [ἀποφυγή, flight, or escape.] Is, in architecture, that part of a column, where it begins to spring out of its base; and was originally no more than the ring or ferrel, which anciently bound the extremities of wooden pillars, to keep them from splitting, and were afterward imitated in stone work. We sometimes call it the spring of the column.

Chambers.

APOPHYSIS. n. f. [ἀπόφυσις.] The prominent parts of some bones; the same as process. It differs from an epiphysis, as that is a continuance of the bone itself; whereas the latter is somewhat adhering to a bone, and of which it is not properly a part.

Quincy.

It was the apophysis, or head of the os tibiae, which makes the knee.

Wifeman's Surgery.

APOPLE'CTICAL. adj. [from apoplexy.] Relating to an apoplexy.

We meet with the same complaints of gravity in living bodies, when the faculty locomotive seems abolished; as may be observed in supporting persons inebriated, apoplectical, or in lipothymies and swoonings.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

In an apoplectical case, he found extravasated blood, making way from the ventricles of the brain.

Derham's Physico-Theol.

APOPLE'CTICK. adj. [from apoplexy.] Relating to an apoplexy.

A lady was seized with an apoplectick fit, which afterward terminated in some kind of lethargy.

Wifeman's Surgery.

APOPLEX. n. f. [See APOPLEXY.] Apoplexy. The last syllable is cut away; but this is only in poetry.

Present punishment pursues his maw,

When surfeited and swell'd, the peacock raw,

He bears into the bath; whence want of breath,

Repletions, apoplex, intestate death.

Dryden's Juvenal.

APOPLEXED. adj. [from apoplex.] Seized with an apoplexy.

Sense, sure, you have,

Else could you not have motion: but sure that sense

Is apoplex'd.

Shakesp. Hamlet.

APOPLEXY. n. f. [ἀποπληξίς.] A sudden deprivation of all internal and external sensation, and of all motion, unless of the heart and thorax. The cause is generally a repletion, and indicates evacuation, joined with stimuli.

Quincy.

Apoplexy is a sudden abolition of all the senses, external and internal, and of all voluntary motion, by the stoppage of the flux and reflux of the animal spirits through the nerves destined for those motions.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy, muddled, deaf, sleepy, insensible.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

A fever may take away my reason, or memory, and an apoplexy leave neither sense nor understanding.

Locke.

APORIA. n. f. [ἀπορία.] Is a figure in rhetoric, by which the speaker shews, that he doubts where to begin for the multitude of matter, or what to say in some strange and ambiguous thing; and doth, as it were, argue the case with himself. Thus Cicero says, Whether he took them from his fellows more impudently, gave them to a harlot more lasciviously, removed them from the Roman people more wickedly, or altered them more presumptuously, I cannot well declare.

Smith's Rhetorick.

APORRHŌEA. n. f. [ἀπορροή.] Effluvium; emanation; something emitted by another.

The reason of this he endeavours to make out by atomical aporrhæas, which passing from the cruentate weapon to the wound, and being incorporated with the particles of the salve, carry them to the affected part.

Glanville's Sceptis, c. 24.

APOSIOPE'SIS. n. f. [ἀποσιώπησις, from ἀπό, after, and σιωπάω, to be silent.] A form of speech, by which the speaker, through some affection, as sorrow, bashfulness, fear, anger, or vehemency, breaks off his speech before it be all ended. A figure, when, speaking of a thing, we yet seem to conceal it, though indeed we aggravate it; or when the course of the sentence begun is so stayed, as thereby some part of the sentence not being uttered, may be understood; as, I might say much more, but modesty commands silence.

Smith's Rhetorick.

APOSTASY. n. f. [ἀποστασις.] Departure from what a man has professed: it is generally applied to religion; sometimes with the particle from.

The canon law defines apostasy to be a wilful departure from that state of faith, which any person has professed himself to hold in the christian church.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

The affable archangel had forewarn'd

Adam, by due example, to beware

Apostasy, by what befel in heav'n

To those apostates.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi. l. 43.

Vice in us were not only wickedness, but apostasy, degenerate wickedness.

Sprat.

Whoever do give different worships, must bring in more gods; which is an apostasy from one God.

Stillingsfleet.

APOSTATE. n. f. [ἀποστάτης, Lat. apostata.] One that has forsaken his profession; generally applied to one that has left his religion.

The angels, for disobedience, thou hast reserved to a miserable immortality; but unto man, equally rebellious, equally apostate from thee and goodness, thou hast given a Saviour.

Rogers's Sermons.

Apostates in point of faith, are, according to the civil law, subject unto all punishments ordained against hereticks.

Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

APOSTA'TICAL. adj. [from apostate.] After the manner of an apostate.

TO APOSTATIZE. v. n. [from apostate.] To forsake one's profession; it is commonly used of one who departs from his religion.

None revolt from the faith; not because they must not look upon a woman to lust after her, but because they are restrained from the perpetration of their lusts. If wanton glances, and libidinous thoughts, had been permitted by the gospel, they would have apostatized nevertheless.

Bentley's Sermons.

TO APOSTEMATE. v. n. [from aposteme.] To become an aposteme; to swell and corrupt into matter.

There is care to be taken in abscesses of the breast and belly, in danger of breaking inwards; yet, by opening these too soon, they some times apostemate again, and become crude.

Wifeman.

APOSTEMA'TION. n. f. [from apostemate.] The formation of an aposteme; the gathering of a hollow purulent tumour.

Nothing can be more admirable than the many ways nature hath provided for preventing, or curing of fevers; as, vomitings, apostemations, salivations, &c.

Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

APOSTEME. } n. f. [ἀπόστημα.] A hollow swelling, filled with

APOSTUME. } purulent matter; an abscess.

With equal propriety we may affirm, that ulcers of the lungs, or apostemes of the brain, do happen only in the left side.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 3.

The opening of apostemes, before the suppuration be perfected, weakeneth the heat, and renders them crude.

Wifeman.

APOSTLE. n. f. [apostolus, Lat. ἀπόστολος.] A person sent with mandates by another. It is particularly applied to them whom our Saviour deputed to preach the gospel.

But all his mind is bent to holiness;

His champions are the prophets and apostles.

Shak. Hen. IV.

I am far from pretending infallibility; that would be to erect myself into an apostle: a presumption in any one that cannot confirm what he says by miracles.

Locke.

We know but a small part of the notion of an apostle, by knowing barely that he is sent forth.

Watts's Logick.

APOSTLESHIP. n. f. [from apostle.] The office or dignity of an apostle.

Where, because faith is in too low degree,

I thought it some apostleship in me

To speak things, which by faith alone I see.

Donne.

God hath ordered it, that St. Paul hath writ epistles; which are all confined within the business of his apostleship; and so contain nothing but points of christian instruction.

Locke's Essay on St. Paul's Epistles.

APOSTO'LICAL. adj. [from apostolick.] Delivered or taught by the apostles; belonging to the apostles.

They acknowledge not, that the church keeps any thing as apostolical, which is not found in the apostles writings, in what other records soever it be found.

Hooker, b. iv. § 2.

Declare yourself for that church, which is founded upon scripture, reason, apostolical practice and antiquity.

Hooker.

APOSTO'LICALLY. adv. [from apostolical.] In the manner of the apostles.

APOSTO'LICALNESS. n. f. [from apostolical.] The quality of relating to the apostles; apostolical authority.

APOSTO'LICK. adj. [from apostle.] Taught by the apostles; belonging to an apostle.

Their oppositions in maintenance of publick superstition against apostolick endeavours, were vain and frivolous.

Hooker.

Or where did I at sure tradition strike,

Provided still it were apostolick?

Dryden's Hind and Panther.

APOSTROPHE. n. f. [ἀποστροφή, from ἀπό, from, and στρέφω, to turn.]

1. In rhetoric, a diversion of speech to another person, than the speech appointed did intend or require; or it is a turning of the speech from one person to another, many times abruptly. A figure when we break off the course of our speech, and speak to some new person, present or absent, as to the people or witnesses, when it was before directed to the judges, or opponent. This diversion or speech is made many ways. 1. To God. 2. To angels. 3. To men in their several ranks, whether absent or present, dead or alive. 4. To the adversary. 5. To the heavenly bodies and meteors. 6. To the earth and things in it. 7. To the sea and things in it. 8. To beasts, birds, and fishes. 9. To inanimate things.
2. In grammar, the contraction of a word by the use of a comma; as, tho', for though; rep', for reputation.

Smith's Rhetorick.

Many laudable attempts have been made, by abbreviating words with apostrophes; and by lopping polysyllables, leaving one or two words at most.

Savisi.

TO APOSTROPHIZE. v. a. [from apostrophe.] To address by an apostrophe.

There is a peculiarity in Homer's manner of apostrophizing

Eumæus,

Eumæus; and speaking of him in the second person, it is generally applied only to men of account. Pope's Odyssey; notes.
APOSTUME. n. f. See APOSTEME. [This word is properly apostem.] A hollow tumour filled with purulent matter.

How an apostume in the mesentery breaking, causes a consumption in the parts, is apparent. Harvey on Consumptions.
TO APOSTUME. v. n. [from apostume.] To apostemate. Dict.
APOTHECARY. n. f. [apotheca, Lat. a repository.] A man whose employment it is to keep medicines for sale.

Give me an ounce of civet, good apothecary, to sweeten my imagination. Shakesp. King Lear.
 They have no other doctor but the sun and the fresh air, and that such an one, as never sends them to the apothecary. South.

Wand'ring in the dark,
 Physicians, for the tree, have found the bark;
 They, lab'ring for relief of human kind,
 With sharpen'd sight some remedies may find;
 Th' apothecary-train is wholly blind. } Dryd. Fab.

APOTHEGM. n. f. [properly apophthegm; which see.] A remarkable saying.

By frequent conversing with him, and scattering short apothegms, and little pleasant stories, and making useful applications of them, his son was, in his infancy, taught to abhor vanity and vice as monsters. Watson's Life of Sanderson.

APOTHEOSIS. n. f. [from ἀπὸ and θεός.] Deification; the rite of adding any one to the number of gods.

As if it could be graved and painted omnipotent, or the nails and the hammer could give it an apotheosis. South.

Allots the prince of his celestial line,
 An apotheosis, and rites divine. Garth.

APO-TOME. n. f. [from ἀποτμήναι, to cut off.]

1. In mathematicks, the remainder or difference of two incommensurable quantities.

2. In musick, it is the part remaining of an entire tone, after a greater semitone has been taken from it. The proportion in numbers of the apotome, is that of 2048 to 2187. The Greeks thought that the greater tone could not be divided into two equal parts; for which reason they called the first part προτον, and the other ὑποτον. Chambers.

APOZEM. n. f. [ἀπό, from, and ζέω, to boil.] A decoction; an infusion made by boiling ingredients.

During this evacuation, he took opening broths and apozems. Wifeman's Surgery.

TO APPAL. v. a. [appalir, Fr. It might more properly have been written appale.] To fright; to strike with sudden fear; to depress; to discourage.

Whilst she spake, her great words did appal
 My feeble courage, and my heart oppress,
 That yet I quake and tremble over all. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy,
 Thou dreadful Ajax; that th' appalled air
 May pierce the head of thy great combatant. Shakesp.

The house of peers was somewhat appalled at this alarm;
 but took time to consider of it till next day. Clarendon.

Does neither rage inflame, nor fear appal,
 Nor the black fear of death that saddens all. Pope.

The monster curls
 His flaming crest, all other thirst appall'd,
 Or shiv'ring flies, or choak'd at distance stands. Thomson.

APPALEMENT. n. f. [from appal.] Depression; discouragement; impression of fear.

As the furious slaughter of them was a great discouragement and appalement to the rest. Bacon's Henry VII.

APPANAGE. n. f. [appanagium, low Latin; probably from pānis, bread.] Lands set apart by princes for the maintenance of their younger children.

He became suitor for the earldom of Chester, a kind of appanage to Wales, and using to go to the king's son. Bacon.

Had he though it fit,
 That wealth should be the appanage of wit,
 The God of light could ne'er have been so blind,
 To deal it to the worst of human kind. Swift.

APPARATUS. n. f. [Latin.] Things provided as means to any certain end, as the tools of a trade; the furniture of a house; ammunition for war; equipage; show.

There is an apparatus of things previous, to be adjusted before I come to the calculation itself. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

Ourselves are easily provided for; it is nothing but the circumstantial, the apparatus or equipage of human life, that costs so much. Pope's Letters to Gay.

APPAREL. n. f. It has no plural. [appareil, Fr.]

1. Dress; vesture.

I cannot cog and say, that thou art this and that, like many of those lisping hawthorn buds, that come like women in mens apparel, and smell like Bucklebury in simpling time. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. External habiliments.

Our late burnt London, in apparel new,
 Shook off her ashes to have treated you. Waller.

At publick devotion, his resigned carriage made religion appear in the natural apparel of simplicity. Tatler, N° 54.

TO APPAREL. v. a. [from apparel, the noun.]

VOL. I.

1. To dress; to cloath.
 With such robes were the king's daughters that were virgins apparelled. 2 Sam. xiii. 18.

2. To adorn with dress.
 She did apparel her apparel, and with the preciousness of her body made it most sumptuous. Sidney.

3. To cover or deck, as with dress.
 You may have trees apparelled with flowers, by boring holes in them, and putting into them earth, and setting seeds of violets. Bacon's Natural History, N° 504.

Shelves, and rocks, and precipices, and gulfs, being apparelled with a verdure of plants, would resemble mountains and valleys. Bentley's Sermons.

APPARENT. adj. [apparent, Fr. apparens, Lat.]

1. Plain; indubitable.
 The main principles of reason are in themselves apparent.
 For to make nothing evident of itself unto man's understanding, were to take away all possibility of knowing any thing. Hooker, b. i.

2. Seeming; in appearance; not real.
 The perception intellective often corrects the report of phantasy, as in the apparent bigness of the sun, the apparent crookedness of the staff in air and water. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Visible; in opposition to secret.
 What secret imaginations we entertained is known to God: this is apparent, that we have not behaved ourselves, as if we preserved a grateful remembrance of his mercies. Atterbury.

The outward and apparent sanctity of actions should flow from purity of heart. Rogers.

4. Open; discoverable; known.
 As well the fear of harm, as harm apparent,
 In my opinion ought to be prevented. Shakesp. Richard III.

5. Certain; not presumptive.
 He is the next of blood,
 And heir apparent to the English crown. Shakesp. Henry VI.

APPARENT. n. f. Elliptically used for heir apparent.
 Arise a knight;
 And learn this lesson, Draw thy sword in right.—
 —I'll draw it as apparent to the crown,
 And in that quarrel use it. Shakesp. Henry VI.

APPARENTLY. adv. [from apparent.] Evidently; openly.
 Arrest him, officer;
 I would not spare my brother in this case,
 If he should scorn me so apparently. Shakesp. Comedy of Err.

Vices apparently tend to the impairing of mens health. Tillot.

APPARITION. n. f. [from appareo, Lat. to appear.]

1. Appearance; visibility.
 When suddenly stood at my head a dream,
 Whose inward apparition gently mov'd
 My fancy. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

2. The thing appearing; a form; a visible object.
 I have mark'd
 A thousand blushing apparitions
 To start into her face; a thousand innocent flames
 In angel whiteness bear away those blushes.
Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

A glorious apparition! had not doubt,
 And carnal fear, that day dimm'd Adam's eyes. Parad. Lost.

Any thing besides may take from me the sense of what appeared; which apparition, it seems, was you. Tatler, N° 55.

3. A spectre; a walking spirit.
 Horatio says 'tis but our phantasy,
 Touching this dreaded sight twice seen of us;
 Therefore I have intreated him,
 That if again this apparition come,
 He may approve our eyes, and speak to it. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Tender minds should not receive early impressions of goblins, spectres, and apparitions; wherewith maids fright them into compliance. Locke.

One of those apparitions had his right hand filled with darts, which he brandished in the face of all who came up that way. Tatler, N° 81.

4. Something only apparent, not real.
 Still there's something
 That checks my joys——— —Nor can I yet distinguish
 Which is an apparition, this or that. Denham's Sophy.

5. Astronomically, the visibility of some luminary, opposed to occultation.
 A month of apparition is the space wherein the moon appeareth, deducting three days wherein it commonly disappears; and this containeth but twenty-six days and twelve hours. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 12.

APPARITORS. n. f. [from appareo, Lat. to be at hand.]

1. Such persons as are at hand to execute the proper orders of the magistrate or judge of any court of judicature. Ayliffe's Parerg.

2. The lowest officer of the ecclesiastical court.
 They swallowed all the Roman hierarchy, from the pope to the apparitor. Ayliffe's Parergon.

TO APPAY. v. a. [appayer, old Fr. to satisfy.] To satisfy; to content: whence well appayed, is pleased; ill appayed, is uneasy.
 It is now obsolete.

How well appaid she was her bird to find? Sidney.
 Ay, Willy, when the heart is ill assay'd,
 How can bagpipe or joints be well appaid. Spenser's Past.
 I am well appaid that you had rather believe, than take the pain of a long pilgrimage, you will never be so stiff in any opinion. Camden.
 So only can high justice rest appaid. Parad. Lost, b. xii.
To APPE'ACH. v. a.
 1. To accuse; to inform against any person.
 He did, amongst many others, appeach Sir William Stanley, the lord chamberlain. Bacon's Henry VII.
 Were he twenty times
 My son, I would appeach him. Shakesp. Richard II.
 Disclose
 The state of your affection; for your passions
 Have to the full appeached. Shak. All's well that ends well.
 2. To censure; to reproach; to taint with accusation.
 For when Cymochles saw the foul reproach,
 Which them appeached; prick'd with guilty shame,
 And inward grief, he fiercely gen approach,
 Resolv'd to put away that lordly shame. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
 Nor canst, nor durst thou, traitor, on the pain,
Appeach my honour, or thine own maintain. Dryd. Fables.
APPE'ACHMENT. n. f. [from appeach.] Charge exhibited against any man; accusation.
 A busy headed man gave first light to this appeachment; but the earl did avouch it. Sir J. Hayward.
 The duke's answers to his appeachments, in number thirteen,
 I find civilly couched. Wotton.
To APPE'AL. v. n. [appello, Lat.]
 1. To transfer a cause from one to another; with the particles to and from.
From the ordinary therefore they appeal to themselves. Hooker.
 2. To refer to another as judge.
 Force, or a declared design of force, upon the person of another, where there is no common superior on earth to appeal to for relief, is the state of war; and it is the want of such an appeal gives a man the right of war, even against an aggressor, though he be in society and a fellow subject. Locke.
 They knew no foe, but in the open field,
 And to their cause and to the gods appealed. Stepney.
 3. To call another as witness.
 Whether this, that the soul always thinks, be a self-evident proposition, I appeal to mankind. Locke.
 4. To charge with a crime; to accuse.
 One but flatters us,
 As well appeareth by the cause you come,
 Namely, t' appeal each other of high treason. Shak. Rich. II.
APPE'AL. n. f. [from the verb To appeal.]
 1. An appeal is a provocation from an inferior to a superior judge, whereby the jurisdiction of the inferior judge is for a while suspended, in respect of the cause; the cognizance being devolved to the superior judge. Ayliffe's Parergon.
 This ring
 Deliver them, and your appeal to us
 There make before them. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
 Our reason prompts us to a future state,
 The last appeal from fortune and from fate,
 Where God's all righteous ways will be declar'd. Dryden.
 There are distributors of justice, from whom there lies an appeal to the prince. Addison on Italy.
 2. In the common law.
 An accusation; which is a lawful declaration of another man's crime before a competent judge, by one that sets his name to the declaration, and undertakes to prove it, upon the penalty that may ensue of the contrary; more commonly used for the private accusation of a murderer, by a party who had interest in the party murdered, and of any felon, by one of his accomplices in the fact. Cowell.
 The duke's unjust,
 Thus to retort your manifest appeal,
 And put your trial in the villain's mouth,
 Which here you come to accuse. Shak. M. Wives of Windsor.
 Hast thou, according to thy oath and bond,
 Brought hither Henry Hereford, thy bold son,
 Here to make good the boist'rous late appeal
 Against the duke of Norfolk? Shakespeare.
 3. A summons to answer a charge.
 Nor shall the sacred character of king
 Be urg'd to shield me from thy bold appeal,
 If I have injur'd thee, that makes us equal. Dryd. Don Seb.
 4. A call upon any as witness.
 The casting up of the eyes, and lifting up of the hands, is a kind of appeal to the Deity, the authour of wonders. Bacon.
APPE'ALANT. n. f. [from appeal.] He that appeals.
 Lords appealants,
 Your differences shall all rest under gage,
 Till we assign you to your days of trial. Shakesp. Rich. III.
APPE'ALER. n. f. [from appeal.] One who makes an appeal.
To APPE'AR. v. n. [appareo, Lat.]
 1. To be in sight; to be visible; sometimes with the particle in.
 As the leprosy appeareth in the skin of the flesh. Lev. xiii. 43.

And half her knee, and half her breast appear;
 By art, like negligence, disclos'd and bare. Prior.
 2. To become visible as a spirit.
 For I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness. Acts xxvi. 16.
 3. To stand in the presence of another; generally used of standing before some superiour.
 When shall I come and appear before God? Psalms xlii. 2.
 4. To be the object of observation.
 Let thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children. Psalms xc. 16.
 5. To exhibit one's self before a court of justice.
 Keep comfort to you, and this morning see
 You do appear before them. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
 6. To be made clear by evidence.
 Egfrid did utterly waste and subdue it, as appears out of Be-da's complaint against him; and Edgar brought it under his obedience, as appears by an ancient record. Spenser's Ireland.
 7. To seem in opposition to reality.
 His first and principal care being to appear unto his people, such as he would have them be, and to be such as he appeared.
Sidney, b. ii.
 My noble master will appear
 Such as he is, full of regard and honour. Shak. Julius Cæs.
 8. To be plain beyond dispute.
 From experiments, useful indications may be taken, as will appear by what follows. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
APPE'ARANCE. n. f. [from To appear.]
 1. The act of coming into sight; as, they were surpris'd by the sudden appearance of the enemy.
 2. The thing seen; as, the remarkable appearances in the sky.
 3. Phenomena; that quality of any thing which is visible.
 The advancing day of experimental knowledge discloseth such appearances, as will not lie even in any model extant.
Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica, Pref.
 4. Semblance; not reality.
 He encreased in estimation, whether by destiny, or whether by his virtues, or at least by his appearances of virtues. Hayw.
 Heroic virtue did his actions guide,
 And he the substance not th' appearance chose. Dryden.
 The hypocrite would not put on the appearance of virtue, if it was not the most proper means to gain love. Addison. Spectat.
 5. Outside; show.
 Under a fair and beautiful appearance there should ever be the real substance of good. Rogers.
 6. Entry into a place or company.
 Do the same justice to one another, which will be done us hereafter by those, who shall make their appearance in the world, when this generation is no more. Addison's Freeholder, N° 35.
 7. Apparition; supernatural visibility.
 I think a person terrified with the imagination of spectres, more reasonable than one who thinks the appearance of spirits fabulous. Addison. Spectator, N° 110.
 8. Exhibition of the person to a court.
 I will not tarry; no, nor ever more
 Upon this business my appearance make
 In any of their courts. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
 9. Open circumstance of a case.
 Or grant her passion be sincere,
 How shall his innocence be clear?
Appearances were all so strong,
 The world must think him in the wrong. Swift.
 10. Presence; mien.
 Health, wealth, victory, and honour, are introduced; wisdom enters the last, and so captivates with her appearance, that he gives himself up to her. Addison. Guardian, N° 111.
 11. Probability; seeming; likelihood.
 There is that which hath no appearance, that this priest being utterly unacquainted with the true person, according to whose pattern he should shape his counterfeit, should think it possible for him to instruct his player. Bacon's Henry VII.
APPE'ARER. n. f. [from To appear.] The person that appears.
 That owls and ravens are ominous appearers, and presignify unlucky events, was an augural conception. Brown's Vul. Err.
APPE'ASABLE. adj. [from To appease.] That may be pacified;
 reconcileable.
APPE'ASABLENESS. n. f. [from To appease.] The quality of being easily appeased; reconcileableness.
To APPE'ASE. v. a. [appaiser, Fr.]
 1. To quiet; to put in a state of peace.
 By his counsel he appeaseth the deep, and planteth islands therein. Ecclus. xliii. 23.
 England had no leisure to think of reformation, till the civil wars were appeased, and peace settled. Sir J. Davies on Irel.
 2. To pacify; to reconcile; to still wrath.
 So Simon was appeased towards them, and fought no more against them. Mac. xiii. 47.
 O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
 Yet execute thy wrath on me alone. Shakesp. Richard III.
 The rest shall hear me call, and oft be warn'd
 Their sinful state, and to appease betimes
 Th' incensed Deity. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.
APPE'ASE-

APPE'ASEMENT. n. f. [from To appease.] A state of peace.

Being neither in numbers nor in courage great, partly by authority, partly by entreaty, they were reduced to some good appeasements. Sir J. Hayward.

APPE'ASER. n. f. [from To appease.] He that pacifies others; he that quiets disturbances.

APPE'LLANT. n. f. [appello, Lat. to call.]

1. A challenger; one that summons another to answer either in the lists or in a court of justice.

In the devotion of a subject's love,
And free from other misbegotten hate,
Come I appellant to this princely presence. Shakesp. Rich. II.

This is the day appointed for the combat,
And ready are th' appellant and defendant,
Th' armourer and his man, to enter the lists. Shak. Hen. IV.

These shifts refuted, answer thy appellant,
Though by his blindness maim'd for high attempts,
Who now defies thee thrice to single fight.

2. One that appeals from a lower to a higher power.

Milton's Samson Agonistes.

An appeal transfers the cognizance of the cause to the superior judge; so that, pending the appeal, nothing can be attempted in prejudice of the appellant. Ayliffe's Parergon.

APPE'LLATE. n. f. [appellatus, Lat.] The person appealed against.

An appellatory libel ought to contain the name of the party appellant; the name of him from whose sentence it is appealed; the name of him to whom it is appealed; from what sentence it is appealed; the day of the sentence pronounced, and appeal interposed; and the name of the party appellate, or person against whom the appeal is lodged. Ayliffe's Parergon.

APPELLA'TION. n. f. [appellatio, Lat.] Name; word by which any thing is called.

Nor are always the same plants delivered under the same name and appellations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Good and evil commonly operate upon the mind of man, by respective names or appellations, by which they are notified and conveyed to the mind. South.

APPE'LLATIVE. n. f. [appellativum, Lat.]

Words and names are either common or proper. Common names are such as stand for universal ideas, or a whole rank of beings, whether general or special. These are called appellatives. So fish, bird, man, city, river, are common names; and so are trout, eel, lobster; for they all agree to many individuals, and some to many species. Watts's Logick.

APPE'LLATIVELY. adv. [from appellative.] According to the manner of nouns appellative; as, this man is a Hercules. Hercules is used appellative'y to signify a strong man.

APPE'LLATORY. adj. [from appeal.] That which contains an appeal. See APPE'LLATE.

APPE'LLEE. n. f. [from appeal.] One who is appealed against, and accused. Dict.

To APPEND. v. a. [appendo, Lat. to hang to any thing.]

1. To hang any thing upon another; as, the inscription was appended to the column.

2. To add to something as an accessory, not a principal part.

APPENDAGE. n. f. [French] Something added to another thing, without being necessary to its essence, as a portico to the house.

Modesty is the appendage of sobriety, and is to chastity, to temperance, and to humility, as the fringes are to a garment. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

None of the laws of motion now established, will serve to account for the production, motion, or number of bodies, nor their appendages, though they may help us a little to conceive their appearances. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

He was so far from over-valuing any of the appendages of life, that the thoughts of life did not affect him. Atterbury's Sermon.

APPENDANT. adj. [French.]

1. Hanging to something else.

2. Belonging to; annexed; concomitant.

He that despises the world, and all its appendant vanities, is the most secure. Taylor's Rule of holy living.

He that looks for the blessings appendant to the sacrament, must expect them upon no terms, but of a worthy communion. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

Riches multiplied beyond the proportion of our character, and the wants appendant to it, naturally dispose men to forget God. Rogers.

3. In law.

Appendant is any thing belonging to another, as accessorium principali, with the civilians, or adjunctum subjecto, with the logicians. An hospital may be appendant to a manour; a common of fishing appendant to a freehold. Cowell.

APPENDANT. n. f. That which belongs to another thing, as an accidental or adventitious part.

Pliny gives an account of the inventors of the forms and appendants of shipping. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

A word, a look, a tread, will strike, as they are appendants to external symmetry, or indications of the beauty of the mind. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. ii. c. 6.

To APPENDICATE. v. a. [appendo, Lat.] To add to another thing.

In a palace there is the case or fabrick of the structure, and there are certain additaments; as, various furniture, and curious motions of divers things appendicated to it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

APPENDICA'TION. n. f. [from appendicate.] Adjunct; appendage; annexion.

There are considerable parts and integrals, and appendications unto the mundus asæctabilis, impossible to be eternal. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

APPE'NDIX. n. f. appendices, plur. [Lat.]

1. Something appended, or added to another thing.

The cherubim were never intended as an object of worship, because they were only the appendices to another thing. But a thing is then proposed as an object of worship, when it is set up by itself, and not by way of addition or ornament to another thing. Stillingsfleet's Defence of Discourses on Romish Idolatry.

Normandy became an appendix to England, the nobler dominion, and received a greater conformity of their laws to the English, than they gave to it. Hale's Civil Law of England.

2. An adjunct or concomitant.

All concurrent appendices of the action ought to be surveyed, in order to pronounce with truth concerning it. Watts.

To APPERTAIN. v. n. [appartenir, Fr.]

1. To belong to as of right.

The honour of devising this doctrine, that religion ought to be enforced by the sword, would be found appertaining to Mahomed the false prophet. Raleigh's Essays.

The Father, t' whom in heav'n supreme Kingdom, and power, and glory appertains, Hath honour'd me, according to his will. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

2. To belong to by nature or appointment.

If the soul of man did serve only to give him being in this life, then things appertaining to this life would content him, as we see they do other creatures. Hooker, b. i.

And they roasted the passover with fire, as appertaineth: as for the sacrifices they sod them in bras pots. 1 Esdras, i. 2.

Both of them seem not to generate any other effect, but such as appertaineth to their proper objects and senses. Bacon.

Is it expected, I should know no secrets That appertain to you? Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

APPERTA'INMENT. n. f. [from appertain.] That which belongs to any rank or dignity.

He sent our messengers, and we lay by Our appertainments, visiting of him. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

APPERTENANCE. n. f. [appartenance, Fr.] That which belongs or relates to another thing.

Can they which behold the controversy of divinity condemn our enquiries in the doubtful appertenances of arts, and receptaries of philosophy? Brown's Vulgar Errors, Preface.

APPERTINENT. adj. [from To appertain.] Belonging; relating.

You know how apt our love was to accord To furnish him with all appertinents

Belonging to his honour. Shakespeare's Henry V.

APPETENCE. } n. f. [appetentia, Lat.] Carnal desire; sensual

APPETENCY. } desire.

Bred only and completed to the taste Of lustful appetence; to sing, to dance, To dress, to trouble the tongue, and roll the eye. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 619.

APPETIBI'LITY. n. f. [from appetible.] The quality of being desirable.

That elicitation which the schools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act, merely from the appetibility of the object, as a man draws a child after him with the sight of a green bough. Bramham against Hobbes.

APPETIBLE. adj. [appetibilis, Lat.] Desirable; that which may be the object of appetite.

Power both to slight the most appetible objects, and to controul the most unruly passions. Bramham against Hobbes.

APPETITE. n. f. [appetitus, Lat.]

1. The natural desire of good; the instinct by which we are led to seek pleasure.

The will properly and strictly taken, as it is of things which are referred unto the end that men desireth, differeth greatly from that inferiour natural desire, which we call appetite. The object of appetite is whatsoever sensible good may be wished for; the object of will is that good which reason does lead us to seek. Hooker, b. i. § 7.

2. The desire of sensual pleasure.

Why, she should hang on him, As if increase of appetite had grown By what it fed on. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Urge his hateful luxury, And bestial appetite in change of lust. Shakesp. Richard III.

Each tree Loaden with fairest fruit, that hung to th' eye Tempting, stirr'd in me sudden appetite

To pluck and eat. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

There is continual abundance, which creates such an appetite in your reader, that he is not cloyed with any thing, but satisfied with all. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicat.

3. Vio-

3. Violent longing; eagerness after any thing.
No man could enjoy his life, his wife, or goods, if a mightier man had an appetite to take the same from him. Davies on Irel.
Hopton had an extraordinary appetite to engage Waller in a battle. Clarendon, b. viii.
Power being the natural appetite of princes, a limited monarch cannot gratify it. Swift.
4. Keeness of stomach; hunger; desire of food.
There be four principal causes of appetite; the refrigeration of the stomach, joined with some dryness; contraction; vellication, and absterfion; besides hunger, which is an emptiness. Bacon's Natural History, N° 831.
5. It has sometimes of before the object of desire.
The new officer's nature needed some restraint to his immoderate appetite of power. Clarendon.
6. Sometimes to.

We have generally such an appetite to praise, that we greedily suck it in. Government of the Tongue, § 8.

APPETITION. n. f. [appetitio, Lat.] Desire.
The actual appetition or fastening our affections on him. Hammond's Practical Catechism.

APPETITIVE. adj. [from appetite.] That which desires; that which has the quality of desiring.

And worlds applaud that must not yet be found! Pope.

APPLAUDER. n. f. [from applaud.] He that praises or commends.

I had the voice of my single reason against it, drowned in the noise of a multitude of applauders. Glanville's Sceptis.

APPLAUSE. n. f. [applausus, Lat.] Approbation loudly expressed; praise.

This general applause, and chearful shout,
Argues your wisdom and your love to Richard. Shak. R. III.

Sylla wept,
And chid her barking waves into attention;
And fell Charybdis murmur'd soft applause. Milton's Comus.

Those that are so fond of applause, how little do they taste it when they have it? South.

See their wide streaming wounds; they neither came
For pride of empire, nor desire of fame;
Kings fight for kingdoms, madmen for applause,

But love for love alone, that crowns the lover's cause. Dryden's Fables.

APPLE. n. f. [æppel, Saxon.]

1. The fruit of the apple tree.
Tall thriving trees confess'd the fruitful mold;
The red'ning apple ripens here to gold. Pope's Odyssey.

2. The pupil of the eye.
He instructed him; he kept him as the apple of his eye. Deut. xxxii. 10.

APPLE of Love.
Apples of love are of three sorts; the most common having long trailing branches, with rough leaves and yellow joints, succeeded by apples, as they are called, at the joints, not round, but bunched; of a pale orange shining pulp, and seeds within. Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.

APPLE-GRAFT. n. f. [from apple and graft.] A twig of apple tree grafted upon the stock of another tree.

We have seen three and twenty sorts of apple-grafts upon the same old plant, most of them adorned with fruit. Boyle.

Where their appointment we may best discover,

And look on their endeavour. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Here art thou in appointment fresh and fair,

Anticipating time with starting courage. Shak. Tr. and Cress.

5. An allowance paid to any man, commonly used of allowances to publick officers.

To APPO'RTION. v. a. [from portio, Lat.] To set out in just proportions.

Try the parts of the body, which of them issue speedily, and which slowly; and, by apportioning the time, take and leave that quality which you desire. Bacon's Natural History.

And to these it were good, that some proper prayer were apportioned, and they taught it. South.

An office cannot be apportioned out like a common, and shared among distinct proprietors. Collier of Envy.

APPO'RTIONMENT. n. f. [from apportion.] A dividing of a rent into two parts or portions, according as the land whence it issues, is divided among two or more proprietors. Chambers.

To APPO'SE. v. a. [appono, Lat.] To put questions to. This word is not now in use, except that, in some schools, to put grammatical questions to a boy is called, to pose him; and we now use pose for puzzle.

Some procure themselves to be surpris'd at such times as it is like the party that they work upon, will come upon them: and to be found with a letter in their hand, or doing somewhat which they are not accustomed; to the end they may be apposed of those things which of themselves they are desirous to utter. Bacon.

A'PPPOSITE. adj. [appositus, Lat.] Proper; fit; well adapted to time, place, or circumstances.

The duke's delivery of his mind was not so sharp, as solid and grave, and apposite to the times and occasions. Wotton.

VOL. I.

Neither was Perkin, for his part, wanting to himself, either in gracious and princely behaviour, or in ready and apposite answers. Bacon's Henry VII.

Remarkable instances of this kind have been: but it will administer reflections very apposite to the design of this present solemnity. Atterbury's Sermons.

A'PPOSITELY. adv. [from apposite.] Properly; fitly; suitably.

When we come into a government, and see this place of honour allotted to a murderer, another filled with an atheist or a blasphemer, may we not appositely and properly ask, Whether there be any virtue, sobriety, or religion, amongst such a people? South.

We may appositely compare this disease, of a proper and improper consumption, to a decaying house. Harvey on Conf.

A'PPOSITENESS. n. f. [from apposite.] Fitness; propriety; suitability.

Judgment is either concerning things to be known, or of things done, of their congruity, fitness, rightness, appositeness.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

APPOSIT'ION. n. f. [appositio, Lat.]

1. The addition of new matter, so as that it may touch the first mass.

Urine inspected with a microscope, will discover a black sand; wherever this sand sticks, it grows still bigger, by the apposition of new matter. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. In grammar, the putting of two nouns in the same case; as, Liber Mariæ matris, the book of his mother Mary.

The governour kept the city with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me. 2 Cor. xi. 32.

It was the rabble, of which no body was named; and, which is more strange, not one apprehended. Clarendon.

3. To conceive by the mind.

The good which is gotten by doing, causeth not action; unless, apprehending it as good, we like and desire it. Hooker.

Yet this I apprehend not, why to those

Among whom God will deign to dwell on earth,

So many, and so various laws are giv'n. Milton's Par. Lost.

The First Being is invisible and incorruptible, and can only be apprehended by our minds. Stillingfleet.

4. To think on with terror; to fear.

From my grandfather's death I had reason to apprehend the stone; and, from my father's life, the gout. Temple.

APPREHE'NDER. n. f. [from apprehend.] Conceiver; thinker.

Gross apprehenders may not think it any more strange, than that a bullet should be moved by the rarified fire. Glanville.

APPREHE'NSIBLE. adj. [from apprehend.] That which may be apprehended, or conceived.

The north and southern poles are incommunicable and fixed points, whereof the one is not apprehensible in the other.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 7.

APPREHE'NSION. n. f. [apprehensio, Lat.]

1. The mere contemplation of things, without affirming or denying any thing concerning them. So we think of a horse, high, swift, animal, time, matter, mind, death, &c. Watts.

Simple apprehension denotes no more than the soul's naked intellect of an object, without either composition or deduction. Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica, c. iv.

2. Opinion; sentiments; concession.

To be false, and to be thought false, is all one in respect of men who act not according to truth, but apprehension. South.

The expressions of scripture are commonly suited in those matters to the vulgar apprehensions and conceptions of the place and people where they were delivered. Locke on St. Paul's Ep.

3. The faculty by which we conceive new ideas, or power of conceiving them.

I nam'd them as they pass'd, and understood

Their nature, with such knowledge God indu'd

My sudden apprehension. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

4. Fear.

It behoveth that the world should be held in awe, not by a vain surmise, but a true apprehension of somewhat which no man may think himself able to withstand. Hooker, b. v. § 2.

And he the future evil shall no less

In apprehension, than in substance, feel. Milt. Paradise Lost.

The apprehension of what was to come from an unknown, at least unacknowledged successor to the crown, clouded much of that prosperity. Clarendon.

After the death of his nephew Caligula, Claudius was in no small apprehension for his own life. Addison on ancient Medals.

5. Suspicion of something to happen, or be done.

I'll note you in my book of memory,

And scourge you for this apprehension. Shakesp. Henry VI.

That he might take away the apprehension, that he meant suddenly to depart, he sent out orders, which he was sure would come into the enemies hands, to two or three villages next the house, that they should, by the next day noon, send portions of corn into Basinghouse. Clarendon, b. viii.

As they have no apprehension of these things, so they need no comfort against them. Tillotson.

6. Seizure.

See that he be convey'd unto the tower:

And go we brothers to the man that took him,

To question of his apprehension. Shakesp. Henry VI.

APPREHENSIVE. adj. [from apprehend.]

And gives encouragement to those who teach such apprehensive scholars. Holder's Elements of Speech.

If conscience be naturally apprehensive and sagacious, certainly we should trust and rely upon the reports of it. South.

2. Fearful.

The inhabitants of this country, when I passed through it, were extremely apprehensive of seeing Lombardy the seat of war. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

They are not at all apprehensive of evils at a distance, nor tormented with the fearful prospect of what may befall them hereafter. Tillotson.

APPREHENSIVELY. adv. [from apprehensive.] In an apprehensive manner.

APPREHENSIVENESS. n. f. [from apprehensive.] The quality of being apprehensive.

Whereas the vowels are much more difficult to be taught, you will find, by falling upon them last, great help by the apprehensiveness already gained in learning the consonants. Holder's Elements of Speech.

APPRENTICE. n. f. [apprenti, Fr.] One that is bound by covenant, to serve another man of trade, for a certain term of years, upon condition, that the artificer, or tradesman, shall, in the mean time, endeavour to instruct him in his art or mystery. Cowell.

Love enjoined such diligence, that no apprentice, no, no bond slave could ever be more ready than that young prince's was. Sidney, b. ii.

He found him such an apprentice, as knew well enough how to set up for himself. Watton.

This rule sets the painter at liberty; it teaches him, that he ought not to be subject himself servilely, and be bound like an apprentice to the rules of his art. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

TO APPRENTICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put out to a master as an apprentice.

Him portion'd maids, apprentic'd orphans blest,

The young who labour, and the old who rest. Pope's Epist.

APPRENTICEHOOD. n. f. [from apprentice.] The years of an apprentice's servitude.

Must I not serve a long apprenticehood

To foreign passages, and in the end,

Having my freedom, boast of nothing else

But that I was a journeyman to grief? Shakesp. Richard II.

APPRENTICESHIP. n. f. [from apprentice.] The years which an apprentice is to pass under a master.

In every art, the simplest that is, there is an apprenticeship necessary, before it can be expected one should work it in a fashionable piece. Digby on the Soul, Dedication.

Many rushed into the ministry, as being the only calling that they could profess, without serving any apprenticeship. South.

TO APPRIZE. v. a. [apprendre; part. appris, Fr.] To inform; to give the knowledge of any thing.

He considers the tendency of such a virtue or vice; he is well apprized, that the representation of some of these things may convince the understanding, and some may terrify the conscience. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

It is fit he be apprized of a few things, that may prevent his mistaking. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

But if appriz'd of the severe attack,

The country be shut up, lur'd by the scent

On church yard drear (inhuman to relate),

The disappointed prowlers fall. Thomson's Winter.

TO APPROACH. v. n. [approcher, Fr.]

1. To draw near locally.

'Tis time to look about: the powers of the kingdom approach apace. Shakesp. King Lear.

We suppose Ulysses approaching toward Polypheme.

Notes on Odyssey.

2. To draw near, as time.

Hark! I hear the sound of coaches,

The hour of attack approaches. Gay's Beggar's Opera.

3. To make a progress towards, in the figurative sense, as mentally.

He shall approach unto me: for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me? Jer. xxx. 21.

He was an admirable poet, and thought even to have approached Homer. Temple's Miscellanies.

To have knowledge in all the objects of contemplation, is what the mind can hardly attain unto; the instances are few of those who have, in any measure, approached towards it. Locke.

TO APPROACH. v. a. To bring near to. This sense is rather French than English.

This they will nimbly perform, if objected to the extremes, but slowly and not at all, if approached unto their roots. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 20.

By plunging paper thoroughly in weak spirit of wine, and approaching it to a candle, the spirituous parts will burn, without harming the paper. Boyle.

Approach'd, and looking underneath the sun,

He saw proud Arcite. Dryden's Fables.

APPROACH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of drawing near.

If I could bid the seventh welcome with so good heart as I can bid the other five farewell, I should be glad of his approach. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

'Tis with our souls

As with our eyes, that after a long darkness

Are dazzled at th' approach of sudden light. Denh. Sophy.

2. Access.

Honour hath in it the vantage ground to do good; the approach to kings and principal persons; and the raising of a man's own fortunes. Bacon's Essays.

TO APPROPINQUE. v. n. [appropinquo, Lat.] To approach; to draw near to.

The clotted blood within my hose,

That from my wounded body flows,

With mortal crisis doth portend

My days to appropinque an end. Hudibras.

APPROPRIABLE. adj. [from appropriare.] That which may be appropriated; that which may be restrained to something particular.

This conceit applied unto the original of man, and the beginning of the world, is more justly appropriable unto its end. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 1.

TO APPROPRIATE. v. a. [appropriare, Fr. approprio, low Lat.]

1. To consign to some particular use or person.

Things sanctified were thereby in such sort appropriated unto God, as that they might never afterwards again be made common. Hooker, b. v. § 20.

As for this spot of ground, this person, this thing, I have selected and appropriated, I have inclosed it to myself and my own use; and I will endure no sharer, no rival or companion in it. South.

Some they appropriated to the gods,

And some to publick, some to private ends. Roscommon.

Marks of honour are appropriated to the magistrate, that he might be invited to reverence himself. Atterbury.

2. To claim or exercise an exclusive right.

To themselves appropriating

The spirit of God, promis'd alike, and giv'n

To all believers. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

Why should people engross and appropriate the common benefits of fire, air, and water, to themselves? L'Estrange.

Every body else has an equal title to it; and therefore he cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the consent of all his fellow commoners, all mankind. Locke.

3. To make peculiar to something; to annex.

He need but be furnished with verses of sacred scripture; and his system, that has appropriated them to the orthodoxy of his church, makes them immediately irrefragable arguments.

Locke's Essay on St. Paul's Epistles.

We, by degrees, get ideas and names, and learn their appropriated connection one with another. Locke.

4. In law, to alienate a benefice. See APPROPRIATION.

Before Richard II. it was lawful to appropriate the whole fruits of a benefice to any abbey, the house finding one to serve the cure; that king redressed that horrid evil. Ayliffe's Parerg.

APPROPRIATE. adj. [from the verb.] Peculiar; consigned to some particular use or person.

He did institute a band of fifty archers, by the name of yeomen of his guard; and that it might be thought to be rather a matter of dignity, than any matter of diffidence appropriate to his own case, he made an ordinance not temporary, but to hold in succession for ever. Bacon's Henry VII.

The heathens themselves had an apprehension of the necessity of some appropriate acts of divine worship. Stillingfleet.

APPROPRIATION. n. f. [from appropriate.]

1. The application of something to a particular purpose.

The mind should have distinct ideas of the things, and retain the particular name, with its peculiar appropriation to that idea. Locke.

2. The claim of any thing as peculiar.

He doth nothing but talk of his horse, and make a great appropriation to his good parts, that he can shoe him himself. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

3. The fixing a particular signification to a word.

The name of faculty may, by an appropriation that disguises its true sense, palliate the absurdity. Locke.

4. In law, a severing of a benefice ecclesiastical to the proper and perpetual use of some religious house, or dean, and chapter, bishoprick, or college; because, as persons ordinarily have no right of fee simple, these, by reason of their perpetuity, are accounted owners of the fee simple; and therefore are called proprietors. To an appropriation, after the licence obtained of the king in chancery, the consent of the diocesan, patron, and incumbent, are necessary, if the church be full: but if the church be void, the diocesan and the patron, upon the king's licence, may conclude. Cowel.

APPROPRIATOR. n. f. [from appropriate.] He that is possessed of an appropriated benefice.

These appropriators, by reason of their perpetuities, are accounted owners of the fee simple; and therefore are called proprietors. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

APPROVABLE. adj. [from approve.] That which merits approbation.

The solid reason, or confirmed experience, of any men, is very approvable in what profession soever. Brown's Vulgar Err.

APPROVAL. n. f. [from approve.] Approbation: a word not much used.

There is a censor of justice and manners, without whose approval no capital sentences are to be executed. Temple.

APPROVANCE. n. f. [from approve.] Approbation: a word not much used.

Should she seem

Soft'ning the least approbance to bestow,

Their colours burnish, and, by hope inspir'd,

They brisk advance.

Thomson's Spring.

TO APPROVE. v. a. [approver, Fr. approbo, Lat.]

1. To like; to be pleased with.

There can be nothing possibly evil which God approveth, and that he approveth much more than he doth command. Hooker.

What power was that, whereby Medea saw,

And well approv'd, and prais'd the better course,

When her rebellious sense did so withdraw

Her feeble pow'rs, that she pursu'd the worse?

Davies.

2. To express liking.

It is looked upon as insolence for a man to set up his own opinion against that of some learned doctor, or otherwise approved writer. Locke.

3. To prove; to show; to justify.

His meaning was not, that Archimedes could simply in nothing be deceived; but that he had in such sort approved his skill, that he seemed worthy of credit for ever after, in matters appertaining to the science he was skilful in. Hooker, b. ii.

In religion,

What damned error, but some sober brow

Will bless it, and approve it with a text. Shak. M. of Venice.

I'm sorry

That he approves the common liar, Fame,

Who speaks him thus at Rome. Shak. Antony and Cleop.

Wouldst thou approve thy constancy? Approve

First thy obedience.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Refer all the actions of this short life to that state which will never end; and this will approve itself to be wisdom at the last, whatever the world judge of it now. Tillotson.

4. To experience.

Oh, 'tis the curse in love, and still approv'd,

When women cannot love, where they're belov'd.

Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

5. To make worthy of approbation.

The first care and concern must be to approve himself to God by righteousness, holiness, and purity. Rogers.

6. It has of before the object.

I shewed you a piece of black and white stuff, just sent from the dyer; which you were pleased to approve of, and be my customer for. Swift.

APPROVEMENT. n. f. [from approve.] Approbation; liking.

It is certain that at the first you were all of my opinion, and that I did nothing without your approvement. Hayward.

APPROVER. n. f. [from approve.]

1. He that approves.

2. He that makes trial.

Their discipline,

Now mingled with their courages, will make known

To their approvers, they are people such

As mend upon the world.

Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

3. In our common law, one that confessing felony of himself, appealeth or accuseth another, one or more, to be guilty of the same: and he is called so, because he must prove what he hath alleged in his appeal. Cowel.

APPROXIMATE. adj. [from ad, to, and proximus, near, Lat.] Near to.

These receive a quick conversion, containing approximate dispositions unto animation. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 21.

APPROXIMATION. n. f. [from approximate.]

1. Approach to any thing.

Unto the latitude of Capricorn, or the winter solstice, it had been a spring; for, unto that position, it had been in a middle point, and that of ascent or approximation. Brown's Vulg. Err.

The fiery region gains upon the inferiour elements; a necessary consequent of the sun's gradual approximation towards the earth. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Quadrupeds are better placed according to the degrees of their approximation to the human shape. Grew's Museum.

2. In science, a continual approach nearer still, and nearer to the quantity sought, without a possibility of ever arriving at it exactly.

APPULSE. n. f. [appulsus, Lat.] The act of striking against any thing.

An hectic fever is the innate heat kindled into a destructive fire, violently absorbing the radical moisture, through the appulse of saline steams. Harvey on Consumptions.

In vowels, the passage of the mouth is open and free, without any appulse of an organ of speech to another: but, in all consonants, there is an appulse of the organs. Holder.

TO APRICATE. v. n. [apricor, Lat.] To bask in the sun. Diët.

APRICITY. n. f. [apricitas, Lat.] Warmth of the sun; sunshine. Diët.

APRICOT, or APRICOCK. n. f. [from apricus, Lat. sunny.] A kind of wall fruit.

The ordinary sorts of this fruit cultivated in English gardens are, 1. The masculine apricock. 2. The orange apricock. 3. The Algier apricock. 4. The Roman apricock. 5. The Turkey apricock. 6. The transparent apricock. 7. The Breda apricock. 8. The Bruxelles apricock. They are generally propagated by budding them on plum stocks, and will readily take upon almost any sort of plum, provided the stock be free and thriving. Millar.

APRIL. n. f. [Aprilis, Lat. Avril, Fr.] The fourth month of the year, January counted first.

April is represented by a young man in green, with a garland of myrtle and hawthorn buds; in one hand primroses and violets, in the other the sign Taurus. Peacham on Drawing.

Men are April when they woo, December when they wed: Maids are May when they are maids, but the sky changes when they are wives. Shakespeare. As you like it.

APRON. n. f. [A word of uncertain etymology, but supposed by some to be contracted from afore one.] A cloth hung before, to keep the other dress clean.

Give us gold, good Timon: hast thou more?—

Hold up, you sluts,

Your aprons mountant.

Shakespeare. Timon.

The nobility think scorn to go in leather aprons. Shak. H. VI.

How might we see Falstaff, and not ourselves be seen?—

Put on two leather jerkins and aprons, and wait upon him at his table as drawers. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

In both these figures the vest is gathered up before them, like an apron, which you must suppose filled with fruits, as well as the cornucopiae. Addison on Medals.

APRON. [in gunnery.] A piece of lead which covers the touch-hole of a great gun.

APRON of a goose. The fat skin which covers the belly.

APRON-MAN. n. f. [from apron and man.] A man that wears an apron; a workman; an artificer.

You have made good work,

You and your apron-men, that stood so much

Upon the voice of occupation, and

The breath of garlick eaters.

Shakefp. Coriolanus.

APRONED. adj. [from apron.] Wearing an apron.

The cobbler apron'd, and the parson gown'd. Pope's Eff. on M.

APSIS. n. f. apsides, plural. [ἀψις.]

Is applied, in astronomy, to two points in the orbits of planets, in which they are at the greatest, and the least distance from the sun or earth. The higher apsis is more particularly denominated aphelion, or apogee; the lower, perihelion, or perigee.

Chambers.

If bodies revolve in orbits that are pretty near circles, and the apsides of these orbits be fixed, then the centripetal forces of those bodies will be reciprocally as the squares of the distances.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

APT. adj. [aptus, Lat.]

1. Fit.

This so eminent industry in making proselytes, more of that sex than of the other, groweth; for that they are deemed apter to serve as instruments in the cause. Apter they are through the eagerness of their affection; apter through a natural inclination unto piety; apter through sundry opportunities, &c. Finally, apter through a singular delight which they take in giving very large and particular intelligence how all near about them stand affected as concerning the same cause. Hooker, Pr.

2. Having a tendency to.

Things natural, as long as they keep those forms which give them their being, cannot possibly be apt or inclinable to do otherwise than they do.

Hooker.

3. Inclined to; led to.

You may make her you love, believe it; which, I warrant, she is apter to do, than confess she does.

Shak. As you like it.

Men are apt to think well of themselves, and of their nation, of their courage and strength.

Temple.

One, who has not these lights, is a stranger to what he reads, and apt to put a wrong interpretation upon it.

Addison. Spect.

Even those who are near the court, are apt to deduct wrong consequences, by reasoning upon the motives of actions.

Swift.

What we have always seen to be done in one manner, we are apt to imagine there was but that one way.

Bentl. Sermons.

4. Ready; quick; as, an apt wit.

I have a heart as little apt as yours,

But yet a brain that leads my use of anger

To better vantage.

Shakefp. Coriolanus.

5. Qualified for.

All that were strong and apt for war, even them the king of Babylon brought captive to Babylon.

2 Kings, xxiv. 16.

TO APT. v. a. [apto, Lat.]

1. To suit; to adapt.

We need a man that knows the several graces

Of history, and how to apt their places;

Where brevity, where splendour, and where height,

Where sweetness is required, and where weight.

B. Johnson.

2. To fit; to qualify.

The king is melancholy,

Apted for any ill impressions.

Denham's Sophy.

TO APTATE. v. a. [aptatum, Lat.] To make fit.

To aptate a planet, is to strengthen the planet in position of house and dignities to the greatest advantage, in order to bring about the desired end.

Bailey.

A'PTITUDE. n. f. [French.]

1. Fitness.

This evinces its perfect aptitude and fitness for the end to which it was aimed, the planting and nourishing all true virtue among men.

Decay of Piety.

2. Tendency.

In an abortion, the mother, besides the frustration of her hopes, acquires an aptitude to miscarry for the future.

Decay of Piety.

3. Disposition.

He that is about children, should study their nature and aptitudes, what turns they easily take, and what becomes them; what their native stock is, and what it is fit for.

Locke.

A'PTLY. adv. [from apt.]

1. Properly; with just connection, or correspondence; fitly.

That part

Was aptly fitted, and naturally perform'd.

But what the mass nutritious does divide?

What makes them aptly to the limbs adhere,

In youth encrease them, and in age repair?

Blackmore.

2. Justly; pertinently.

Irenæus very aptly remarks, that those nations, who were not possessors of the gospels, had the same accounts of our Saviour, which are in the Evangelists.

Addison on the Christian Relig.

3. Readily; acutely; as, he learned his business very aptly.

A'PTNESS. n. f. [from apt.]

1. Fitness; suitability.

The nature of every law must be judged of by the aptness of things therein prescribed, unto the same end.

Hooker.

There are antecedent and independent aptnesses in things; with respect to which, they are fit to be commanded or forbidden.

Norris's Miscel.

2. Disposition to any thing.

The nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptness to take all power from the people.

Shakefp. Coriolanus.

3. Quickness of apprehension; readiness to learn.

What should be the aptness of birds, in comparison of beasts, to imitate speech, may be enquired.

Bacon's Nat. History.

4. Tendency.

Some seeds of goodness give him a relish of such reflections, as have an aptness to improve the mind.

Addison. Spectator.

A'PTOTE. n. f. [of α and πρωτος.] A noun which is not declined with cases.

A'QUA. n. f. [Latin.] A word signifying water, very much used in chymical writings.

AQUA FORTIS. [Latin.] A corrosive liquor made by distilling purified nitre with calcined vitriol, or rectified oil of vitriol in a strong heat: the liquor, which rises in fumes red as blood, being collected, is the spirit of nitre or aqua fortis; which serves as a menstruum for dissolving of silver, and all other metals, except gold. But if sea salt, or sal ammoniac, be added to aqua fortis, it commences aqua regia, and will then dissolve no metal but gold. Aqua fortis is commonly held to have been invented about the year 1300; though others will have it to have been known in the time of Moses. It is serviceable to refiners, in separating silver from gold and copper; to the workers in mosaick, for staining and colouring their woods; to dyers, in their colours, particularly scarlet; and to other artists, for colouring bone and ivory. With aqua fortis bookbinders marble the covers of books, and diamond cutters separate diamonds from metalline powders. It is also used in etching copper or brass plates.

Chambers.

The dissolving of silver in aqua fortis, and gold in aqua regia, and not vice versa, would not be difficult to know.

Locke.

AQUA MARINA, of the Italian lapidaries, is of a sea or bluish green. This stone seems to me to be the beryllus of Pliny.

Woodward's Meth. of Fossils.

AQUA MIRABILIS. [Latin.] The wonderful water, is prepared of cloves, galangals, cubebs, mace, cardomums, nutmegs, ginger, and spirit of wine, digested twenty four hours, then distilled. It is a good and agreeable cordial.

AQUA REGIA, or AQUA REGALIS. [Latin.] An acid corrosive spirit or water, so called because it serves as a menstruum to dissolve gold, commonly esteemed the king of metals. Its basis, or essential ingredient, is common sea salt, the only salt in nature which will operate on gold. It is commonly prepared by mixing common sea salt, or sal ammoniac, or the spirit of them, with spirit of nitre, or common aqua fortis.

Chambers.

He adds to his complex idea of gold, that of fixedness or solubility in aqua regia.

Locke.

AQUA-VITÆ. [Latin.] It is commonly understood of what is otherwise called brandy, or spirit of wine, either simple or prepared with aromatics. But some appropriate the term brandy to what is procured from wine, or the grape; aqua-vitæ, to that drawn after the same manner from malt.

Chambers.

I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, parson Hugh the Welchman with my cheese, an Irishman with my aqua vitæ bottle, or a thief to walk with my ambling gelding, than my wife with herself.

Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

AQUA'TICK. adj. [aquaticus, Lat. from aqua, water.]

1. That which inhabits the water.

The vast variety of worms found in animals, as well terrestrial as aquatick, are taken into their bodies by meats and drinks.

Ray on Creation.

Brutes may be considered as either aerial, terrestrial, aquatick, or amphibious. Aquatick are those whose constant abode is upon the water.

Locke.

2. Applied to plants, that which grows in the water.

Flags, and such like aquaticks, are best destroyed by draining.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

A'QUATILE. adj. [aquatilis, Lat.] That which inhabits the water.

A'QUEDUCT. n. f. [aquæductus, Lat.] A conveyance made for carrying water from one place to another; made on uneven ground, to preserve the level of the water, and convey it by a canal. Some aqueducts are under ground, and others above it, supported by arches.

Among the remains of old Rome, the grandeur of the commonwealth shews itself chiefly in temples, highways, aqueducts, walls and bridges of the city.

Addison's Remarks on Italy.

Hither the rills of water are convey'd

In curious aqueducts, by nature laid

To carry all the humour.

Blackmore, Creation.

A'QUEOUS. adj. [from aqua, water; Lat.] Watery.

The vehement fire requisite to its fusion, forced away all the aqueous and fugitive moisture.

Ray on Creation.

A'QUEOUSNESS. n. f. [aqueositas, Lat.] Wateriness.

A'QUILINE. adj. [aquilinus, Lat. from aquila, an eagle.] Resembling an eagle; when applied to the nose, hooked.

His nose was aquiline, his eyes were blue,

Ruddy his lips, and fresh and fair his hue.

Dryden's Fables.

Gryps signifies some kind of eagle or vulture; from whence the epithet grypus for an hooked or aquiline nose. Br. Vul. Err.
AQUO'SE. adj. [from aqua, Lat.] Watery; having the qualities of water. Diët.

AQUO'SITY. n. f. [from aquose.] Wateriness. Diët.

A. R. anno regni; that is, the year of the reign: as, A. R. G. R.
 20. Anno regni Georgii regis vigesimo, in the twentieth year of the reign of king George.

A'RABLE. adj. [from aro, Lat. to plow.] Fit for the plough; fit for tillage; productive of corn.

His eyes he open'd, and beheld a field,

Part arable, and tilth; whereon were sheaves

New reap'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

'Tis good for arable, a glebe that asks

Tough teams of oxen, and laborious tasks. Dryden's Virgil.

Having but very little arable land, they are forced to fetch all their corn from foreign countries. Addison's Rem. on Italy.

ARACHNOIDES. n. f. [from αράχνη, a spider, and ειδος, form.]

1. One of the tunicks of the eye, so called from its resemblance to a cobweb.

As to the tunicks of the eye, many things might be taken notice of; the prodigious fineness of the arachnoides, the acute sense of the retina, &c. Derham's Physico-Theology.

2. It is also a fine thin transparent membrane, which, lying between the dura and the pia mater, is supposed to invest the whole substance of the brain. Chambers.

ARA'IGNEE. n. f. [French.] A term in fortification, which sometimes denotes a branch, return, or gallery of a mine. Diët.

ARA'NEOUS. adj. [from aranea, Lat. a cobweb.] Resembling a cobweb.

The curious araneous membrane of the eye constringeth and dilateth it, and so varieth its focus. Derham's Ph. Theol.

ARA'TION. n. f. [aratio, Lat.] The act or practice of plowing.

A'RATORY. adj. [from aro, Lat. to plow.] That which contributes to tillage. Diët.

A'RBALIST. n. f. [from arcus, a bow, and balista, an engine to throw stones.] A cross-bow.

It is reported by William Brito, that the arcubalista, or arbalist, was first shewed to the French by our king Richard the first, who was shortly after slain by a quarrel thereof. Camden.

ARBITER. n. f. [Lat.]

1. A judge appointed by the parties, to whose determination they voluntarily submit.

He would put himself into the king's hands, and make him arbiter of the peace. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. One who has the power of decision or regulation; a judge.

Next him, high arbiter,

Chance governs all. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii. l. 909.

His majesty, in this great conjuncture, seems to be generally allowed for the sole arbiter of the affairs of christendom. Temple.

A'RBITRABLE. adj. [from arbitror, Lat.] Arbitrary; depending upon the will.

The ordinary revenue of a parsonage is in land, called the glebe; in tythe, a set part of our goods rendered to God; in other offerings bestowed upon God by the people, either in such arbitrable proportion as their own devotion moveth them, or as the laws or customs of particular places do require them. Spelman.

ARBI'TRAMENT. n. f. [from arbitror, Lat.] Will; determination; choice.

Stand fast! to stand or fall,

Free in thine own arbitrament it stands,

Perfect within, no outward aid require;

And all temptation to transgress repel. Milton's Par. Lost.

A'RBITRARILY. adv. [from arbitrary.] With no other rule than the will; despotically; absolutely.

He governed arbitrarily, he was expelled; and came to the deserved end of all tyrants. Dryden's Virgil's Æneid, Pref.

ARBITRA'RIOUS. adj. [from arbitrarius, Lat.] Arbitrary; depending on the will.

These are standing and irrepealable truths, such as have no precarious existence, or arbitrarius dependance upon any will or understanding whatsoever. Norris's Miscellanies.

ARBITRA'RIOUSLY. adv. [from arbitrarius.] Arbitrarily; according to mere will and pleasure.

Where words are imposed arbitrarily, distorted from their common use, the mind must be led into misprision. Glanville.

A'RBITRARY. adj. [arbitrarius, Lat.]

1. Despotick; absolute; bound by no law; following the will without restraint. It is applied both to persons and things.

In vain the Tyrian queen resigns her life

For the chaste glory of a virtuous wife,

If lying bards may false amours rehearse,

And blast her name with arbitrary verse. Walsh.

Their regal tyrants shall with blushes hide

Their little lusts of arbitrary pride,

Nor bear to see their vassals ty'd. Prior.

2. Depending on no rule; capricious.

It may be perceived, with what insecurity we ascribe effects depending on the natural period of time, unto arbitrary calculations, and such as vary at pleasure. Brown's Vulgar Err.

VOL. I.

TO A'RBITRATE. v. a. [arbitror, Lat.]

1. To decide; to determine.

This might have been prevented, and made whole,

With very easy arguments of love,

Which now the manage of two kingdoms must

With fearful bloody issue arbitrate. Shakesp. King John.

2. To judge of.

Yet where an equal poise of hope and fear

Docs arbitrate th' event, my nature is

That I incline to hope, rather than fear. Milton's Comus.

TO A'RBITRATE. v. n. To give judgment.

It did arbitrate upon the several reports of sense, not like a drowsy judge, only hearing, but also directing their verdict. South.

A'RBITRARINESS. n. f. [from arbitrary.] Despoticalness; tyranny.

He that by harshness of nature, and arbitrariness of commands, uses his children like servants, is what they mean by a tyrant. Temple's Miscellanies.

ARBITRA'TION. n. f. [from arbitror, Lat.] The determination of a cause by a judge mutually agreed on by the parties contending.

ARBITRA'TOR. n. f. [from arbitrate.]

1. An extraordinary judge between party and party, chosen by their mutual consent. Cowel.

Be a good soldier, or upright trustee,

An arbitrator from corruption free. Dryd. Juv.

2. A governour; a president.

Though heav'n be shut,

And heav'n's high arbitrator sit secure

In his own strength, this place may be expos'd. M. Par. Lost.

3. He that has the power of acting by his own choice without limit or controul.

Another Blenheim or Ramillies will make the confederates masters of their own terms, and arbitrators of a peace. Addison on the State of the War.

4. The determiner; he that puts an end to any affair.

But now the arbitrator of despair,

Just death, kind umpire of man's miseries,

With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence. Sh. H. VI.

The end crowns all;

And that old common arbitrator, time,

Will one day end it. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

ARBI'TREMENT. n. f. [from arbitror, Lat.]

1. Decision; determination.

I know the knight is incensed against you, even to a mortal arbitrement; but nothing of the circumstance more. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

Aid was granted, and the quarrel brought to the arbitrement of the sword. Hayward.

2. Compromise.

Lukewarm persons think they may accommodate points of religion by middle ways, and witty reconcilements; as if they would make an arbitrement between God and man. Bacon's Ess.

A'RBORARY. adj. [arborarius, Lat.] Of or belonging to a tree. D.

A'RBORET. n. f. [arbor, Lat. a tree.] A small tree or shrub.

No arboret with painted blossoms drest,

And smelling sweet, but there it might be found,

To bud out fair, and her sweet smells throw all around. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 6.

Now hid, now seen,

Among thick woven arborets, and flow'rs, Imbroider'd on each bank. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

ARBO'REOUS. adj. [arbores, Lat.]

1. Belonging to trees.

2. A term in botany, to distinguish such funguses or mosses as grow upon trees, from those that grow on the ground. Quincy.

They speak properly, who make it an arbores excrescence, or rather a superplant bred of a viscous and superfluous lopp, which the tree itself cannot assimilate. Brown's Vulgar Err.

A'RBORIST. n. f. [arboriste, Fr. from arbor, a tree.] A naturalist who makes trees his study.

The nature of the mulberry, which the arborists observe to be long in the begetting his buds; but the cold seasons being past, he shoots them all out in a night. Howel's Vocal Forest.

A'RBOROUS. adj. [from arbor, Lat.] Belonging to a tree.

From under shady arborous roof

Soon as they forth were come to open fight

Of day-spring, and the sun. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.

A'RBOUR. n. f. [from arbor, Lat. a tree.] A bower; a place covered with green branches of trees.

Nay you shall see mine orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting. Shak. Henry IV.

Let us divide our labours: thou, where choice

Leads thee, or where most needs, whether to wind

The woodbine round this arbour, or direct

The clasping ivy where to climb. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

For noon-day's heat are closer arbours made,

And for fresh ev'ning air the op'ner glade. Dryd. State of Inn.

ARBOUR VINE. A species of bind weed; which see.

A'RBUSCLE. n. f. [arbuscula, Lat.] Any little shrub. Diët.

A'RBU'TE. n. f. [arbutus, Lat.]

Arbute, or strawberry tree, grows common in Ireland. It is difficult to be raised from the seeds, but may be propagated by layers. It grows to a goodly tree, endures our climate, unless the weather be very severe, and makes beautiful hedges.

Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.

Rough arbute slips into a hazel bough
Are oft ingrafted; and good apples grow
Out of a plain tree stock.

May's Virgil's Georg.

ARC. n. f. [arcus, Lat.]

1. A segment; a part of a circle; not more than a semicircle.

Their segments, or arcs, for the most part, exceeded not the third part of a circle.

Newton's Opticks.

2. An arch.

Load some vain church with old theatrick state,

Turn arcs of triumph to a garden gate;

Reverse your ornaments, and hang them all

On some patch'd dog-hole ek'd with ends of wall.

Pope.

Or call the winds through long arcades to roar,

Proud to catch hold at a Venetian door.

Pope's Epistles.

ARCA'NUM. n. f. in the plural arcana. A Latin word, signifying a secret.

ARCH. n. f. [arcus, Lat.]

1. Part of a circle, not more than the half.

The mind perceives, that an arch of a circle is less than the whole circle, as clearly as it does the idea of a circle.

Locke.

2. A building in form of a segment of a circle, used for bridges and other works.

Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tide,

As the recomfited through the gates.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Let Rome in Tiber melt, and the wide arch

Of the rais'd empire fall! here is my space.

Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

The royal squadron marches,

Erect triumphal arches

For Albion and Albanus:

Dryden's Albion.

3. The sky, or vault of heaven.

Hath nature given them eyes

To see this vaulted arch, and the rich cope

Of sea and land.

Shakesp. Cymbeline.

4. [from ἀρχῆς.] A chief: obsolete.

The noble duke, my master,

My worthy arch and patron comes to night.

Sh. King. Lear.

TO ARCH. v. a. [arcuo, Lat.]

1. To build arches.

The nations of the field and wood

Build on the wave, or arch beneath the sand.

Pope.

2. To cover with arches.

Gates of monarchs

Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through.

Sh. Cymbel.

The proud river which makes her bed at her feet, is arched over with such a curious pile of stones, that considering the rapid course of the deep stream that roars under it, it may well take place among the wonders of the world.

Hewel's Voc. For.

ARCH. adj. [from ἀρχῆς, chief.]

1. Chief; of the first class.

The tyrannous and bloody act is done;

The most arch deed of piteous massacre,

That ever yet this land was guilty of.

Shakesp. Richard III.

There is sprung up

An heretick, an arch one, Cranmer.

Shakesp. Henry VIII.

2. Wagging; mirthful; triflingly mischievous. This signification it seems to have gained, by being frequently applied to the boy most remarkable for his pranks; as the arch rogue, &c.

Eugenio set out from the same university, and about the same time with Corusades; he had the reputation of an arch lad at school.

Swift's Fates of Clergy.

ARCH, in composition, signifies chief, or of the first class, [from ἀρχῆς, or ἀρχῆς.] as, archangel, archbishop. It is pronounced variously with regard to the ch, which before a consonant sound as in cheese, as archdeacon; before a vowel like k, as archangel.

ARCHA'NGEL. n. f. [archangelus, Lat.] One of the highest order of angels.

His form had yet not left

All her original brightness, nor appear'd

Less than archangel ruin'd, and th' excess

Of glory obscur'd.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

'Tis sure th' archangel's trump I hear,

Nature's great passing-bell, the only call

Of gods that will be heard by all.

Norris's Miscellanies.

ARCHANGEL. n. f. [lamium, Lat.] The name of a plant, called also Dead nettle.

It hath a labiated flower of one leaf, whose upper lip is hollow like a spoon; but the under one divided into two segments, in the form of a heart, and both end in chaps brimmed and edged; out of the flower cup, which is fistulous and cut into segments, rises the pointal, fixed, like a nail, to the hinder part of the flower, with four embryos which become triangular seeds inclosed in a husk formed of the flower cup. The species are fourteen, and seven of them grow wild on dry banks, or under hedges, two sorts of which are used in medicine.

Millar.

ARCHANGE'LICK. adj. [from archangel.] Belonging to archangels:

He ceas'd, and th' archangelick pow'r prepar'd

For swift descent; with him the cohort bright

Of watchful cherubim.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

ARCHBE'ACON. n. f. [from arch and beacon.] The chief place of prospect, or of signal.

You shall win the top of the Cornish archbeacon Hainborough, which may for prospect compare with Rama in Palestina.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

ARCHBI'SHOP. n. f. [from arch and bishop.] A bishop of the first class, who superintends the conduct of other bishops his suffragans.

Cranmer is return'd with welcome,

Install'd lord archbishop of Canterbury.

Shakesp. Henry VIII.

The archbishop was the known architect of this new fabrick.

Clarendon.

ARCHBI'SHOPRICK. n. f. [from archbishop.] The state or jurisdiction of an archbishop.

'Tis the cardinal;

And merely to revenge him on the emperor,

For not bestowing on him, at his asking,

The archbishoprick of Toledo this is purpos'd:

Sh. H. VIII.

This excellent man, from the time of his promotion to the archbishoprick, underwent the envy and malice of men who agreed in nothing else.

Clarendon.

ARCHCHA'NTER. n. f. [from arch and chanter.] The chief chanter.

ARCHDE'ACON. n. f. [archidiaconus, Lat.] One that supplies the bishop's place and office in such matters as do belong to the episcopal function. The law styles him the bishop's vicar, or vicegerent.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

Least negligence might foist in abuses, an archdeacon was appointed to take account of their doings.

Carew's Surv. of Irel.

ARCHDE'ACONRY. n. f. [archidiaconatus, Lat.] The office or jurisdiction of an archdeacon.

It oweth subjection to the metropolitan of Canterbury, and hath one only archdeaconry.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

ARCHDE'ACONSHIP. n. f. [from archdeacon.] The office of an archdeacon.

ARCHDU'KE. n. f. [archidux, Lat.] A title given to some foreign princes, as of Austria and Tuscany.

Philip archduke of Austria, during his voyage from the Netherlands towards Spain, was weather-driven into Weymouth.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

ARCHDU'CHESS. n. f. [from arch and duchess.] A title given to the sister or daughter of the archduke of Austria, or to the wife of an archduke of Tuscany.

ARCH-PHILO'SOPHER. n. f. [from arch and philosopher.] Chief philosopher.

It is no improbable opinion therefore, which the arch-philosopher was of, that the chiefest person in every household was always as it were a king.

Hooker, b. i.

ARCH-PRE'LATE. n. f. [from arch and prelate.] Chief prelate.

May we not wonder, that a man of St. Basil's authority and quality, an arch-prelate in the house of God, should have his name far and wide called in question.

Hooker, b. v. § 42.

ARCH-PRE'SBYTER. n. f. [from arch and presbyter.] Chief presbyter.

As simple deacons are in subjection to presbyters, according to the canon law; so are also presbyters and arch-presbyters in subjection to these archdeacons.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

ARCH-PRI'EST. n. f. [from arch and priest.] Chief priest.

The word decanus was extended to an ecclesiastical dignity, which included the arch-priests.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

ARCHAIO'LOGY. n. f. [from ἀρχαῖος, ancient, and λόγος, a discourse.] A discourse on antiquity.

ARCHAIOLO'GICK. adj. [from archaiology.] Relating to a discourse on antiquity.

A'RCHAISM. n. f. [ἀρχαϊσμός.] An ancient phrase, or mode of expression.

I shall never use archaisms, like Milton.

Watts.

A'RCHED. participial adj. [from To arch.] Bent in the form of an arch.

I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond; thou hast the right arched bent of the brow.

Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

A'RCHER. n. f. [archer, Fr. from arcus, Lat. a bow.] He that shoots with a bow; he that carries a bow in battle.

Fight, gentlemen of England; fight, bold yeomen!

Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head:

Spur your proud horses hard.

Shakesp. Richard III.

This Cupid is no longer an archer, his glory shall be ours, for we are the only love-gods.

Shakesp. Much ado about Noth.

Thou frequent bring'st the smitten deer;

For seldom, archers say, thy arrows err.

Prior.

A'RCHERY. n. f. [from archer.]

1. The use of the bow.

Among the English artillery, archery challengeth the pre-eminence, as peculiar to our nation.

Camden's Remains.

2. The

2. The act of shooting with the bow.
Flower of this purple dye,
Hit with Cupid's archery,
Sink in apple of his eye !
Shakesf. Mids. Night's Dr.
3. The art of an archer.
Blest seraphims shall leave their quire,
And turn love's soldiers upon thee,
To exercise their archery.
Crawshaw's Steps to Temple.
- A'RCHES-COURT. n. f. [from arches and court.] The chief and most ancient consistory that belongs to the archbishop of Canterbury, for the debating of spiritual causes, so called from Bow-church in London, where it is kept, whose top is raised of stone-pillars, built arch-wise. The judge of this court is termed the dean of the arches, or official of the arches-court: dean of the arches, because with this office is commonly joined a peculiar jurisdiction of thirteen parishes in London, termed a deanery, being exempted from the authority of the bishop of London, and belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury; of which the parish of Bow is one. Some others say, that he was first called dean of the arches, because the official to the archbishop, the dean of the arches, was his substitute in his court; and by that means the names became confounded. The jurisdiction of this judge is ordinary, and extends through the whole province of Canterbury: so that, upon any appeal, he forthwith, and without any further examination of the cause, sends out his citation to the party appealed, and his inhibition to the judge from whom the appeal is made.
Cowell.
- A'RCHETYPE. n. f. [archetypum, Lat.] The original of which any resemblance is made.
Our souls, though they might have perceived images themselves by simple sense; yet it seems inconceivable, how they should apprehend their archetypes.
Glanville's Scepis Scientifica.
As a man, a tree, are the outward objects of our perception, and the outward archetypes or patterns of our ideas; so our sensations of hunger, cold, are also inward archetypes or patterns of our ideas. But the notions or pictures of these things, as they are in the mind, are the ideas.
Watts's Logick.
- A'RCHETYPAL. adj. [archetypus, Lat.] Original; being a pattern from which copies are made.
Through contemplation's opticks I have seen
Him who is fairer than the sons of men:
The source of good, the light archetypal.
Norris's Miscell.
- ARCHEUS. n. f. [probably from ἀρχεῖν.] A word by which Paracelsus seems to have meant a power that presides over the animal œconomy, distinct from the rational soul.
- ARCHIDIA'CONAL. adj. [from archidiaconus, Lat. an archdeacon.] Belonging to an archdeacon; as, this offence is liable to be censured in an archidiaconal visitation.
- ARCHIEPI'SCOPAL. adj. [from archiepiscopus, Lat. an archbishop.] Belonging to an archbishop; as, Canterbury is an archiepiscopal see; the suffragans are subject to archiepiscopal jurisdiction.
- A'RCHITECT. n. f. [architectus, Lat.]
1. A professor of the art of building.
The architect's glory consists in the designment and idea of the work; his ambition should be to make the form triumph over the matter.
Wotton.
  2. A contriver of a building; a builder.
The hasty multitude
Admiring enter'd, and the work some praise,
And some the architect: his hand was known
In heav'n, by many a tow'rd structure high,
Where scepter'd angels held their residence,
And sat as princes.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
  3. The contriver or former of any compound body.
This inconvenience the divine architect of the body obviated.
Ray on the Creation.
  4. The contriver of any thing.
An irreligious Moor,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes. Shak. Tit. Andron.
- ARCHITE'CTIVE. adj. [from architect.] That performs the work of architecture.
How could the bodies of many of them, particularly the last mentioned, be furnished with architective materials?
Derham's Physico-Theology.
- ARCHITECTO'NICK. adj. [from ἀρχεῖν, chief, and τέκτων, an artificer.] That which has the power or skill of an architect; that which can build or form any thing.
To say that some more fine part of either, or all the hypothetical principle, is the architect of this elaborate structure, is to give occasion to demand, what proportion of the tria prima afforded this architectonick spirit, and what agent made so skilful and happy a mixture.
Boyle's Scept. Chym.
- ARCHITE'CTURE. n. f. [architectura, Lat.]
1. The art or science of building.
Architecture is divided into civil architecture, called by way of eminence architecture; military architecture, or fortification; and naval architecture, which, besides building of ships and vessels, includes also ports, moles, docks, &c. Some think the Tyrians were the first improvers of architecture; but others contend, that the rules of this art were delivered by God himself to Solomon, from whom the Tyrians had their instruction, which they afterwards communicated to the Egyptians; these

- to the Grecians, and these again to the Romans. Under Augustus, architecture arrived to its greatest glory; but it afterwards dwindled by degrees, and at last fell with the western empire, in the fifth century, when the Visigoths destroyed all the most beautiful monuments of antiquity; and a new manner of building took its rise, called the Gothick, coarse, artless, and massive. Of the same kind was the Arabesk, Moorisk or Moorish architecture, brought from the South by the Moors and Saracens. The architects of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries, who had some knowledge of sculpture, seemed to make perfection consist altogether in the delicacy and multitude of ornaments, which they frequently bestowed on their buildings without any conduct or taste. In the two last centuries, the architects of Italy and France were wholly bent upon retrieving the primitive simplicity and beauty of ancient architecture, in which they did not fail of success. This art is divided into five orders; the Tuscan, Dorick, Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite; which took their rise from the different proportions that the different kinds of buildings rendered necessary, according to the bulk, strength, delicacy, richness, or simplicity required.
Chambers.
- Our fathers next in architecture skill'd,
Cities for use, and forts for safety build:
Then palaces and lofty domes arose,
These for devotion, and for pleasure those. Blackm. Creat.
2. The effect or performance of the science of building.
The formation of the first earth being a piece of divine architecture, ascribed to a particular providence. Burnet's Theory.
- A'RCHITRAVE. n. f. [from ἀρχή, chief, and trabs, Lat. a beam; because it is supposed to represent the principal beam in timber buildings.] That part of a column, or order of a column, which lies immediately upon the capital, and is the lowest member of the entablature. This member is different in the different orders; and, in building architrave doors and windows, the workman frequently follows his own fancy. The architrave is sometimes called the reason piece, or master beam, in timber buildings, as porticos, cloisters, &c. In chimnies it is called the mantle piece; and over jambs of doors, and lintels of windows, hyperthyron.
Builders Dict.
- The materials laid over this pillar were of wood; through the lightness whereof the architrave could not suffer, nor the column itself, being so substantial.
Wotton's Architecture.
- Westward a pompous frontispiece appear'd,
On Dorick pillars of white marble rear'd,
Crown'd with an architrave of antique mold,
And sculpture rising on the roughen'd gold. Pope's T. of F.
- A'RCHIVES. n. f. without a singular. [archiva, Lat.] The places where records or ancient writings are kept. It is perhaps sometimes used for the writings themselves.
Though we think our words vanish with the breath that utters them, yet they become records in God's court, and are laid up in his archives, as witnesses either for or against us.
Government of the Tongue, § 1.
- I shall now only look a little into the Mosaick archives, to observe what they furnish us with upon this subject. Woodward.
- A'RCHWISE. adv. [from arch and wise.] In the form of an arch.
The court of arches, so called ab arcuata ecclesia, or from Bow church in London, which is dedicated to the Virgin Mary, by reason of the steeple or clochier thereof, raised at the top with stone pillars in fashion of a bow bent archwise.
Ayliffe's Par.
- ARCI'TENENT. adj. [arcitenens, Lat.] Bow-bearing. Dict.
- ARCTA'TION. n. f. [from ἀρξω, to strengthen.] Strengthening; confinement to a narrower compass.
- A'RCTICK. n. f. [from Ἀρκτικός, the northern constellation.] Northern; lying under the Arctos, or bear. See ARTICK.
Ever during snows, perpetual shades
Of darkness, would congeal their livid blood,
Did not the arctick tract spontaneous yield
A cheering purple berry big with wine. Philips.
- A'RCTICK Circle. See CIRCLE.
- A'RCUATE. adj. [arcuatus, Lat.] Bent in the form of an arch.
The cause of the confusion in sounds, and the inconfusion of species visible, is, for that the sight worketh in right lines; but sounds that move in oblique and arcuate lines, must needs encounter and disturb the one the other. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- In the gullet, where it perforateth the midriff, the carneous fibres are inflected and arcuate.
Ray on Creation.
- A'RCUATILE. adj. [from arcuate.] Bent; inflected. Dict.
- ARCUA'TION. n. f. [from arcuate.]
1. The act of bending any thing; incurvation.
  2. The state of being bent; curvity, or crookedness.
  3. [In gardening.] The method of raising by layers such trees as cannot be raised from seed, or that bear no seed, as the elm, lime, alder, willow; and is so called from bending down to the ground the branches which spring from the offsets or stools after they are planted.
Chambers.
- A'RCUATURE. n. f. [arcuatura, low Latin.] The bending or curvature of an arch. Dict.
- ARCUBA'LISTER. n. f. [from arcus, a bow, and balista, an engine.] A crossbow man.
King John was espied by a very good arcubalist, who said, that he would soon dispatch the cruel tyrant. God forbid, vile varlet,

ARE

varlet, quoth the earl, that we should procure the death of the holy one of God. Camden's Remains.

ARD. [Saxon.] Signifies natural disposition; as, Goddard is a divine temper; Reinard, a sincere temper; Giffard, a bountiful and liberal disposition; Bernard, filial affection, &c. Gibson's Camden.

A'RDENCY. n. f. [from ardent.] Ardour; eagerness; warmth of affection.

Accepted they shall be, if qualified with humility, and ardency, and perseverance, so far as concerns the end immediate to them. Hammond's Pract. Catechism.

The ineffable happiness of our dear Redeemer must needs bring an increase to ours, commensurate to the ardency of our love for him. Boyle.

ARDENT. adj. [ardens, Lat. burning.]

1. Hot; burning; fiery.

Chymists observe, that vegetables, as lavender, rue, marjoram, &c. distilled before fermentation, yield oils without any burning spirits; but, after fermentation, yield ardent spirits without oils; which shews, that their oil is, by fermentation, converted into spirit. Newton's Opticks.

2. Fierce; vehement.

A knight of swarthy face,
High on a cole-black steed pursued the chace;
With flashing flames his ardent eyes were filled. Dryd. Fab.

3. Passionate; affectionate: used generally of desire.

Another nymph with fatal pow'r may rise,
To damp the sinking beams of Cælia's eyes;
With haughty pride may hear her charms confess,
And scorn the ardent vows that I have blest. Prior.

A'RDENTLY. adv. [from ardent.] Eagerly; affectionately.
With true zeal may our hearts be most ardently inflamed to our religion. Sprat's Sermons.

A'RDOUR. n. f. [ardor, Lat. heat.]

1. Heat.

2. Heat of affection, as love, desire, courage.

Joy, like a ray of the sun, reflects with a greater ardour and quickness, when it rebounds upon a man from the breast of his friend. South.

The soldiers shout around with gen'rous rage;
He prais'd their ardour, inly pleas'd to see His host. Dryden's Fables.

Unmov'd the mind of Ithacus remain'd,
And the vain ardours of our love restrain'd. Pope's Odyssey.

3. The person ardent or bright. This is only used by Milton.

Nor delay'd the winged faint,
After his charge receiv'd; but from among Thousand celestial ardours, where he stood
Veil'd with his gorgeous wings, up-springing light, Flew thro' the midst of heav'n. Paradise Lost, b. v.

ARDU'ITY. n. f. [from arduous.] Height; difficulty. Dict.

A'RDUOUS. adj. [arduus, Lat.]

1. Lofty; hard to climb.

High on Parnassus' top her sons she show'd,
And pointed out those arduous paths they trod. Pope.

2. Difficult.

It was a means to bring him up in the school of arts and policy, and so to fit him for that great and arduous employment that God designed him to. South.

A'RDUOUSNESS. n. f. [from arduous.] Height; difficulty.

ARE. The third person plural of the present tense of the verb to be; as, young men are rash, old are cautious.

ARE, or Alamire. The lowest note but one in Guido's scale of musick.

Gamut I am, the ground of all accord,
Are to plead Hortensio's passion;
B mi Bianca take him for thy lord,
C faut, that loves with all affection. Shakesp. Tam. Shrew.

A'REA. n. f. [Latin.]

1. The surface contained between any lines or boundaries.

The area of a triangle is found by knowing the height and the base. Watts's Logick.

2. Any open surface, as the floor of a room; the open part of a church; the vacant part or stage of an amphitheatre. An inclosed place, as lifts, or a bowling-green, or grass-plot.

Let us conceive a floor or area of goodly length, with the breadth somewhat more than half the longitude. Wotton.

The Alban lake is of an oval figure, and, by reason of the high mountains that encompass it, looks like the area of some vast amphitheatre. Addison on Italy.

In areas vary'd with Mosaic art,

Some whirl the disk, and some the jav'lin dart. Pope's Odyssey.

TO ARE'AD, or ARE'ED. v. a. [areban, Sax. to counsel.] To advise; to direct.

Knights and ladies gentle deeds,
Whose praises having slept in silence long,
Me, all too meane, the sacred muse areeds
To blazon broad. Fairy Queen, b. i.

But mark what I aread thee now: avant,
Fly thither whence thou fled'st! If from this hour
Within these hallow'd limits thou appear,
Back to th' infernal pit I drag thee chain'd. Paradise Lost.

AREFA'CTION. n. f. [arefacio, Lat. to dry.] The state of growing dry; the act of drying.

From them, and their motions, principally proceed arefaction, and most of the effects of nature. Bacon's Nat. History.

TO A'REFY. v. a. [arefacio, Lat. to dry.] To dry; to exhale moisture.

Heat drieth bodies that do easily expire, as parchment, leaves, roots, clay, &c. and so doth time or age arefy, as in the same bodies, &c. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 294.

ARENA'CEOUS. adj. [arena, Lat. sand.] Sandy; having the qualities of sand.

A piece of the stone of the same mines, of a yellowish brown colour, an arenaceous friable substance, and with some white spar mixed with it. Woodward on Fossils.

ARENA'TION. n. f. [from arena, Lat. sand.] Is used by some physicians for a sort of dry bath, when the patient sits with his feet upon hot sand. Dict.

ARENO'SE. adj. [from arena, Lat.] Sandy; full of sand. Dict.

ARE'NULOUS. adj. [from arenula, Lat. sand.] Full of small sand; gravelly. Dict.

AREO'TICK. adj. [ἀραιωτική.] Such medicines as open the pores of the skin, so that the morbidick matter may be carried off by sweat, or insensible perspiration. Dict.

ARETO'LOGY. n. f. [from ἀρετή, virtue, and λέγω, to discourse.] That part of moral philosophy which treats of virtue, its nature, and the means of arriving at it. Dict.

A'RGAL. n. f. Hard lees sticking to the sides of wine vessels, more commonly called tartar. Dict.

A'RGENT. adj. [from argentum, Lat. silver.]

1. The white colour used in the coats of gentlemen, knights, and baronets, supposed to be the representation of that metal.

Rinaldo flings

As swift as fiery light'ning kindled new,

His argent eagle with her silver wings

In field of azure, fair Erminia knew. Fairfax, b. iii.

In an argent field, the god of war

Was drawn triumphant on his iron car. Dryden's Fables.

2. Silver; bright like silver.

Those argent fields more likely habitants,

Translated faints, or middle spirits hold,

Betwixt th' angelical and human kind. Milton.

Or ask of yonder argent fields above,

Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove. Pope's Ess. on Man.

ARGENTA'TION. n. f. [from argentum, Lat. silver.] An overlaying with silver. Dict.

A'RGENTINE. adj. [argentum, Fr.] Sounding like silver. Dict.

A'RGIL. n. f. [argilla, Lat.] Potters clay; a fat soft kind of earth of which vessels are made.

ARGILLA'CEOUS. adj. [from argil.] Clayey; partaking of the nature of argil; consisting of argil, or potter's clay.

ARGI'LOUS. adj. [from argil.] Consisting of clay; clayish; containing clay.

Albuquerque derives this redness from the sand and argillous earth at the bottom. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi.

A'RGOSY. n. f. [derived by Pope from Argo, the name of Jason's ship.] A large vessel for merchandise; a carrack.

Your mind is tossing on the ocean;

There where your argosies with portly sail,

Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,

Or as it were the pageants of the sea

Do overpeer the petty traffickers. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

TO ARGUE. v. n. [arguo, Lat.]

1. To reason; to offer reasons.

I know your majesty has always lov'd her

So dear in heart, not to deny her what

A woman of less place might ask by law;

Scholars allow'd freely to argue for her. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

Publick arguing oft serves not only to exasperate the minds, but to whet the wits of hereticks. Decay of Piety.

An idea of motion, not passing on, would perplex any one, who should argue from such an idea. Locke.

2. To persuade by argument.

It is a sort of poetical logick which I would make use of, to argue you into a protection of this play. Congr. Ded. to Old Bat.

3. To dispute; with the particles with or against before the opponent, and against before the thing opposed.

Why do christians, of several persuasions, so fiercely argue against the salvability of each other. Decay of Piety.

He that by often arguing against his own sense, imposes falsehoods on others, is not far from believing himself. Locke.

I do not see how they can argue with any one, without setting down strict boundaries. Locke.

TO ARGUE. v. a.

1. To prove any thing by argument.

If the world's age and death be argued well,

By the sun's fall, which now toward's earth doth bend,

Then we might fear that virtue, since she fell

So low as woman, should be near her end. Donne.

2. To debate any question; as, to argue a cause.

3. To prove, as an argument.

So many laws argue so many sins

Among them: how can God with such reside? Parad. Lost.

It

It argues distemper of the mind as well as of the body, when a man is continually tossing from one side to the other. South.

This argues a virtue and disposition in those sides of the rays, which answers to that virtue and disposition of the crystal. Newton's Opticks.

4. To charge with, as a crime; with of.

I have pleaded guilty to all thoughts and expressions of mine, which can be truly argued of obscenity, profaneness, or immorality, and retract them. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

The accidents are not the same, which would have argued him of a servile copying, and total barrenness of invention; yet the seas were the same. Dryden's Fab. Pref.

A'RGUER. n. f. [from argue.] A reasoner; a disputer; a controvertist.

Men are ashamed to be proselytes to a weak arguer, as thinking they must part with their reputation as well as their sin. Decay of Piety.

A'RGUMENT. n. f. [argumentum, Lat.]

1. A reason alleged for or against any thing.

We sometimes see, on our theatres, vice rewarded, at least unpunished; yet it ought not to be an argument against the art. Dryden's Pref. to Tyrannick Love.

When any thing is proved by as good arguments as that thing is capable of, supposing it were; we ought not in reason to make any doubt of the existence of that thing. Tillotson's Preface.

And thus we have our author's two great and only arguments to prove, that heirs are lords over their brethren. Locke.

2. The subject of any discourse or writing.

That she who ev'n but now was your best object,
Your praise's argument, balm of your age,
Dearest and best. Shakesp. King Lear.

To the height of this great argument

I may assert eternal providence,
And justify the ways of God to man. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.
Sad task! yet argument

Not less, but more heroic than the wrath
Of stern Achilles. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

A much longer discourse my argument requires; your merciful dispositions a much shorter. Sprat's Sermons.

3. The contents of any work summed up by way of abstract.

The argument of the work, that is, its principal action, the œconomy and disposition of it, are the things which distinguish copies from originals. Dryden's Æn. Pref.

4. A controversy.

This day, in argument upon a case,

Some words there grew 'twixt Somerset and me. Sh. H. VI.
If the idea be not agreed on betwixt the speaker and hearer, the argument is not about things, but names. Locke.

It was much like an argument that fell out last night, where each of us fell in praise of our country mistresses. Sh. Cymbeline.

5. It has sometimes the particle to before the thing to be proved, but generally for.

The best moral argument to patience, in my opinion, is the advantage of patience itself. Tillotson.

This, before that revelation had enlightened the world, was the very best argument for a future state. Atterbury's Sermons.

6. [In astronomy.] An arch by which we seek another unknown arch, proportional to the first. Chambers.

ARGUMENTAL. adj. [from argument.] Belonging to argument; reasoning.

Afflicted sense thou kindly dost set free,

Oppress'd with argumental tyranny,
And routed reason finds a safe retreat in thee. Pope.

ARGUMENTA'TION. n. f. [from argument.] Reasoning; the act of reasoning.

Argumentation is that operation of the mind, whereby we infer one proposition from two or more propositions premised. Or it is the drawing a conclusion, which before was unknown, or doubtful, from some propositions more known and evident; so when we have judged that matter cannot think, and that the mind of man doth think, we conclude, that therefore the mind of man is not matter. Watts's Logick.

I suppose it is no ill topick of argumentation, to shew the prevalence of contempt, by the contrary influences of respect. South.

His thoughts must be masculine, full of argumentation, and that sufficiently warm. Dryden.

It is certain, that the whole course of his argumentation comes 'to nothing. Addison. Freeholder, N° 31.

ARGUMENTATIVE. adj. [from argument.] Consisting of argument; containing argument.

This omission, considering the bounds within which the argumentative part of my discourse was confined, I could not avoid. Atterb. Pref. to his Sermons.

ARGUTA'TION. n. f. [from arguo, Lat.] A proving by argument; a disputing for and against. Dict.

A'RGUTE. adj. [arguto, Ital. argutus, Lat.]

1. Subtile; witty; sharp.

2. Shrill.

A'RIA. n. f. [Ital. in musick.] An air, song, or tune.

A'RID. adj. [aridus, Lat. dry.] Dry; parched up.

My complexion is become adust, and my body arid, by visiting lands. Arbutnot and Pope's M. Scrib.

VOL. I.

His harden'd fingers deck the gaudy spring,

Without him summer were an arid waste. Thomf. Autumn.

ARI'DITY. n. f. [from arid.]

1. Dryness; ficcidity.

Salt taken in great quantities will reduce an animal body to the great extremity of aridity, or dryness. Arbutn. on Aliments.

2. In the theological sense, a kind of insensibility in devotion, contrary to melting.

Strike my soul with lively apprehensions of thy excellencies, to bear up my spirit under the greatest aridities and dejections, with the delightful prospect of thy glories. Norris.

A'RIES. n. f. [Lat.] The Ram; one of the twelve signs of the zodiack.

At last from Aries rolls the bounteous sun,

And the bright Bull receives him. Thomson's Spring.

To ARI'ETATE. v. n. [arieto, Lat.]

1. To butt like a ram.

2. To strike in imitation of the blows which rams give with their heads.

ARIETA'TION. n. f. [from arietate.]

1. The act of butting like a ram.

2. The act of battering with an engine called a ram.

The strength of the percussion, wherein ordnance do exceed all arietations and ancient inventions. Bacon's Essays.

3. The act of striking, or conflicting in general.

Now those heterogeneous atoms, by themselves, hit so exactly into their proper residence, in the midst of such tumultuary motions, and arietations of other particles. Glanv. Sceptis.

ARIETTA. n. f. [Ital. in musick.] A short air, song, or tune.

ARI'GHT. adv. [from a and right.]

1. Rightly; without mental error.

How him I lov'd, and love with all my might;

So thought I eke of him, and think I thought aright. F. 2.

These were thy thoughts, and thou could'st judge aright,

Till interest made a jaundice in thy sight. Dryden's Fables.

The motions of the tongue are so easy, and so subtile, that you can hardly conceive or distinguish them aright. Holder.

2. Rightly; without crime.

A generation that set not their heart aright. Pf. lxxviii. 8.

3. Rightly; without failing of the end designed.

Guardian of groves, and goddess of the night,

Fair queen, he said, direct my dart aright. Dryden's Æneid.

ARIOLA'TION, or HARIOLA'TION. n. f. [bariolus, Lat. a soothsayer.] Soothsaying; vaticination.

The priests of elder time have deluded their apprehensions with ariolation, soothsaying, and such oblique idolatries. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 3.

ARIO'SO. n. f. [Ital. in musick.] The movement of a common air, song, or tune. Dict.

To ARI'SE. v. n. pret. arose, particip. arisen. [from a and rise.]

1. To mount upward as the sun.

He rose, and, looking up, beheld the skies

With purple blushing, and the day arise. Dryden's Æneid.

2. To get up as from sleep, or from rest.

So Esdras arose up, and said unto them, ye have transgressed the law. 1 Esd. ix. 7.

How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard; when wilt thou arise out of thy sleep? Prov. vi. 9.

3. To come into view, as from obscurity.

There shall arise false Christs and false prophets. Matt. xxiv.

4. To revive from death.

Thy dead men shall live, together with my body shall they arise: awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust. Isaiah xxvi. 19.

5. To proceed, or have its original.

They which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen, travelled as far as Phœnice. Acts xi. 19.

I know not what mischief may arise hereafter from the example of such an innovation. Dryden.

6. To enter upon a new station.

Another Mary then arose,

And did rig'rous laws impose. Cowley.

7. To commence hostility.

And when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him. 1 Sam. xvii. 35.

For the various senses of this word, see RISE.

ARISTO'CRACY. n. f. [ἀριστος, greatest, and κρατία, to govern.] That form of government which places the supreme power in the nobles, without a king, and exclusively of the people.

The aristocracy of Venice hath admitted so many abuses through the degeneracy of the nobles, that the period of its duration seems to approach. Swift.

ARISTOCRA'TICAL, or ARISTOCRA'TICK. adj. [from aristocracy.] Relating to aristocracy; including a form of government by the nobles.

Ockham distinguishes, that the papacy, or ecclesiastical monarchy, may be changed in an extraordinary manner, for some time, into an aristocratical form of government. Ayliffe's Par.

ARISTOCRA'TICALNESS. n. f. [from aristocratical.] An aristocratical state. Dict.

ARI'HMANCY. n. f. [from ἀριθμός, number, and μαντεία, divination.] A foretelling future events by numbers. Dict.

ARITHMETICAL adj. [from arithmetick.] According to the rules or method of arithmetick.

The principles of bodies may be infinitely small, not only beyond all naked or assisted sense, but beyond all arithmetical operation or conception. Grew's Cosm. Sacra.

The squares of the diameters of these rings, made by any prismatic colour, were in arithmetical progression, as in the fifth observation. Newton's Opticks.

ARITHMETICALLY adv. [from arithmetical.] In an arithmetical manner; according to the principles of arithmetick.

Though the fifth part of a xestes being a simple fraction, and arithmetically regular, it is yet no proper part of that measure. Arbuthnot on Coins.

ARITHMETICIAN n. f. [from arithmetick.] A master of the art of numbers.

A man had need be a good arithmetician, to understand this author's works. His description runs on like a multiplication table. Addison on ancient Medals.

ARITHMETICK n. f. [ἀριθμός, number, and μέτρον, to measure.] The science of numbers; the art of computation.

We have very little intelligence about the origin and invention of arithmetick; but probably it must have taken its rise from the introduction of commerce, and consequently be of Tyrian invention. From Asia it passed into Egypt, where it was greatly cultivated. From thence it was transmitted to the Greeks, who conveyed it to the Romans with additional improvements. But, from some treatises of the ancients remaining on this subject, it appears that their arithmetick was much inferior to that of the moderns. Chambers.

On fair ground I could beat forty of them;

But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetick. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The christian religion, according to the Apostle's arithmetick, hath but these three parts of it; sobriety, justice, religion. Taylor.

ARK n. f. [arca, Lat. a chest.]

1. A vessel to swim upon the water, usually applied to that in which Noah was preserved from the universal deluge.

Make thee an ark of gopher wood; rooms shalt thou make in the ark, and shalt pitch it within and without. Gen. vi. 14.

The one just man alive, by his command,

Shall build a wondrous ark, as thou beheld'st,

To save himself and household, from amidst

A world devote to universal wreck. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

2. The repository of the covenant of God with the Jews.

This coffer was of shittim wood, covered with plates or leaves of gold, being two cubits and an half in length, a cubit and a half wide, and a cubit and a half high. It had two rings of gold on each side, through which the staves were put for carrying it. Upon the top of it was a kind of gold crown all around it, and two cherubim were fastened to the cover. It contained the two tables of stone, written by the hand of God. Calmet.

ARM n. f. [capm, copm, Sax.]

1. The limb which reaches from the hand to the shoulder.

If I have lift up my hand against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate, then let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone. Job, xxxi. 21.

Like helpless friends, who view from shore

The labouring ship, and hear the tempest roar,

So stood they with their arms across. Dryden.

2. The bough of a tree.

The trees spread out their arms to shade her face,

But she on elbow lean'd. Sidney.

Hide me, ye forests, in your closest bowers,

Where the tall oak his spreading arms entwines,

And with the beech a mutual shade combines. Gay.

3. An inlet of water from the sea.

Full in the centre of the sacred wood,

An arm ariseth of the Stygian flood. Dryden's Æneid.

We have yet seen but an arm of this sea of beauty. Norris.

4. Power; might. In this sense is used the secular arm, &c.

Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord. Jer. xvii. 5.

O God, thy arm was here!

And not to us, but to thy arm alone,

Ascribe we all. Shakesp. Hen. V.

ARM'S END n. f. A phrase taken from boxing, in which the weaker man may overcome the stronger, if he can keep him from closing.

Such a one as can keep him at arm's end, need never wish for a better companion. Sidney's Arcad.

For my sake be comfortable, hold death awhile at the arm's end. Shakesp. As you like it.

To ARM. v. a. [armo, Lat.]

1. To furnish with armour of defence, or weapons of offence.

And when Abram heard that his brother was taken captive, he armed his trained servants, born in his own house, three hundred and eighteen, and pursued them unto Dan. Gen. xiv. 14.

True conscious honour is to feel no sin;

He's arm'd without, that's innocent within. Pope.

2. To plate with any thing that may add strength.

Their wounded steeds

Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters. Sh. H. V.

3. To furnish; to fit up; as, to arm a loadstone, is to case it with iron.

You must arm your hook with the line in the inside of it.

Walton's Angler.

Having wasted the callus, I left off those tents, and dressed it with others armed with digestives. Wise man's Surgery.

To ARM. v. n.

1. To take arms.

Think we king Harry strong;

And, princes, look you strongly arm to meet him. Sh. H. V.

2. To provide against.

His servant, throughly arm'd against such coverture,

Reported unto all, that he was sure

A noble gentleman of high regard. Spenser's Hubb. Tale.

ARMADA n. f. [Span. a fleet of war.] An armament for sea; a fleet of war. It is often erroneously spelt armado.

In all the mid-earth seas was left no road

Wherein the pagan his bold head untwines,

Spread was the huge armado wide and broad,

From Venice, Genes, and towns which them confines.

Fairfax, b. i. stanza 79.

So by a roaring tempest on the flood,

A whole armado of collected sail

Is scatter'd and disjoin'd from fellowship. Shak. King John.

At length resolv'd t' assert the wat'ry ball,

He in himself did whole armados bring:

Him aged seamen might their master call,

And choose for general, were he not their king. Dryden.

ARMADILLO n. f. [Spanish.] A four-footed animal of Brasil, as big as a cat, with a snout like a hog, a tail like a lizard, and feet like a hedge-hog. He is armed all over with hard scales like armour, whence he takes his name, and retires under them like the tortoise. He lives in holes, or in the water, being of the amphibious kind. His scales are of a bony or cartilaginous substance; but they are easily pierced. This animal hides himself a third part of the year under ground. He feeds upon roots, sugar-canes, fruits, and poultry. When he is caught, he draws up his feet and head to his belly, and rolls himself up in a ball, which the strongest hand cannot open; and he must be brought near the fire before he will shew his nose. His flesh is white, fat, tender, and more delicate than that of a sucking pig.

Trevoux.

ARMAMENT n. f. [armamentum, Lat.] A force equipped for war; generally used of a naval force.

ARMAMENTARY n. f. [armamentarium, Lat.] An armoury; a magazine or arsenal of warlike implements. Dict.

ARMATURE n. f. [armatura, Lat.] Armour; something to defend the body from hurt.

Others should be armed with hard shells; others with prickles; the rest that have no such armature, should be endued with great swiftness and perniciousity. Ray on the Creation.

ARMED adj. [in heraldry.] Is used in respect of beasts and birds of prey, when their teeth, horns, feet, beak, talons, or tusks, are of a different colour from the rest; as, he bears a cock or a falcon armed, or. Chambers.

ARMED Chair n. f. [from armed and chair.] An elbow chair, or a chair with rests for the arms.

ARME'NIAN Bole n. f. A fatty medicinal kind of earth, of a pale reddish colour, of considerable use as an absorbent, astringent, and vulnerary; which takes its name from the country of Armenia, whence it is chiefly brought.

ARMENIAN Stone n. f. A mineral stone or earth of a blue colour, spotted with green, black and yellow; anciently brought only from Armenia, but now found in Germany, and the Tyrol. It bears a near resemblance to lapis lazuli, from which it seems only to differ in degree of maturity; it being softer, and speckled with green instead of gold. Boerhaave ranks it among semimetals; and supposes it composed of a metal and earth. Woodward says, it owes its colour to an admixture of copper. Its chief use is in mosaick work, though it has some place also in physick. Chambers.

ARMENTAL } adj. [armentalis, or armentinus, Lat.] Belong-

ARMENTINE } ing to a drove or herd of cattle. Dict.

ARMENTO'SE adj. [armentosus, Lat.] Abounding with cattle. D.

1. A little arm; as, an armlet of the sea.

2. A piece of armour for the arm.

3. A bracelet for the arm.

And, when she takes thy hand, and doth seem kind,
Doth search what rings and armlets she can find. Donne.

ARMON'ACK. n. f. [erroneously so written for ammoniac.] A sort of volatile salt. See AMMONIAC.

A'RMORER. n. f. [armorier, Fr.]

1. He that makes armour, or weapons.

Now thrive the armorers, and honour's thought Reigns solely in the breast of every man. Shakefp. Henry V.

The armorers make their steel more tough and pliant, by asperision of water and juice of herbs. Bacon's Phys. Remains.

The whole division that to Mars pertains,
All trades of death that deal in steel for gains
Were there: The butcher, armorers, and smith,
Who forges sharpen'd fauchions, or the scythe. Dryd. Fab.

When arm'ers temper in the ford
The keen-edg'd pole-ax, or the shining sword,
The red-hot metal hisses in the lake. Pope's Odyssey, b. ix.

2. He that dresses another in armour.

The armorers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakefp. Henry V.

The morning he was to join battle with Harold, his armorers put on his backpiece before, and his breastplate behind. Cambd.

ARMO'RIAL. adj. [armorial, Fr.] Belonging to the arms or escutcheon of a family, as armorial.

A'RMORY. n. f. [from armour.]

1. The place in which arms are repositied for use.

The sword

Of Michael, from the armory of God,
Was giv'n him temper'd so, that neither keen,
Nor solid, might resist that edge. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.

With plain heroick magnitude of mind,
And celestial vigour arm'd,
Their armories and magazines contemns. Sampson Agonist.

Let a man consider these virtues, with the contrary sins, and then, as out of a full armory, or magazine, let him furnish his conscience with texts of scripture. South.

2. Armour; arms of defence.

Nigh at hand

Celestial armory, shields, helm-, and spears, Hung high, with diamond flaming, and with gold. Par. Lost.

From young Iulus head

A lambent flame arose, which gently spread
Around his brows, and on his temples fed. Dryden's Æn.

TO ARO'USE. v. a. [from a and rouse.]

1. To wake from sleep.

2. To raise up; to excite.

But absent, what fantastick woes arous'd
Rage in each thought, by restless musing fed,
Chill the warm cheek, and blast the bloom of life. Thomson.

ARO'W. adv. [from a and row.] In a row; with the breasts all bearing against the same line.

Then some green gowns are by the lasses worn
In chafest plays, till home they walk arow. Sidney.

But with a pace more sober and more slow,
And twenty, rank in rank, they rode arow. Dryden's Fab.

ARO'YNT. adv. [a word of uncertain etymology, but very ancient use.] Be gone; away: a word of expulsion, or avoiding.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold,
He met the night-mare, and her name told,
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,

And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right. Shak. King Lear.

A'ROQUEBUSE. n. f. [Fr. spelt falsely harquebuse.] A hand gun, It seems to have anciently meant much the same as our carbine, or fusée.

A harquebuse, or ordnance, will be farther heard from the mouth of the piece, than backwards or on the sides.

Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 204.

ARQUE.

ARQUEBUSIER. n. f. [from arquebuse.] A soldier armed with an arquebuse.

He compassed them in with fifteen thousand arquebusiers, whom he had brought with him well appointed.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

ARRA'CK, or ARA'CK. n. f. A spirituous liquor imported from the East Indies, used by way of dram and in punch. The word arack is an Indian name for strong waters of all kinds; for they call our spirits and brandy English arack. But what we understand by the name arack, is really no other than a spirit procured by distillation from a vegetable juice called toddy, which flows by incision out of the cocoa-nut tree. There are divers kinds of it; single, double, and treble distilled. The double distilled is commonly sent abroad, and is preferred to all other aracks of India.

Chambers.

I send this to be better known for choice of china, tea, arack, and other Indian goods.

Spectator, N° 288.

A'RRACH, O'RRACH, or O'RRAGE. n. f. One of the quickest plants both in coming up and running to seed. Its leaves are very good in pottage. It should be used as soon as it peeps out, because it decays quickly. It thrives very well in all sorts of ground. See O'RRAGE.

Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.

To ARRATGN. v. a. [arranger, Fr. to set in order.]

1. To set a thing in order, or in its place. One is said to arraign a writ in a county, that fits it for trial before the justices of the circuit. A prisoner is said to be arraigned, where he is indicted and brought forth to his trial.

Cowel.

Summon a session, that we may arraign

Our most disloyal lady; for as she hath

Been publicly accused, so shall she have

A just and open trial.

Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

2. To accuse; to charge with faults in general, as in controversy, in a satire.

Reverse of nature! shall such copies then

Arraign th' originals of Maro's pen?

Roscommon.

He that thinks a man to the ground, will quickly endeavour to lay him there: for while he despises him, he arraigns and condemns him in his heart.

South.

3. It has for before the fault.

My own enemies I shall never answer; and if your lordship has any, they will not arraign you for want of knowledge.

Dryden's Dedication to the Æneid.

ARRA'IGNMENT. n. f. [from arraign.] The act of arraigning; an accusation; a charge.

In the sixth satire, which seems only an arraignment of the whole sex, there is a latent admonition to avoid ill women.

Dryden's Juven. Dedication.

To ARRANGE. v. a. [arranger, Fr.] To put in the proper order for any purpose.

I chanc'd this day

To see two knights in travel on my way,

(A sorry sight!) arrang'd in battle new.

Fairy Queen, b. i.

How effectually are its muscular fibres arranged, and with what judgment are its columns and furrows disposed!

Cheyne.

ARRA'NGEMENT. n. f. [from arrange.] The act of putting in proper order; the state of being put in order.

There is a proper arrangement of the parts to be brought about in elastic bodies, which may be facilitated by use.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

A'RRANT. adj. [a word of uncertain etymology, but probably from errant, which being at first applied to its proper signification to vagabonds, as an errant or arrant rogue, that is, a rambling rogue, lost, in time, its original signification, and being by its use understood to imply something bad, was applied at large to any thing that was mentioned with hatred or contempt.] Bad in a high degree.

Country folks, who hallooed and hooted after me, as at the arrantest coward that ever shewed his shoulders to the enemy.

Sidney, b. ii.

A vain fool grows forty times an arranter sot than before.

L'Estrange's Fables.

And let him every deity adore,

If his new bride prove not an arrant whore.

Dryd. Juven.

A'RRANTLY. adv. [from arrant.] Corruptly; shamefully.

Funeral tears are as arrantly hired out as mourning clokes.

L'Estrange.

A'RRAS. n. f. [from Arras, a town in Artois, where hangings are woven.] Tapestry; hangings woven with images.

Thence to the hall, which was on every side

With rich array and costly arras dight.

Fairy Queen, b. i.

He's going to his mother's closet;

Behind the arras I'll convey myself,

To hear the process.

Shakesp. Hamlet.

As he shall pass the galleries, I'll place

A guard behind the arras.

Denham's Sophy.

ARRA'UGHT. v. a. [a word used by Spenser in the preter tense, of which I have not found the present, but suppose he derived arrach from arracher, Fr.] Seized by violence.

His ambitious sons unto them twain

Arraught the rule, and from their father drew.

Fairy Q.

ARRA'Y. n. f. [arroy, Fr. arreo, Sp. arredo, Ital. from rey, Teut. order. It was adopted into the middle Latin, mille hominum ar. aitorum, Knighton.]

1. Order, chiefly of war.

The earl espying them scattered near the army, sent one to command them to their array.

Sir J. Hayward.

Wer't thou fought to deeds,

That might require th' array of war, thy skill

Of conduct would be such, that all the world

Could not sustain thy prowess.

Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.

A gen'ral sets his army in array

In vain, unless he fight and win the day.

Sir J. Denham.

2. Drefs.

A rich throne, as bright as sunny day,

On which there sat most brave embellished

With royal robes, and gorgeous array,

A maiden queen.

Fairy Queen, b. i.

In this remembrance, Emily ere day

Arose, and dres'd herself in rich array;

Fresh as the month, and as the morning fair.

Dryd. Fables.

3. In law. Array, of the Fr. array, i. e. ordo, the ranking or setting forth of a jury or inquest of men impannelled upon a cause. Thence is the verb to array a pannel, that is, to set forth one by another the men impannelled.

Cowel.

To ARRAY. v. a. [arroyer, old Fr.]

1. To put in order.

2. To deck; to drefs; to adorn the person; with the particle with.

Deck thyself now with majesty and excellency, and array thyself with glory and beauty.

Job, xl. 10.

Now went forth the morn,

Such as in highest heav'n, array'd in gold

Empyreal.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

One vest array'd the corps, and one they spread

O'er his clos'd eyes, and wrapp'd around his head.

Dryden.

3. In law. See ARRAY in law.

ARRA'YERS. n. f. [from array.] Officers who anciently had the care of seeing the soldiers duly appointed in their armour.

Cowel.

ARRE'AR. adv. [arriere, Fr. behind.] Behind. This is the primitive signification of the word, which, though not now in use, seems to be retained by Spenser. See REAR.

To leave with speed Atlanta swift arrear,

Through forests wild and unfrequented land,

To chase the lion, boar, or rugged bear.

Fairy Queen, b. ii.

ARRE'AR. n. f. That which remains behind unpaid, though due. See ARREARAGE.

His boon is giv'n; his knight has gain'd the day,

But lost the prize; th' arrears are yet to pay.

Dryd. Fables.

If a tenant run away in arrear of some rent, the land remains; that cannot be carried away, or lost.

Locke.

It will comfort our grand-children, when they see a few rags hung up in Westminster-hall, which cost an hundred millions, whereof they are paying the arrears, and boasting as beggars do, that their grandfathers were rich.

Swift.

ARRE'ARAGE. n. f. a word now little used. [from arriere, Fr. behind.]

Arrearage is the remainder of an account, or a sum of money remaining in the hands of an accountant; or, more generally, any money unpaid at the due time, as arrearage of rent.

Cowel.

Page set forth the king of England's title to his debts and pension from the French king; with all arrearages.

Hayward.

I think,

He'll grant the tribute, send th' arrearages,

Ere look upon our Romans.

Shakesp. Cymbeline.

The old arrearages under which that crown had long groaned, being defrayed, he hath brought Lurana to uphold and maintain herself.

Hewel's Vocal Forest.

ARRENTA'TION. n. f. [from arrendar, Span. to farm.] Is, in the forest law, the licensing an owner of lands in the forest, to inclose them with a low hedge and small ditch, in consideration of a yearly rent.

Dist.

ARREPTI'TIOUS. adj. [arreptus, Lat.]

1. Snatched away.

2. Crept in privily.

Dist.

ARRE'ST. n. f. [from arrest, Fr. to stop.]

1. In law.

A stop or stay; as, a man apprehended for debt, is said to be arrested. To plead in arrest of judgment, is to shew cause why judgment should be stayed, though the verdict of the twelve be passed. To plead in arrest of taking the inquest upon the former issue, is to shew cause why an inquest should not be taken. An arrest is a certain restraint of a man's person, depriving him of his own will, and binding it to become obedient to the will of the law, and may be called the beginning of imprisonment.

Cowel.

If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for my creditors; yet I had as lief have the foppery of freedom, as the morality of imprisonment.

Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

2. Any caption.

To the rich man, who had promised himself ease for many years, it was a sad arrest, that his soul was surpris'd the first night.

Taylor's Holy Living.

3. A stop.
The stop and arrest of the air sheweth; that the air hath little appetite of ascending. Bacon's Nat. History, N<sup>o</sup> 24.
To ARREST. v. a. [arrest, Fr. to stop.]
1. To seize by a mandate from a court or officer of justice. See ARREST.
Good tidings, my lord Hastings, for the which I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason. Shak. Hen. IV.
Well, well; there's one yonder arrested, and carried to prison, was worth five thousand of you all. Shakesp. Meas. for M.
2. To seize any thing by law.
He hath enjoyed nothing of Ford's but twenty pounds of money, which must be paid to master Brook; his horses are arrested for it. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
3. To seize; to lay hands on.
But when as Morpheus had with leaden maze Arrested all that goodly company. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Are itself, which, of all things in the world, will not be baffled or defied, shall begin to arrest, seize, and remind us of our mortality. South.
4. To with-hold; to hinder.
This defect of the English justice was the main impediment that did arrest and stop the course of the conquest. Sir John Davies.
As often as my dogs with better speed Arrest her flight, is she to death decreed. Dryd. Fables.
Nor could her virtues, nor repeated vows Of thousand lovers, the relentless hand Of death arrest. Philips.
5. To stop motion.
To manifest the coagulative power, we have arrested the fluidity of new milk, and turned it into a curdled substance. Boyle.
- ARREST. n. f. [In horsemanship.] A mangey humour between the ham and paster of the hinder legs of a horse. Dict.
- ARRESTED. adj. [arrestatus, low Lat.] He that is convened before a judge, and charged with a crime. It is used sometimes for imputed or laid unto; as, no folly may be arrested to one under age. Cowel.
- To ARRIDE. v. a. [arrideo, Lat.]
1. To laugh at.
2. To smile; to look pleasantly upon one.
- ARRIERE. n. f. [French.] The last body of an army, for which we now use rear.
The horsemen might issue forth without disturbance of the foot, and the avant-guard without shuffling with the battail or arriere. Sir J. Hayward.
- ARRIERE BAN. n. f. [Casseneuve derives this word from arriere and ban; ban denotes the convening of the noblesse or vassals, who hold fees immediately of the crown; and arriere, those who only hold of the king mediately.] A general proclamation, by which the king of France summons to the war all that hold of him, both his own vassals or the noblesse, and the vassals of his vassals.
- ARRIERE FEE, or FIEF. Is a fee dependant on a superior one. These fees commenced, when the dukes and counts, rendering their governments hereditary in their families, distributed to their officers parts of the royal domains, which they found in their respective provinces; and even permitted those officers to gratify the soldiers under them, in the same manner.
- ARRIERE VASSAL. The vassal of a vassal. Trevoux.
- ARRISION. n. f. [arrisio, Lat.] A smiling upon. Dict.
- ARRIVAL. n. f. [from arrive.]
The act of coming to any place; and, figuratively, the attainment of any purpose.
How are we changed, since we first saw the queen?
She, like the sun, does still the same appear,
Bright as she was at her arrival here. Waller.
The unravelling is the arrival of Ulysses upon his own island. Broom's View of Epick Poetry.
- ARRIVANCE. n. f. [from arrive.] Company coming.
Every minute is expectancy
Of more arrivance. Shakesp. Othello.
- To ARRIVE. v. n. [arriver, Fr. to come on shore.]
1. To come to any place by water.
At length arriving on the banks of Nile,
Wearied with length of ways, and worn with toil,
She laid her down. Dryden.
2. To reach any place by travelling.
When we were arrived upon the verge of his estate, we stopped at a little inn, to rest ourselves and our horses.
3. To reach any point.
The bounds of all body we have no difficulty to arrive at; but when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress. Locke.
4. To gain any thing.
It is the highest wisdom by despising the world to arrive at heaven; they are blessed who converse with God. Taylor.
The virtuous may know in speculation, what they could never arrive at by practice, and avoid the snares of the crafty. Addison. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 245.
5. The thing at which we arrive is always supposed to be good.

6. To happen; with to before the person. This sense seems not proper.
Happy! to whom this glorious death arrives,
More to be valued than a thousand lives. Waller.
- To ARRO'DE. v. a. [arrodo, Lat.] To gnaw or nibble. Dict.
- ARROGANCE. } n. f. [arrogantia, Lat.] The act or quality of ARROGANCY. } taking much upon one's self; that species of pride which consists in exorbitant claims.
Stanley, notwithstanding she's your wife;
And loves not me; be you, good lord, assur'd;
I hate not you for her proud arrogance. Shakesp. Rich. III.
Pride hath no other glass
To shew itself but pride; for supple knees
Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees. Sh. Tr. and Cr.
Pride and arrogance, and the evil way, and the froward mouth do I hate. Prov. viii. 13.
Discouring of matters dubious, and on any controvertible truths, we cannot, without arrogancy, entreat a credulity. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
Humility it expresses by the stooping and bending of the head; arrogance, when it is lifted, or, as we say, tossed up. Dryd. Dufresn.
- ARROGANT. adj. [arrogans, Lat.] Given to make exorbitant claims; haughty; proud.
Feagh's right unto that country which he claims, or the signiory therein, must be vain and arrogant. Spenser on Ireland.
An arrogant way of treating with other princes and states, is natural to popular governments. Temple.
- ARROGANTLY. adv. [from arrogant.] In an arrogant manner:
Our poet may
Himself admire the fortune of his play;
And arrogantly, as his fellows do,
Think he writes well, because he pleases you.
Dryden's Prol. to Indian Emperour.
Another, warm'd
With high ambition, and conceit of prowess
Inherent, arrogantly thus presum'd;
What if this sword, full often drench'd in blood,
Should now cleave sheer the execrable head
Of Churchill. Philips.
- ARROGANTNESS. n. f. [from arrogant.] The same with arrogance; which see. Dict.
- To ARROGATE. v. a. [arrog, Lat.] To claim vainly; to exhibit unjust claims only prompted by pride.
I intend to describe this battle fully, not to derogate any thing from one nation, or to arrogate to the other. Sir J. Hayw.
The popes arrogated unto themselves, that the empire was held of them in homage. Sir Walter Raleigh's Essays.
Who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd;
Over his brethren. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
Rome never arrogated to herself any infallibility, but what she pretended to be founded upon Christ's promise. Tillot. Pr.
- ARROGA'TION. n. f. [from arrogate.] A claiming in a proud unjust manner. Dict.
- ARRO'SION. n. f. [from arrosus, Lat.] A gnawing. Dict.
- ARROW. n. f. [apepe, Sax.] The pointed weapon which is shot from a bow. Darts are thrown by the hand, but in poetry they are confounded.
I swear to thee by Cupid's strongest bow,
By his best arrow with the golden head. Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.
Here were boys so desperately resolved, as to pull arrows out of their flesh, and deliver them to be shot again by the archers on their side. Sir J. Hayward.
- ARROWHEAD. n. f. [from arrow and head.] A water plant, so called from the resemblance of its leaves to the head of an arrow. Dict.
- ARROWY. adj. [from arrow.] Consisting of arrows.
He saw them in their forms of battle rang'd;
How quick they wheel'd, and flying, behind them shot
Sharp fleet of arrowy show'r against the face
Of their pursuers, and o'ercame by flight. Par. Lost, b. iii.
- ARSE. n. f. [earpe, Sax.] The buttocks, or hind part of an animal.
- To hang an ARSE. A vulgar phrase, signifying to be tardy, sluggish, or dilatory.
For Hudibras wore but one spur,
As wisely knowing, could he stir
To active trot one side of 's horse,
The other would not hang an arse. Hudibras, cant. i.
- ARSE FOOT. n. f. A kind of water fowl, called also a didapper. D.
- ARSE-SMART. [Perficaria, Lat.]
It is a plant with an apetalous flower, having several chives from the multifid calyx: the pointal becomes an oval pointed smooth seed, inclosed in the capsule, which was before the flower-cup; it hath jointed stalks, and the flowers are produced in spikes. Several species of this plant grow wild upon moist foils and dunghills. Millar.
- ARSENAL. n. f. [arsenale, Ital.] A repository of things requisite to war; a magazine.

A R T

I would have a room for the old Roman instruments of war, where you might see all the ancient military furniture, as it might have been in an arsenal of old Rome. Add. on An. Med.
ARSENICAL. adj. [from arsenick.] Containing arsenick; consisting of arsenick.

An hereditary consumption, or one engendered by arsenical fumes under ground, is incapable of cure. Harvey on Consump.

There are arsenical, or other like noxious minerals lodged underneath. Woodward's Natural History.

ARSENICK. n. f. [ἀρσενικόν.] A ponderous mineral substance, volatile and unflammable, which gives a whiteness to metals in fusion, and proves a violent corrosive poison; of which there are three sorts. Native or yellow arsenick, called also aureipigmentum or orpiment, is chiefly found in copper mines, in a sort of glebes or stones of different figures and sizes. Its colour, though always yellow, yet admits of different shades and mixtures, as a golden yellow, a reddish yellow, or a green yellow. It contains a small portion of gold, but not worth the expence of separating it. White or crystalline arsenick is extracted from the native kind, by subliming it with a proportion of sea salt, and is chiefly used among us. It is said to be found native in some German mines. The smallest quantity of crystalline arsenick, being mixed with any metal, absolutely destroys its malleability; and a single grain will turn a pound of copper into a beautiful seeming silver, but without ductility. There is a method practised in Hungary, of procuring yellow and white arsenick from cobalt. Red arsenick is a preparation of the white, made by adding to it a mineral sulphur. There are several chymical preparations of arsenick, intended to blunt its corrosive salts, and render it a safe medicine; but experience proves that it should never be used inwardly, in any form. Chambers.

Arsenick is a very deadly poison; held to the fire, it emits fumes, but liquates very little. Woodw. on Foss.

ART. n. f. [arte, Fr. ars, Lat.]

1. The power of doing something not taught by nature and instinct; as, to walk is natural, to dance is an art.

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims, by which a man is governed and directed in his actions. South.

Bless'd with each grace of nature and of art. Pope.

Ev'n copious Dryden wanted, or forgot,

The last and greatest art, the art to blot. Pope.

2. A science; as, the liberal arts.

Arts that respect the mind were ever reputed nobler than those that serve the body. Ben. Johnson's Discovery.

3. A trade.

This observation is afforded us by the art of making sugar. Boyle.

4. Artfulness; skill; dexterity.

The art of our necessities is strange,

That can make vile things precious. Shak. King Lear.

5. Cunning.

6. Speculation.

I have as much of this in art as you;

But yet my nature could not bear it so. Shakesp. J. Caesar.

ARTERIAL. adj. [from artery.] That which relates to the artery; that which is contained in the artery.

Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame,

The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,

Had cool'd and languish'd in th' arterial road. Blackmore.

As this mixture of blood and chyle passeth through the arterial tube, it is pressed by two contrary forces; that of the heart driving it forward against the sides of the tube, and the elastick force of the air, pressing it on the opposite sides of those air-bladders; along the surface of which this arterial tube creeps. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ARTERIO'TOMY. n. f. [from ἀρτηρία, and τέμνω, to cut.] The operation of letting blood from the artery: a practice much in use among the French.

ARTERY. n. f. [arteria, Lat.] An artery is a conical canal, conveying the blood from the heart to all parts of the body. Each artery is composed of three coats; of which the first seems to be a thread of fine blood vessels and nerves, for nourishing the coats of the artery; the second is made up of circular, or rather spiral fibres, of which there are more or fewer strata, according to the bigness of the artery. These fibres have a strong elasticity, by which they contract themselves with some force, when the power by which they have been stretched out ceases. The third and inmost coat is a fine transparent membrane, which keeps the blood within its canal, that otherwise, upon the dilatation of an artery, would easily separate the spiral fibres from one another. As the arteries grow smaller, these coats grow thinner, and the coats of the veins seem only to be continuations of the capillary arteries. Quincy.

The arteries are elastick tubes, endued with a contractile force, by which they drive the blood still forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Arb.

ARTFUL. adj. [from art and full.]

1. Performed with art.

The last of these was certainly the most easy, but, for the same reason, the least artful. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

2. Artificial; not natural.

3. Cunning; skilful; dexterous.

O still the same, Ulysses, she rejoin'd,

In useful craft successfully refin'd,

Artful in speech, in action, and in mind. Pope's Od.

ARTFULLY. adv. [from artful.] With art; skilfully; dexterously.

The rest in rank: Honoria chief in place,

Was artfully contriv'd to set her face,

To front the thicket, and behold the chace. Dr yd. Fab.

Vice is the natural growth of our corruption. How irresistibly must it prevail, when the seeds of it are artfully sown, and industriously cultivated? Rogers's Sermons.

ARTFULNESS. n. f. [from artful.]

1. Skill.

Consider with how much artfulness his bulk and situation is contrived, to have just matter to draw round him these massy bodies. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

2. Cunning.

ARTHRITICK. } adj. [from arthritis.]

ARTHRITICAL. }

1. Gouty; relating to the gout.

Frequent changes produce all the arthritick diseases. Arbuth.

2. Relating to joints.

Serpents, worms, and leaches, though some want bones, and all extended articulations, yet have they arthritical analogies; and, by the motion of fibrous and musculous parts, are able to make progression. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. i.

ARTHRITIS. n. f. [ἀρθριτις, from ἄρθρον, a joint.] Any distemper that affects the joints, but the gout most particularly. Quin.

ARTICHOKE. n. f. [artichault, Fr.]

This plant is very like the thistle, but hath large scaly heads shaped like the cone of the pine tree; the bottom of each scale, as also at the bottom of the florets, is a thick fleshy eatable substance. The species are, 1. The garden artichoke, with prickly and smooth leaves. 2. Garden artichoke, without prickles, and reddish heads. 3. The wild artichoke of Boeotia. There is at present but one sort of artichoke cultivated in the gardens near London, which is commonly known by the name of the red artichoke. It is propagated from slips or suckers taken from the old roots in February or March. Millar.

No herbs have curled leaves, but cabbage and cabbage lettuce; none have double leaves, one belonging to the stalk, another to the fruit or seed, but the artichoke. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Artichokes contain a rich, nutritious, stimulating juice. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ARTICHOKE of Jerusalem. See SUN-FLOWER, of which it is a species.

ARTICK. adj. [It should be written arctick, from ἀρκτικός.] Northern; under the Bear. See ARCTICK.

But they would have winters like those beyond the artick circle; for the sun would be 80 degrees from them.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 5.

In the following example it is, contrary to custom, spelt after the French manner, and accented on the last syllable.

To you, who live in chill degree,

As map informs, of fifty three,

And do not much for cold atone,

By bringing thither fifty one,

Methinks all climes should be alike,

From tropick e'en to pole artique. Dryden.

ARTICLE. n. f. [articulus, Lat.]

1. A part of speech, as the, an; the man, an ox.

2. A single clause of an account; a particular part of any complex thing.

Laws touching matters of order are changeable by the power of the church; articles concerning doctrine not so. Hooker.

Have the summary of all our griefs,

When time shall serve to shew in articles. Shak. Henry IV.

Many believe the article of remission of sins, but believe it without the condition of repentance. We believe the article otherwise than God intended it. Taylor's Holy Living.

All the precepts, promises, and threatenings of the gospel will rise up in judgment against us; and the articles of our faith will be so many articles of accusation; and the great weight of our charge will be this, that we did not obey the gospel which we professed to believe; that we made confession of the christian faith, but lived like heathens. Tillotson.

You have small reason to repine upon that article of life. Swift.

3. Terms; stipulations.

I embrace these conditions; let us have articles between us. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

It would have gall'd his furly nature,

Which easily endures not article,

Tying him to aught. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

4. Point of time; exact time.

If Cansfield had not, in that article of time, given them that brisk charge, by which other troops were ready, the king himself had been in danger. Clarendon, b. viii.

To ARTICLE. v. n. [from the noun article.] To stipulate; to make terms.

Such

Such in love's warfare is my case,
I may not article for grace,
Having put love at last to show this face. Donne.
He had not infringed the least tittle of what was articled, that they aimed at one mark, and their ends were concentrick.

Howel's Vocal Forest.

If it be said, God chose the successor, that is manifestly not so in the story of Jephtha, where he articled with the people, and they made him judge over them. Locke.

TO ARTICLE. v. a. To draw up in particular articles.

He, whose life seems fair, yet if all his errors and follies were articled against him, the man would seem vicious and miserable. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

ARTICULAR. adj. [articularis, Lat. belonging to the joints.] Is, in medicine, an epithet applied to a disease, which more immediately infects the joints. Thus the gout is called morbus arti- cularis.

ARTICULATE. adj. [from articulus, Lat.]

1. Distinct, as the parts of a limb by joints; not continued in one tone, as articulate sounds; that is, sounds varied and changed at proper pauses, in opposition to the voice of animals, which admit no such variety. An articulate pronunciation, a manner of speaking clear and distinct, in which one sound is not confounded with another.

In speaking under water, when the voice is reduced to an extreme exility, yet the articulate sounds, the words, are not confounded. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 195.

The first, at least, of these I thought deny'd

To beasts; whom God, on their creation-day, Created mute to all articulate sound. Milton's Parad. Lost.

2. Branched out into articles. This is a meaning little in use.

His instructions were extreme curious and articulate; and,
in them, more articles touching inquisition, than negotiation:
requiring from his ambassadors an answer in distinct articles to his questions. Bacon's Henry VII.

TO ARTICULATE. v. a. [from article.]

1. To form words; to speak as a man.

The dogmatist knows not by what art he directs his tongue, in articulating sounds into voices. Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica.

Parisian academists, in their anatomy of apes, tell us, that the muscles of the tongue, which do most serve to articulate a word, were wholly like to those of man. Ray on Creation.

They would advance in knowledge, and not deceive themselves with a little articulated air. Locke.

2. To draw up in articles.

These things, indeed, you have articulated,
Proclaim'd at market-crosses, read in churches,
To face the garment of rebellion
With some fine colour. Shakefp. Henry IV.

3. To make terms. These two latter significations are unusual.
Send us to Rome

The best, with whom we may articulate

For their own good and ours. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

ARTICULATELY. adv. [from articulate.] In an articulate voice.

The secret purpose of our heart, no less *articulate*ly spoken to God, who needs not our words to discern our meaning.

Decay of Piety.

ARTICULATENESS. n. f. [from articulate.] The quality of being articulate.

ARTICULATION. n. f. [from articulate.]

1. The juncture, or joint of bones.

With relation to the motion of the bones in their articula- tions, there is a twofold liquor prepared for the inunction and lubrication of their heads, an oily one, and a mucilaginous, supplied by certain glandules seated in the articulations. Ray.

2. The act of forming words.

I conceive that an extreme small, or an extreme great sound, cannot be articulate, but that the articulation requireth a mediocrity of sound. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 196.

By articulation I mean a peculiar motion and figure of some parts belonging to the mouth, between the throat and lips.

Holder's Elements of Speech.

3. [In botany.] The joints or knots in some plants, as the cane.

ARTIFICE. n. f. [artificium, Lat.]

1. Trick; fraud; stratagem.

It needs no legends, no service in an unknown tongue; none of all these laborious artifices of ignorance; none of all these cloaks and coverings. South.

2. Art; trade.

ARTIFICER. n. f. [artifex, Lat.]

1. An artist; a manufacturer; one by whom any thing is made.

The lights, doors, and stairs, rather directed to the use of the guest, than to the eye of the artificer. Sidney.

The great artificer would be more than ordinarily exact in drawing his own picture. South.

So in the practices of artificers, and the manufactures of several kinds, the end being proposed, we find out ways. Locke.

2. A forger; a contriver.

He soon aware,

Each perturbation smoooth'd with outward calm,

Artificer of fraud! and was the first

That practis'd falsehood under faintly shew. Paradise Lost.

Th' artificer of lies

Renews th' assault, and his last batt'ry tries. Dryden's Fables.

3. A dexterous or artful fellow.

Let you alone, cunning artificer.

Ben. Johnson.

ARTIFICIAL. adj. [artificial, Fr.]

1. Made by art; not natural.

Basilus used the artificial day of torches to lighten the sports their inventions could contrive. Sidney, b. i.

The curtains closely drawn the light to skreen,

As if he had contriv'd to lie unseen:

Thus cover'd with an artificial night,

Sleep did his office.

Dryden's Fables.

There is no natural motion perpetual; yet it doth not hinder but that it is possible to contrive such an artificial revolution. Wilkins's Dædalus.

2. Fictitious; not genuine.

Why, I can smile, and murder while I smile,

And cry, content, to that which grieves my heart,

And wet my cheeks with artificial tears. Shakefp. Hen. VI.

3. Artful; contrived with skill.

These seem to be the more artificial, as those of a single person the more natural governments, orders, and institutions.

Temple.

ARTIFICIAL Arguments. [in rhetorick.] Are proofs on confiderations which arise from the genius, industry, or invention of the orator; such are definitions, causes, effects, &c. which are thus called, to distinguish them from laws, authorities, citations, and the like, which are said to be inartificial arguments.

ARTIFICIAL Lines, on a sector or scale, are lines so contrived as to represent the logarithmick sines and tangents; which, by the help of the line of numbers, solve, with tolerable exactness, questions in trigonometry, navigation, &c. Chambers.

ARTIFICIAL Numbers, are the same with logarithms.

ARTIFICIALLY. adv. [from artificial.]

1. Artfully; with skill; with good contrivance.

How cunningly he made his faultiness less, how artificially he set out the torments of his own conscience. Sidney.

Should any one be cast upon a desolate island, and find there a palace artificially contrived, and curiously adorned. Ray.

2. By art; not naturally.

It is covered on all sides with earth, crumbled into powder, as if it had been artificially sifted. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

ARTIFICIALNESS. n. f. [from artificial.] Artfulness. Dict.

ARTIFICIOUS. adj. [from artifice.] The same with artificial.

ARTILLERY. n. f. It has no plural. [artillerie, Fr.]

1. Weapons of war.

And Jonathan gave his artillery unto his lad, and said unto him, Go, carry them unto the city.

2. Cannon; great ordnance.

Have I not heard great ordnance in the field?

And heav'n's artillery thunder in the skies? Shak. T. Shrew.

I'll to the Tower with all the haste I can,

To view th' artillery and ammunition. Shak. Henry VI.

Upon one wing the artillery was drawn, being sixteen pieces, every piece having pioneers to plain the ways. Hayward.

He that views a fort to take it,

Plants his artillery 'gainst the weakest place. Denh. Sophy.

ARTISAN. n. f. [French.]

1. Artist; professor of an art.

What are the most judicious artisans, but the mimicks of nature? Wotton's Architecture.

Best and happiest artisan,

Best of painters, if you can,

With your many-colour'd art,

Draw the mistress of my heart.

Guardian.

2. Manufacturer; low tradesman.

I who had none but generals to oppose me, must have an ar- tisan for my antagonist. Addison. Whig Examiner.

ARTIST. n. f. [artiste, Fr.]

1. The professor of an art, generally of an art manual.

How to build ships, and dreadful ordnance cast,

Instruct the artists, and reward their haste. Waller.

Rich with the spoils of many a conquer'd land,

All arts and artists Theseus could command,

Who sold for hire, or wrought for better fame:

The master painters and the carvers came. Dryden's Fables.

When I made this, an artist undertook to imitate it; but using another way, fell much short. Newton's Opticks.

2. A skilful man; not a novice.

If any one thinks himself an artist at this, let him number up the parts of his child's body. Locke.

ARTLESSLY. adv. [from artless.] In an artless manner; naturally; sincerely.

Nature and truth, though never so low or vulgar, are yet pleasing when openly and artlessly represented. Pope's Letters.

ARTLESS. adj. [from art and less.]

1. Unskilful; sometimes with the particle of.

The high-shoo'd plowman, should he quit the land,

Artless of stars, and of the moving sand. Dryden's Persf.

2. Without fraud; as, an artless maid.

3. Contrived without skill; as, an artless tale.

TO ARTUATE. v. a. [artuatus, Lat.] To tear limb from limb. D.

ARTUN-

ARUNDINACEOUS. adj. [arundinaceus, Lat.] Of or like reeds.

Diët.

ARUNDINEOUS. adj. [arundineus, Lat.] Abounding with reeds.

As. conjunct. [als, Teut.]

1. In the same manner with something else.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

In singing, as in piping, you excel;
And scarce your master could perform so well. Dryden.
I live as I did, I think as I did, I love you as I did; but all these are to no purpose: the world will not live, think, or love as I do. Swift's Letters.

2. In the manner that.

Mad as I was, I could not bear his fate
With silent grief, but loudly blam'd the state. Dryden's Æn.
The landlord, in his shirt as he was, taking a candle in one hand, and a drawn sword in the other, ventured out of the room. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

3. That; in a consequential sense.

The cunningest mariners were so conquered by the storm, as they thought it best with stricken sails to yield to be governed by it. Sidney, b. ii.

He had such a dexterous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness. Wotton.

The relations are so uncertain, as they require a great deal of examination. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 986.

God shall by grace prevent sin so soon, as to keep the soul in the virginity of its first innocence. South.

4. In the state of another.

Madam, were I as you, I'd take her counsel;
I'd speak my own distress. A. Philips, Distress Mother.

5. Under a particular consideration; with a particular respect.

Besides that law which concerneth men as men, and that which belongs unto men as they are men, linked with others in some society; there is a third which touches all several bodies politick, so far forth as one of them hath publick concerns with another. Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity, b. i.

I say 'tis copper. Dar'st thou be as good as thy word now?—
— Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but a man, I dare; but as thou art a prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The objections that are raised against it as a tragedy, are as follow. Gay's Pref. to What d'ye call it.

6. Like; of the same kind with.

A simple idea is one uniform idea, as sweet, bitter. Watts.

7. In the same degree with.

Where you, unless you are as matter blind,
Conduct and beauteous disposition find. Blackmore.
Well hast thou spoke, the blue-eyed maid replies,
Thou good old man, benevolent as wife. Pope's Odyssey.

8. As if; in the same manner.

The squire began nigher to approach,
And wind his horn under the castle-wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall. Fairy Queen.
They all contended to creep into his humour, and to do that,
as of themselves, which they conceived he desired they should do. Sir J. Hayward.

Contented in a nest of snow
He lies, as he his bliss did know,
And to the wood no more would go. Waller.
So hot th' assault, so high the tumult rose,
As all the Dardan and Argolick race
Had been contracted in that narrow space. Dryden's Æn.
Can misery no place of safety know,
The noise pursues me wherefoe'er I go,
As fate sought only me. Dryden's Aurengz.

9. According to what.

Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man.

1 Cor. iii. 5.

Their figure being printed,
As just before, I think, I hinted,
Alma inform'd can try the case,
As she had been upon the place. Prior.
The republick is shut up in the great duke's dominions, who at present is very much incensed against it. The occasion is as follows. Addison on Italy.

10. As it were; in some sort.

As for the daughters of king Edward IV. they thought king Richard had said enough for them; and took them to be but as of the king's party, because they were in his power, and at his disposal. Bacon's Henry VII.

11. While; at the same time that.

At either end, it whistled as it flew,
And as the brands were green, so dropp'd the dew;
Infected as it fell with sweat of sanguine hue. Dryd. Fab.
These haughty words Aleto's rage provoke,
And frighted Turnus trembled as she spoke. Dryden's Æn.
So the pure limpid stream, when foul with stains
Of rushing torrents, and descending rains,
Works itself clear, and as it runs refines. Addison's Cato.

12. Because.

He that commanded the injury to be done, is first bound;
then he that did it; and they also are obliged who did so assist,
as without them the thing could not have been done. Taylor.

13. As being.

The kernels draw out of the earth juice fit to nourish the tree, as those that would be trees themselves. Bacon's Nat Hist.

14. Equally.

Before the place
A hundred doors a hundred entries grace;
As many voices issue, and the sound
Of Sibyl's word as many times rebound. Dryden's Æn.

15. How; in what manner.

Men are generally permitted to publish books; and contradict others, and even themselves, as they please, with as little danger of being confuted, as of being understood. Boyle.

16. With; answering to like or same.

Sister, well met; whither away so fast?—
—No further than the Tower; and, as I guess,
Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shakespeare's Richard III.

17. In a reciprocal sense, answering to as.

Every offence committed in the state of nature, may, in the state of nature, be also punished, and as far forth as it may in a commonwealth. Locke.

As sure as it is good, that human nature should exist; so certain it is, that the circular revolutions of the earth and planets, rather than other motions which might as possibly have been,
do declare God. Bentley's Sermons.

18. Going before as, in a comparative sense; the first as being sometimes understood.

Sempronius is as brave a man as Cato. Addison's Cato.
Bright as the sun, and like the morning fair. Granville.

19. Answering to such.

Is it not every man's interest, that there should be such a governour of the world as designs our happiness, as would govern us for our advantage. Tillotson.

20. Having so to answer it; in a conditional sense.

As far as they carry light and conviction to any other man's understanding, so far, I hope, my labour may be of use to him. Locke.

21. So is sometimes understood.

As in my speculations I have endeavoured to extinguish passion and prejudice, I am still desirous of doing some good in this particular. Spectator, N° 126.

22. Answering to so conditionally.

So may th' auspicious queen of love,
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind;
As thou to whom the muse commends,
The best of poets and of friends,
Dost thy committed pledge restore. Dryden.

23. Before how it is sometimes redundant; but this is in low language.

As how, dear Syphax? Addison's Cato.

24. It seems to be redundant before yet; to this time.

Though that war continued nine years, and this hath as yet lasted but six, yet there hath been much more action in the present war. Addison.

25. In a sense of comparison, followed by so.

As when a dab-chick waddles through the copse
On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops;
So lab'ring on, with shoulders, hands, and head,
Wide as a windmill all his figure spread. Pope's Dunciad.

26. As FOR; with respect to.

As for the rest of those who have written against me, they deserve not the least notice. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

27. As IF; in the same manner that it would be, if.

Answering their questions, as if it were a matter that needed
it. Locke.

28. As TO; with respect to.

I pray thee, speak to me as to thy thinkings,
As thou dost ruminate; and give thy worst of thoughts
The worst of words. Shakespeare's Othello.
They pretend, in general, to great refinements, as to what regards christianity. Addison on Italy.
I was mistaken as to the day, placing that accident about thirty-six hours sooner than it happened. Swift.

29. As WELL As; equally with.

Each man's mind has some peculiarity, as well as his face, that distinguishes him from all others. Locke.
It is adorned with admirable pieces of sculpture, as well modern as ancient. Addison on Italy.

30. As THOUGH; as if.

These should be at first gently treated, as though we expected an imposthumation. Sharp's Surgery.

A'SA DULCIS. See BENZOIN.

A'SA FOETIDA. } n. f. A gum or resin brought from the East ASSA FOETIDA. } Indies, of a sharp taste, and a strong offensive smell; which is said to distil, during the heat of summer, from a little shrub, frequent in Media, Persia, Assyria, and Arabia. It is at first white, bordering on yellow, then on red, and, lastly, violet; and melts under the fingers like wax. It is of

of known efficacy in some uterine disorders; but the rankness of its smell occasions it to be seldom used but by farriers; yet, in the East Indies, it makes an ingredient in their ragouts.

Chambers.

ASARABACCA. n. f. [asarum, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The flower cup is divided into four parts, and the fruit into six cells, filled with oblong seeds. The leaves are roundish, thick, and almost of the colour of those of the ivy tree. There are two sorts, the common asarabacca, and that of Canada. The first sort is used in medicine. It delights in a moist shady place, and is increased by parting the roots in autumn.

Millar.

ASBESTINE. adj. [from asbestos.] Something incombustible, or that partakes of the nature and qualities of the lapis asbestos.

ASBESTOS. n. f. [ἀσβεστος.] A sort of native fossil stone, which may be split into threads and filaments, from one inch to ten inches in length, very fine, brittle, yet somewhat tractable, silky, and of a greyish colour, not unlike talc of Venice. It is almost insipid to the taste, indissoluble in water, and endued with the wonderful property of remaining unconsumed in the fire, which only whitens it. But, notwithstanding the common opinion, in two trials before the Royal Society, a piece of cloth made of this stone was found to lose a dram of its weight each time. Paper as well as cloth has been made of this stone; and Pliny says he had seen napkins of it, which, being taken foul from the table, were thrown into the fire, and better scoured than if they had been washed in water. This stone is found in many places of Asia and Europe; particularly in the island of Anglesey in Wales, and in Aberdeenshire in Scotland.

Chambers.

ASCARIDES. n. f. [ἀσκαρις, from ἀσκαρίζω, to leap.] Little worms in the rectum, so called from their continual troublesome motion, causing an intolerable itching.

Quincy.

TO ASCEND. v. n. [ascendo, Lat.]

1. To mount upwards.

Then to the heav'n of heav'ns shall he ascend

With victory, triumphing through the air

Over his foes and thine.

Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.

2. To proceed from one degree of knowledge to another.

By these steps we shall ascend to more just ideas of the glory of Jesus Christ, who is intimately united to God, and is one with him.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. To stand higher in genealogy.

The only incest was in the ascending, not collateral or descending branch; as when parents and children married, this was accounted incest.

Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

TO ASCEND. v. a. To climb up any thing.

They ascend the mountains, they descend the vallies.

Delane's Revelation examined.

ASCENDABLE. adj. [from ascend.] That may be ascended. Dict.

ASCENDANT. n. f. [from ascend.]

1. The part of the ecliptick at any particular time above the horizon, which is supposed by astrologers to have great influence.

2. Height; elevation.

He was initiated, in order to gain instruction in sciences that were there in their highest ascendant.

Temple.

3. Superiority; influence.

By the ascendant he had in his understanding, and the dexterity of his nature, he could persuade him very much.

Claren.

What star I know not, but some star I find,

Has giv'n thee an ascendant o'er my mind.

Dryden's Pers.

When they have got an ascendant over them, they should use it with moderation, and not make themselves scarecrows.

Locke.

4. One of the degrees of kindred reckoned upwards.

The most nefarious kind of bastards, are incestuous bastards, which are begotten between ascendants and descendants in infinitum; and between collaterals, as far as the divine prohibition.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

ASCENDANT. adj.

1. Superiour; predominant; overpowering.

Christ outdoes Moses, before he displaces him; and shews an ascendant spirit above him.

South.

2. In an astrological sense, above the horizon.

Let him study the constellation of Pegasus, which is about that time ascendant.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

ASCENDENCY. n. f. [from ascend.] Influence; power.

Custom has some ascendency over understanding, and what at one time seemed decent, appears disagreeable afterwards.

Watts.

ASCENSION. n. f. [ascensio, Lat.]

1. The act of ascending or rising; frequently applied to the visible elevation of our Saviour to heaven.

Then rising from his grave,

Spoil'd principalities, and pow'rs, triumph'd

In open shew; and, with ascension bright,

Captivity led captive through the air.

Paradise Lost, b. x.

2. The thing rising, or mounting.

Men err in the theory of inebriation, conceiving the brain doth only suffer from vaporous ascensions from the stomach.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ASCENSION, in astronomy, is either right or oblique. Right ascension of the sun, or a star, is that degree of the equinoctial, counted from the beginning of Aries, which rises with the sun or star in a right sphere. Oblique ascension is an arch of the equator intercepted between the first point of Aries, and that point of the equator which rises together with a star in an oblique sphere.

VOL. I.

ASCENSION DAY. The day on which the ascension of our Saviour is commemorated, commonly called Holy Thursday; the Thursday but one before Whitsuntide.

ASCENSIONAL Difference, is the difference between the right and oblique ascension, of the same point to the surface of the sphere.

Chambers.

ASCENSIVE. adj. [from ascend.] In a state of ascent.

The cold augments when the days begin to encrease, though the sun be then ascensive, and returning from the winter tropick.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

ASCENT. n. f. [ascensus, Lat.]

1. Rise; the act of rising.

To him with swift ascent he up return'd,

Into his blissful bosom reassum'd

In glory, as of old.

Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

2. The way by which one ascends.

The temple, and the several degrees of ascent, whereby men did climb up to the same, as if it had been a scala cœli, be all poetical and fabulous.

Bacon's New Atlant.

It was a rock

Conspicuous far; winding with one ascent

Accessible from earth, one entrance high.

Par. Lost, b. iv.

3. An eminence, or high place.

No land like Italy erects the sight,

By such a vast ascent, or swells to such a height.

Addison.

A wide flat cannot be pleasant in the Elysian fields, unless it be diversified with depressed valleys and swelling ascents.

Bentl.

TO ASCERTAIN. v. a. [ascertener, Fr.]

1. To make certain; to fix; to establish.

The divine law both ascertaineth the truth, and supplieth unto us the want of other laws.

Hooker, b. i.

Money differs from uncoined silver in this, that the quantity of silver in each piece is ascertained by the stamp.

Locke.

2. To make confident; to take away doubt; often with of.

If it be on right judgment of myself, it may give me the other certainty, that is, ascertain me that I am in the number of God's children.

Hammond's Practical Catechism.

This makes us act with a repose of mind and wonderful tranquillity, because it ascertains us of the goodness of our work.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

ASCERTA'INER. n. f. [from ascertain.] The person that proves or establishes.

ASCERTA'INMENT. n. f. [from ascertain.] A settled rule; an established standard.

For want of ascertainment, how far a writer may express his good wishes for his country, innocent intentions may be charged with crimes.

Swift to Lord Middleton.

ASCETICK. adj. [ἀσκητικός.] Employed wholly in exercises of devotion and mortification.

None lived such long lives as monks and hermits, sequestered from plenty to a constant ascetick course of the severest abstinence and devotion.

South.

ASCETICK. n. f. He that retires to devotion and mortification; a hermit.

I am far from commending those asceticks, that, out of a pretence of keeping themselves unsported from the world, take up their quarters in desarts.

Norris.

He that preaches to man, should understand what is in man; and that skill can scarce be attained by an ascetick in his solitudes.

Atterbury's Sermons.

ASCH. n. f. It has no singular. [from α, without, and σκιω, a shadow.] Those people who, at certain times of the year, have no shadow at noon; such are the inhabitants of the torrid zone, because they have the sun twice a year vertical to them.

Dict.

ASCITES. n. f. [from ἀσκη, a bladder.] A particular species of dropsy; a swelling of the lower belly and depending parts, from an extravasation and collection of water broke out of its proper vessels. This case, when certain and inveterate, is universally allowed to admit of no cure but by means of the manual operation of tapping.

Quincy.

There are two kinds of dropsy, the anasarca, called also leucophlegmacy, when the extravasated matter swims in the cells of the membrana adiposa; and the ascites, when the water possesses the cavity of the abdomen.

Sharp's Surgery.

ASCITICAL. } adj. [from ascites.] Belonging to an ascites; drop-

ASCITICK. } fical; hydropical.

When it is part of another tumour, it is hydropical, either anasarcaous or ascitical.

Wise's Surgery.

ASCITITIOUS. adj. [ascititius, Lat.] Supplemental; additional; not inherent; not original.

Homer has been reckoned an ascititious name, from some accident of his life.

Pope's Essay on Homer.

ASCRIBABLE. adj. [from ascribe.] That which may be ascribed.

The greater part have been forward to reject it, upon a mistaken persuasion, that those phenomena are the effects of nature's abhorrency of a vacuum, which seem to be more fitly ascribable to the weight and spring of the air.

Boyle.

TO ASCRIBE. v. a. [ascribo, Lat.]

1. To attribute to as a cause.

A S I

The cause of his banishment is unknown, because he was unwilling to provoke the emperor, by ascribing it to any other reason than what was pretended. Dryden.

To this we may justly ascribe those envies, jealousies, and encroachments, which render mankind uneasy to one another. Rogers's Sermons.

2. To attribute to as a possessor, or substance receiving accidents. These perfections must be somewhere, and therefore may much better be ascribed to God, in whom we suppose all other perfections to meet, than to any thing else. Tillotson.

ASCRPTION. n. f. [ascriptio, Lat.] The act of ascribing. Dict.

ASCRPTIOUS. adj. [ascriptitius, Lat.] That which is ascribed. Dict.

ASH. n. f. [fraxinus, Lat. ærc, Saxon.]

This tree hath pennated leaves, which end in an odd lobe. The male flowers, which grow at a remote distance from the fruit, have no petals, but consist of many stamina. The ovary becomes a seed vessel, containing one seed at the bottom, shaped like a bird's tongue. The species are, 1. The common ash tree. 2. The striped ash. 3. The manna ash, &c. The first sort is a common timber tree in every part of England. The second is a variety of the first. The third sort is supposed to be the tree from whence the true Calabrian manna is taken: The timber is of excellent use to the wheelwright and cartwright. Millar.

Let me twine

Mine arms about that body, where against

My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,

And fear'd the moon with splinters. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

With which of old he charm'd the savage train,

And call'd the mountain ashes to the plain. Dryd. Silenus.

ASH COLOURED. adj. [from ash and colour.] Coloured between brown and grey, like the bark of an ashen branch.

Clay, ash coloured, was part of a stratum which lay above the strata of stone. Woodward on Fossils.

ASHAMED. adj. [from shame.] Touched with shame; generally with of before the cause of shame.

Profess publicly the doctrine of Jesus Christ, not being ashamed of the word of God, or of any practices enjoined by it. Taylor's Holy Living.

One wou'd have thought she would have stirr'd; but strove With modesty, and was asham'd to move. Dryd. Fables.

This I have shadowed, that you may not be ashamed of that hero, whose protection you undertake. Dryd. Conq. of Gr. Ded.

A'SHEN. adj. [from ash.] Made of ash wood.

At once he said, and threw

His ashen spear; which quiver'd as it flew. Dryden.

A'SHES. n. f. wants the singular. [arca, Sax. asche, Dutch.]

1. The remains of any thing burnt.

Some relics would be left of it, as when ashes remain of burned bodies. Digby on Bodies.

This late dissension, grown betwixt the peers,

Burns under feigned ashes of forg'd love,

And will at last break out into a flame. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Ashes contain a very fertile salt, and are the best manure for cold lands, if kept dry, that the rain doth not wash away their salt. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. The remains of the body; often used in poetry for the carcase, from the ancient practice of burning the dead.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!

Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!

Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood! Shak. R. III.

To great Laertes I bequeath

A task of grief, his ornaments of death;

Left, when the fates his royal ashes claim,

The Grecian matrons taint my spotless name. Pope.

ASHWEDNESDAY. n. f. The first day of Lent, so called from the ancient custom of sprinkling ashes on the head.

A'SHLAR. n. f. [with mafons.] Free stones as they come out of the quarry, of different lengths, breadths, and thickneses.

A'SHLERING. n. f. [with builders.] Quartering to tack to in garrets, about two foot and a half or three foot high, perpendicular to the floor, and reaching to the underside of the rafters. Builder's Dict.

ASHORE. adv. [from a and shore.]

1. On shore; on the land.

The poor Englishman riding in the road, having all that he brought thither ashore, would have been undone. Raleigh.

Moor'd in a Chian creek, ashore I went,

And all the following night in Chios spent. Addison's Ovid.

2. To the shore; to the land.

We may as bootless spend our vain command,

As send our precepts to the leviathan

To come ashore.

Shakesp. Henry V.

May thy billows rowl ashore

The beryl, and the golden ore.

Milton's Comus.

A'SHWEED. n. f. [from ash and weed.] An herb.

A'SHY. adj. [from ash.] Ash coloured; pale; inclining to a whitish grey.

Oft have I seen a timely parted ghost

Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless. Sh. H. VI.

ASIDE. adv. [from a and side.]

A S K

1. To one side; out of the perpendicular direction.

The storm rush'd in, and Arcite stood aghast;

The flames were blown aside, yet shone they bright,

Fann'd by the wind, and gave a ruffled light. Dryd. Fables.

2. To another part; out of the true direction.

He had no brother; which though it be a comfortable thing for kings to have, yet it draweth the subjects eyes a little aside. Bacon's Henry VIII.

3. From the company; as, to speak aside.

He took him aside from the multitude.

Mark, vii. 33.

A'SINARY. adj. [asinarius, Lat.] Belonging to an as. Dict.

A'SININE. adj. [from asinus, Lat.] Belonging to an as.

You shall have more ado to drive our dullest youth, our flocks and stubs, from such nurture, than we have now to hale our choicest and hopefulest wits to that asinine feast of sow thistles and brambles. Milt. on Education.

To Ask. v. a. [arcian, Saxon.]

1. To petition; to beg; sometimes with an accusative only; sometimes with for.

When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down,

And ask of thee forgiveness.

We have nothing else to ask, but that

Which you deny already: yet will ask,

That, if we fail in our request, the blame

May hang upon your hardness.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

My son, hast thou sinned? do so no more, but ask pardon for thy former sins. Ecclus, xxi. 1.

If he ask for bread, will he give him a stone? Matt. vii. 9.

In long journies, ask your master leave to give ale to the horses. Swift.

2. To demand; to claim; as, to ask a price for goods.

Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say unto me; but give me the damsel to wife. Gen. xxxiv. 12.

He saw his friends, who, whelm'd beneath the waves,

Their funeral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quiet graves.

Dryden's Æneid.

3. To enquire; to question; with for before the thing, and sometimes of before the person.

Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. Jerem. vi. 16.

For ask now of the days that are past, which were before thee, since the day that God created man upon the earth, and ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it. Deut. iv. 32.

O inhabitant of Aroer, stand by the way and espy, ask him that flieth, and her that escapeth, and say, what is done? Jeremiah, xlviii. 19.

4. To enquire; with after before the thing.

He said, wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name?

And he blessed him there.

Genesis, xxxii. 29.

5. To require, as physically necessary.

A lump of ore in the bottom of a mine will be stirred by two men's strength; which, if you bring it to the top of the earth, will ask six men to stir it. Bacon's Natural History.

The administration passes into different hands at the end of two months, which contributes to dispatch: but any exigence of state asks a much longer time to conduct any design to its maturity. Addison's Rem. on Italy.

ASK, ASH, As, do all come from the Saxon ærc, an ash tree.

Gibson's Camden.

ASKA'NCE. } adv. Sideways; obliquely.

ASKA'UNCE. } adv. Sideways; obliquely. Zelmane, keeping a countenance askance, as she understood him not, told him, it became her evil. Sidney, b. i.

His wannish eyes upon them bent askance.

And when he saw their labours well succeed,

He wept for rage, and threaten'd dire mischance. Fairfax.

Some say, he bid his angels turn askance

The poles of earth, twice ten degrees, and more,

From the sun's axle; they with labour push'd

Oblique the centrick globe.

Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

ASKA'UNT. adv. Obliquely; on one side.

At this Achilles roll'd his furious eyes,

Fix'd on the king askaunt; and thus replies,

O, impudent.

Dryden's Iliad.

Since the space, that lies on either side

The solar orb, is without limits wide,

Grant that the sun had happen'd to prefer

A feat askaunt, but one diameter:

Lost to the light by that unhappy place,

This globe had lain a frozen lonesome mass.

Blackmore.

A'SKER. n. f. [from ask.]

1. Petitioner.

Have you

Ere now denied the asker? and, now again

On him that did not ask, but mock, bestow

Your su'd for tongues.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The greatness of the asker, and the smallness of the thing asked, had been sufficient to enforce his request. South.

2. En-

2. Enquirer.

Every asker being satisfied, we may conclude, that all their conceptions of being in a place are the same. Digby of Bodies.

ASKER. n. f. A water newt.

ASKE'W. adv. [from a and skew.] Aside; with contempt; contemptuously; disdainfully.

For when ye mildly look with lovely hue,
Then is my soul with life and love inspir'd:
But when ye lowre, or look on me askew,
Then do I die.

Spenser, Sonnet vii.

Then take it, Sir, as it was writ,
Nor look askew at what it saith;

Prior.

• There's no petition in it. —
To ASLA'KE. v. a. [from a and flake, or slack.] To remit; to mitigate; to slacken.

But this continual, cruel, civil war,
No skill can stint, nor reason can aslake. Spenser, Son. xlv.
Whilst seeking to aslake thy raging fire,
Thou in me kindest much more great desire. Spenser.

ASLA'NT. adv. [from a and slant.] Obliquely; on one side; not perpendicularly.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shews his hoar leaves in the glassy stream. Sh. Hamlet.
He fell; the shaft
Drove through his neck aslant; he spurns the ground,
And the soul issues through the weazon's wound. Dryden.
Aslant the dew-bright earth, and colour'd air,
He looks in boundless majesty abroad. Thomson's Summer.

ASLE'EP. adv. [from a and sleep.]

1. Sleeping; at rest.

How many thousands of my poorest subjects
Are at this hour asleep! O gentle sleep,
Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee! Sh. H. IV.
The diligence of trade, and noiseful gain,
And luxury more late asleep were laid:
All was the night's, and, in her silent reign,
No found the rest of nature did invade. Dryden's Ann. M.
There is no difference between a person asleep, and in an apoplexy, but that the one can be awaked, and the other cannot. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. To sleep.

If a man watch too long, it is odds but he will fall asleep.
Bacon's Essays.

Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,
By whispering winds soon lull'd asleep. Milton's l' Allegro.

ASLO'PE. adv. [from a and slope.] With declivity; obliquely; not perpendicularly.

Set them not upright, but aslope, a reasonable depth under the ground.
Bacon's Nat. History, N° 425.

The curse aslope

Glanc'd on the ground; with labour I must earn
My bread: what harm? Idleness had been worse:
My labour will sustain me. Milt. Par. Lost, b. x.

The knight did stoop,

And sate on further side aslope. Hudibras.

ASO'MATOUS. adj. [from a, priv. and σῶμα, a body.] Incorporal, or without a body.

ASP. } n. f. [aspis, Lat.] A kind of serpent, whose poison
A'SPICK. } is so dangerous and quick in its operation, that it kills without a possibility of applying any remedy. It is said to be very small, and peculiar to Egypt and Lybia. Those that are bitten by it, die within three hours; and the manner of their dying being by sleep and lethargy, without any pain, Cleopatra chose it, as the easiest way of dispatching herself. Calmet.

High-minded Cleopatra, that with stroke
Of asp's sting, herself did kill. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Scorpion, and asp, and amphibæna dire,
And dipfas. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

ASP. n. f. A tree. See ASPEN.

ASPALATHUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A plant called the rose of Jerusalem, or our lady's rose.

2. The wood of a prickly tree, heavy, oleaginous, somewhat sharp and bitter to the taste, and anciently in much repute as an astringent, but now little used. There are four kinds of this wood; the first of the colour of box, hard, solid, heavy, and smelling like roses; which is therefore called rosewood. The second, red like yew, and of a very agreeable smell. The third, hard, twisted, knotty, of a rank smell, like that of a goat, and a disagreeable taste. The fourth has an ash coloured bark, and the wood is of a purple dye. Aspalathus affords an oil of admirable scent, reputed one of the best perfumes. Chambers.

I gave a sweet smell like cinnamon and aspalathus, and I yielded a pleasant odour like the best myrrh. Ecclus, xxiv. 15.

ASPARAGUS. n. f. [Lat.] The name of a plant. It has a roseaceous flower of six leaves, placed orbicularly, out of whose center rises the pointal, which turns to a soft globular berry, full of hard seeds. The leaves are finely cut. The species are twelve, of which all but the two first are exoticks. 1. Garden asparagus. 2. Wild asparagus, with narrow leaves. The first sort is cultivated for the table, and propagated by the seeds, which should be sown in the beginning of February. The next year they should be planted out; the third spring, after planting, they may be begun to be cut, and, by proper management, a plot of asparagus may be continued ten or twelve years in cutting. The second sort grows wild in some parts, but, producing slender shoots, it is rarely cultivated. Millar.

Asparagus affects the urine with a fetid smell, especially if cut when they are white; and therefore have been suspected by some physicians, as not friendly to the kidneys; when they are older, and begin to ramify, they lose this quality; but then they are not so agreeable. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'SPECT. n. f. [aspectus, Lat.] It appears anciently to have been pronounced with the accent on the last syllable, which is now placed on the first.]

1. Look; air; appearance.

I have presented the tongue under a double aspect, such as may justify the definition, that it is the best and worst part. Government of the Tongue.

They are both, in my judgment, the image or picture of a great ruin, and have the true aspect of a world lying in its rubbish. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Countenance; look.

Fairer than fairest, in his faining eye,
Whose sole aspect he counts felicity. Spensf. Hymn on Love.
Those eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt tears,
Sham'd their aspects with store of childish drops. Sh. R. III.
I am fearful: wherefore frowns he thus?
'Tis his aspect of terror. All's not well. Sh. Richard III.
Yet had his aspect nothing of severe,
But such a face as promis'd him sincere. Dryden's Fables.
Then shall thy Craggs (and let me call him mine)
On the east ore another Pollio shine;
With aspect open shall erect his head. Pope.

3. Glance; view; act of beholding.

When an envious or an amorous aspect doth infect the spirits of another, there is joined both affection and imagination. Bacon's Natural Hist. N° 908.

The setting sun

Slowly descended; and with right aspect
Against the eastern gate of paradise,
Levell'd his ev'ning rays. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

4. Direction towards any point; view; position.

I have built a strong wall, faced to the south aspect with brick. Swift's Last Will.

5. Disposition of any thing to something else; relation.

The light got from the opposite arguings of men of parts, shewing the different sides of things, and their various aspects and probabilities, would be quite lost, if every one were obliged to assent to, and say after the speaker. Locke.

6. Disposition of a planet to other planets.

There's some ill planet reigns,
I must be patient till the heavens look
With an aspect more favourable. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
Not unlike that which astrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aspect the one to the other. Wotton.
To the blank moon
Her office they prescrib'd: to th' other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite. Paradise Lost.
Why does not every single star shed a separate influence, and have aspects with other stars of their own constellation?
Bentley's Sermons.

To ASPE'CT. v. a. [aspicio, Lat.] To behold.

Happy in their mistake, those people whom
The northern pole aspects; whom fear of death
(The greatest of all human fears) ne'er moves. Temple.

ASPE'CTABLE. adj. [aspectabilis, Lat.] Visible; being the object of sight.

He was the sole cause of this aspectable and perceivable universal. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

To this use of informing us what is in this aspectable world, we shall find the eye well fitted. Ray on Creation.

ASPE'CTION. n. f. [from aspect.] Beholding; view.

A Moorish queen, upon aspection of the picture of Andromeda, conceived and brought forth a fair one. Brown's V. Err.
A'SPEN, or ASP. n. f. [espe, Dutch; asp, Dan. epre, trembling, Sax. Sommer.] See POPLAR, of which it is a species. The leaves of this tree always tremble.

The aspen or asp tree hath leaves much the same with the poplar, only much smaller, and not so white. Mortim. Husb.

The builder oak sole king of forests all,
The aspen, good for statues, the cypress funeral. Spenser.

ASPEN. adj. [from asp or aspen.]

1. Belonging to the asp tree.

Oh! had the monster seen those lily hands
Tremble like aspen leaves upon a lute. Shak. Titus Andron.
No gale disturbs the trees,
Nor aspen leaves confess the gentlest breeze. Gay.

2. Made of aspen wood.

ASPER. adj. [Lat.] Rough; rugged. This word I have found only in the following passage.

All base notes, or very treble notes, give an asper sound; for that the base striketh more air than it can well strike equally. Bacon.

ASP

To ASPERATE. v. a. [aspero, Lat.] To roughen; to make rough or uneven.

Those corpuscles of colour, insinuating themselves into all the pores of the body to be dyed, may asperate its superficies, according to the bigness and texture of the corpuscles. Boyle.

ASPERA'TION. n. f. [from asperate.] A making rough. Dict.

ASPERIFO'LIUS. adj. [from asper, rough, and folium, a leaf, Lat.] One of the divisions of plants, so called from the roughness of their leaves.

ASPERITY. n. f. [asperitas, Lat.]

1. Unevenness; roughness of surface.

Sometimes the pores and asperities of dry bodies are so incommensurate to the particles of the liquor, that they glide over the surface. Boyle.

2. Roughness of sound; harshness of pronunciation.

3. Roughness, or ruggedness of temper; moroseness; sourness; crabbedness.

The charity of the one, like kindly exhalations, will descend in showers of blessings; but the rigour and asperity of the other, in a severe doom upon ourselves. Govern. Tongue.

Avoid all unseemliness and asperity of carriage; do nothing that may argue a peevish or froward spirit. Rogers.

ASPERNA'TION. n. f. [aspernatio, Lat.] Neglect; disregard. D.

A'SPEROUS. adj. [asper, Lat.] Rough; uneven.

Black and white are the most asperous and unequal of colours; so like, that it is hard to distinguish them: black is the most rough. Boyle.

To ASPERSE. v. a. [aspergo, Lat.] To bespatter with censure, or calumny.

In the business of Ireland, besides the opportunity to asperse the king, they were safe enough. Clarendon, b. viii.

Curb that impetuous tongue, nor rashly vain,
And singly mad, asperse the sov'reign reign. Pope's Iliad.

Unjustly poets we asperse,
Truth shines the brighter clad in verse. Swift.

ASPERSION. n. f. [aspersio, Lat.]

1. A sprinkling.

If thou dost break her virgin knot, before
All sanctimonious ceremonies,
No sweet aspersions shall the heav'ns let fall,
To make this contract grow. Shakesp. Tempest.

It exhibits a mixture of new conceits and old; whereas the instauration gives the new unmixed, otherwise than with some little aspersio of the old, for taste's sake. Bacon's Holy War.

2. Calumny; censure.

The same aspersions of the king, and the same grounds of a rebellion. Dryden's Epistle to the Whigs.

ASPHALTICK. adj. [from asphaltos.] Gummy; bituminous.

And with asphaltick slime, broad as the gate,

Deep to the roots of hell, the gather'd beach

They fasten'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

ASPHALTOS. n. f. [ἀσφαλτος, bitumen.] A solid, brittle, black, bituminous, inflammable substance, resembling pitch, and chiefly found swimming on the surface of the Lacus Asphaltites, or Dead sea, where anciently stood the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. It is cast up from time to time, in the nature of liquid pitch, from the earth at the bottom of this sea; and, being thrown upon the water, swims like other fat bodies, and condenses gradually by the heat of the sun, and the salt that is in it. It burns with great vehemence. The Arabs use it for pitching their ships; and much of it was employed in the embalming of the ancients.

ASPHALTUM. n. f. [Lat.] A bituminous stone found near the ancient Babylon, and lately in the province of Neufchâtel; which, mixed with other matters, makes an excellent cement, incorruptible by air, and impenetrable by water; supposed to be the mortar so much celebrated among the ancients, with which the walls of Babylon were laid. Chambers.

A'SPHODEL. n. f. [lilio-asphodelus, Lat.] Day-lily.

The characters are; It hath a root like kingspear; the flower consists of one leaf, which is deeply cut into six segments, and expands in form of a lily; the flower is succeeded by an oval fruit, which contains several roundish seeds. The species are, 1. The yellow asphodel. 2. The red asphodel. These two sorts are very common in most of the English gardens; the first is often called by the gardeners the yellow tuberose, from its having a very agreeable scent; but the other is called the day-lily, or the tuberose orange-lily, in most places. They are both hardy plants, and multiply exceedingly, if suffered to remain two or three years undisturbed; especially the red sort, which sends forth offsets. The best time to transplant their roots is in September or October. They will grow in any soil or situation; the yellow produces its flowers in May and June; the red a month later. Millar.

Asphodels were by the ancients planted near burying-places, in order to supply the manes of the dead with nourishment.

By those happy souls who dwell

In yellow meads of asphodel. Pope's St. Cecilia.

A'SPICK. n. f. [See ASP.] The name of a serpent.

Why did I 'scape th' invenom'd aspick's rage,

And all the fiery monsters of the desert,

To see this day?

Addison's Cato.

ASSA'SSIN. } n. f. [assassin, Fr. a word brought originally ASSA'SSINATE. } from Asia, where, about the time of the holy war, there was a set of men called assassins, as is supposed for Arfacidæ, who killed any man, without regard to danger, at the command of their chief.] A murderer; one that kills by treachery, or sudden violence.

In the very moment as the knight withdrew from the duke, this assassinate gave him, with a back blow, a deep wound into his left side.

Wotton.

The Syrian king, who, to surprize

One man, assassin like, had levy'd war,

War unproclaim'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Here hir'd assassins for their gain invade,

And treach'rous pois'ners urge their fatal trade. Dryd. Juv.

When he hears of a murder, she enlarges more on the guilt of the suffering person, than of the assassin. Addison. Spectator.

Orestes brandish'd the revenging sword,

Slew the dire pair, and gave to fun'ral flame

The vile assassin, and adult'rous dame. Pope's Odyssey.

Useful, we grant, it serves what life requires,

But dreadful too, the dark assassin hires. Pope, Epist. iii.

ASSA'SINATE. n. f. [from assassin.] The crime of an assassin; murder.

Were not all assassinates and popular insurrections wrongfully chastised, if the meanness of the offenders indemnified them from punishment?

Pope's Dunciad.

To ASSA'SSINATE. v. a. [from assassin.]

1. To murder by violence.

Help, neighbours, my house is broken open by force, and I am ravished, and like to be assassinated. Dryd. Span. Friar.

What could provoke thy madness

To assassinate so great, so brave a man! A. Philips, D. Moth.

2. To way-lay; to take by treachery. This meaning is perhaps peculiar to Milton.

Such usage as your honourable lords

Afford me, assassinated and betray'd,

Who durst not, with your whole united pow'rs,

In fight withstand one single and unarm'd. Sampf. Agonist.

ASSASSINATION. n. f. [from assassinate.] The act of assassinating; murder by violence.

If it were done, when 'tis done, then 'twere well

It were done quickly: if th' assassination

Could trammel up the consequence, and catch,

With its surcease, success. Shakesp. Macbeth.

The duke finish'd his course by a wicked assassination. Claren.

ASSASSINATOR. n. f. [from assassinate.] Murderer; mankiller; the person that kills another by violence.

To ASSE'VE. } v. a. [assevero, Lat.] To affirm with great
To ASSE'VERATE. } solemnity, as upon oath.
ASSEVERA'TION. n. f. [from asseverate.] Solemn affirmation, as upon oath.
That which you are persuaded of, ye have it no otherwise than by your own only probable collection; and therefore such bold asseverations, as in him were admirable, should, in your mouths, but argue rashness. Hooker, Preface.
Another abuse of the tongue I might add; vehement asseverations upon slight and trivial occasions. Ray on Creation.
The repetition gives a greater emphasis to the words, and agrees better with the vehemence of the speaker in making his asseveration. Broome's Notes on Odyssey.
A'SSHEAD. n. f. [from ass and head.] One flow of apprehension; a blockhead.
Will you help an asshead, and a coxcomb, and a knave, a a thin-faced knave, a gull. Shakesp. Hamlet.
ASSIDU'ITY. n. f. [assiduité, Fr. assiduitas, Lat.] Diligence; closeness of application.
Can he, who has undertaken this, want conviction of the necessity of his utmost vigour and assiduity to acquit himself of it? Rogers.
We observe the address and assiduity they will use to corrupt us. Rogers.
I have, with much pains and assiduity, qualified myself for a nomenclator. Addison. Guardian, N° 107.
ASSIDUOUS. adj. [assiduus, Lat.] Constant in application.
And if by pray'r
Incessant I could hope to change the will
Of him who all things can, I would not cease
To weary him with my assiduous cries. Parad. Lost, b. xi.
The most assiduous talebearers, and bitterest revilers, are oftentimes half-witted people. Government of the Tongue, § 6.
In summer, you see the hen giving herself greater freedoms, and quitting her care for above two hours together; but in winter, when the rigour of the season would chill the principles of life, and destroy the young one, she grows more assiduous in her attendance, and stays away but half the time. Addison. Spectator.
Each still renews her little labour,
Nor juffles her assiduous neighbour. Prior.
ASSIDUOUSLY. adv. [from assiduus.] Diligently; continually.
The trade, that obliges artificers to be assiduously conversant with their materials, is that of glass-men. Boyle.

To ASSO'T. v. a. [from sot; assoter, Fr.] To infatuate; to besot: a word out of use.

But whence they sprung, or how they were begot,
 Uneath is to assure, uneath to weene

That monstrous error which doth some assot. Fairy Queen.
To ASSUA'GE. v. a. [The derivation of this word is uncertain; Minsheu deduces it from adsuadere, or assuaviare; Ju-nius, from ῥῥᾱρ, sweet; from whence Skinner imagines ar-pæ-ran might have been formed.]

1. To mitigate; to soften; to allay.
 Refreshing winds the summer's heats assuage,
 And kindly warmth disarms the winter's rage. Addison.

2. To appease; to pacify.
 Yet is his hate, his rancour ne'er the less,
 Since nought assuageth malice when 'tis told. Fairfax, b. iv.
 This was necessary for the securing the people from their fears; which were capable of being assuaged by no other means. Clarendon, b. viii.

Shall I, t' assuage
 Their brutal rage,
 The regal stem destroy? Dryden's Albion.

3. To ease; as, the medicine assuages pain.

To ASSUA'GE. v. n. To abate.
 God made a wind to pass over the earth, and the waters assuaged. Gen. viii. 1.

ASSUA'GEMENT. n. f. [from assuage.] What mitigates or softens.

Tell me, when shall these weary woes have end,
 Or shall their ruthless torment never cease?
 But all my days in pining languor spend,
 Without hope of assuagement or release. Spenser's Sonnets.

ASSUA'GER. n. f. [from assuage.] One who pacifies or appeases.

ASSUA'SIVE. adj. [from assuage.] Softening; mitigating.

To ASSU'BJUGATE. v. a. [subjugo, Lat.] To submit to.

This valiant lord
 Must not so state his palm, nobly acquir'd;
 Nor by my will assubjugate his merit,
 By going to Achilles. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

ASSUEFACTION. n. f. [assuefacio, Lat.] The state of being accustomed to any thing.

Right and left, as parts inservient unto the motive faculty, are differenced by degrees from use and assuefaction, or according whereto the one grows stronger. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ASSU'ETUDE. n. f. [assuetudo, Lat.] Accustomance; custom.

We see that assuetude of things hurtful, doth make them lose the force to hurt. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 67.

To ASSU'ME. v. a. [assumo, Lat.]

1. To take.
 This when the various God had urg'd in vain,
 He strait assum'd his native form again. Pope.

2. To take upon one's self.
 With ravish'd ears,
 The monarch hears,
Assumes the God,
 Affects to nod,
 And seems to shake the spheres. Dryden's St. Cecilia.

3. To arrogate; to claim or seize unjustly.
 'This makes him over-forward in business, assuming in conversation, and peremptory in answers. Collier of Confidence.

4. To suppose something granted without proof.
 In every hypothesis, something is allowed to be assumed. Boyle.

5. To apply to one's own use; to appropriate.
 His majesty might well assume the complaint and expression of king David. Clarendon, b. viii.

ASSU'MER. n. f. [from assume.] An arrogant man; a man who claims more than his due.

Can man be wise in any course, in which he is not safe too?
 But can these high assumers and pretenders to reason, prove themselves so? South.

ASSU'MING. participial adj. [from assume.] Arrogant; haughty.

His haughty looks, and his assuming air,
 The son of Isis could no longer bear. Dryden.

ASSU'MPSIT. n. f. [assumo, Lat.] A voluntary promise made by word, whereby a man taketh upon him to perform or pay any thing to another: It contains any verbal promise made upon consideration. Cowel.

ASSU'MPTION. n. f. [assumptio, Lat.]

1. The act of taking any thing to one's self.
 The personal descent of God himself, and his assumption of our flesh to his divinity, more familiarly to insinuate his pleasure to us, was an enforcement beyond all methods of wisdom.

2. The supposition, or act of supposing of any thing without farther proof. Hammond's Fundamentals.

A S S

These by way of assumption, under the two general propositions, are intrinsically and naturally good or bad. Norris.

For the assumption, that Christ did such miraculous and supernatural works, to confirm what he said, we need only repeat the message sent by him to John the Baptist. South.

3. The thing supposed; a postulate.

Hold, says the Stoick, your assumption's wrong:

I grant, true freedom you have well defin'd. Dryd. Persius.

4. The taking up any person into heaven, which is supposed by the Romish church of the Blessed Virgin.

Upon the feast of the assumption of the Blessed Virgin, the pope and cardinals keep the vespers. Stillingsf. on Rom. Idolat.

Had Adam done this after a certain period of years, he would have been rewarded with an assumption to eternal felicity.

Wake's Preparation for Death.

ASSU'MPTIVE. adj. [assumptivus, Lat.] That may be assumed.

ASSU'RANCE. n. f. [assurance, French.]

1. Certain expectation.

Though hope be, indeed, a lower and lesser thing than assurance, yet, as to all the purposes of a pious life, it may prove more useful. South.

What encouragement can be given to goodness, beyond the hopes of heaven, and the assurance of an endless felicity? Tillot.

2. Secure confidence; trust.

What man is he, that boasts of fleshly might,
 And vain assurance of mortality,

Which all so soon as it doth come to fight Against spiritual foes, yields by and by. Fairy Queen, b. i.

3. Freedom from doubt; certain knowledge.

I grant that proof from the authority of man's judgment, is not able to work that assurance, which doth grow by a stronger proof. Hooker, b. ii.

'Tis far off,

And rather like a dream, than an assurance
 That my remembrance warrants. Shakesp. Tempest.

The obedient, and the man of practice, shall outgrow all their doubts and ignorances, till persuasion pass into knowledge, and knowledge advance into assurance. South.

Hath he found, in an evil course, that comfortable assurance of God's favour, and good hopes of his future condition, which a religious life would have given him? Tillotson.

4. Firmness; undoubting steadiness.

Men whose consideration will relieve our modesty, and give us courage and assurance in the duties of our profession. Rogers.

5. Confidence; want of modesty; exemption from awe or fear.

My behaviour ill governed, gave you the first comfort; my affection ill hid, hath given you this last assurance. Sidney.

Conversation, when they come into the world, will add to their knowledge and assurance. Locke.

6. Ground of confidence; security given.

The nature of desire itself is no easier to receive belief, than it is hard to ground belief; for as desire is glad to embrace the first shew of comfort, so is desire desirous of perfect assurance.
Sidney, b. ii.

As the conquest was but slight and superficial, so the pope's donation to the Irish submissions were but weak and fickle assurances. Sir J. Davies on Ireland.

None of woman born

Shall harm Macbeth. —

— Then live, Macduff, what need I fear of thee?

But yet I'll make assurance double sure,
 And take a bond of fate; Thou shalt not live. Shak. Macb.

I must confess your offer is the best;
 And, let your father make her the assurance,

She is your own, else you must pardon me,
 If you should die before him, where's her dower.

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

7. Spirit; intrepidity.

With all th' assurance innocence can bring,
 Fearless without, because secure within;

Arm'd with my courage, unconcern'd I see
 This pomp, a shame to you, a pride to me. Dryd. Aureng.

8. Sanguinity; readiness to hope.

This is not the grace of hope, but a good natural assurance or confidence, which Aristotle observes young men to be full of, and old men not so inclined to. Hammond's Pract. Cat.

9. Testimony of credit.

I am a gentleman of blood and breeding,
 And from some knowledge and assurance of you,

Offer this office. Shakesp. King Lear.

We have as great assurance that there is a God, as we could expect to have, supposing that he were. Tillotson, Preface.

10. Conviction.

Such an assurance of things as will make men careful to avoid a lesser danger, ought to awaken men to avoid a greater. Tillot.

11. The same with insurance. See INSURANCE.

To ASSU'RE. v. a. [assurere, Fr. from asscurare, low Latin.]

1. To give confidence by a firm promise.

So when he had assured them with many words, that he would restore them without hurt, according to the agreement, they let him go for the saving of their brethren. 2 Mac. xii. 25.

2. To secure to another.

And, for that dowry, I'll assure her of
Her widowhood, be it that she survives me,
In all my lands and leaves whatsoever.

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

So irresistible an authority cannot be reflected on, without the most awful reverence, even by those whose piety assures its favour to them. Rogers.

3. To make confident; to exempt from doubt or fear; to confer security.

And hereby we know, that we are of the truth, and shall as- sure our hearts before him. 1 John, iii. 19.

I revive

At this last sight; assur'd that man shall live
With all the creatures, and their seed preserve. Parad. Lost.

4. To make secure.

But what on earth can long abide in state?

Or who can him assure of happy day? Spens. Muirpotmos.

5. To affiancé; to betroth.

This diviner laid claim to me, called me Dromio, swore I was assured to her. Shakesp. Comedy of Errors.

ASSURED. participial adj. [from assure.]

1. Certain; indubitable.

It is an assured experience, that flint laid about the bottom of a tree makes it prosper. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 422.

2. Certain; not doubting.

Young princes, close your hands,

— And your lips too; for, I am well assured,
That I did so, when I was first assur'd. Shak. King John.

As when by night the glass

Of Galilæo, less assur'd, observes

Imagin'd lands, and regions, in the moon. Par. Lost, b. v.

3. Immodest; viciously confident.

ASSUREDLY. adv. [from assured.] Certainly; indubitably.

They promis'd me eternal happiness,

And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel

I am not worthy yet to wear: I shall assuredly.

Shakesp. Henry VIII.

God is absolutely good, and so, assuredly, the cause of all that is good; but, of any thing that is evil, he is no cause at all.

Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Assuredly he will stop our liberty, till we restore him his worship. South.

ASSUREDNESS. n. f. [from assured.] The state of being assured; certainty.

ASSURER. n. f. [from assure.]

1. He that gives assurance.

2. He that gives security to make good any loss.

To ASSWAGE. See ASSUAGE.

A'STERISK. n. f. [ἀστέριον.] A mark in printing or writing, in form of a little star; as *.

He also published the translation of the Septuagint by itself, having first compared it with the Hebrew, and noted by aste- risks what was defective, and by obelisks what was redundant.

Grew's Cosmol. Sacra, b. iv.

A'STERISM. n. f. [asterismus, Lat.]

1. A constellation.

Poetry had filled the skies with asterisms, and histories belonging to them; and then astrology devises the feigned virtues and influences of each. Bentley's Sermons.

2. An asterisk, or mark. This is a very improper use.

Dwell particularly on passages with an asterism *; for the observations which follow such a note, will give you a clear light. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

A'STHMA. n. f. [ἄσθμα.] A frequent, difficult, and short respiration, joined with a hissing sound and a cough, especially in the night-time, and when the body is in a prone posture; because then the contents of the lower belly bear so against the diaphragm, as to lessen the capacity of the breast, whereby the lungs have less room to move. Quincy.

An asthma is the inflation of the membranes of the lungs, and of the membranes covering the muscles of the thorax, but does not continue long. Floyer on the Humours.

ASTHMA'TICAL. } adj. [from asthma.] Troubled with an ASTHMA'TICK. } asthma.

In asthmatical persons, we often see, that though the lungs be very much stuffed with tough phlegm, yet the patient may live some months, if not some years. Boyle.

After drinking, our horses are most asthmatick; and, for avoiding the watering of them, we wet their hay.

Floyer on the Humours.

ASTE'RN. adv. [from a and stern.] In the hinder part of the ship; behind the ship.

The galley gives her side, and turns her prow,

While those astern descending down the steep,

Thro' gaping waves behold the boiling deep. Dryden.

To ASTE'RT. v. a. [a word used by Spenser, as it seems, for start, or startle.] To terrify; to startle; to fright.

We deem of death, as doom of ill desert;

But knew we fools what it us brings until,

Die would we daily, once it to expert;

No danger there the shepherd can astert. Spenser's Past.

VOL. I.

ASTO'NIED. particip. adj. A word used in the version of the bible for astonished.

Many were astonied at thee. Isaiah, lii. 14.

To ASTO'NISH. v. a. [astonner, Fr. from attonitus, Lat.] To confound with some sudden passion, as with fear or wonder;
to amaze; to surprise.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,

When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send

Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. Shak. Julius Caesar.

Astonish'd at the voice, he stood amaz'd,

And all around with inward horror gaz'd. Addison's Ovid.

A genius universal as his theme,

Astonishing as chaos. Thomson's Summer.

ASTO'NISHINGNESS. n. f. [from astonish.] Of a nature to excite astonishment.

ASTO'NISHMENT. n. f. [estonnement, Fr.] Amazement; confusion of mind from fear or wonder.

We found, with no less wonder to us, than astonishment to themselves, that they were the two valiant and famous brothers. Sidney, b. ii.

She esteemed this as much above his wisdom, as astonishment is beyond bare admiration. South.

To ASTO'UND. v. a. [astonner, Fr.] To astonish; to confound with fear or wonder. This word is now somewhat obsolete.

These thoughts may startle well, but not astound

The virtuous mind, that ever walks attended

By a strong fiding champion, conscience. Paradise Regain.

ASTRA'DDLE. adv. [from a and straddle.] With one's legs across any thing. Diët.

A'STRAGAL. n. f. [ἀστέριον, the ankle, or ankle-bone.] A little round member, in the form of a ring or bracelet, serving as an ornament at the tops and bottoms of columns. Build. Diët.

We see none of that ordinary confusion, which is the result of quarter rounds of the astragal, and I know not how many other intermingled particulars. Spectator, N° 415.

A'STRAL. adj. [from astrum, Lat.] Starry; relating to the stars.

Some astral forms I must invoke by pray'r,

Fram'd all of purest atoms of the air;

Not in their natures simply good or ill;

But most subservient to bad spirits will. Dryd. Tyran. Love.

ASTRA'Y. adv. [from a and stray.] Out of the right way.

May seem the wain was very evil led,

When such an one had guiding of the way,

That knew not, whether right he went, or else astray. F. 2.

You run astray, for whilst we talk of Ireland, you rip up the original of Scotland. Spenser on Ireland.

Like one that had been led astray

Through the heav'n's wide pathless way. Milt. Il Penseroso.

To ASTRIC'T. v. a. [astringo, Lat.] To contract by applications, in opposition to relax: a word not so much used as con- stringe.

The solid parts were to be relaxed or astric'ted, as they let the humours pass either in too small or too great quantities.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ASTRIC'TION. n. f. [astrictio, Lat.] The act or power of contracting the parts of the body by applications.

Astriction is in a substance that hath a virtual cold; and it worketh partly by the same means that cold doth. Bacon.

This virtue requireth an astriction, but such an astriction as is not grateful to the body; for a pleasing astriction doth rather bind in the nerves than expel them: and therefore such astric- tion is found in things of a harsh taste. Bacon's Nat. History.

Such lenitive substances are proper for dry atrabilarian constitutions, who are subject to astriction of the belly and the piles.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

ASTRIC'TIVE. adj. [from astric't.] Stiptick; of a binding quality. Diët.

ASTRIC'TORY. adj. [astrictorius, Lat.] Astringent; apt to bind. Diët.

ASTRIDE. adv. [from a and stride.] With the legs open.

To lay their native arms aside,

Their modesty, and ride astride. Hudibras.

I saw a place, where the Rhone is so straitened between two rocks, that a man may stand astride upon both at once. Boyle.

ASTRI'FEROUS. adj. [astrifer, Lat.] Bearing, or having stars. Diët.

ASTRI'GEROUS. adj. [astriger, Lat.] Adorned with stars. Diët.

To ASTRINGE. v. a. [astringo, Lat.] To press by contraction; to make the parts draw together.

Tears are caused by a contraction of the spirits of the brain; which contraction, by consequence, astringeth the moisture of the brain, and thereby sendeth tears into the eyes. Bacon.

ASTRINGENCY. n. f. [from astringe.] The power of contracting the parts of the body; opposed to the power of relaxa- tion.

Astriction prohibiteth dissolution; as, in medicines, astrin-gents inhibit putrefaction: and, by astringency, some small quantity of oil of vitriol will keep fresh water long from putrefying.

Bacon's Natural History, N° 342.

Acid, acrid, austere, and bitter substances, by their astrin- gency, create horror, that is, stimulate the fibres. Arbuthnot.

ASTRINGENT. adj. [astringens, Lat.] Binding; contracting; opposed to laxative.

Astringent medicines are binding, which act by the asperity of their particles, whereby they corrugate the membranes, and make them draw up closer. Quincy.

The juice is very astringent, and therefore of slow motion.

Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 641.

What diminisheth sensible perspiration, encreaseth the insensible; for that reason a strengthening and astringent diet often conduceth to this purpose. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'STROGRAPHY. n. f. [from ἀστρον and γραφω.] The science of describing the stars. Dict.

A'STROLABE. n. f. [ἀστρολάβιον, of ἀστρον, and λαβειν, to take.]

1. An instrument chiefly used for taking the altitude of the pole, the sun or stars, at sea.
2. A stereographick projection of the circles of the sphere upon the plain of some great circle. Chambers.

ASTRO'LOGER. n. f. [astrologus, Lat. from ἀστρον and λόγος.]

1. One that, supposing the influences of the stars to have a causal power, professes to foretel or discover events depending on those influences.

Not unlike that which astrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aspect the one to the other. Wotton.

A happy genius is the gift of nature: it depends on the influence of the stars, say the astrologers; on the organs of the body, say the naturalists; it is the particular gift of heaven, say the divines, both christians and heathens. Dryd. Pr. Dufr. Astrologers, that future fates foreflew. Pope.

I never heard a finer satire against lawyers, than that of astrologers, when they pretend, by rules of art, to tell when a suit will end, and whether to the advantage of the plaintiff or defendant. Swift.

2. It was antiently used for one that understood or explained the motions of the planets, without including prediction.

A worthy astrologer now living, who, by the help of perspective glasses, hath found in the stars many things unknown to the ancients, affirms much to have been discovered in Venus. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

ASTROLO'GIAN. n. f. [from astrology.] The same with astrologer.

The twelve houses of heaven, in the form which astrologians use. Camden.

The stars, they say, cannot dispose,

No more than can the astrologian. Hudibras.

ASTROLO'GICAL. } adj. [from astrology.] Relating to astrology;

ASTROLO'GICK. } professing astrology.

Some seem a little astrological, as when they warn us from places of malign influence. Wotton.

No astrologick wizard honour gains,

Who has not oft been banish'd, or in chains. Dryd. Juu.

Astrological prayers seem to me to be built on as good reason as the predictions. Stillingfl. Def. of Disc. on R. Idol.

The poetical fables are more ancient than the astrological influences, that were not known to the Greeks till after Alexander the Great. Bentley's Sermons.

ASTROLO'GICALLY. adv. [from astrology.] In an astrological manner.

TO ASTRO'LOGIZE. v. n. [from astrology.] To practise astrology.

ASTRO'LOGY. n. f. [astrologia, Lat.] The practice of foretelling things by the knowledge of the stars; an art now generally exploded, as without reason.

I know it hath been the opinion of the learned, who think of the art of astrology, that the stars do not force the actions or wills of men. Swift.

ASTRO'NOMER. n. f. [from ἀστρον, a star, and νόμος, a rule or law.] He that studies the celestial motions, and the rules by which they are governed.

The motions of factions under kings, ought to be like the motions, as the astronomers speak of, in the inferiour orbs. Bacon.

The old and new astronomers in vain

Attempt the heav'nly motions to explain. Blackmore.

Since astronomers no longer doubt of the motion of the planets about the sun, it is fit to proceed upon that hypothesis. Locke.

ASTRONO'MICAL. } adj. [from astronomy] Belonging to astro-

ASTRONO'MICK. } nomy.

Our forefathers marking certain mutations to happen in the sun's progress through the zodiack, they registrate and set them down in their astronomical canons. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Can he not pass an astronomick line,

Or does he dread th' imaginary sign,

That he should ne'er advance to either pole. Blackmore.

ASTRONO'MICALLY. adv. [from astronomical.] In an astronomical manner.

ASTRONOMY. n. f. [ἀστρονομία, from ἀστρον, a star, and νόμος, a law, or rule.] A mixed mathematical science teaching the knowledge of the celestial bodies, their magnitudes, motions, distances, periods, eclipses, and order. The origin of astronomy is uncertain; but from Egypt it travelled into Greece, where Pythagoras was the first European who taught that the earth and planets turn round the sun, which stands immoveable in the center; as he himself had been instructed by the Egyptian priests. From the time of Pythagoras, astronomy sunk into neglect, till it was revived by the Ptolemys, kings of Egypt, and the Saracens, after their conquest of that country, having acquired some knowledge of it, brought it from Africa to Spain, and again restored this science to Europe, where it has since received very considerable improvements. Chambers.

To this must be added the understanding of the globes, and the principles of geometry and astronomy. Cowley.

A'STROSCOPY. n. f. [αστρον, a star, and σκοπεω, to view.] Observation of the stars. Dict.

ASTRO-THEOLOGY. n. f. [from astrum, a star, and theologia, divinity.] Divinity founded on the observation of the celestial bodies.

That the diurnal and annual revolutions are the motions of the terraqueous globe, not of the sun, I shew in the preface of my Astro-Theology. Derham's Physico-Theology.

ASU'NDER. adv. [a $\ddot{u}$ nd $\ddot{u}$ ran, Sax.] Apart; separately; not together.

Two indirect lines, the further that they are drawn out, the further they go asunder. Spenser on Ireland.

Sense thinks the planets spheres not much asunder;

What tells us then their distance is so far. Sir J. Davies.

Greedy hope to find

His wish, and best advantage, us asunder. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our state,

Seeks hid advantage to betray us worse;

Which, when asunder, will not prove too hard,

For both together are each other's guard. Dryd. State of Inn.

Born far asunder by the tides of men,

Like adamant and steel they meet agen. Dryd. Fables.

All this metallick matter, both that which continued asunder, and in single corpuscles, and that which was amassed and concreted into nodules, subsided. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

ASY'LUM. n. f. [Lat. ασυλον, from a, not, and συλέω, to pillage.]

A place out of which he that has fled to it, may not be taken; a sanctuary; a refuge.

So sacred was the church to some, that it had the right of an asylum, or sanctuary. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ASY'MMETRY. n. f. [from a, without, and συμμετρία, symmetry.]

1. Contrariety to symmetry; disproportion.

The asymmetries of the brain, as well as the deformities of the legs or face, may be rectified in time. Grew's Cosm. Sacra.

2. This term is sometimes used in mathematicks, for what is more usually called incommensurability; when between two quantities there is no common measure.

A'SYMP'TOTE. n. f. [from a, priv. σύν, with, and πίνω, to fall; which never meet; incoincident.] Asymptotes are right lines, which approach nearer and nearer to some curve; but which, though they and their curve were infinitely continued, would never meet; and may be conceived as tangents to their curves at an infinite distance. Chambers.

Asymptote lines, though they may approach still nearer together, till they are nearer than the least assignable distance, yet, being still produced infinitely, will never meet. Grew's Cosm.

ASYMPTO'TICAL. adj. [from asymptote.] Curves are said to be asymptotical, when they continually approach, without a possibility of meeting.

ASYN'DETON. n. f. [ἀσύνδετον, of a, priv. and συνδέω, to bind together.] A figure in grammar, when a conjunction copulative is omitted in a sentence; as in veni, vidi, vici, & is left out.

AT. prep. [æt, Saxon.]

The great care of God for our salvation must appear in the concern he expressed for our attainment of it. Rogers.

To ATTA'INT. v. a. [attenter, Fr.]

1. To attaint is particularly used for such as are found guilty of some crime or offence, and especially of felony or treason. A man is attainted two ways, by appearance, or by process. Attainder by appearance is by confession, battle, or verdict. Confession is double; one at the bar before the judges, when the prisoner, upon his indictment read, being asked guilty or not guilty, answers guilty, never putting himself upon the verdict of the jury. The other is before the coroner in sanctuary, where he, upon his confession, was in former times constrained to abjure the realm; which kind is called attainder by abjuration. Attainder by battle is, when the party appealed, and choosing to try the truth by combat rather than by jury, is vanquished. Attainder by verdict is, when the prisoner at the bar, answering to the indictment not guilty, hath an inquest of life and death passing upon him, and is by the verdict pronounced guilty. Attainder by process is, where a party flies, and is not found till five times called publickly in the county, and at last outlawed upon his default. Cowel.

Were it not an endless trouble, that no traitor or felon should be attainted, but a parliament must be called. Spenser on Ireland.

I must offend before I be attainted. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

ATTO'RNEY. n. f. [attornatus, low Lat. from tour, Fr. Celui qui vient à tour d'autrui ; qui alterius vices subit.]

1. Such a person as by consent, commandment, or request, takes heed, fees, and takes upon him the charge of other men's business, in their absence. Attorney is either general or special : Attorney general is he that by general authority is appointed to all our affairs or suits ; as the attorney general of the king, which is nearly the same with Procurator Cæsaris in the Roman empire. Attorneys general are made either by the king's letters patent, or by our appointment before justices in eyre, in open court. Attorney special or particular, is he that is employed in one or more causes particularly specified. There are also, in respect of the divers courts, attorneys at large, and attorneys special, belonging to this or that court only. Cowel.

Attorneys in common law, are nearly the same with proctors in the civil law, and solicitors in courts of equity. Attorneys sue out writs or process, or commence, carry on, and defend actions, or other proceedings, in the names of other persons, in the courts of common law. None are admitted to act without having served a clerkship for five years, taking the proper oath, being enrolled, and examined by the judges. The attorney general pleads within the bar. To him come warrants for making out patents, pardons, &c. and he is the principal manager of all law affairs of the crown. Chambers.

I am a subject,

And challenge law : attorneys are deny'd me,

And therefore personally I lay my claim

To mine inheritance.

Shakesp. Richard II.

The king's attorney, on the contrary,

Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confessions,

Of divers witnesses.

Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Despairing quacks with curses fled the place,

And vile attorneys, now an useless race.

Pope, Epist. iii.

2. It was anciently used for those who did any business for another ; now only in law.

I will attend my husband ; it is my office ;

And will have no attorney but myself ;

And therefore let me have him home.

Shak. Com. of Err.

Why should calamity be full of words ?—

— Windy attorneys to their client woes,

Airy succeders of intestate joys.

Shakesp. Richard III.

TO ATTO'RNEY. v. a. [from the noun ; the verb is now no in use.]

1. To perform by proxy.

Their encounters, though not personal, have been royally attornied with interchange of gifts. Shakesp. Winter's Tales

2. To employ as a proxy.

As I was then

Advertising, and holy to your business,

Not changing heart with habit, I am still

Attornied to your service.

Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

ATTO'RNEYSHIP. n. f. [from attorney.] The office of an attorney.

But marriage is a matter of more worth,

Than to be dealt in by attorneyship.

Shakesp. Henry VI.

ATTO'URNMENT. n. f. [attournement, Fr.] An yielding of the tenant to a new lord, or acknowledgment of him to be his lord ; for, otherwise, he that buyeth or obtaineth any lands or tenements of another, which are in the occupation of a third, cannot get possession. Cowel.

TO ATTRACT. v. a. [attraho; attractum, Lat.]

1. To draw to something.

A man should scarce persuade the affections of the loadstone, or that jet and amber attracteth straws and light bodies.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The

The drawing of amber and jet, and other electrick bodies, and the attraction in gold of the spirit of quicksilver at distance; and the attraction of heat at distance; and that of fire to naphtha; and that of some herbs to water, though at distance; and divers others, we shall handle. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Loadstones and touched needles, laid long in quicksilver, have not admitted their attraction. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Attraction may be performed by impulse, or some other means; I use that word, to signify any force by which bodies tend towards one another. Newton's Opticks.

2. The power of alluring or enticing.

Setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms.

Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

ATTRACTIVE. adj. [from attract.]

1. Having the power to draw any thing.

What if the sun

Be centre to the world; and other stars,

By his attractive virtue, and their own,

Incited, dance about him various rounds. Paradise Lost.

Some the round earth's cohesion to secure,

For that hard task employ magnetick power;

Remark, say they, the globe, with wonder own

Its nature, like the fam'd attractive stone.

Blackmore.

Bodies act by the attractions of gravity, magnetism, and electricity; and these instances make it not improbable but there may be more attractive powers than these. Newt. Opt.

2. Inviting; alluring; enticing.

Happy is Hermia, wherefoe'er she lies;

For she hath blessed and attractive eyes.

Shakesp. Midsum. Night's Dream.

I pleas'd, and with attractive graces won,

The most averse, thee chiefly.

Paradise Lost, b. ii.

ATTRACTIVE. n. f. [from attract.] That which draws or incites allurement; except that attractive is of a good or indifferent sense, and allurement generally bad.

The condition of a servant staves him off to a distance; but the gospel speaks nothing but attractives and invitation.

South.

The species are, 1. Common avens.
2. Mountain avens, with large yellow flowers, &c. The first sort grows wild in England, Scotland and Ireland; but the second sort came from the Alps. The first is used in medicine, and in confectionary for feed-cakes. Millar.
AVE'NTURE. n. f. [aventure, Fr.] A mischance, causing a man's death, without felony; as when he is suddenly drowned, or burnt, by any sudden disease falling into the fire or water. See ADVENTURE. Cowel.
A'VENUE. n. f. [avenue, Fr.] It is sometimes pronounced with

A V E

- the accent on the second syllable, as Watts observes; but it is generally placed on the first.]
1. A way by which any place may be entered.
Good guards were set up at all the avenues of the city, to keep all people from going out. Clarendon, b. viii.
Truth is a strong-hold, and diligence is laying siege to it: so that it must observe all the avenues and passies to it. South.
  2. An alley, or walk of trees before a house.
TO AVER. v. a. [averer, Fr. from verum, truth, Lat.] To declare positively, or peremptorily.
The reason of the thing is clear;
Would Jove the naked truth aver. Prior.
Then vainly the philosopher avers,
That reason guides our deed, and instinct theirs.
How can we justly diff'rent causes frame,
When the effects entirely are the same? Prior.
We may aver, though the power of God be infinite, the capacities of matter are within limits. Bentley's Sermons.
  - A'VERAGE. n. f. [averagium, Lat.]
1. In law, that duty or service which the tenant is to pay to the king, or other lord, by his beasts and carriages. Chambers.
2. In navigation, a certain contribution that merchants and others proportionably make towards the losses of such as have their goods cast overboard for the safety of the ship; or of the goods and lives of those in the ship, in a tempest; and this contribution seems to be so called, because it is so proportioned, after the rate of every man's average or goods carried. Cowel.
  3. A small duty which merchants, who send goods in another man's ship, pay to the master thereof for his care of them, over and above the freight. Chambers.
  4. A medium; a mean proportion.
  - AVE'EMENT. n. f. [from aver.]
1. Establishment of any thing by evidence.
To avoid the oath, for avement of the continuance of some estate, which is eigne, the party will sue a pardon. Bacon on Alien.
2. An offer of the defendant to justify an exception, and the act as well as the offer. Blount.
  - AVE'RNAT. n. f. A sort of grape. See VINE.
  - AVERRUNCA'TION. n. f. [from averruncate.] The act of rooting up any thing.
  - TO AVERRU'NCATE. v. a. [averrunco, Lat.] To root up; to tear up by the roots.
Sure some mischief will come of it,
Unless by providential wit,
Or force, we averruncate it. Hudibras.
  - AVERSA'TION. n. f. [from aversor, Lat.]
1. Hatred; abhorrence; turning away with detestation.
Hatred is the passion of defiance, and there is a kind of aversion and hostility included in its essence. South.
2. It is most properly used with from before the object of hate.
There was a stiff aversion in my lord of Essex from applying himself to the earl of Leicester. Wotton.
3. Sometimes with to, less properly.
There is such a general aversion in human nature to contempt, that there is scarce any thing more exasperating. I will not deny, but the excess of the aversion may be levelled against pride. Government of the Tongue, § 7.
  4. Sometimes, very improperly, with towards.
A natural and secret hatred and aversion towards society, in any man, hath somewhat of the savage beast. Bacon.
  - AVE'RSE. adj. [aversus, Lat.]
1. Malign; not favourable.
Their courage languish'd, as their hopes decay'd,
And Pallas, now averse, refus'd her aid. Dryden's Æneid.
2. Not pleased with; unwilling to; having such a hatred as to turn away.
Has thy uncertain bosom ever strove
With the first tumults of a real love?
Hast thou now dreaded, and now bless'd his sway,
By turns averse, and joyful to obey? Prior.
Averse alike to flatter, or offend,
Not free from faults, nor yet too vain to mend. Pope.
3. It has most properly from before the object of aversion.
Laws politick are never framed as they should be, unless presuming the will of man to be inwardly obstinate, rebellious, and averse from all obedience unto the sacred laws of his nature. Hooker, b. i.
They believed all who objected against their undertaking to be averse from peace. Clarendon, b. viii.
These cares alone her virgin breast employ,
Averse from Venus and the nuptial joy. Pope.
  4. Very frequently, but improperly, to.
He had, from the beginning of the war, been very averse to any advice of the privy council. Clarendon, b. viii.
Diodorus tells us of one Charondos, who was averse to all innovation, especially when it was to proceed from particular persons. Swift on the Dissensions in Athens and Rome.
  - AVE'RSELY. adv. [from averse.]
1. Unwillingly.
2. Backwardly.
Not only they want those parts of secretion, but it is emitted aversely, or backward, by both sexes. Brown's Vulgar Err.

AUG

AVE'RSENES. n. f. [from averse.] Unwillingness; backwardness.
The corruption of man is in nothing more manifest, than in his averseness to entertain any friendship or familiarity with God.

AVE'RSION. n. f. [aversion, Fr. aversio, Lat.]

1. Hatred; dislike; detestation; such as turns away from the object.
What if with like aversion I reject
Riches and realms?

2. It is used most properly with from before the object of hate.
They had an inward aversion from it, and were resolved to prevent it by all possible means.

With men these considerations are usually causes of despite, disdain, or aversion from others; but with God, so many reasons of our greater tenderness towards others.

The same adhesion to vice, and aversion from goodness, will be a reason for rejecting any proof whatsoever.

3. Sometimes, less properly, with to.
A freeholder is bred with an aversion to subjection.

I might borrow illustrations of freedom and aversion to receive new truths from modern astronomy.

4. Sometimes with for.
The Lucques would rather throw themselves under the government of the Genoese, than submit to a state for which they have so great aversion.

This aversion of the people for the late proceedings of the commons, might be improved to good uses.

5. Sometimes, very improperly, with towards.
His aversion towards the house of York was so predominant, as it found place not only in his councils but in his bed.

6. The cause of aversion.
They took great pleasure in compounding law-suits among their neighbours; for which they were the aversion of the gentlemen of the long robe.

Self-love and reason to one end aspire;
Pain their aversion, pleasure their desire.

TO AVERT. v. a. [averto, Lat.]

1. To turn aside; to turn off.
I beseech you
T' avert your liking a more worthy way,
Than on a wretch.

2. To put by, as a calamity.
O Lord! avert whatsoever evil our swerving may threaten unto his church.

Diversity of conjectures made many, whose conceits averted from themselves the fortune of that war, to become careless and secure.

These affections earnestly fix our minds on God, and forcibly avert from us those things which are displeasing to him, and contrary to religion.

Thro' threaten'd lands they wild destruction throw,
Till ardent prayer averts the publick woe.

AUF. n. f. [of alf, Dutch.] A fool, or silly fellow.

A'UGER. n. f. [egger, Dut.] A carpenter's tool to bore holes with.
The auger hath a handle and bit; its office is to make great round holes. When you use it, the stuff you work upon is commonly laid low under you, that you may the easier use your strength; for in twisting the bit about by the force of both your hands, on each end of the handle one, it cuts great chips out of the stuff.

AUGHT. pronoun. [auht, aphr, Saxon. It is sometimes, improperly, written ought.] Any thing.

If I can do it,
By aught that I can speak in his dispraise,
She shall not long continue love to him.

They may, for aught I know, obtain such substances as may induce the chymists to entertain other thoughts.

But go, my son, and see if aught be wanting
Among thy father's friends.

TO AUGMENT. v. a. [augmenter, Fr.] To encrease; to make bigger, or more.

Some cur'd weeds her cunning hand did know,
That could augment his harm, encrease his pain.

Rivers, though they continue the denomination of their first stream, have streams added to them in their passage, which enlarge and augment them.

TO AUGMENT. v. n. To encrease; to grow bigger.
But as his heat with running did augment,
Much more his sight encreas'd his hot desire.

The rocks are from their old foundations rent;
The winds redouble, and the rains augment;
The waves on heaps are dash'd.

A'UGMENT. n. f. [augmentum, Lat.]

1. Encrease.
You shall find this augment of the tree to be without the diminution of one drachm of the earth.

2. State of encrease.
Discutients are improper in the beginning of inflammations but proper, when mixed with repellents, in the augment.

AUGMENTA'TION. n. f. [from augment.]

1. The act of encreasing or making bigger.
Those who would be zealous against regular troops after a peace, will promote an augmentation of those on foot.

AUG

2. The state of being made bigger.
What modification of matter can make one embryo capable of so prodigiously vast augmentation, while another is confined to the minuteness of an insect.

3. The thing added, by which another is made bigger.
By being glorified, it does not mean that he doth receive any augmentation of glory at our hands; but his name we glorify, when we testify our acknowledgment of his glory.

AUGMENTATION Court. A court erected by king Henry the eighth, for the increase of the revenues of his crown, by the suppression of monasteries.

A'UGRE. n. f. A carpenter's tool. See AUGER.
Your temples burned in the cement, and
Your franchises, whereon you stood, confin'd
Into an augre's bore.

AUGRE-HOLE. n. f. [from augre and hole.] A hole made by boring with an augre.
What should be spoken here,
Where our fate hid within an augre-hole,
May rush and seize us?

A'UGUR. n. f. [augur, Lat.] One who pretends to predict by omens, particularly by the flight of birds.
What say the augurs?—
—They would not have you stir forth to-day:
Plucking the entrails of an offering forth,
They could not find a heart within the beast.

Calchas, the sacred seer, who had in view
Things present and the past, and things to come foreknew:
Supreme of augurs.

As I and mine consult thy augur,
Grant the glad omen; let thy fav'rite rise
Propitious, ever soaring from the right.

TO A'UGUR. v. n. [from augur.] To guess; to conjecture by signs.
The people love me, and the sea is mine,
My pow'r's a crescent, and my aug'ring hope
Says it will come to the full.

Fought for a crown and bright Lavinia's bed;
So will I meet thee hand to hand oppos'd;
My aug'ring mind assures the same success.

TO A'UGURATE. v. n. [auguror, Lat.] To judge by augury.
AUGURA'TION. n. f. [from augur.] The practice of augury, or of foretelling by events and prodigies.

And Claudius Pulcher underwent the like success, when he continued the tripudiary augurations.

A'UGURER. n. f. [from augur.] The same with augur.
These apparent prodigies,
The unaccustom'd terror of this night,
And the persuasion of his augurers,
May hold him from the capitol to-day.

A'UGURIAL. adj. [from augury.] Relating to augury.
On this foundation were built the conclusions of southsayers, in their augurial and tripudiary divinations.

TO A'UGURISE. v. n. [from augur.] To practise divination by augury.

A'UGUROS. adj. [from augur.] Predicting; prescient; foreboding.
So fear'd
The fair-man'd horses, that they flew back, and their chariots turn'd, Presaging in their augurous hearts the labours that they mourn'd.

A'UGURY. n. f. [augurium, Lat.]

1. The act of prognosticating by omens or prodigies.
The winds are chang'd, your friends from danger free,
Or I renounce my skill in augury.

She knew by augury divine,
Venus would fail in her design.

2. The rules observed by augurs.
The goddess has such an aversion to ye, that you are particularly excluded out of all auguries.

3. An omen or prediction.
Thy face and thy behaviour,
Which, if my augury deceive me not,
Witness good breeding.

What if this death, which is for him design'd,
Had been your doom (far be that augury!)
And you not, Aurengzebe, condemn'd to die.

The pow'rs we both invoke,
To you, and yours, and mine, propitious be,
And firm our purpose with an augury.

AUGU'ST. adj. [augustus, Lat.] Great; grand; royal; magnificent; awful.
There is nothing so contemptible, but antiquity can render it august and excellent.

The Trojan chief appear'd in open fight,
August in visage, and serenely bright;
His mother goddess, with her hands divine,
Had form'd his curling locks, and made his temples shine.

A'UGUST. n. f. [augustus, Lat.] The name of the eighth month from January inclusive.

August was dedicated to the honour of Augustus Cæsar, because, in the same month, he was created consul, thrice triumpher in Rome, subdued Egypt to the Roman empire, and made an end of civil wars; being before called Sextilis, or the sixth from March. Peacham.

AUGUSTNESS. n. f. [from august.] Elevation of look; dignity; loftiness of mien or aspect.

AVIARY. n. f. [from avis, Lat. a bird.] A place inclosed to keep birds in.

In aviaries of wire, to keep birds of all sorts, the Italians bestow vast expence; including great scope of ground, variety of bushes, trees of good height, running waters, and sometimes a stove annexed, to contemper the air in the winter. Wotton's Architecture.

Look now to your aviary; for now the birds grow sick of their feathers. Evelyn's Kalendar.

AVIDITY. n. f. [avidité, Fr. aviditas, Lat.] Greediness; eagerness; appetite; insatiable desire.

To AVIZE. v. a. [aviser, Fr.] A word out of use.

1. To counsel.

With that, the husbandman 'gan him avize,
That it for him was fittest exercise. Spens. Hubb. Tale.

2. With a reciprocal pronoun, to bethink himself; s'aviser, Fr.

But him avizing, he that dreadful deed
Forbore, and rather chose, with scornful shame,
Him to avenge. Spenser's Hubberd's Tale.

3. To consider.

No power he had to stir, nor will to rise,
That when the careful knight 'gan well avize,
He lightly left the foe. Fairy Queen, b. i.

AWKWARD. See AWKWARD.

AULD. adj. [alb, Sax.] A word now obsolete; but still used in the Scotch dialect.

'Tis pride that pulls the country down;
Then take thine auld cloak about thee. Shakesp. Othello.

AULETICK. adj. [auleticus, Lat.] Belonging to pipes. Dict.

AULICK. adj. [aulicus, Lat.] Belonging to the court.

AULN. n. f. [aulne, Fr.] A French measure of length; an ell.

To AUMAIL. v. a. [from maille, Fr. the mesh of a net; whence a coat of amail, a coat with network of iron.] To variegate; to figure.

In golden buskins of costly cordwaine,
All hard with golden bendes, which were entail'd
With curious anticks, and full fair aumail'd. Fairy Queen.

AU'MBRY. See AMBRY.

AUNT. n. f. [tante, Fr. amita, Lat.] A father or mother's sister; correlative to nephew or niece.

Who meets us here? my niece Plantagenet,
Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Glo'ster. Shak. R. III.

She went to plain work, and to purling brooks,
Old fashion'd halls, dull aunts, and croaking rooks. Pope.

AVOCADO. n. f. [Span. Perfisa, Lat.] The name of a plant.

This plant hath a rose-shaped flower, consisting of several leaves, which are ranged in a circle; from whose middle rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a soft, fleshy, pear-shaped fruit, in which is an hard stone or seed, having two lobes, which is included in a membrane or pericardium.

The tree grows in great plenty in the Spanish West Indies, as also in the island of Jamaica; and hath been transplanted into the English settlements in America, upon account of its fruit, which is very necessary for the support of life. The fruit is of itself very insipid, for which reason they generally eat it with the juice of lemons and sugar, to give it a poignancy. This tree, in warm countries where it is planted, grows to the height of thirty feet, with a trunk as large as common apple-trees; the bark smooth and of an ash colour; the branches are beset with pretty large oblong smooth leaves, of a deep green colour throughout the year. The flowers and fruit are produced towards the extremity of the branches. Millar.

To AVOCATE. v. a. [avoco, Lat.] To call off from business; to call away.

Their divesture of mortality dispenses them from those laborious and avocating duties to distressed christians, and their secular relations, which are here requisite. Boyle.

AVOCATION. n. f. [from avocate.]

1. The act of calling aside.

The bustle of business, the avocations of our senses, and the din of a clamorous world, are impediments. Glanville's Scep.

Stir up that remembrance, which his many avocations of business have caused him to lay aside. Dryd. Aurengz. Pref.

2. The business that calls; or the call that summons away.

It is a subject that we may make some progress in its contemplation within the time, that the ordinary time of life, and the permission of necessary avocations, a man may employ in such a contemplation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

God does frequently inject into the soul blessed impulses to duty, and powerful avocations from sin. South.

By the secular cares and avocations which accompany marriage, the clergy have been furnished with skill in common life. Atterbury.

To AVOID. v. a. [vuider, Fr.]

1. To shun; to escape.

The wisdom of pleasing God, by doing what he commands, and avoiding what he forbids. Tillotson.

2. To endeavour to shun.

The fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it. Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.

3. To evacuate; to quit.

What have you to do here, fellow? pray you, avoid the house. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

If any rebel should be required of the prince confederate, the prince confederate should command him to avoid the country. Bacon's Henry VII.

He desired to speak with some few of us: whereupon six of us only stayed, and the rest avoided the room. Bacon's N. Atl.

4. To oppose; to hinder effect.

The removing that which caused putrefaction, doth prevent and avoid putrefaction. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 340.

To AVOID. v. n.

1. To retire.

And Saul cast the javelin; for he said, I will smite David even to the wall with it: and David avoided out of his presence twice. 1 Sam. xviii. 11.

2. To become void or vacant.

Bishopricks are not included under benefices: so that if a person takes a bishoprick, it does not avoid by force of that law of pluralities, but by the ancient common law. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

AVOIDABLE. adj. [from avoid.] That which may be avoided, shunned, or escaped.

Want of exactness in such nice experiments is scarce avoidable. Boyle.

To take several things for granted, is hardly avoidable to any one, whose task it is to shew the falsehood or improbability of any truth. Locke.

AVOIDANCE. n. f. [from avoid.]

1. The act of avoiding.

It is appointed to give us vigour in the pursuit of what is good, or in the avoidance of what is hurtful. Watts's Logick.

2. The course by which any thing is carried off.

For avoidances, and drainings of water, where there is too much, we shall speak of. Bacon's Nat. History, N° 600.

I'll deliver all,

And promise you calm seas, auspicious gales,

And sails expeditious. Shakesp. Tempest.

A pure, an active, an auspicious flame,

And bright as heav'n from whence the blessing came. Roscommon.

Two battles your auspicious cause has won;

Thy sword can perfect what it has begun;

And, from your walls, dislodge that haughty son. Dryden.

AUSPI'CIOUSLY. adv. [from auspicious.] Happily; prosperously;

with prosperous omens.

AUSPI'CIOUSNESS. n. f. [from auspicious.] Prosperity; happiness.

AUSTERE. adj. [austerus, Lat.]

1. Severe; harsh; rigid.

When men represent the Divine nature, as an austere and rigorous master, always lifting up his hand to take vengeance; such conceptions must unavoidably raise terror. Rogers.

Austere Saturnius, say,

From whence this wrath? or who controuls thy sway? Pope.

2. Sower of taste; harsh.

Th' austere and pond'rous juices they sublime,

Make them ascend the porous soil, and climb

The orange-tree, the citron, and the lime. Blackm.

Austere wines, diluted with water, cool more than water alone, and at the same time do not relax. Arbuth. on Aliments.

AUSTERE'LY. adv. [from austere.] Severely; rigidly.

Ah! Luciana, did he tempt thee so?

Might'st thou perceive austere'ly in his eye,

That he did plead in earnest, yea or no?

Look'd he or red, or pale, or sad, or merrily?

Shakesp. Comedy of Errors.

Hypocrites austere'ly talk

Of purity, and place, and innocence. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

AUSTERE'NESS. n. f. [from austere.]

1. Severity; strictness; rigour.

My unsoil'd name, th' austere'ness of my life,

May vouch against you; and my place i' th' state

Will so your accusation overweigh. Shak. Measure for M.

2. Roughness in taste.

AUSTERITY. n. f. [from austere.]

1. Severity; mortified life; strictness.

Now, Marcus Cato, our new consul's spy,

What is your sower austerity sent t' explore? B. Johnson's Catil.

What was that snaky-headed Gorgon shield

That wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin,

Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone,

But rigid looks of chaste austerity,

And noble grace, that dash'd brute violence

With sudden adoration and blank awe? Milton.

This prince kept the government, and yet lived in this convent with all the rigour and austerity of a capuchin. Add. Italy.

2. Cruelty; harsh discipline.

Let not austerity breed servile fear;

No wanton sound offend her virgin ear. Roscommon.

A'USTRAL. adj. [australis, Lat.] Southern; as the austral signs.

TO A'USTRALIZE. v. n. [from auster, the south wind, Lat.] To tend towards the south.

Steel and good iron discover a verticity, or polary faculty;

whereby they do septentriate at one extreme, and australize at another. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 2.

A'USTRINE. adj. [from austrinus, Lat.] Southern; southernly.

AUTHEN'TICAL. adj. [from authentick.] The same with authentic.

AUTHEN'TICALLY. adv. [from authentical.] After an authentic manner; with all the circumstances requisite to procure authority.

This point is dubious, and not yet authentically decided.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 5.

Conscience never commands or forbids any thing authentically, but there is some law of God which commands or forbids it first. South.

AUTHEN'TICALNESS. n. f. [from authentical.] The quality of being authentic; genuineness; authority.

Nothing can be more pleasant than to see a circle of these virtuoso's about a cabinet of medals, descanting upon the value, rarity, and authenticity of the several pieces.

Addison on ancient Medals.

AUTHENTI'CITY. n. f. [from authentick.] Authority; genuineness; the being authentic.

AUTHENTICK. adj. [authenticus, Lat.] That which has every thing requisite to give it authority, as an authentic register. It is used in opposition to any thing by which authority is destroyed, as authentic, not counterfeit. It is never used of persons.

Thou art wont his great authentic will Interpreter through highest heav'n to bring. Par. Lost, b. iii.

She joy'd th' authentic news to hear,

Of what she guess'd before, with jealous fear. Cowley.

AUTHE'NTICKNESS. n. f. [from authentick.] The same with authenticity.

AUTHOR. n. f. [author, Lat.]

1. The first beginner or mover of any thing; he to whom any thing owes its original.

That law, the author and observer whereof is one only God, to be blessed for ever. Hooker, b. i.

The author of that which causeth another thing to be, is author of that thing also which thereby is caused. Hooker, b. iii.

I'll never

Be such a gosling to obey instinct; but stand
As if a man was author of himself,
And knew no other kin. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Thou art my father, thou my author, thou
My being gav'st me; whom should I obey,
But thee? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

But Faunus came from Picus, Picus drew
His birth from Saturn, if records be true.
Thus king Latinus, in the third degree,
Had Saturn author of his family. Dryden, Æneid vii.

If the worship of false Gods had not blinded the heathen, instead of teaching to worship the sun, and dead heroes, they would have taught us to worship our true Author and benefactor, as their ancestors did under the government of Noah and his sons, before they corrupted themselves. Newton's Opticks.

2. The efficient; he that effects or produces any thing.

That which is the strength of their amity, shall prove the immediate author of their variance. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopat.

Now while the tortur'd savage turns around,
And flings about his foam, impatient of the wound;
The wound's great author close at hand provokes
His rage. Dryden's Fables.

From his loins

New authors of dissention spring; from him
Two branches, that in hosting long contend
For sov'reign sway. Philips.

3. The first writer of any thing; distinct from the translator or compiler.

To stand upon every point in particulars, belongeth to the first author of the story. 2 Macc. ii. 30.

An author has the choice of his own thoughts and words, which a translator has not. Dryden.

4. A writer in general.

Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,
That the land Salike lies in Germany. Shakesp. Henry V.

AUTHORITATIVE. adj. [from authority.]

1. Having due authority.

2. Having an air of authority.

I dare not give them the authoritative title of aphorisms, which yet may make a reasonable moral prognostick. Wotton.

The two worthies have done mischief, the mock authoritative manner of the one, and the insipid mirth of the other. Swift's Examiner, N<sup>o</sup> 15.

AUTHORITATIVELY. adv. [from authoritative.]

1. In an authoritative manner; with a shew of authority.

2. With due authority.

No law that is foreign binds here in England, till it be received, and authoritatively engrafted, into the law of England. Hale's History of Law.

AUTHORITATIVENESS. n. f. [from authoritative.] An acting by authority; authoritative appearance. Dict.

AUTHORITY. n. f. [auctoritas, Lat.]

1. Legal power.

Idle old man,

That still would manage those authorities,
That he hath given away! Shakesp. King Lear.

I know, my lord,

If law, authority, and pow'r deny not,
It will go hard with poor Antonio. Shakesp. Merch. of Ven.

Power arising from strength, is always in those that are governed, who are many: but authority arising from opinion, is in those that govern, who are few. Temple.

Adam's sovereignty, that by virtue of being proprietor of the whole world, he had any authority over men, could not have been inherited by any of his children. Locke.

2. Influence; credit.

The woods are fitter to give rules than cities, where those that call themselves civil and rational, go out of their way, by the authority of example. Locke.

3. Power; rule.

But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. 1 Tim. ii. 12.

4. Support; justification; countenance.

Do'st thou expect th' authority of their voices,
Whose silent wills condemn thee? Ben. Johnf. Catiline.

5. Testimony.

Something I have heard of this, which I would be glad to find by so sweet an authority confirmed. Sidney, b. ii.

A U T

We urge authorities in things that need not, and introduce the testimony of ancient writers, to confirm things evidently believed. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 6.

Having been so hardy as to undertake a charge against the philosophy of the schools, I was liable to have been overborn by a torrent of authorities. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica, Pref.

6. Weight of testimony; credibility.

They consider the main consent of all the churches in the whole world, witnessing the sacred authority of scriptures, ever since the first publication thereof, even till this present day and hour. Hooker, b. v. § 22.

AUTHORIZA'TION. n. f. [from authorize.] Establishment by authority.

The obligation of laws arises not from their matter, but from their admission and reception, and authorization in this kingdom. Hale's History of Law.

TO AUTHORIZE. v. a. [autoriser, Fr.]

1. To give authority to any person.

Making herself an impudent suitor, authorizing herself very much, with making us see, that all favour and power depended upon her. Sidney, b. ii.

Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill,
Till some safe crisis authorize their skill. Dryden.

2. To make any thing legal.

Yourself first made that title which I claim,
First bid me love, and authoriz'd my flame. Dryd. Aurengz.

My prayers are heard,
And I have nothing farther to desire,
But Sancho's leave to authorize our marriage. Dryd. Sp. Fr.

To have countenanced in him irregularity and disobedience to that light which he had, would have been, to have authorized disorder, confusion, and wickedness in his creatures. Locke.

3. To establish any thing by authority.

Lawful it is to devise any ceremony, and to authorize any kind of regiment, no special commandment being thereby violated. Hooker, b. iii. § 4.

Those forms are best which have been longest received and authorized in a nation by custom and use. Temple.

4. To justify; to prove a thing to be right.

All virtue lies in a power of denying our own desires, where reason does not authorize them. Locke.

5. To give credit to any person or thing.

Although their intention be sincere, yet doth it notoriously strengthen vulgar error, and authorize opinions injurious unto truth. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 9.

Be a person in vogue with the multitude, he shall authorize any nonsense, and make incoherent stuff, seasoned with twang and tautology, pass for rhetorick. South.

equinox, and ending at the solstice; popularly, autumn comprises August, September, and October.

For I will board her, though she chide as loud
As thunder, when the clouds in autumn crack. As you like it.
I would not be over confident, till he hath passed a spring or autumn. Wifeman's Surgery.

The starving brood,
Void of sufficient sustenance, will yield
A slender autumn.

Philips.

While autumn nodding o'er the yellow plain,
Comes jovial on; the Dorick reed once more Well pleas'd I'll tune. Thomson's Autumn.

AUTUMNAL. adj. [from autumn.] Belonging to autumn; produced in autumn.

No spring, or summer's beauty, hath such grace,
As I have seen in one autumnal face. Donne.

Thou shalt not long
Rule in the clouds; like an autumnal star,
Or lightning, thou shalt fall. Milt. Par. Lost, b. iv. l. 620.
Bind now up your autumnal flowers, to prevent sudden gusts, which will prostrate all. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows. Pope.

AVULSION. n. f. [from avulso, Lat.] The act of pulling one thing from another.

Spare not the little offsprings, if they grow
Redundant; but the thronging clusters thin
By kind avulsion. Philips.

The pressure of any ambient fluid can be no intelligible cause of the cohesion of matter; though such a pressure may hinder the avulsion of two polished superficies one from another, in a line perpendicular to them. Locke.

AUXESIS. n. f. [Latin.] An encreasing; an exornation, when, for amplification, a more grave and magnificent word is put instead of the proper word. Smith's Rhetorick.

AUXILIAR. n. f. [from auxilium, Lat.] Helper; assistant;
AUXILIARY. n. f. confederate.

In the strength of that power, he might, without the auxi- liaries of any further influence, have determined his will to a full choice of God. South.

There are, indeed, a sort of underling auxiliars to the difficulty of a work, called commentators and critics. Pope.

AUXILIAR. adj. [from auxilium, Lat.] Assistant; helping;
AUXILIARY. n. f. confederate.

The giant brood,
That fought at Thebes and Ilium on each side,
Mix'd with auxiliar gods. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

Their tractates are little auxiliary unto ours; nor afford us any light to detenebrate this truth. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

There is not the smallest capillary vein but it is present with,
and auxiliary to it, according to its use. Hale's Orig. of Mank.

Nor from his patrimonial heav'n alone
Is Jove content to pour his vengeance down;
Aid from his brother of the seas he craves,
To help him with auxiliary waves. Dryden.

AUXILIARY Verb. A verb that helps to conjugate other verbs.

In almost all languages, some of the commonest nouns and verbs have many irregularities; such are the common auxiliary verbs, to be and to have, to do and to be done, &c. Watts.

AUXILIA'TION. n. f. [from auxiliatus, Lat.] Help; aid; succour. Diët.

TO AWA'IT. v. a. [from a and wait. See WAIT.]

1. To expect; to wait for.
Even as the wretch condemn'd to lose his life,
Awaits the falling of the murd'ring knife. Fairfax, b. iv.

Between the rocky pillars Gabriel sat,
Chief of th' angelick guards, awaiting night. Par. Lost, b. iv.

2. To attend; to be in store for.
To shew thee what reward
Awaits the good; the rest, what punishment. Par. L. b. xi.

Unless his wrath be appeased, an eternity of torments awaits the objects of his displeasure. Rogers.

AWA'IT. n. f. [from the verb.] Ambush. See WAIT.

And least mishap the most bliss alter may?
For thousand perils lie in close await

About us daily, to work our decay. Spenser's Muirpotmos.

TO AWA'KE. v. a. [peccan, Sax. To awake has the preterite
awoke, or, as we now more commonly speak, awaked.]

1. To rouse out of sleep.
Take heed,
How you awake our sleeping sword of war. Shakefp. Hen. V.

Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep. John, xi. 11.

2. To raise from any state resembling sleep.
Hark, hark, the horrid sound
Has rais'd up his head:
As awak'd from the dead,
And amaz'd he stirs round. Dryden's St. Cecilia.

3. To put into new action.
The fair
Repairs her smiles, awakens ev'ry grace,
And calls forth all the wonders of her face. Pope.

A W A

TO AWA'KE. v. n. To break from sleep; to cease to sleep:

Alack, I am afraid, they have awak'd;
And 'tis not done. Shakefp. Macbeth.
I awaked up last of all, as one that gathereth after the grapegatherers. Ecclus, xxxiii. 16.

AWA'KE. adj. [from the verb.] Without sleep; not sleeping.
Imagination is like to work better upon sleeping men, than men awake. Bacon's Nat. History, N° 955.

Cares shall not keep him on the throne awake,
Nor break the golden slumbers he would take. Dryden.

TO AWA'KEN. v. a. and v. n. See AWAKE.

TO AWA'RD. v. a. [derived by Skinner, somewhat improbably, from pearb, Sax. towards.]

1. To adjudge; to give any thing by a judicial sentence.
A pound of that same merchant's flesh is thine;
The court awards it, and the law doth give it.

Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.

A church which allows salvation to none without it, nor awards damnation to almost any within it. South.

It advances that grand business, and according to which their eternity hereafter will be awarded. Decay of Piety.

Satisfaction for every affront cannot be awarded by stated laws. Collier on Duelling.

2. To judge; to determine.
Th' unwise award to lodge it in the tow'rs,
An off'ring sacred. Pope's Odyssey, b. viii. l. 555.

AWA'RD. n. f. [from the verb.] Judgment; sentence; determination.

Now hear th' award, and happy may it prove
To her, and him who best deserves her love. Dryden's Fab.

Affection bribes the judgment, and we cannot expect an equitable award, where the judge is made a party. Glanville's Sceps.

To urge the foe,
Prompted by blind revenge and wild despair,
Were to refuse th' awards of providence. Addison's Cato.

AWA'RE. adv. [from a and ware; an old word for cautious; it is however, perhaps an adjective; gepawian, Sax.] Vigilant;
in a state of alarm; attentive.

Ere I was aware, I had left myself nothing but the name of a king. Sidney.

Ere sorrow was aware, they made his thoughts bear away something else besides his own sorrow. Sidney's Arcadia.

Temptations of prosperity insinuate themselves; so that we are but little aware of them, and less able to withstand them.

Atterbury's Sermons.

TO AWA'RE. v. n. To beware; to be cautious.
So warn'd he them, aware themselves; and Instant, without disturb, they took alarm. Par. Lost, b. vi.

AWA'Y. adv. [apeg, Saxon.]

1. Absent.
They could make
Love to your dress, although your face were away.

Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

It is impossible to know properties that are so annexed to it, that any of them being away, that essence is not there. Locke.

2. From any place or person.
I have a pain upon my forehead here——
—Why that's with watching; 'twill away again.

Shakefp. Othello.

When the fowls came down upon the carcases, Abraham drove them away again. Gen. xv. 11.

Would you youth and beauty stay,
Love hath wings, and will aw y. Waller.

Summer suns roll unperceiv'd away. Pope.

3. Let us go.
Away, old man; give me thy hand; away;
King Lear hath lost, he and his daughter ta'en;
Give me thy hand. Come on. Shakefp. King Lear.

4. Begone.
Away, and glister like the god of war,
When he intendeth to become the field. Shakefp. King John.

I'll to the woods among the happier brutes:
Come, let's away; hark, the still horn resounds.

Smith's Phædra and Hippolitus.

Away, you flatt'rer!

Nor charge his gen'rous meaning. Rowe's Jane Shore.

5. Out of one's own hands; into the power of something else.
It concerns every man, who will not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, to enquire into these matters. Tillotson.

6. It is often used with a verb; as, to drink away an estate; to idle away a manor; that is, to drink or idle till an estate or manor is gone.

He play'd his life away. Pope.

7. On the way; on the road: perhaps this is the original import of the following phrase.
Sir Valentine, whither away so fast? Sh. T. G. of Verona.

8. Perhaps the phrase, he cannot away with, may mean he cannot travel with; he cannot bear the company.

She never could away with me.——Never, never: she would always say, she could not abide master Shallow.

Shakefp. Henry IV.

9. Away

A W K

9. Away with. Throw away; take away.

If you dare think of deserving our charms,

Away with your sheephooks, and take to your arms. Dryd.

AWE. n. f. [æge, oga, Saxon.] Reverential fear; reverence.

They all be brought up idly, without awe of parents, without precepts of masters, and without fear of offence.

Spenser's State of Ireland.

It fixed upon him who is only to be feared, God: and yet with a filial fear, which at the same time both fears and loves. It was awe without amazement, and dread without distraction.

South.

What is the proper awe and fear, which is due from man to God?

Rogers.

To AWE. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with reverence, or fear.

If you will work on any man, you must either know his nature and fashions, and so lead him; or his ends, and so persuade him; or his weaknesses and disadvantages, and so awe him; or those that have interest in him, and so govern him.

Bacon.

Why then was this forbid? Why, but to awe?

Why, but to keep you low, and ignorant,

His worshippers? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Heav'n that hath plac'd this island to give law,

To balance Europe, and her states to awe. Waller.

The rods and axes of princes, and their deputies, maye awe many into obedience; but the fame of their goodness, justice, and other virtues, will work on more. Atterbury's Sermons.

A'WEBAND. n. f. [from awe and band] A check. Dict.

A'WFUL. adj. [from awe and full.]

1. That which strikes with awe, or fills with reverence.

So awful, that with honour thou may'st love

Thy mate; who sees, when thou art seen least wise.

Milt. Par. Lost, b. viii. l. 577.

I approach thee thus, and gaze

Infatiate; I thus single; nor have fear'd

Thy awful brow, more awful thus retir'd,

Fairest resemblance of thy Maker fair!

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

2. Worshipful; in authority; invested with dignity. This sense is obsolete.

Know then, that some of us are gentlemen,

Such as the fury of ungovern'd youth

Thrust from the company of awful men.

Shakefp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

3. Struck with awe; timorous; scrupulous. This sense occurs but rarely.

It is not nature and strict reason, but a weak and awful reverence for antiquity, and the vogue of fallible men.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

A'WFULLY. adv. [from awful.] In a reverential manner.

It will concern a man, to treat this great principle awfully and warily, by still observing what it commands, but especially what it forbids.

South.

A'WFULNESS. n. f. [from awful.]

1. The quality of striking with awe; solemnity.

These objects naturally raise seriousness; and night heightens the awfulness of the place, and pours out her supernumerary horrors upon every thing.

Addison. Spect. N° 110.

2. The state of being struck with awe.

An help to prayer, producing in us reverence and awfulness to the divine majesty of God.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To AWHAPPE. v. a. [This word I have met with only in Spenser, nor can I discover whence it is derived; but imagine, that the Teutonic language had anciently wapen, to strike, or some such word, from which weapons, or offensive arms, took their denomination.] To strike; to confound.

Ah! my dear gossip, answer'd then the ape,

Deeply do your sad words my wits awhape,

Both for because your grief doth great appear,

And eke because myself am touched near. Hubberd's Tale.

AWHILE. adv. [This word, generally reputed an adverb, is only a while, that is, a time, an interval.] Some time; some space of time.

Stay, stay, I say;

And if you love me, as you say you do,

Let me persuade you to forbear awhile. Shakefp. Henry VI.

Into this wild abyss the wary fiend

Stood on the brink of hell, and look'd awhile,

Pond'ring his voyage. Milt. Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 918.

AWK. adj. [a barbarous contraction of the word awkward.] Odd; out of order.

We have heard as arrant jangling in the pulpits, as the steeples; and professors ringing as awk as the bells to give notice of the conflagration.

L'Estrange.

A'WKWARD. adj. [[æpərd, Saxon; that is, backward, untoward.]

1. Inelegant; unpolite; untaught; ungenteel.

Proud Italy,

Whose manners still our tardy, apish nation

Limps after in base awkward imitation. Shak. Rich. II.

Their own language is worthy their care; and they are judged of by their handsome or awkward way of expressing themselves in it.

A W R

Locke.

An awkward shame, or fear of ill usage, has a share in this conduct.

Swift.

2. Unready; unhandy; not dexterous; clumsy.

Slow to resolve, but in performance quick:

So true, that he was awkward at a trick. Dryd. Hind and P.

3. Perverse; untoward.

A kind and constant friend

To all that regularly offend;

But was implacable, and awkward,

To all that interlop'd and hawker'd.

Hindibras.

A'WKWARDLY. adv. [from awkward.] Clumsily; unready; inelegantly; ungainly.

Dametas nodding from the waste upwards, and swearing he never knew man go more awkwardly to work.

Sidney.

If any pretty creature is void of genius, and would perform her part but awkwardly, I must nevertheless insist upon her working.

Addison. Spectator, N° 606.

And when any thing is done awkwardly, the common saying will pass upon them, that it is suitable to their breeding.

Locke.

She still renews the ancient scene;

Forgets the forty years between;

Awkwardly gay, and oddly merry;

Her scarf pale pink, her head-knot cherry.

Prior.

If a man be taught to hold his pen awkwardly, yet writes sufficiently well, it is not worth while to teach him the accurate methods of handling that instrument.

Watts's Imp. of the Mind.

A'WKWARDNESS. n. f. [from awkward.] Inelegance; want of gentility; oddness; unsuitableness.

One may observe awkwardness in the Italians, which easily discovers their airs not to be natural.

Addison. Rem. on Italy.

All his airs of behaviour have a certain awkwardness in them; but these awkward airs are worn away by degrees in company.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

AWL. n. f. [æle, ale, Sax.] A pointed instrument to bore holes with.

He which was minded to make himself a perpetual servant, should, for a visible token thereof, have also his ear bored through with an awl.

Hooker, b. iv. § 1.

You may likewise prick many holes with an awl, about a joint that will lie in the earth.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

A'WLESS. adj. [from awe, and the negative less.]

1. Without reverence.

Against whose fury, and th' unmatched force,

The awless lion could not wage the fight. Shak. King John.

He claims the bull with awless insolence,

And having seiz'd his horns, accosts the prince. Dryden.

2. Without the power of causing reverence.

Ah me! I see the ruin of my house;

The tyger now hath seiz'd the gentle hind:

Insulting tyranny begins to jut

Upon the innocent and awless throne. Shakefp. Rich. III.

AWME, or AUME. n. f. A Dutch measure of capacity for liquids, containing eight steckans, or twenty verges or verteels; answering to what in England is called a tierce, or one sixth of a ton of France, or one seventh of an English ton.

A'WORK. adv. [from a and work.] On work; into a state of labour.

So after Pyrrhus' pause,

Aroused vengeance sets him new awork. Shakefp. Hamlet.

By prescribing the condition, it sets us awork to the performances of it, and that by living well. Hammond's Pract. Cat.

A'WORKING. adj. [from awork.] In the state of working.

Long they thus travelled, yet never met

Adventure which might them aworking set. Hubberd's Tale.

AWR'Y. adv. [from a and wry.]

1. Not in a straight direction; obliquely.

But her sad eyes still fast'ned on the ground,

Are governed with goodly modesty;

That suffers not one look to glance awry,

Which may let in a little thought unsound. Spens. Epithal.

Like perspectives which rightly gaz'd upon,

Shew nothing but confusion; ey'd awry,

Distinguish form.

Shakefp. Richard II.

When lo!

A violent cross wind, from either coast,

Blows them transverse; ten thousand leagues awry

Into the devious air.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

2. Asquint; with oblique vision.

You know the king

With jealous eyes has look'd awry

On his son's actions.

Denham's Sophy.

3. Not

- 3 Not level; unevenly.
I hap to step awry, where I see no path, and can discern but few steps afore me. Brerewood on Languages.
4. Not equally between two points.
Not tyrants fierce that unrepenting die,
Not Cynthia when her manteau's pinn'd awry,
Ere felt such rage. Pope's Rape of the Lock.
5. Not in a right state; perversely.
All awry, and which wried it to the most wry course of all, wit abused, rather to feign reason why it should be amiss, than how it should be amended. Sidney, b. ii.
Much of the soul they talk, but all awry,
And in themselves seek virtue, and to themselves
All glory arrogate, to God give none. Paradise Regained.
- AXE. n. f. [eas, acre, Sax. ascia, Lat.] An instrument consisting of a metal head, with a sharp edge, fixed in a helve or handle, to cut with.
No metal can,
No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keenness
Of thy sharp envy. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
There stood a forest on the mountain's brow,
Which overlook'd the shaded plains below;
No fouding axe presum'd these trees to bite,
Coeval with the world; a venerable sight. Dryden's Fables.
- AXILLA. n. f. [axilla, Lat.] The cavity under the upper part of the arm, called the arm-pit. Quincy.
- AXILLAR. } adj. [from axilla, Lat.] Belonging to the arm-AXILLARY. } pit.

- AXIOM. n. f. [axioma, Lat. ἀξίωμα, from ἀξιόω.]
1. A proposition evident at first sight, that cannot be made plainer by demonstration.
Axioms, or principles more general, are such as this, that the greater good is to be chosen before the lesser. Hooker, b. i.
2. An established principle to be granted without new proof.
The axioms of that law, whereby natural agents are guided, have their use in the moral. Hooker, b. i.
Their affirmations are unto us no axioms; we esteem thereof as things unsaid, and account them but in list of nothing. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i.
- AXIS. n. f. [axis, Lat.] The line real or imaginary that passes through any thing, on which it may revolve.
But since they say our earth, from morn to morn,
On its own axis is oblig'd to turn;
That swift rotation must disperse in air
All things which on the rapid orb appear. Blackmore.
It might annually have compassed the sun, and yet never have once turned upon its axis. Bentley's Sermons.
On their own axis as the planets run,
And make at once their circle round the sun;
So two consistent motions act the soul,
And one regards itself, and one the whole. Pope's Essay on Man, epist. iii. l. 313.
- A'XLE. } n. f. [axis, Lat.] The pin which passes through A'XLE-TREE. } the midst of the wheel, on which the circumvolutions of the wheel are performed.
Venerable Nestor
Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree
On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecians ears
To his experienc'd tongue. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

- The fly fate upon the axle-tree of the chariot-wheel, and said, what a dust do I raise? Bacon's Essays.
And the gilded car of day
His glowing axle doth allay
In the steep Atlantick stream. Milton's Comus.
He saw a greater sun appear,
Than his bright throne or burning axle-tree could bear. Milton's Christ's Nativity.
- AY. adv. [perhaps from aio, Lat.]
1. Yes; an adverb of answering affirmatively.
Return you thither? —
—Ay, madam, with the swiftest wing of speed. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.
What say'st thou? Wilt thou be of our comfort?
Say ay; and be the captain of us all. Shakesp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.
2. It is a word by which the sense is enforced; even; yes, certainly; and more than that.
Remember it, and let it make thee crest-fall'n;
Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride. Shakesp. Henry VI.
- AYE. adv. [aya, Saxon.] Always; to eternity; for ever.
And now in darksome dungeon, wretched thrall,
Remedylefs for aye he doth him hold. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Either prepare to die,
Or on Diana's altar to protest,
For aye, austeritey and single life. Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.
The soul, though made in time, survives for aye;
And, though it hath beginning, sees no end. Sir John Davies.
And hears the muses, in a ring,
Aye round about Jove's altar sing. Milton's Il Penseroso.
Th' astonish'd mariners aye ply the pump;
No stay, nor rest, till the wide breach is clos'd. Philips.
- A'YGREEN. n. f. The same with houfeleek; which see. Dict.
- A'YRY. n. f. [See AIRY.]
I should discourse on the brancher, the haggard, and then treat of their several ayries. Walton's Angler.
- A'ZIMUTH. n. f. [Arab.]
1. The azimuth of the sun, or of a star, is an arch between the meridian of the place and any given vertical line.
2. Magnetical azimuth, is an arch of the horizon contained between the sun's azimuth circle and the magnetical meridian; or it is the apparent distance of the sun from the north or south point of the compass.
3. Azimuth Compass, is an instrument used at sea for finding the sun's magnetical azimuth.
4. Azimuth Dial, is a dial whose style or gnomon is at right angles to the plane of the horizon.
5. Azimuths, called also vertical circles, are great circles intersecting each other in the zenith and nadir, and cutting the horizon at right angles, in all the points thereof. Chambers.
- AZU'RE. adj. [azur, Fr. azurro, Span. lazur, Arab. from lazuli, a blue stone.] Blue; faint blue.
The blue of the first order, though very faint and little, may be the colour of some substances; and the azure colour of the skies seems to be of this order. Newton's Opticks.
Thus replies
Minerva, graceful with her azure eyes. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.
The sea,
Far through his azure turbulent domain,
Your empire owns. Thomson's Spring.

B.

B A B

B, The second letter of the English alphabet, is pronounced as in most other European languages, by pressing the whole length of the lips together, and forcing them open with a strong breath. It has a near affinity with the other labial letters, and is confounded by the Germans with P, and by the Gascons with V; from which an epigrammatist remarks, that libere and vivere are in Gascony the same. The Spaniards, in most words, use B or V indifferently.

BAA. n. f. [See the verb.] The cry of a sheep.

TO BAA. v. n. [balō, Lat.] To cry like a sheep.

Or like a lamb, whose dam away is fet,

He treble baas for help, but none can get.

Sidney.

TO BA'BBLE. v. n. [babbelen, Germ. babiller, Fr.]

1. To prattle like a child; to prate imperfectly.

My babbling praises I repeat no more,

But hear, rejoice, stand silent, and adore.

Prior.

2. To talk idly, or irrationally.

John had conned over a catalogue of hard words; these he used to babble indifferently in all companies. Arbutn. J. Bull.

Let the silent sanctuary show,

What from the babbling schools we may not know. Prior.

3. To talk thoughtlessly; to tell secrets.

There is more danger in a reserved and silent friend, than in a noisy babbling enemy. L'Estrange.

4. To talk much.

The babbling echo mocks the hounds,

Replying shrilly to the well tun'd horns,

As if a double hunt were heard at once. Shakesp. Tit. Andr.

And had I pow'r to give that knowledge birth,

In all the speeches of the babbling earth. Prior.

The babbling echo had descry'd his face;

She, who in others words her silence breaks. Addison's Ovid.

BA'BBLE. n. f. [babil, Fr.] Idle talk; senseless prattle.

This babble shall not henceforth trouble me;

Here is a coil with protestation! Shakesp. Two G. of Verona.

Come, no more,

This is mere moral babble.

Milton.

With volleys of eternal babble,

And clamour more unanswerable.

Hudibras.

The babble, impertinence, and folly, I have taken notice of in disputes. Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica.

BA'BBLEMENT. n. f. [from babble.] Senseless prate.

Deluded all this while with ragged notions and babblements, while they expected worthy and delightful knowledge. Milton.

BA'BBLER. n. f. [from babble.]

1. An idle talker; an irrational prattler.

We hold our time too precious to be spent

With such a babbler.

Shakesp. King John.

Great babblers, or talkers, are not fit for trust. L'Estrange.

The apostle of my text had no sooner proposed it to the greater masters at Athens, but he himself was ridiculed as a babbler. Rogers.

2. A teller of secrets.

Utterers of secrets he from thence debarr'd;

Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

BABE. n. f. [baban, Welch; babbaerd, Dutch.] An infant; a child of either sex.

Those that do teach your babes,

Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks;

He might have chid me so: for, in good faith,

I am a child to chiding.

Shakesp. Othello.

Nor shall Sebastian's formidable name

Be longer us'd, to lull the crying babe. Dryden's Don Seb.

The babe had all that infant care beguiles,

And early knew his mother in her smiles.

Dryden.

BA'BERY. n. f. [from babe.] Finery to please a babe or child.

So have I seen trim books in velvet dight,

With golden leaves and painted babery

Of feely boys, please unacquainted sight.

Sidney.

BA'BISH. adj. [from babe.] Childish.

If he be bashful, and will soon blush, they call him a babish and ill brought up thing. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

BABO'ON. n. f. [labouin, Fr. It is supposed by Skinner to be the augmentation of babe, and to import a great babe.] A monkey of the largest kind.

You had looked through the grate like a geminy of baboons.

Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

He cast every human feature out of his countenance, and became a baboon. Addison. Spect. N° 174.

BA'BY. n. f. [See BABE.]

1. A child; an infant.

The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart

Goes all decorum.

Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

The child must have sugar plumbs, rather than make the poor baby cry. Locke.

B A C

He must marry, and propagate: the father cannot stay for the portion, nor the mother for babies to play with. Locke.

2. A small image in imitation of a child, which girls play with.

The archduke saw that Perkin would prove a runnagate; and that it was the part of children to fall out about babies.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Since no image can represent the great Creator, never think to honour him by your foolish puppets, and babies of dirt and clay. Stillingsfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idolatry.

BA'CCATED. adj. [baccatus, Lat.] Belet with pearls; having many berries. Diët.

BACCHANA'LIAN. n. f. [from bacchanalia, Lat.] A riotous person; a drunkard.

BA'CCHANALS. n. f. [bacchanalia, Lat.] The drunken feasts and revels of Bacchus, the god of wine.

Ha, my brave emperor, shall we dance now the Egyptian bacchanals, and celebrate our drink? Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

What wild fury was there in the heathen bacchanals, which we have not seen equalled. Decay of Piety.

Both extremes were banished from their walls,

Carthusian fasts, and fulsome bacchanals.

Pope.

B'ACCHUS BOLE. n. f. A flower not tall, but very full and broad-leaved; of a sad light purple, and a proper white; having the three outmost leaves edged with a crimson colour, bluish bottom, and dark purple. Mortimer.

BACCI'FEROUS. adj. [from bacca, a berry, and fero, to bear, Lat.] Berry-bearing.

Bacciferous trees are of four kinds.

1. Such as bear a caliculate or naked berry; the flower and calix both falling off together, and leaving the berry bare; as the sassafras trees.

2. Such as have a naked monospermous fruit, that is, containing in it only one seed; as the arbutus.

3. Such as have but polyspermous fruit, that is, containing two or more kernels or seeds within it; as the jasminum, ligustrum.

4. Such as have their fruit composed of many acini, or round soft balls set close together like a bunch of grapes; as the uva marina. Ray.

BACCI'VOROUS. adj. [from bacca, a berry, and voro, to devour, Lat.] A devourer of berries. Diët.

BA'CHELOR. n. f. [This is a word of very uncertain etymology, it not being well known what was its original sense. Junius derives it from βακχολος, foolish; Menage, from bas chevalier, a knight of the lowest rank; Spelman, from baculus, a staff; Cujas, from buccella, an allowance of provision. The most probable derivation seems to be from bacca laurus, the berry of a laurel or bay; bachelors being young, are of good hopes, like laurels in the berry. In Latin, baccalaureus.]

1. A man unmarried.

Such separation

Becomes a virtuous bachelor and a maid.

Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

The haunting of those dissolute places, or resort to courtesans, are no more punished in married men than in bachelors.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

A true painter naturally delights in the liberty which belongs to the bachelor's estate. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Let sinful bachelors their woes deplore,

Full well they merit all they feel, and more. Pope.

2. A man who takes his first degrees at the university in any profession.

Being a boy, new bachelor of arts, I chanced to speak against the pope. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

I appear before your honour, in behalf of Martinus Scriblerus, bachelor of physick. Arbutn. and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

3. A knight of the lowest order. This is a sense now little used.

BA'CHELORS BUTTON. [See CAMPION, of which it is a species.] All the sorts of this plant are hardy; they grow above two foot, and produce their flower in June and July. Millar.

BA'CHELORSHIP. n. f. [from bachelor.] The condition of a bachelor.

Her mother, living yet, can testify,

She was the first fruit of my bachelorship. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

BACK. n. f. [bac, bæc, Sax. bach, Germ.]

1. The hinder part of the body, from the neck to the thighs.

As the voice goeth round, as well towards the back as towards the front of him that speaketh, so likewise doth the echo: for you have many back echoes to the place where you stand.

Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 247.

Part following enter, part remain without,

With envy hear their fellow's conqu'ring shout;

And mount on others backs, in hope to share. Dryden.

2. The outer part of the hand when it is shut; opposed to the palm.

Methought love pitying me, when he saw this, Gave me your hands, the backs and palms to kiss. Donne.

B A C

3. The outward part of the body; that which requires cloaths; opposed to the belly.
Those who, by their ancestors, have been set free from a constant drudgery to their backs and their bellies, should bestow some time on their heads. Locke.
  4. The rear; opposed to the van.
He might conclude, that Walter would be upon the king's back, as his majesty was upon his. Clarendon, b. viii.
  5. The place behind.
Antheus, Sergestus grave, Cleanthus strong,
And at their backs a mighty Trojan throng. Dryden.
  6. The part of any thing out of sight.
Trees set upon the backs of chimneys do ripen fruit sooner. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 856.
  7. The thick part of any tool, opposed to the edge; as the back of a knife or sword; whence backsword, or sword with a back; as,
Bull dreaded not old Lewis either at backsword, single fault-chion, or cudgel-play. Arbuthnot's History of J. Bull.
  8. To turn the back on one, is to forsake him, or neglect him.
At the hour of death, all the friendships of the world shall bid him adieu, and the whole creation turn its back upon him. South.
  9. To turn the back, is to go away; to be not within the reach of taking cognizance.
His back was no sooner turned, but they returned to their former rebellion. Sir J. Davies on Ireland.
- BACK. adv. [from the noun.]
1. To the place from which one came.
Back you shall not to the house, unless You undertake that with me. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.
He sent many to seek the ship Argo, threatening that if they brought not back Medea, they should suffer in her stead. Raleigh's History of the World.
But where they are, and why they came not back,
Is now the labour of my thoughts. Milton.
Back to thy native island might'st thou sail,
And leave half-heard the melancholy tale. Pope's Odyssey.
  2. Backward; from the present station.
I've been surpris'd in an unguarded hour,
But must not now go back; the love that lay
Half smother'd in my breast, has broke through all Its weak restraints. Addison's Cato.
  3. Behind; not coming forward.
I thought to promote thee unto great honour; but lo the Lord hath kept thee back from honour. Numb. xxiv. 11.
Constrains the glebe, keeps back the hurtful weed. Blackmore's Creation, b. ii.
  4. Toward things past.
I had always a curiosity to look back unto the sorrows of things, and to view in my mind the beginning and progress of a rising world. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
  5. Again; in return.
The lady's mad; yet if 'twere so,
She could not sway her house, command her followers,
Take and give back affairs, and their despatch,
With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.
  6. Again; a second time.
This Cæsar found, and that ungrateful age,
With losing him, went back to blood and rage. Waller.
The epistles being written from ladies forsaken by their lovers, many thoughts came back upon us in divers letters. Dryden.
- TO BACK. v. a. [from the noun back.]
1. To mount on the back of a horse.
That roan shall be my throne.
Well I will back him strait. O Esperance!
Bid Butler lead him forth into the park. Shak. Henry IV.
  2. To break a horse; to train him to bear upon his back.
Direct us how to back the winged horse;
Favour his flight, and moderate his course. Roscommon.
  3. To place upon the back.
As I slept, methought
Great Jupiter, upon his eagle back'd, Appear'd to me. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
  4. To maintain; to strengthen.
Belike, he means,
Back'd by the pow'r of Warwick, that false peer, T'aspire unto the crown. Shakesp. Henry VI.
You are strait enough in the shoulders, you care not who sees your back: call you that backing of your friends? a plague upon such backing! give me them that will face me. Sh. H. VI.
These were seconded by certain demilaunces, and both backed with men at arms. Sir J. Hayward.
Did they not swear, in express words,
To prop and back the house of lords?
And after turn'd out the whole houseful. Hudibras.
A great malice, backed with a great interest, can have no advantage of a man, but from his expectations of something without himself. South.
How shall we treat this bold aspiring man?
Success still follows him, and backs his crimes. Addis. Cato.

B A C

5. To justify; to support.
The patrons of the ternary number of principles, and those that would have five elements, endeavour to back their experiments with a specious reason. Boyle.
We have I know not how many adages to back the reason of this moral. L'Estrange.
  6. To second.
Factionous, and fav'ring this or t'other side,
Their wagers back their wishes. Dryden's Fables.
- TO BA'CKBITE. v. a. [from back and bite.] To censure or reproach the absent.
Most untruly and maliciously do these evil tongues backbite and slander the sacred ashes of that most just and honourable personage. Spenser's Ireland.
I will use him well; a friend i' th' court is better than a penny in purse. Use his men well, Davy, for they are arrant knaves, and will backbite. Shakesp. Henry IV.

So were their daggers. Shakefp. Macbeth.

BADGER. n. f. [bedour, Fr.] An animal that earths in the ground, used to be hunted.

That a brock, or badger, hath legs of one side shorter than the other, is very generally received not only by theorists and unexperienced believers, but most who behold them daily. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

BADGER LEGGED. adj. [from badger and legged.] Having legs of an unequal length, as the badger is supposed to have.

His body crooked all over, big-bellied, badger legged, and his complexion swarthy. L'Estrange.

BA'DGER. n. f. [perhaps from the Latin bagulus, a carrier; but, by Junius, derived from the badger, a creature who stows up his provision.] One that buys corn and victuals in one place, and carries it unto another. Cowel.

BA'DLY. adv. [from bad.] In a bad manner; not well.

How goes the day with us? Oh tell me, Hubert. — Badly, I fear. How fares your majesty? Shak. King John.

BA'DNESS. n. f. [from bad.] Want of good qualities, either natural or moral.

It was not your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit, set awork by a reprovable badness in himself. Shakefp. King Lear.

There is one convenience in this city, which makes some amends for the badness of the pavement. Addison on Italy.

I did not see how the badness of the weather could be the king's fault. Addison. Freeholder.

TO BA'FFLE. v. a. [beffier, Fr.]

1. To clude.

They made a shift to think themselves guiltless, in spite of all their sins; to break the precept, and at the same time to baffle the curse. South.

He hath deserved to have the grace withdrawn, which he hath so long baffled and defied. Atterbury.

2. To confound; to defeat with some confusion, as by perplexing or amusing; to baffle is sometimes less than to conquer. Mezen-

Etruria lost,

He brings to Turnus' aid his baffled host. *Dryden's Æneid.*When the mind has brought itself to close thinking, it may go on roundly. Every abstruse problem, every intricate question will not baffle, discourage, or break it. Locke.

3. To crush; to bring to nothing.

A foreign potentate trembles at a war with the English nation, ready to employ against him such revenues as shall baffle his designs upon their country. *Addison. And laugh, like parrots, at a bagpiper. *Shak. M. of Venice.*BAGUETTE. n. f. [Fr. a term of architecture.] A little round moulding, less than an astragal; sometimes carved and enriched.To BAIGNE. v. a. [bagner, Fr.] To drench; to soak: a word out of use.The women forflow not to baigne them, unless they plead their heels, with a worse perfume than Jugurth found in the dungeon. *Carew's Survey of Cornwall.*BAIL. n. f. [of this word the etymologists give many derivations; it seems to come from the French bailler, to put into the hand; to deliver up, as a man delivers himself up in surety.]Bail is the freeing or setting at liberty one arrested or imprisoned upon action either civil or criminal, under security taken for his appearance. There is both common and special bail; common bail is in actions of small prejudice, or slight proof, called common, because any sureties in that case are taken: whereas, upon causes of greater weight, or apparent speciality, special bail or surety must be taken. There is a difference between bail and mainprise; for he that is mainprised, is at large, until the day of his appearance: but where a man is bailed, he is always accounted by the law to be in their ward and custody for the time: and they may, if they will, keep him in ward or in prison at that time, or otherwise at their will. *Cowel.*Worry'd with debts, and past all hopes of bail,The unpy'd wretch lies rotting in a jail. Roscommon.

And bribe with presents, or when presents fail,

They send their prostituted wives for bail. *Dryden.*To BAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To give bail for another.

Let me be their bail—

They shall be ready at your highness' will,

To answer their suspicion—

Thou shalt not bail them. Shakesp. Titus Andronicus.

2. To admit to bail.

When they had bailed the twelve bishops, who were in the Tower, the house of commons, in great indignation, caused them immediately again to be recommitted to the Tower. *Clarendon.*BA'ILABLE. adj. [from bail.] That may be set at liberty by bail or sureties.BA'ILIFF. n. f. [a word of doubtful etymology in itself, but borrowed by us from baillie, Fr.]

1. A subordinate officer.

Lausanne is under the canton of Berne, and governed by a bailiff sent them every three years from the senate of Berne. Addison on Italy.

2. An officer whose business it is to execute arrests.

It many times happeneth, that, by the under-sheriffs and their bailiffs, the owner hath incurred the forfeiture, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process that runneth against him. *Bacon.*A bailiff, by mistake, seized you for a debtor, and kept you the whole evening in a spunging-house. *Swift.*Swift as a bard the bailiff leaves behind. Pope.

3. An under-steward of a manor.

BA'ILIWICK. n. f. [of baillie, Fr. and wic, Sax.] The place of the jurisdiction of a bailiff within his hundred, or the lord's franchise. TO BAIT. v. a. [from battre, Fr. to beat.] To attack with violence; to set dogs upon.

Who seeming sorely chafed at his band,
As chained bear, whom cruel dogs do bait,
With idle force did fain them to withstand. Fairy Queen.
I will not yield

To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet;
And so be baited with the rabble's curse. Shak. Macbeth.

TO BAIT. v. n. To stop at any place for refreshment; perhaps this word is more properly bate; to abate speed.

But our desires, tyrannical extortion
Doth force us there to set our chief delightfulness,
Where but a baiting place is all our portion. Sidney.

As one who on his journey baits at noon,
Tho' bent on speed: so here the archangel paus'd. Par. Lost.

In all our journey from London to his house, we did not so much as bait at a whig inn. Addison. Spectat. N° 126.

TO BAIT. v. n. [as an hawk.] To clap the wings; to make an offer of flying; to flutter.

All plum'd like estridges, that with the wind
Baited like eagles having lately bath'd;
Glittering in golden coats like images. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Hood my unman'd blood baiting in my cheeks
With thy black mantle; till strange love, grown bold, Thinks true love acted simple modesty. Shak. Rom. and Jul.

Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keepers call;
That is, to watch her as we watch these kites,
That bait and beat, and will not be obedient.

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

BAIT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Meat set to allure fish, or other animals, to a snare.

The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish
Cut with her golden oars the silver stream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait.
Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.

2. A temptation; an enticement.

And that same glorious beauty's idle boast,
Is but a bait such wretches to beguile. Spens. sonnet xli.
Taketht therewith the souls of men, as with certain baits.

Hooker, b. v. § 35.

Sweet words I grant, baits and allurements sweet
But greatest hopes of greatest crosses meet. Fairfax, b. ii.
Fruit, like that

Which grew in paradise, the bait of Eve
Us'd by the tempter. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x. l. 551.

Secure from foolish pride's affected state,
And specious flattery's more pernicious bait. Roscommon.

Her head was bare,

But for her native ornament of hair,
Which in a simple knot was ty'd above:
Sweet negligence! unheeded bait of love! Dryden's Fab.

Grant that others could with equal glory,
Look down on pleasures, and the baits of sense. Add. Cato.

3. A refreshment on a journey.

BAIZE. n. f. A kind of coarse open cloth stuff, having a long nap; sometimes frized on one side, and sometimes not frized, according to the uses it is intended for. This stuff is without wale, being wrought on a loom with two treddles, like flannel. Chambers.

TO BAKE. v. a. participle passive, baked, or baken. [bæcan, Sax. becken, Germ. supposed by Wachter to come from bec, which, in the Phrygian language, signified bread.]

1. To heat any thing in a close place; generally in an oven.

He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea, he kindleth it, and baketh bread. Isaiah, xlii. 15.

The difference of prices of bread proceeded from their delicacy in bread, and perhaps something in their manner of baking. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. To harden in the fire.

The work of the fire is a kind of baking; and whatsoever the fire baketh, time doth in some degree dissolve. Bacon.

3. To harden with heat.

With vehement suns

When dusty summer bakes the crumbling clods,
How pleasant is't, beneath the twisted arch,
To ply the sweet carouse! Philips:

The sun with flaming arrows pierc'd the flood,
And, darting to the bottom, bak'd the mud. Dryden.

TO BAKE. v. n.

1. To do the work of baking.

I keep his house, and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds, and do all myself. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. To be heated or baked.

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakesp. Macbeth.

BAKED Meats. Meats dressed by the oven.

There be some houses, wherein sweetmeats will relent, and baked meats will mould, more than others. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

BA'KEHOUSE. n. f. [from bake and house.] A place for baking bread.

B A L

I have marked a willingness in the Italian artizans, to distribute the kitchen, pantry, and bakehouse, under ground. Wotton.

BA'KEN. The participle from to bake.

There was a cake taken on the coals, and a cruse of water at his head. Kings, xix. 6.

BA'KER. n. f. [from to bake.] He whose trade is to bake.

In life and health, every man must proceed upon trust, there being no knowing the intention of the cook or baker. South.

BA'LANCE. n. f. [balance, Fr. bilanx, Lat.]

1. One of the six simple powers in mechanicks, used principally for determining the difference of weight in heavy bodies. It is of several forms. Chambers.

2. A pair of scales.

A balance of power, either without or within a state, is best conceived by considering what the nature of a balance is. It supposes three things; first, the part which is held, together with the hand that holds it; and then the two scales, with whatever is weighed therein. Swift.

For when on ground the burden'd balance lies,
The empty part is lifted up the higher. Sir John Davies.

3. A metaphorical balance, or the mind employed in comparing one thing with another.

I have in equal balance justly weighed,
What wrong our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer:
Griefs heavier than our offences. Shakesp. Henry IV.

4. The act of comparing two things, as by the balance.

Comfort arises not from others being miserable, but from this inference upon the balance, that we suffer only the lot of nature. L'Estrange's Fables.

Upon a fair balance of the advantages on either side, it will appear, that the rules of the gospel are more powerful means of conviction than such message. Atterbury.

5. The overplus of weight; that quantity by which, of two things weighed together, one exceeds the other.

Care being taken, that the exportation exceed in value the importation; and then the balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon's Adv. to Sir G. Villiers.

6. That which is wanting to make two parts of an account even; as, he stated the account with his correspondent, and paid the balance.

7. Equipoise; as balance of power. See the second sense.

Love, hope, and joy, fair pleasure's smiling train,
Hate, fear, and grief, the family of pain;
These mixed with art, and to due bounds confin'd,
Make and maintain the balance of the mind. Pope.

8. The beating part of a watch.

It is but supposing that all watches, whilst the balance beats, think; and it is sufficiently proved, that my watch thought all last night. Locke.

9. In astronomy. One of the twelve signs of the zodiack, commonly called Libra.

TO BA'LANCE. v. a. [valancer, Fr.]

1. To weigh in a balance, either real or figurative; to compare by the balance.

If men would but balance the good and the evil of things, they would not venture soul and body for a little dirty interest. L'Estrange's Fables.

2. To regulate the weight in a balance.

Heav'n that hath plac'd this island to give law,
To balance Europe, and her states to awe. Waller.

3. To counterpoise; to weigh equal to.

The attraction of the glass is balanced, and rendered ineffectual by the contrary attraction of the liquor. Newton's Opt.

4. To regulate an account, by stating it on both sides.

Judging is, balancing an account, and determining on which side the odds lie. Locke.

5. To pay that which is wanting to make the two parts of an account equal.

Give him leave

To balance the account of Blenheim's day. Prior.

Though I am very well satisfied, that it is not in my power to balance accounts with my Maker, I am resolved, however, to turn all my endeavours that way. Addison. Spectator.

TO BA'LANCE. v. n. To hesitate; to fluctuate between equal motives, as a balance plays when charged with equal weights.

Were the satisfaction of lust, and the joys of heaven, offered at any one's present possession, he would not balance, or err in the determination of his choice. Locke.

Since there is nothing that can offend, I see not why you should balance a moment about printing it. Atterbury to Pope.

BA'LANCER. n. f. [from balance.] The person that weighs any thing.

BA'LESS Ruby. n. f. [balas, Fr. supposed to be an Indian term.] A kind of ruby.

Balass ruby is of a crimson colour, with a cast of purple, and seems best to answer the description of the ancients. Woodward on Fossils.

TO BALBU'CIATE. v. n. [from balbutio, Lat.] To stammer in speaking. Dict.

TO BALBU'TIATE. v. n. The same with balbucinate. Dict.

BALCO'NY. n. f. [balcon, Fr. balcone, Ital.] A frame of iron, wood, or stone, before the window of a room.

1 Then

B A L

Then pleasure came, who, liking not the fashion,
Began to make balconies, terraces,
Till she had weaken'd all by alteration. Herbert.
When dirty waters from balconies drop,
And dext'rous damsels twirl the sprinkling mop. Gay.

BALD. adj. [bal, Welch.]

1. Without hair.

Neither shall men make themselves bald for them. Jer. xvi. 6.
I find it remarked by Marchetti, that the cause of baldness in men is the dryness of the brain, and its shrinking from the skull; he having observed, that in bald persons, under the bald part, there was a vacuity between the skull and the brain. Ray.
He should imitate Cæsar, who, because his head was bald, covered that defect with laurels. Addison. Spect. N° 232.

2. Without natural covering.

Under an oak, whose boughs were moss'd with age,
And high top bald with dry antiquity. Shakefp. As you like it.

3. Without the usual covering.

He is set at the upper end o' th' table; but they stand bald before him. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

4. Unadorned; inelegant.

Hobbes, in the preface to his own bald translation of the Ilias, begins the praise of Homer when he should have ended it.
Dryden's Fables, Preface.

And that, though labour'd, line must bald appear,
That brings ungrateful musick to the ear. Creech.

5. Stripped; naked; without dignity; without value; bare.

What should the people do with these bald tribunes?
On whom depending, their obedience fails
To th' greater bench. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

6. Bald was used by the northern nations, to signify the same as audax, bold; and is still in use. So Baldwin, and by inversion Winbald, is bold conqueror; Ethelbald, nobly bold; Eadbald, happily bold; which are of the same import as Thraseas, Thrasymachus, and Thrasymbulus, &c. Gibson's Camden.

BA'LDACHIN. n. f. [baldachino, Ital.] A piece of architecture, in form of a canopy, supported with columns, and serving as a covering to an altar. It properly signifies a rich silk, du cange, and was a canopy carried over the host. Build. Dict.

BA'LDERDASH. n. f. [probably of balb, Sax. bold, and dash, to mingle.] Any thing jumbled together without judgment;
rude mixture; a confused discourse.

To BA'LDERDASH. v. a. [from the noun.] To mix or adulterate any liquor.

BA'LDLY. adv. [from bald.] Nakedly; meanly; inelegantly.

BA'LDMONY. n. f. The same with GENTIAN; which see.

BA'LDNESS. n. f. [from bald.]

1. The want of hair.

2. The loss of hair.

Which happen'd on the skin to light,
And there corrupting to a wound,
Spreads leprosy and baldness round. Swift.

3. Meanness of writing; inelegance.

BA'LDRIK. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. A girdle. By some *Dictionary*s it is explained a bracelet; but I have not found it in that sense.

Athwart his breast a baldrick brave he ware,
That shin'd like twinkling stars, with stones most precious rare. Fairy Queen, b. i.

A radiant baldrick, o'er his shoulders ty'd,
Sustain'd the sword, that glitter'd at his side. Pope.

2. The zodiack.

That like the twins of Jove, they seem'd in fight,
Which deck the baldrick of the heavens bright. Spenser.

BALE. n. f. [balle, Fr.] A bundle or parcel of goods packed up for carriage.

One hired an ass in the dog-days, to carry certain bales of goods to such a town. L'Estrange.

It is part of the bales in which bohea tea was brought over from China. Woodward on Fossils.

BALE. n. f. [bæl, Sax. bale, Dan. bal, bol, Icelandic.] Misery; calamity.

She look'd about, and seeing one in mail,
Armed to point, fought back to turn again;
For light she hated as the deadly bale. Fairy Queen, b. i.

To BALE. v. a. A word used by the sailors, who bid bale out the water; that is, lave it out, by way of distinction from pumping. Skinner.

To BALE. v. n. [embeller, Fr. imballure, Ital.] To make up into a bale.

BA'LEFUL. adj. [from bale.]

1. Full of misery; full of grief; sorrowful; sad; woful.

Ah! luckless babe, born under cruel star,
And in dead parents baleful ashes bred. Fairy Queen, b. i.
But when I feel the bitter baleful smart,
Which her fair eyes unwares do work in me,
I think that I a new Pandora see. Spenser, sonnet xxiv.

Round he throws his baleful eyes,
That witness'd huge affliction and disinay,
Mix'd with obdurate pride and stedfast hate. Par. Lost, b. i.

2. Full of mischief; destructive.

But when he saw his threat'ning was but vain,
He turn'd about, and search'd his baleful books again. F. 2.

B A L

Boiling choler chokes,
By sight of these, our baleful enemies. Shakefp. Henry VI.
Unseen, unfelt, the fiery serpent skims
Betwixt her linen and her naked limbs;
His baleful breath inspiring, as he glides. Dryden's Æneid.
Happy Ierne, whose most wholesome air
Poisons envenom'd spiders, and forbids
The baleful toad, and vipers from her shore. Philips.

BA'LEFULLY. adv. [from baleful.] Sorrowfully; mischievously.

BALK. n. f. [balk, Dut. and Germ.] A great beam, such as is used in building; a rafter over an outhouse or barn.

BALK. n. f. [derived by Skinner from valicare, Ital. to pass over.]
A ridge of land left unploughed between the furrows, or at the end of the field.

To BALK. v. a. [See the noun.]

1. To disappoint; to frustrate.

Another thing in the grammar schools I see no use of, unless it be to balk young lads in the way to learning languages. Locke.

Every one has a desire to keep up the vigour of his faculties, and not to balk his understanding by what is too hard for it. Locke.

But one may balk this good intent,
And take things otherwise than meant. Prior.

The prices must have been high; for a people so rich would not balk their fancy. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Balk'd of his prey, the yelling monster flies,
And fills the city with his hideous cries. Pope's Odyssey.

Is there a variance? enter but his door,
Balk'd are the courts, and contest is no more. Pope.

2. To miss any thing.

By grisly Pluto he doth swear,
He rent his clothes, and tore his hair;
And as he runneth here and there,
An acorn cup he greeteth;
Which soon he taketh by the stalk,
About his head he lets it walk,
Nor doth he any creature balk,
But lays on all he meeteth. Drayt. Nymphid.

3. To omit, or refuse any thing.

This was looked for at your hand, and this was bal't.
Shakefp. Twelfth Night.

4. To heap, as on a ridge. This, or something like this, seems to be intended here.

Ten thousand bold Scots, three and twenty knights,
Balk'd in their own blood, did Sir Walter see On Holmedon's plains. Shakefp. Henry IV.

BA'LKERS. n. f. [In fishery.] Men who stand on a cliff, or high place on the shore, and give a sign to the men in the fishing-boats, which way the passage or shoal of herrings is. Cowel.

The pilchards are pursued by a bigger fish, called a plusher, who leapeth above water, and bewrayeth them to the balker.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

BALL. n. f. [bal, Dan. bol, Dut.]

Bel, diminutively Belin, the sun, or Apollo of the Celtæ, was called by the ancient Gauls Abellio. Whatever was round, and in particular the head, was called by the ancients either Bal, or Bel, and likewise Bil and Biil. Among the modern Persians, the head is called Pole; and the Flemings still call the head Bolle. Πόλος is the head or poll, and κεφάλειον is to turn.
Βόλος likewise signifies a round ball, whence bowl, and tell, and ball, which the Welch term bél. By the Scotch also the head is named thél; whence the English till is derived, signifying the beak of a bird. Figuratively, the Phrygians and Thuriens, by βαλλων understood a king. Hence also, in the Syriack dialects, βαδλ, βιλ, and likewise βωλ, signifies lord, and by this name also the sun; and, in some dialects, ἡλ and ἰλ, whence ἰλ, and ἡλ, ἡλ, and ἡλ, and also in the Celtick diminutive way of expression, ἑλεν, ἑλεν, and ἑλεν, signified the sun; and ἑλένη, ἑλένη, and ἑλένη, the moon. Among the Teu-tonicks, bol and heil have the same meaning; whence the adjective helig, or heilig, is derived, and signifies divine or holy;
and the aspiration being changed into s, the Romans form their
Sol. Baxter.

1. Any thing made in a round form.

The worms with many feet, which round themselves into balls under logs of timber, but not in the timber. Bacon.

Nor arms they wear, nor swords and bucklers wield,
But whirl from leathern strings huge balls of lead. Dryden.

Like a ball of snow tumbling down a hill, he gathered strength as he passed. Howel's Vocal Forest.

Still unripen'd in the dewy mines,
Within the ball a trembling water shines,
That through the chrystal darts. Addison's Rem. on Italy.

Such of those corpuscles as happened to combine into one mass, formed the metallick and mineral balls, or nodules, which we find. Woodward's Natural History.

2. A round thing to play with, either with the hand or foot, or a racket.

Balls to the stars, and thralls to fortune's reign,
Turn'd from themselves, infected with their cage,
Where death is fear'd, and life is held with pain. Sidney.
Those I have seen play at ball, grow extremely earnest who should have the ball. Sidney.

3. A small round thing, with some particular mark, by which votes are given, or lots cast.

Let lots decide it.

For ev'ry number'd captive put a ball
Into an urn; three only black be there,
The rest, all white, are safe. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears;
Round in his urn the blended balls he rows;
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls. Dryden.

4. A globe; as, the ball of the earth.
Julius and Antony, those lords of all,
Low at her feet present the conquer'd ball. Granville.

Ye gods, what justice rules the ball?
Freedom and arts together fall. Pope.

5. A globe borne as an ensign of sovereignty.
Hear the tragedy of a young man, that by right ought to hold the ball of a kingdom; but, by fortune, is made himself a ball, tossed from misery to misery, and from place to place.
Bacon's Henry VII.

6. Any part of the body that approaches to roundness; as the lower and swelling part of the thumb, the apple of the eye.
Be subject to no fight but mine; invisible
To every eye ball else. Shakesp. Tempest.

To make a stern countenance, let your brow bend so, that that it may almost touch the ball of the eye. Peacham.

7. The parchment spread over a hollow piece of wood, stuffed with hair or wool, which the printers dip in ink, to spread it on the letters.

BALL. n. f. [bal, Fr. from ballare, low Lat. from βαλλίζω, to dance.] An entertainment of dancing, at which the preparations are made at the expence of some particular person.

If golden sconces hang not on the walls,
To light the costly suppers and the balls. Dryden.

He would make no extraordinary figure at a ball; but I can assure the ladies, for their consolation, that he has writ better verses on the sex than any man. Swift.

BA'LLAD. n. f. [balade, Fr.] A song.
Ballad once signified a solemn and sacred song, as well as trivial, when Solomon's Song was called the ballad of ballads;
but now it is applied to nothing but trifling verse. Watts.

An' I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, may a cup of sack be my poison. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Like the sweet ballad, this amusing lay
Too long detains the lover on his way. Gay's Trivia.

To BA'LLAD. v. n. [from the noun.] To make or sing ballads.

Saucy liſtors

Will catch at us like strumpets, and scall'd rhimers Ballad us out o' tune. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

BA'LLAD-SINGER. n. f. [from ballad and sing.] One whose employment it is to sing ballads in the streets.

No sooner 'gan he raise his tuneful song,
But lads and lasses round about him throng.
Not ballad-singer, plac'd above the crowd,
Sings with a note so shrilling, sweet and loud. Gay.

BA'LLAST. n. f. [ballaste, Dutch.]

1. Something put at the bottom of the ship to keep it steady to the center of gravity.

There must be some middle counsellors to keep things steady; for, without that ballast, the ship will roul too much.
Bacon's Essays.

As for the ascent of it, this may be easily contrived, if there be some great weight at the bottom of the ship, being part of its ballast; which, by some cord within, may be loosened from
it. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

As when empty barks or billows float,
With sandy ballast sailors trim the boat;
So bees bear gravel stones, whose poisoning weight
Steers through the whistling winds their steady flight. Dryd.

2. That which is used to make any thing steady.

Why should he sink where nothing seem'd to prefs?
His lading little, and his ballast less. Swift.

To BA'LLAST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put weight at the bottom of a ship, in order to keep her steady.

If this ark be so ballasted, as to be of equal weight with the like magnitude of water, it will be moveable.
Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

2. To keep any thing steady.

Whilst thus to ballast love, I thought,
And so more steadily t' have gone,
I saw, I had love's pinnace overfraught. Donne.

Now you have given me virtue for my guide,
And with true honour ballasted my pride. Dryden's Aureng.

BALLE'TTE. n. f. [ballette, Fr.] A dance in which some history is represented.

BA'LLIARDS. n. f. [from ball and yard, or stick to push it with.]
A play at which a ball is driven by the end of a stick; now corruptly called billiards.

With dice, with cards, with balliards, far unfit,
With shuttlecocks misseeming manly wit. Hubberd's Tale.

BA'LLISTER. See BALUSTRE.

BALLO'N. } n. f. [ballon, Fr.]

- BALLO'ON. }
1. A large round short-necked vessel used in chymistry.
2. In architecture; a ball or globe placed on the top of a pillar.
3. In fireworks; a ball of pasteboard, stuffed with combustible matter, which, when fired, mounts to a considerable height in the air, and then bursts into bright sparks of fire, resembling stars.

BA'LLOT. n. f. [ballote, Fr.]

1. A little ball or ticket used in giving votes, being put privately into a box or urn.

2. The act of voting by ballot.

To BA'LLOT. v. n. [balloter, Fr.] To choose by ballot, that is, by putting little balls or tickets, with particular marks, privately in a box; by counting which it is known what is the result of the poll, without any discovery by whom each vote was given.

No competition arriving to a sufficient number of balls, they fell to ballot some others. Wotton.

Giving their votes by balloting, they lie under no awe. Swift.

BALLOTA'TION. n. f. [from ballot.] The act of voting by ballot.
The election is intricate and curious, consisting of ten several ballotations. Wotton.

BALM. n. f. [baume, Fr. balsamum, Lat.]

1. The sap or juice of a shrub, remarkably odoriferous.
Balm trickles through the bleeding veins

Of happy shrubs, in Idumean plains. Dryden's Virgil.

2. Any valuable or fragrant ointment.

Thy place is filled, thy sceptre wrung from thee;
Thy balm wash'd off wherewith thou wast anointed.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

3. Any thing that sooths or mitigates pain.

You were conducted to a gentle bath,
And balms apply'd to you. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Your praise's argument, balm of your age;
Dearest and best. Shakesp. King Lear.

BALM. } n. f. [melissa, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It is a verticillate plant, with a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip is roundish, upright, and divided into two; but the under lip, into three parts: out of the flower-cup rises the pointal, attended, as it were, with four embryos; these afterwards turn to so many seeds, which are roundish, and inclosed in the flower-cup; to these notes may be added, the flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves, but are not whorled round the stalks. The species are, 1. Garden balm.
2. Garden balm, with yellow variegated flowers. 3. Stinking Roman balm, with softer hairy leaves. The first of these sorts is cultivated in gardens for medicinal and culinary use: it is propagated by parting the roots either in spring or autumn.
When they are first planted, if the season proves dry, you must carefully water them until they have taken root. Millar.

BALM of Gilead.

1. The juice drawn from the balsam tree, by making incisions in its bark. Its colour is first white, soon after green; but when it comes to be old, it is of the colour of honey. The smell of it is agreeable, and very penetrating; the taste of it bitter, sharp and astringent. As little issues from the plant by incision, the balm sold by the merchants, is made of the wood and green branches of the tree, distilled by fire, which is generally adulterated with turpentine. Calmet.

It seems most likely to me, that the zori of Gilead, which we render in our English bible by the word balm, was not the same with the balsam of Mecca, but only a better sort of turpentine, then in use for the cure of wounds and other diseases.

Prideaux's Connection.

2. A plant remarkable for the strong balsamick scent, which its leaves emit, upon being bruised; whence some have supposed, erroneously, that the balm of Gilead was taken from this plant.

Millar.

To BALM. v. a. [from balm.]

1. To anoint with balm.

Balm his foul head with warm distilled waters,
And burn sweet wood. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

2. To sooth; to mitigate; to assuage.

Opprest nature sleeps:
This rest might yet have balm'd thy senses,
Which stand in hard cure. Shakesp. King Lear.

BA'LMY. adj. [from balm.]

1. Having the qualities of balm.

Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid,
In balmy sweat; which with his beams the sun
Soon dry'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

2. Producing balm.

3. Soothing; soft; mild.

Come, Desdemona, 'tis the soldier's life
To have their balmy slumbers wak'd with strife. Shak. Othello.

Such visions hourly pass before my sight,
Which from my eyes their balmy slumbers fright. Dryden.

4. Fragrant; odoriferous.

Those rich perfumes which, from the happy shore,
The winds upon their balmy winds convey'd,
Whose guilty sweetness first the world betray'd. Dryden.

First

First Eurus to the rising morn is sent,
The regions of the balmy continent. Dryden's Ovid.

5. Mitigating; affluative.
Oh balmy breath, that dost almost persuade Justice to break her sword! Shakesp. Othello.

BA'LINEARY. n. f. [balnearium, Lat.] A bathing-room.
The balnearies, and bathing-places, he exposeth unto the summer setting. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 7.

BALNEATION. n. f. [from balneum, Lat. a bath.] The act of bathing.
As the head may be disturbed by the skin, it may the same way be relieved, as is observable in balneations, and fomentations of that part. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 6.

BA'LINEATORY. adj. [balneatorius, Lat.] Belonging to a bath or stove.

BA'LOTADE. n. f. The leap of an horse, so that when his fore-feet are in the air, he shews nothing but the shoes of his hinder-feet, without yerking out. A balotade differs from a capriole; for when a horse works at caprioles, he yerks out his hinder legs with all his force. Farrier's Dict.

B'ALSAM. n. f. [balsamum, Lat.] Ointment; unguent; an unctuous application thicker than oil, and softer than salve.
Christ's blood's our balsam; if that cure us here,
Him, when our judge, we shall not find severe. Denham.

BALSAM Apple. [momordica, Lat.] An annual Indian plant.
The flower consists of one leaf, is of the expanded bell-shaped kind, but so deeply cut, as to appear composed of five distinct leaves: the flowers are some male, or barren; others female, growing upon the top of the embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fruit, which is fleshy, and sometimes more or less tapering and hollow, and, when ripe, usually bursts, and casts forth the seeds with an elasticity; which seeds are wrapped up in a membranous covering, and are, for the most part, indented on the edges. Millar.

BALSAM Tree.
This is a shrub which scarce grows taller than the pomegranate tree; it shoots out abundance of long slender branches, with a few small rounding leaves, always green; the wood of it is gummy, and of a reddish colour; the blossoms are like small stars, white, and very fragrant; whence spring out little pointed pods, inclosing a fruit like an almond, called carpobalsamum, as the wood is called xylobalsamum, and the juice opobalsamum; which see. This tree is cultivated in Arabia and Judea; but it is forbid to be sown or multiplied without the permission of the grand signior. Calmet. Chambers.

BALSA'MICAL. } adj. [from balsam.] Having the qualities of BALSA'MICK. } balsam; unctuous; mitigating; soft; mild; oily.

If there be a wound in my leg, the vital energy of my soul thrusts out the balsamical humour of my blood to heal it. Halé's Origin of Mankind.

The aliment of such as have fresh wounds ought to be such as keeps the humours from putrefaction, and renders them oily and balsamick. Arbuthnot on Diet.

BA'LUSTER. n. f. [according to du Cange, from balustrum, low Lat. a bathing place.] A small column or pilaster, from an inch and three quarters to four inches square or diameter. Their dimensions and forms are various; they are frequently adorned with mouldings; they are placed with rails on stairs, and in the fronts of galleries in churches.
This should first have been planched over, and railed about with balusters. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

BA'LUSTRADE. n. f. [from baluster.] An assemblage of one or more rows of little turned pillars, called balusters, fixed upon a terras, or the top of a building, for separating one part from another.

BAM, BEAM, being initials in the name of any place, usually imply it to have been woody; from the Saxon beam, which we use in the same sense to this day. Gibson's Camden.

BA'MBOO. n. f. An Indian plant of the reed kind. It has several shoots, much larger than our ordinary reeds, which are knotty, and separated from space to space by joints. They are said by some, but by mistake, to contain sugar; the bamboo being much larger than the sugar-cane. The leaves grow out of each knot, and are prickly. They are four or five inches long, and an inch in breadth, somewhat pointed, and ribbed through the whole length with green and sharp fibres. Its flowers grow in ears, like those of wheat.

To BAMBO'OZLE. v. a. [a cant word not used in pure or in grave writings.] To deceive; to impose upon; to confound.
After Nick had bamboozled about the money, John called for counters. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

BAMBO'OZLER. n. f. [from bamboozle.] A tricking fellow; a cheat.
There are a set of fellows they call banterers and bamboozlers, that play such tricks. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

BAN. n. f. [ban, Teut. a publick proclamation, as of proscription, interdiction, excommunication, publick sale.]

1. Publick notice given of any thing, whereby any thing is publickly commanded or forbidden. This word we use especially in the publishing matrimonial contracts in the church, before marriage, to the end that if any man can say against the inter-tion of the parties, either in respect of kindred or otherwise, they may take their exception in time. And, in the canon law, banna sunt proclamationes sponsi & sponsæ in ecclesiis fieri soliti. Cowel.

I bar it in the interest of my wife;
'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord,
And I her husband contradict your bans. Shakesp. King Lear.
Our bans thrice bid! and for our wedding-day
To draw her neck into the bans. Hudibras.

2. A curse; excommunication.
My kerchief bought! then press'd, then forc'd away! Gay.
In th' interim, spare for no trepan
Thou mixture rank of midnight weeds collected,
With Hecate's ban thrice blasted, thrice infected. Hamlet.
A great oversight it was of St. Peter, that he did not accurse Nero, whereby the pope might have got all; yet what need of such a ban, since friar Vincent could tell Atafalipa, that kingdoms were the pope's. Raleigh's Essays.

3. Interdiction.
Much more to taste it, under ban to touch. Parad Lost.

4. Ban of the Empire; a publick censure by which the privileges of any German prince are suspended.
He proceeded so far by treaty, that he was proferred to have the imperial ban taken off Altapinus, upon submission. Howel.

To BAN. v. a. [bannen, Dut. to curse.] To curse; to execrate.
Shall we think that it baneth the work which they leave behind them, or taketh away the use thereof. Hooker, b. v.
It is uncertain whether this word, in the foregoing sense, is to be deduced from ban, to curse, or bane, to poison.
In thy closet pent up, rue my shame,
And ban our enemies, both mine and thine. Shakesp. H. VI.
Before these Moors went a Numidian priest, bellowing out charms, and casting scrowls of paper on each side, wherein he cursed and banned the Christians. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

BANA'NA Tree. See PLANTAIN; of which it is a species.

BAND. n. f. [bende, Dut. band, Saxon.]

1. A tye; a bandage; that by which one thing is joined to another.
You shall find the band, that seems to tie their friendship together, will be the very strangler of their amity. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

2. A chain by which any animal is kept in restraint. This is now usually spelt, less properly, bond.
So wild a beast, so tame ytaught to be,
And buxom to his bands, is joy to see. Hubbard's Tale.
Since you deny him entrance, he demands
His wife, whom cruelly you hold in bands. Dryd. Aurengz.

3. Any means of union or connexion between persons.
Here's eight that must take hands,
To join in Hymen's bands. Shakesp. As you like it.

4. Something worn about the neck; a neckcloth. It is now restrained to a neckcloth of particular form worn by clergymen; lawyers, and students in colleges.
For his mind I do not care,
That's a toy that I could spare:
Let his title be but great,
His cloaths rich, and band sit neat. Ben Johnson's Underwoods.
He took his present lodging at the mansion-house of a taylor's widow, who washes and can clear-starch his bands. Addison.

5. Any thing bound round another.
In old statues of stone in cellars, the feet of them being bound with leaden bands, it appeared that the lead did swell. Bacon.

6. A company of persons joined together in any common design.
And, good my lord of Somerset, unite
Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. i.
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers. Sh. H. V.
The queen in white array before her band,
Saluting took her rival by the hand. Dryden's Fables.
On a sudden, methought this select band sprang forward, with a resolution to climb the ascent, and follow the call of that heavenly musick. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup> 81.
Strait the three bands prepare in arms to join,
Each band the number of the sacred Nine. Pope.

7. In architecture. Any flat low member or moulding, called also fascia, face, or plinth.
To BAND. v. a. [from band.]

1. To unite together into one body or troop.
The bishop, and the duke of Glo'ster's men,
Have fill'd their pockets full of pebble stones,
And banding themselves in contrary parts,
Do pelt at one another's pates. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. i.
Some of the boys banded themselves as for the major, and others for the king; who, after six days skirmishing, at last made a composition, and departed. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
To live exempt
From heav'n's high jurisdiction, in new league
Banded against his throne. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.

2. To bind over with a band.
And by his mother stood an infant lover,
With wings unfledg'd, his eyes were banded over. Dryden.

BANDS of a saddle, are two pieces of iron nailed upon the bows of the saddle, to hold the bows in the right situation.

BA'NDAGE. n. f. [bandage, Fr.]

1. Something bound over another.

Zeal too had a place among the rest, with a bandage over her eyes; though one would not have expected to have seen her represented in snow. Addison. Freeholder, N° 27.

Cords were fastened by hooks to my bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck. Gulliver's Travels.

2. It is used, in surgery, for the fillet or roller wrapped over a wounded member; and, sometimes, for the act or practice of applying bandages.

BANDBOX. n. f. [from band and box.] A slight box used for bands and other things of small weight.

My friends are surprized to find two bandboxes among my books, till I let them see that they are lined with deep erudition.

Addison. Spectator, N° 85.

With empty bandbox she delights to range,

And feigns a distant errand from the 'Change. Gay's Trivia.

BA'NDELET. n. f. [bandelet, Fr. In architecture.] Any little band, flat moulding, or fillet.

BA'NDIT. n. f. [bandito, Ital.] A man outlawed.

No savage fierce, bandit, or mountaineer,
Will dare to foil her virgin purity. Milton's Poems.

No bandit fierce, no tyrant mad with pride,

No cavern'd hermit, rests self satisfy'd. Pope's Essay on Man.

BANDITTO. n. f. in the plural banditti. [bandito, Ital.]

A Roman sworder, and banditto slave,

Murder'd sweet Tully. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. ii.

BA'NDOG. n. f. [from ban or band, and dog.] The original of this word is very doubtful. Caius, de canibus Britannicis, derives it from band, that is, a dog chained up. Skinner inclines to deduce it from bana, a murderer. May it not come from ban a curse, as we say a curst cur; or rather from baund, swelled or large, a Danish word; from whence, in some counties, they call a great nut a ban-nut.] A kind of large dog.

The time of night when Troy was set on fire,

The time when screech-owls cry, and bandogs howl.

Shakesp. Henry VI. p. ii.

Or privy, or pert, if any bin,

We have great bandogs will tear their skin. Spensf. Pastorals.

BA'NDY. n. f. [from bander, Fr.] A club turned round at bottom for striking a ball at play.

TO BA'NDY. v. a. [probably from bandy, the instrument with which they strike balls at play, which being crooked, is named from the term bander un arc, to string or bend a bow.]

1. To beat to and fro, or from one to another.

They do cunningly, from one hand to another, bandy the service like a tennis-ball. Spenser's Ireland.

And like a ball bandy'd 'twixt pride and wit,

Rather than yield, both sides the prize will quit. Denham.

What, from the tropicks, can the earth repel?

What vigorous arm, what percussive blow,
Bandies the mighty globe still to and fro? Blackmore.

2. To exchange; to give and take reciprocally.

Do you bandy looks with me, you rascal? Shakesp. K. Lear.

'Tis not in thee

To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train,

To bandy hasty words. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. To agitate; to toss about.

This hath been so bandied amongst us, that one can hardly miss books of this kind. Locke.

Ever since men have been united into governments, the endeavours after universal monarchy have been bandied among them. Swift.

Let not obvious and known truths, or some of the most plain and certain propositions, be bandied about in a disputation.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

TO BA'NDY. v. n. To contend, as at some game, in which each strives to drive the ball his own way.

No simple man that sees

This factious bandying of their favourites,

But that he doth presage some ill event. Shakesp. Henry VI.

A valiant son in law thou shalt enjoy:

One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,
To ruffle in the commonwealth. Shakesp. Tit. Andron.

Could set up grandee against grandee,

To squander time away, and bandy,

Make lords and commoners lay sieges

To one another's privileges. Hudibras.

After all the bandying attempts of resolution, it is as much a question as ever. Glanville's Scepssis, c. iv.

BA'NDYLEG. n. f. [from bander, Fr.] A crooked leg.

He tells aloud your greatest failing,

Nor makes a scruple to expose

Your bandyleg, or crooked nose. Swift.

BA'NDYLEGGED. adj. [from bandyleg.] Having crooked legs.

B A N

The Ethiopians had an one-eyed bandylegged prince; such a person would have made but an odd figure. Collier on Duelling.

BANE. n. f. [bana, Sax. a murderer.]

1. Poison.

Begone, or else let me. 'Tis bane to draw

The same air with thee. Ben Johnson's Catiline.

All good to me becomes

Bane; and in heav'n much worse would be my state.

Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix. l. 122.

They, with speed,

Their course through thickest constellations held,

Spreading their bane. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x. l. 412.

Thus, am I doubly armed; my death and life,

My bane and antidote, are both before me:

This, in a moment, brings me to an end;

But that informs me I shall never die. Addison's Cato.

2. That which destroys; mischief; ruin.

Insolency must be repress'd, or it will be the bane of the Christian religion. Hooker, b. ii. § 7.

I will not be afraid of death and bane,

Till Birnam forest come to Dunfinane. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Suffices that to me strength is my bane,

And proves the source of all my miseries. Milton's S. Agon:

So entertain'd those odorous sweets the fiend,

Who came their bane. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 167.

Who can omit the Gracchi, who declare

The Scipios' worth, those thunderbolts of war,

The double bane of Carthage? Dryden, Æneid vi.

False religion is, in its nature, the greatest bane and destruction to government in the world. South.

TO BANE. v. a. [from the noun.] To poison.

What if my house be troubled with a rat,

And I be pleas'd to give ten thousand ducats

To have it ban'd. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

BA'NEFUL. adj. [from bane and full.]

1. Poisonous.

For voyaging to learn the direful art,

To taint with deadly drugs the barbed dart;

Observant of the gods, and sternly just,

Ilus refus'd t' impart the baneful trust. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

2. Destructive.

The silver eagle too is sent before,

Which I do hope will prove to them as baneful,

As thou conceiv'st it to the commonwealth. B. Johnson's Catil.

For their poverty, I know not where they had that; and for their bareness, they never learned that of me. Shak. Hen. IV.

3. Poverty.
Were it stript of its privileges, and made as like the primitive church for its bareness as its purity, it could legally want all such privileges. South.

4. Meanness of clothes.

BA'RGAIN. n. f. [bargen, Welch; bargaigne, Fr.]

1. A contract or agreement concerning the sale of something.
What is marriage but a very bargain? wherein is sought alliance, or portion, or reputation, with some desire of issue; and not the faithful nuptial union of man and wife. Bacon.

B A R

- No more can be due to me,
Than at the bargain made was meant: Donne.
2. The thing bought or sold.
Give me but my price for the other two, and you shall even have that into the bargain. L'Estrange.
He who is at the charge of a tutor at home, may give his son a more genteel carriage, with greater learning into the bargain, than any at school can do. Locke.
3. Stipulation.
There was a difference between courtesies received from their master and the duke; for that the duke's might have ends of utility and bargain; whereas their master's could not. Bacon's Henry VII.
4. An unexpected reply, tending to obscenity.
Where sold he bargains, whiptitch? Dryden's Macflecknoe.
As to bargains, few of them seem to be excellent, because they all terminate in one single point. Swift.
No maid at court is less ashamed,
How'er for felling bargains fam'd. Swift.
5. An event; an upshot: a low sense.
I am sorry for thy misfortune; however we must make the best of a bad bargain: thou art in jeopardy, that is certain. Arbuthnot's History of J. Bull.
6. In law.
Bargain and sale is a contract or agreement made for manours, lands, &c. also the transferring the property of them from the bargainer to the bargainee. Cowel.
To BA'RGAIN. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a contract for the sale or purchase of any thing; often with for.
Henry is able to enrich his queen;
And not to seek a queen to make him rich.
So worthless peasants bargain for their wives,
As market men for oxen, sheep, or horse. Shakesp. Hen. VI.
For those that are like to be in plenty, they may be bargained for upon the ground. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 675.
The thrifty state will bargain ere they fight. Dryden.
It is possible the great duke may bargain for the republick of Lucca, by the help of his great treasures. Addison on Italy.
BARGAINEE'. n. f. [from bargain.] He or she that accepts a bargain.
BA'RGAINER. n. f. [from bargain.] The person who professes, or makes a bargain.
BARGE. n. f. [bargie, Dut. from barga, low Lat.]
1. A boat for pleasure.
The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,
Burnt on the water. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.
It was consulted, when I had taken my barge, and gone ashore, that my ship should have set sail and left me there. Raleigh's Essays.
Plac'd in the gilded barge,
Proud with the burden of so sweet a charge;
With painted oars the youths begin to sweep Neptune's smooth face. Waller.
2. A boat for burden.
BA'RGER. n. f. [from barge.] The manager of a barge.
Howsoever, many wafarers make themselves glee, by putting the inhabitants in mind of this privilege; who again, especially the women, like the Campellians in the north, and the London bargers, forswore not to baigne them. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
- BARK. n. f. [barck, Dan.]
1. The rind or covering of a tree.
Trees last according to the strength and quantity of their sap and juice; being well munit by their bark against the injuries of the air. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 583.
Wand'ring in the dark,
Physicians for the tree have found the bark. Dryden.
2. A small ship. [from barca, low Lat.]
Things, I say, being in this state, it came to pass, that the duke of Parma must have flown, if he would have come into England; for he could neither get bark nor mariner to put to sea. Bacon on the War with Spain.
It was that fatal and perfidious bark,
Built in th' eclipse, and rigg'd with curses dark,
That sunk so low that sacred head of thine. Milton.
Who to a woman trusts his peace of mind,
Trusts a frail bark with a tempestuous wind. Granville.
- To BARK. v. n. [beorcan, Saxon.]
1. To make the noise which a dog makes, when he threatens or pursues.
Sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And that so lamely and unfashionably,
That dogs bark at me. Shakesp. Richard III.
Why do your dogs bark so? be there bears i' th' town?
Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
In vain the herdman calls him back again;
The dogs stand off afar, and bark in vain. Cowley.
2. To clamour at; to pursue with reproaches.
Vile is the vengeance on the ashes cold,
And envy base, to bark at sleeping fame. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. viii.

B A R

- You dare patronage
The envious barking of your saucy tongue, Against my lord the duke of Somerset! Shakesp. Henry VI.
- To BARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To strip trees of their bark.
The severest penalties ought to be put upon barking any tree that is not felled. Temple.
These trees, after they are barked, and cut into shape, are tumbled down from the mountains into the stream. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- BARK-BARED. adj. [from bark and bare.] Stripped of the bark.
Excorticated and bark-bared trees may be preserved, by nourishing up a shoot from the foot, or below the stripped place, cutting the body of the tree sloping off a little above the shoot, and it will quickly heal, and be covered with bark. Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.
- BA'RKER. n. f. [from bark.]
1. One that barks or clamours.
What hath he done more than a base cur? barked and made a noise? had a fool or two to spit in his mouth? But they are rather enemies of my fame than me, these barkers. Ben. Johnson's Discovery.
2. [from bark of trees.] One that is employed in stripping trees.
BA'RKY. adj. [from bark.] Consisting of bark; containing bark.
Ivy so enrings the barky fingers of the elm. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
- BA'RLEY. n. f. [derived by Junius from bar.]
It hath a thick spike; the calyx, husk, awn, and flower, are like those of wheat or rye, but the awns are rough; the seed is swelling in the middle, and, for the most part, ends in a sharp point, to which the husks are closely united. The species are,
1. Common long-eared barley. 2. Winter or square barley, by some called big. 3. Sprat barley, or battledoor barley. All these sorts of barley are sown in the spring of the year, in a dry time. In some very dry light land, the barley is sown early in March; but in strong clayey soils it is not sown till April. The square barley, or big, is chiefly cultivated in the north of England, and in Scotland; and is hardier than the other sorts. Where barley is sown upon new broken up land, the usual method is to plough up the land in March, and let it lie fallow until June; at which time it is ploughed again, and sown with turneps, which are eaten by sheep in winter, by whose dung the land is greatly improved; and then, in March following, the ground is ploughed again, and sown with barley. Millar.
Barley is emollient, moistening, and expectorating; barley was chosen by Hippocrates as proper food in inflammatory distempers. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
- BA'RLEYBRAKE. n. f. A kind of rural play.
By neighbours prais'd she went abroad thereby,
At barleybrake her sweet swift feet to try. Sidney.
- BARLEY BROTH. n. f. [from barley and broth.] A low word, sometimes used for strong beer.
Can foddren water,
A drench for surreyn'd jades, their barley broth, Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat? Shak. Hen. V.
- BARLEY CORN. n. f. [from barley and corn.] A grain of barley; the beginning of our measure of length; the third part of an inch.
A long, long journey, choak'd with brakes and thorns, Ill measur'd by ten thousand barley corns. Tickell.
- BARLEY MOW. n. f. [from barley and mow.] The place where reaped barley is stowed up.
Whenever by yon barley mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass. Gay's Pastorals.
- BARM. n. f. [burm, Welch; beorpn, Sax.] Yeast; the ferment put into drink to make it work, and into bread, to lighten and swell it.
Are you not he
That sometimes make the drink to bear no barm, Mislead light wand'ers, laughing at their harm? Shakespear.
You may try the force of imagination, upon staying the working of beer when the barm is put into it. Bacon's Nat. History, N° 992.
- BA'RMY. adj. [from barm.] Containing barm.
Their jovial nights in frolicks and in play
They pass, to drive the tedious hours away;
And their cold stomachs with crown'd goblets cheer,
Of windy cider, and of barmy bear. Dryden's Virgil.
- BARN. n. f. [beorpn, Sax.] A place or house for laying up any sort of grain, hay, or straw, &c.
In vain the barns expect their promis'd load,
Nor barns at home, nor reeks are heap'd abroad. Dryden.
I took notice of the make of several barns here: after having laid a frame of wood, they place, at the four corners of it, four blocks, in such a shape as neither mice nor vermin can creep up. Addison on Italy.
- BA'RNACLE. n. f. [probably of beorpn, Sax. a child, and aac, Sax. an oak.]

1. A bird like a goose, fabulously supposed to grow on trees.

Surely it is beyond even an atheist's credulity and impudence, to affirm that the first men might grow upon trees, as the story goes about barnacles; or perhaps might be the lice of some vast prodigious animals, whose species is now extinct.

Bentley's Sermons.

And from the most refin'd of faints,

As naturally grow miscreants,

As barnacles turn solan geese

In th' islands of the Orcades.

Hudibras, p. iii. c. ii.

2. An instrument made commonly of iron for the use of farriers, to hold a horse by the nose, to hinder him from struggling when any incision is made.

Farrier's Dict.

BAROMETER. n. f. [from βάρος, weight, and μέτρον, measure.]

A machine for measuring the weight of the atmosphere, and the variations in it, in order chiefly to determine the changes of the weather. It differs from the baroscope, which only shews that the air is heavier at one time than another, without specifying the difference. The barometer is founded upon the Torricellian experiment, so called from Torricelli the inventor of it, at Florence, in 1643; which is a glass tube filled with mercury, horizontally sealed at one end; the other open and immersed in a basin of stagnant mercury; so that, as the weight of the atmosphere diminishes, the mercury in the tube will descend, and, as it encreases, the mercury will ascend; the column of mercury suspended in the tube, being always equal to the weight of the incumbent atmosphere. Many attempts have been made to render the changes in the barometer more sensible, in order to measure the atmosphere more accurately; and hence arose a great number of barometers, of different structures. Dr. Halley observes, in the Philosophical Transactions, that in calm weather, when the air is inclined to rain, the mercury is commonly low; in serene good settled weather, high. On great winds, though unaccompanied with rain, the mercury is lowest of all, with regard to the point of the compass the wind blows on. The greatest heights of the mercury are on easterly and north-easterly winds, cæteris paribus. After great storms of wind, when the mercury has been low, it rises again very fast. In calm frosty weather, it stands high. The more northerly places find greater alterations than the more southern; and within the tropicks, and near them, there is little or no variation of the height of the mercury. The rising of the mercury forebodes fair weather after foul, and an easterly or north-easterly wind; its falling portends southerly or westerly winds, or both. In a storm, the mercury beginning to rise, is a pretty sure sign that it begins to abate. But there are frequently great changes in the air, without any perceptible alteration in the barometer. The alterations of the weight of the air, are generally allowed to be the cause of those in the barometer; but philosophers cannot easily determine whence those alterations rise in the atmosphere.

The measuring the heights of mountains, and finding the elevation of places above the level of the sea, hath been much promoted by barometrical experiments, founded upon that essential property of the air, its gravity or pressure. As the column of mercury in the barometer is counterpoised by a column of air of equal weight, so whatever causes make the air heavier or lighter, the pressure of it will be thereby encreased or lessened, and of consequence the mercury will rise or fall. Again, the air is condensed or expanded, in proportion to the weight or force that presses it. Hence it is, that the higher from the sea, in the midland countries, the mercury descends the lower; because the air becomes more rarified and lighter, and it falls lowest upon the tops of the highest mountains. Harris.

Gravity is another property of air, whereby it counterpoises a column of mercury from twenty-seven inches and one half to thirty and one half, the gravity of the atmosphere varying one tenth, which are its utmost limits; so that the exact specific gravity of the air cannot be determined when the barometer stands at thirty inches, with a moderate heat of the weather.

Arbuthnot on Air.

BAROMETRICAL. adj. [from barometer.] Relating to the barometer.

He is very accurate in making barometrical and thermometrical instruments.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

BARON. n. f. [The etymology of this word is very uncertain. Baro, among the Romans, signified a brave warrior, or a brutal man; and, from the first of these significations, Menage derives baron, as a term of military dignity. Others suppose it originally to signify only a man; in which sense baron, or varon, is still used by the Spaniards; and, to confirm this conjecture, our law yet uses baron and femme, husband and wife. Others deduce it from ber, an old Gaulish word, signifying commander; others from the Hebrew בַּר, of the same import. Some think it a contraction of par homme, or peer, which seems least probable.]

1. A degree of nobility next to a viscount. It may be probably thought, that anciently, in England, all those were called barons, that had such signiories as we now call court barons. And it is said, that, after the conquest, all such came to the parliament, and sat as nobles in the upper house. But when, by experience, it appeared, that the parliament was too much crouded with such multitudes, it became a custom, that none should come, but such as the king, for their extraordinary wisdom or quality, thought good to call by writ; which writ ran hac vice tantum. After that, men, seeing that this state of nobility was but casual, and depending merely on the prince's pleasure, obtained of the king letters patent of this dignity to them and their heirs male: and these were called barons by letters patent, or by creation; whose posterity are now those barons that are called lords of the parliament; of which kind the king may create more at his pleasure. It is nevertheless thought, that there are yet barons by writ, as well as barons by letters patent, and that they may be discerned by their titles; the barons by writ being those, that to the title of lord have their own surnames annexed; whereas the barons by letters patent, are named by their baronies. These barons which were first by writ, may now justly also be called barons by prescription; for that they have continued barons, in themselves and their ancestors, beyond the memory of man. There are also barons by tenure, as the bishops of the land, who, by virtue of baronies annexed to their bishopricks, have always had place in the upper house of parliament, and are called lords spiritual.

2. Baron is an officer, as barons of the exchequer to the king: of these the principal is called lord chief baron, and the three others are his assistants, between the king and his subjects, in causes of justice, belonging to the exchequer.

3. There are also barons of the cinque ports; two to each of the seven towns, Hastings, Winchelsea, Rye, Rumney, Hithe, Dover, and Sandwich, that have places in the lower house of parliament.

Cowel.

They that bear

The cloth of state above, are four barons

Of the cinque ports.

Shakesp. Henry VIII.

4. Baron is used for the husband in relation to his wife.

Cowel.

5. A baron of beef is when the two sirloins are not cut afunder, but joined together by the end of the backbone.

Dict.

BARONAGE. n. f. [from baron.]

1. The body of barons and peers.

His charters of the liberties of England, and of the forest, were hardly, and with difficulty, gained by his baronage at Staines, A. D. 1215.

Hale's Common Law of England.

2. The dignity of a baron.

3. The land which gives title to a baron.

BARONESS. n. f. [baronessa, Ital. baronissa, Lat.] A baron's lady.

BARONET. n. f. [of baron and et, diminutive termination.] The lowest degree of honour that is hereditary; it is below a baron and above a knight; and has the precedency of all other knights, except the knights of the garter. It was first founded by king James I. A. D. 1611. Cowel. But it appears by the following passage, that the term was in use before, though in another sense.

King Edward III. being bearded and crossed by the clergy, they being too strong for him, so as he could not order and reform things, was advised to direct out his writs to certain gentlemen of the best abilities, entitling them therein barons in the next parliament. By which means he had so many barons in his parliament, as were able to weigh down the clergy; which barons were not afterwards lords, but baronets, as sundry of them do yet retain the name.

Spenser on Ireland.

BARONY. n. f. [baronnie, Fr. beopny, Sax.] That honour or lordship that gives title to a baron. Such are not only the fees of temporal barons, but of bishops also.

Cowel.

BAROSCOPE. n. f. [βάρος and σκοπέω.] An instrument to shew the weight of the atmosphere. See BAROMETER.

If there was always a calm, the equilibrium could only be changed by the contents; where the winds are not variable, the alterations of the baroscope are very small.

Arbuth. on Air.

BARRACAN. n. f. [bouracan, or barracan, Fr.] A strong thick kind of camelot.

BARRRACK. n. f. [barracca, Span.]

1. Little cabins made by the Spanish fishermen on the sea shore; or little lodges for soldiers in a camp.

2. It is generally taken among us for buildings to lodge soldiers.

BARRRATOR. n. f. [from barat, old Fr. from which is still retained barateur, a cheat.] A wrangler, and encourager of law suits.

Will it not reflect as much on thy character, Nic, to turn barrator in thy old days, a stirrer up of quarrels amongst thy neighbours.

Arbuthnot's History of J. Bull.

BARRRATRY. n. f. [from barrator.] The practice or crime of a barrator; foul practice in law.

'Tis arrant barratry, that bears

Point blank an action 'gainst our laws.

Hudibras.

BARREL. n. f. [baril, Welch.]

1. A round wooden vessel to be stopped close.

It hath been observed by one of the ancients, that an empty barrel knocked upon with the finger, giveth a diapason to the sound of the like barrel full.

Bacon's Nat. History, N° 186.

Trembling to approach

The little barrel, which he fears to broach.

Dryden's Persius.

2. A particular measure in liquids. A barrel of wine is thirty one gallons and a half; of ale, thirty two gallons; of beer, thirty six gallons, and of beer vinegar, thirty four gallons.

3. In dry measure. A barrel of Essex butter contains one hundred and and six pounds; of Suffolk butter, two hundred and fifty six. A barrel of herrings should contain thirty two gallons wine measure, holding usually a thousand herrings.

Several colleges, instead of limiting their rents to a certain sum, prevailed with their tenants to pay the price of so many barrels of corn, as the market went. Swift.

4. Any thing hollow, as the barrel of a gun; that part which holds the shot.

Take the barrel of a long gun perfectly bored, set it upright with the breech upon the ground, and take a bullet exactly fit for it; then if you suck at the mouth of the barrel ever so gently, the bullet will come up so forcibly, that it will hazard the striking out your teeth. Digby on Bodies.

5. A cylinder; frequently that cylinder about which any thing is wound.

Your string and bow must be accommodated to your drill; if too weak, it will not carry about the barrel.

6. Barrel of the ear, is a cavity behind the tympanum, covered with a fine membrane. Diët.

TO BARREL. v. a. [from the noun.] To put any thing in a barrel for preservation.

I would have their beef beforehand barrelled, which may be used as it is needed. Spenser on Ireland.

Barrel up earth, and sow some seed in it, and put it in the bottom of a pond. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 531.

BARREL-BELLIED. adj. [from barrel and belly.] Having a large belly.

Dauntless at empty noises; lofty neck'd,
Sharp headed, barrel-belly'd, broadly back'd. Dryd. Virgil.

BARREN. adj. [bare, Sax. naked; properly applied to trees or ground unfruitful.]

1. Without the quality of producing its kind; not prolifick; applied to animals.

They hail'd him father to a line of kings.
Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
No son of mine succeeding. Shakesp. Macbeth.
There shall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattle. Deuter. vii. 14.

2. Unfruitful; not fertile; sterile.

The situation of this city is pleasant, but the water is naught, and the ground barren. 2 Kings, ii. 19.

Telemachus is far from exalting the nature of his country; he confesses it to be barren. Pope's Odyssey, b. iv. notes.

From his far excursion thro' the wilds
Of barren ether, faithful to his time,
They see the blazing wonder rise anew. Thomson's Summer.

3. Not copious; scanty.

Some schemes will appear barren of hints and matter, but prove to be fruitful. Swift.

4. Unmeaning; uninventive; dull.

There be of them that will make themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too. Shakespeare.

BARRENLY. adv. [from barren.] Unfruitfully.

BARRENNESS. n. f. [from barren.]

1. Want of offspring; want of the power of procreation.

I pray'd for children, and thought barrenness
In wedlock a reproach. Milton's Agonistes, l. 350.
No more be mention'd then of violence
Against ourselves; and wilful barrenness,
That cuts us off from hope. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

2. Unfruitfulness; sterility; infertility.

Within the self same hamlet, lands have divers degrees of value, through the diversity of their fertility or barrenness. Bacon on Alienations.

3. Want of invention; want of the power of producing any thing new.

The adventures of Ulysses are imitated in the Æneis; though the accidents are not the same, which would have argued him of a total barrenness of invention. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

4. Want of matter.

The importunity of our adversaries hath constrained us longer to dwell than the barrenness of so poor a cause could have seem'd either to require or to admit. Hooker, b. v. § 22.

5. In theology: aridity; want of emotion or sensibility.

The greatest saints sometimes are fervent, and sometimes feel a barrenness of devotion. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

BARREN WORT. n. f. [epimedium, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The stalks are divided into three branches, each sustaining three leaves, shaped like ivy; the calyx consists of four leaves; the flower, of four petals, hollow, and expanded in form of a cross; the pointal of the flower becomes a pod with one cell, having two valves, in which are contained round flat seeds. Millar.

BARREFUL. adj. [from bar and full.] Full of obstructions.

A barrful strife!

Whoe'er I woo, myself would be his wife. Shak. Tw. Night.

BARRICA'DE. n. f. [barricade, Fr.]

1. A fortification made in haste, of trees, earth, waggons, or any thing else, to keep off an attack.

2. Any stop; bar; obstruction.

VOL. I.

There must be such a barricade, as would greatly annoy, or rather absolutely stop, the currents of the atmosphere.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

TO BARRICA'DE. v. a. [barricader, Fr.] To stop up a passage.

A new vulcano continually discharging that matter, which being till then barricaded up, and imprisoned in the bowels of the earth, was the occasion of very great and frequent calamities. Woodward's Natural History.

Now all the pavement sounds with trampling feet,

And the mixt hurry barricades the street,

Entangled here, the waggon's lengthen'd team. Gay.

BARRICA'DO. n. f. [barricada, Span.] A fortification; a bar;

any thing fixed to hinder entrance.

The access of the town was only by a neck of land, between the sea on the one part, and the harbour water, or inner sea on the other; fortified clean over with a strong rampier and barricado. Bacon's War with Spain.

TO BARRICADO. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify; to bar;

to stop up.

Fast we found, fast shut

The dismal gates, and barricado'd strong! Paradise Lost.

He had not time to barricado the doors; so that the enemy entered. Clarendon, b. viii.

The truth of causes we find so obliterated, that it seems almost barricadoed from any intellectual approach.

Harvey on Consumptions.

BA'RRIER. n. f. [barriere, Fr. It is sometimes pronounced with the accent on the last syllable, but it is placed more properly on the first.]

1. A barricade; an entrenchment.

Safe in the love of heav'n an ocean flows

Around our realm, a barrier from the foes. Pope's Odyssey.

2. A fortification, or strong place, as on the frontiers of a country.

The queen is under the obligation of being guarantee of the Dutch having possession of the said barrier, and the revenues thereof, before a peace. Swift.

3. A stop; an obstruction.

If you value yourself as a man of learning, you are building a most unpassable barrier against all improvement.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

4. A bar to mark the limits of any place.

For jousts, and tourneys, and barriers, the glories of them are chiefly in the chariots, wherein the challengers make their entries. Bacon's Essays.

Pris'ners to the pillar bound,

At either barrier plac'd; nor, captives made,

Be freed, or arm'd anew. Dryden's Fables.

5. A boundary.

But wave whate'er to Cadmus may belong,

And fix, O muse, the barrier of thy song,

At Oedipus. Pope's Statius.

How instinct varies in the groveling swine,

Compar'd, half reas'ning elephant! with thine:

'Twixt that and reason, what a nice barrier!

For ever sep'rate, yet for ever near. Pope's Essay on Man.

BA'RRISTER. n. f. [from bar.] A person qualified to plead the causes of clients in the courts of justice, called an advocate or licentiate in other countries and courts. Barriers, now usually denominated counsellors at law, were formerly obliged to study eight years before they were pass'd, now only seven, and sometimes fewer. Outer barriers are pleaders without the bar, to distinguish them from inner barriers; such are the benchers, or those who have been readers, the council of the king, queen, and princes, who are admitted to plead within the bar. Blount. Chambers.

BA'RRROW. n. f. [benepe, Sax. supposed by Skinner to come from bear.] Any kind of carriage moved by the hand, as a hand-barrow; a frame of boards, with handles at each end, carried between two men; a wheelbarrow, that which one man pushes forward, by raising it upon one wheel.

Have I lived to be carried in a basket, like a barrow of butcher's offal, and to be thrown into the Thames?

Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

No barrow's wheel

Shall mark thy stocking with a miry trace. Gay's Trivia.

BA'RRROW. n. f. [berz, Saxon.] A hog; whence barrow grease, or hog's lard.

BARROW, whether in the beginning or end of names of places, signifies a grove; from beappe, which the Saxons used in the same sense. Gibson's Camden.

BARROW is likewise used in Cornwall for a hillock, under which, in old times, bodies have been buried.

TO BARTER. v. n. [baratter, Fr. to trick in traffick; from barat, craft, fraud.] To traffick by exchanging one commodity for another, in opposition to purchasing with money.

As if they scorn'd to trade and barter,

By giving or by taking quarter. Hudibras, p. iii. c. i.

A man has not every thing growing upon his soil, and therefore is willing to barter with his neighbour. Collier.

TO BARTER. v. a.

1. To give any thing in exchange for something else.

2 R

For

For him was I exchang'd and ransom'd;
But with a baser man of arms by far,
Once, in contempt, they would have barter'd me.
Shakefp. Henry VI. p. i.

Then as thou wilt dispose the rest,
To those who, at the market rate,
Can barter honour for estate. Prior.
I see nothing left us, but to truck and barter our goods, like the wild Indians, with each other. Swift.
2. Sometimes it is used with the particle away before the thing given.

If they will barter away their time, methinks they should at least have some ease in exchange. Decay of Piety.

He also bartered away plums that would have rotted in a week, for nuts that would last good for his eating a whole year. Locke.

BA'RTER. n. f. [from the verb.] The act or practice of trafficking by exchange of commodities; sometimes the thing given in exchange.

From England they may be furnished with such things as they may want, and, in exchange or barter, send other things, with which they may abound. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

He who corrupteth English with foreign words, is as wise as ladies that change plate for china; for which, I think, the laudable traffick of old cloaths is much the fairest barter.
Felton on the Classics.

BA'RTERER. n. f. [from barter.] He that trafficks by exchange of commodities.

BA'RTERY. n. f. [from barter.] Exchange of commodities.
It is a received opinion, that, in most ancient ages, there was only bartery or change of commodities amongst most nations. Camden's Remains.

BA'RTAM. n. f. A plant; the same with pellitory; which see.

BA'RTON. n. f. The demesne lands of a manour; the manour-house itself; and sometimes the out-houses. Blount.

BASE. adj. [bas, Fr. basso, Ital. basso, Span. basso, low Latin;
basus.]

1. Mean; vile; worthless.

The harvest white plumb is a base plumb, and the white date plumb are no very good plumbs. Bacon's Natural Hist.

Pyreicus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things, as earthen pitchers, a scullery; whereupon he was surnamed
Rupographus. Peacham.

2. Of mean spirit; disingenuous; illiberal; ungenerous; low;
without dignity of sentiment.

Since the perfections are such in the party I love, as the feeling of them cannot come unto any un noble heart; shall that heart, lifted up to such a height, be counted base? Sidney.

It is base in his adversaries thus to dwell upon the excesses of a passion. Atterbury.

I might be base enough to suspect, that you acted like some philosopher, who writ much better upon virtue than he practised it. Swift.

3. Of low station; of mean account; without dignity of rank;
without honour.

If the lords and chief men degenerate, what shall be hoped of the peasants and base people? Spenser on Ireland.

If that rebellion
Came like itself, in base and abject routs,
You reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.

It could not else be, I should prove so base,
To sue and be denied such common grace. Shak. Timon.

And I will yet be more vile than this, and will be base in mine own fight. 2 Sam. vi. 22.

Insurrections of base people are commonly more furious in their beginnings. Bacon's Henry VII.

He whose mind
Is virtuous, is alone of noble kind;
Though poor in fortune, of celestial race,
And he commits the crime who calls him base. Dryden.

4. Base-born; born out of wedlock, and by consequence of no honourable birth.

Why bastard? wherefore base?

When my dimensions are as well compact
As honest madam's issue. Shakefp. King Lear.

This young lord lost his life with his father in the field, and with them a base son. Camden's Remains.

5. Applied to metals: without value; it is used in this sense of all metal except gold and silver.

A guinea is pure gold, if it has nothing but gold in it, without any alloy or base metal. Watts's Logick.

6. Applied to sounds, deep; grave. It is more frequently written bas, though the comparative baser seems to require base.

In pipes, the lower the note holes be, and the further from the mouth of the pipe, the more base sound they yield.

Bacon's Natural History, N° 178.

BASE-BORN. adj. Born out of wedlock.

But see thy base-born child, thy babe of shame,

Who, left by thee, upon our parish came. Gay.

BASE-COURT. n. f. Lower court; not the chief court that leads to the house.

My lord, in the base-court he doth attend,
To speak with you. Shakefp. Richard II.

BASE-MINDED. adj. Mean spirited; worthless.

It signifieth, as it seemeth, no more than abject, base-minded, false hearted, coward, or nidget. Camden's Remains.

BASE-VIOL. n. f. [usually written bas viol.] An instrument which is used in concerts for the base sound.

At the very first grin he cast every human feature out of his countenance; at the second, he became the head of a base-viol.
Addison. Spectator, N° 174.

BASE. n. f. [bas, Fr. basis, Lat.]

1. The bottom of any thing; commonly used for the lower part of a building, or column.

What if it tempt thee tow'rd the flood, my lord?
Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,
That beetles o'er his base into the sea. Shakefp. Hamlet.

Firm Dorick pillars found your solid base;
The fair Corinthian crowns the higher space. Dryden.

Columns of polish'd marble firmly set
On golden bases, are his legs and feet. Prior.

2. The pedestal of a statue.

Men of weak abilities in great place, are like little statues set on great bases, made the less by their advancement. Bacon.

Mercury was patron of flocks, and the ancients placed a ram at the base of his images. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

3. That part of any ornament which hangs down, as housings.
Phalantus was all in white, having his bases and caparison embroidered. Sidney.

4. The broad part of any body; as the bottom of a cone.

5. Stockings, or perhaps the armour for the legs, from bas, Fr.

Nor shall it e'er be said that wight,
With gauntlet blue and bases white,
And round blunt truncheon by his side,

So great a man at arms defy'd. Hudibras.

6. The place from which racers or tilters run; the bottom of the field.

He said; to their appointed base they went;
With beating heart th' expecting sign receive,
And, starting all at once, the barrier leave. Dryden's Virg.

7. The string that gives a base sound.

At thy well sharpen'd thumb, from shore to shore,
The trebles squeak for fear, the bases roar. Dryden's Mackfl.

8. An old rustick play; written by Skinner, bays.

He with two striplings (lads, more like to run
The country base, than to commit such slaughter)
Made good the passage. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

To BASE. v. a. [basier, Fr.] To embase; to make less valuable by admixture of meaner metals.

I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals, which we cannot base; as, whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height? Bacon's Natural History, N° 849.

BA'SELY. adv. [from base.]

1. In a base manner; meanly; dishonourably.

The king is not himself, but basely led
By flatterers. Shakefp. Richard II.

A lieutenant basely gave it up, as soon as Essex in his passage demanded it. Clarendon.

With broken vows his fame he will not stain,
With conquest basely bought, and with inglorious gain.
Dryden.

2. In bastardy.

These two Mitylene brethren, basely born, crept out of a small galliot unto the majesty of great kings.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

BA'SENESS. n. f. [from base.]

1. Meanness; vileness; badness.

Such is the power of that sweet passion,
That it all fordid baseness doth expel. Spens. Hymn on Love.

When a man's folly must be spread open before the angels, and all his baseness ript up before those pure spirits, this will be a double hell. South.

Your soul's above the baseness of distrust:
Nothing but love could make you so unjust. Dryd. Aureng.

2. Vileness of metal.

We alleged the fraudulent obtaining and executing his patent, the baseness of his metal, and the prodigious sum to be coined. Swift.

3. Bastardy.

Why brand they us
With base? with baseness? bastardy? Shakefp. King Lear.

4. Deepness of sound.

The just and measured proportion of the air percussed towards the baseness or trebleness of tones, is one of the greatest secrets in the contemplation of sounds. Bacon's Nat. History.

To BASH. v. n. [probably from base.] To be ashamed; to be confounded with shame.

His countenance was bold, and *bas*d not
For Guyon's looks, but scornful eye-glance at him shot.

Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. iv.

BASHA'W. n. f. [sometimes written bassa.] A title of honour and command among the Turks; the viceroy of a province;
the general of an army.

B A S

The Turks made an expedition into Persia; and because of the straits of the mountains, the basbaw consulted which way they should get in.

Bacon's Apophthegms.

BA'SHFUL. adj. [This word, with all those of the same race, are of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines them derived from bafē, or mean; Minshew, from verbaesen, Dut. to strike with astonishment; Junius, from basia, which he finds in He-sychius to signify shame. The conjecture of Minshew seems most probable.]

1. Modest; shamefaced.

I never tempted her with word too large;

But, as a brother to his sister, shew'd

Bashful sincerity, and comely love. Shakesp. M. ado about N.

2. Sheepish; vitiously modest.

He looked with an almost bashful kind of modesty, as if he feared the eyes of man.

Sidney.

Hence, bashful cunning!

And prompt me plain and holy innocence. Shakesp. Tempest.

Our authour, anxious for his fame to night,

And bashful in his first attempt to write,

Lies cautiously obscure.

Addison's Drummer, Prologue.

BA'SHFULLY. adv. [from bashful.] Timorously; modestly.

BA'SHFULNESS. n. f. [from bashful.]

1. Modesty, as shewn in outward appearance.

Philoclea a little mused how to cut the thread even, with eyes, cheeks and lips, whereof each sang their part, to make up the harmony of bashfulness.

Sidney.

Such looks, such bashfulness might well adorn

The cheeks of youths that are more nobly born. Dryden.

2. Vitious or rustick shame.

For fear had bequeathed his room to his kinsman bashfulness, to teach him good manners.

Sidney, b. i.

There are others who have not altogether so much of this foolish bashfulness, and who ask every one's opinion. Dryden.

BA'SIL. n. f. [ocymum, Lat.] The name of a plant.

This plant hath a labiated flower of one leaf, whose crest is upright, roundish, notched, and larger than the beard, which is generally curled, or gently cut. Out of the flower cup rises the pointal, attended by four embryos, that become so many feeds inclosed in a husk, which was before the flower cup; the husk is divided into two lips, the upper one growing upright, and is split into two; but the under one is cut into several parts. The species are eight; 1. Common basil. 2. Common basil, with dark green leaves, and white flowers. 3. Lesser basil, with narrow ferrated leaves. 4. The least basil, commonly called busb-basil, &c. These annual plants are propagated from seeds in March, upon a moderate hot bed. In August they perfect their feeds. The first sort is prescribed in medicine; but the fourth is most esteemed for its beauty and scent.

Millar.

BA'SIL. n. f. The angle to which the edge of a joiner's tool is ground away.

BA'SIL. n. f. The skin of a sheep tanned.

Diēt.

To BA'SIL. v. a. To grind the edge of a tool to an angle.

These chissels are not ground to such a basil as the joiners chissels on one of the sides, but are bafied away on both the flat sides; so that the edge lies between both the sides in the middle of the tool.

BASI'LICA. n. f. [βασιλική.] The middle vein of the arm so called, by way of pre-eminence. It is likewise attributed to many medicines for the same reason.

And sent her boasted bastard to the war.

Dryden.

2. Any thing spurious or false.

It lies on you to speak to th' people;

Not by your own instruction, but with words

But rooted in your tongue; bastards and syllables

Of no allowance to your bosom's truth. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

BA'STARD. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Begotten out of wedlock.

Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy, insensible, a getter of more bastard children than war's a destroyer of men.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

2. Spurious; not genuine; supposititious; false; adulterate. In this sense, any thing which bears some relation or resemblance to another, is called spurious or bastard.

You may partly hope that your father got you not, that you are not the Jew's daughter.—That were a kind of bastard hope indeed.

Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Men who, under the disguise of publick good, pursue their own designs of power, and such bastard honours as attend them.

Temple.

BA'STARD Cedar Tree. [called guazuma in the West Indies.]

The characters are; It hath a regular flower, consisting of five leaves, hollowed like a spoon at their base; but, at their tops, divided into two parts, like a fork. The flower cup consists of three leaves, from whence arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a roundish warted fruit, which has five cells, inclosing many seeds.

It grows plentifully in the low lands in Jamaica, where it rises to the height of forty or fifty feet, and has a large trunk. The timber of this tree is cut into staves, for cases of all sorts, and used for many other purposes. The fruit is eat by cattle, as it falls from the trees, and is esteemed very good to fatten them; so that the planters often leave these trees standing in their savannas, when they clear them from all other wood.

Millar.

TO BA'STARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To convict of being a bastard; to stigmatize with bastardy.

She lived to see her brother beheaded, and her two sons deposed from the crown, bastarded in their blood, and cruelly murdered.

TO BASTINA'DE. } v. a. [from the noun; bastonner, Fr.] TO

TO BASTINA'DO. } beat; to give the bastinado.

Nick seized the longer end of the cudgel, and with it began to bastinado old Lewis, who had slunk into a corner, waiting the event of the squabble.

Arbuthnot's History of J. Bull.

BA'STION. n. f. [bastion, Fr.] A huge mass of earth, usually faced with sods, sometimes with brick, rarely with stone, standing out from a rampart, of which it is a principal part, and was anciently called a bulwark.

Harris.

Toward: but how? ay there's the question;

Fierce the assault, unarm'd the bastion.

Prior.

BAT. n. f. [bat, Sax. This word seems to have given rise to a great number of words in many languages; as, battre, Fr. to beat; baton, battle, beat, batty, and others. It probably signified a weapon that did execution by its weight, in opposition to a sharp edge; whence whirlbat and brickbat.] A heavy stick or club.

A handsome bat he held,

On which he leaned, as one far in eld.

Hubberd's Tale.

They were fried in arm chairs, and their bones broken with bats.

Hakewell on Providence.

BAT. n. f. [the etymology unknown.] An animal having the body of a mouse and the wings of a bird; not with feathers, but with a sort of skin which is extended. It lays no eggs, but brings forth its young alive, and suckles them. It never grows tame, feeds upon flies, insects, and fatty substances, such as candles, oil, and cheese; and appears only in the summer evenings, when the weather is fine.

Calmet.

When owls do cry,

On the bat's back I do fly.

Shakesp. Tempest.

But then grew reason dark; that fair star no more

Could the fair forms of good and truth discern;

Bats they became who eagles were before;

And this they got by their desire to learn. Sir J. Davies.

Some animals are placed in the middle betwixt two kinds, as bats, which have something of birds and beasts.

Locke.

Where swallows in the winter season keep,

And how the drowsy bat and dormouse sleep.

Gay.

BAT-FOWLING. n. f. [from bat and fowl.] A particular manner of birdcatching in the night time, while they are at roost upon perches, trees, or hedges. They light torches or straw, and then beat the bushes; upon which the birds flying to the flames, are caught either with nets, or otherwise.

You would lift the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing.—We should so, and then go a bat-fowling.

Shakesp. Tempest.

Bodies lighted at night by fire, must have a brighter lustre given them than by day; as sacking of cities, bat-fowling, &c.

Peacham on Drawing.

BATABLE. adj. [from late.] Disputable.

Batable

Batable ground seems to be the ground heretofore in question, whether it belonged to England or Scotland, lying between both kingdoms. Cowel.

BATCH. n. f. [from bake.]

1. The quantity of bread baked at a time.
The joiner puts the boards into ovens after the batch is drawn, or lays them in a warm stable. Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. Any quantity of any thing made at once, so as to have the same qualities.
Except he were of the same meal and batch. Ben. Johnson.

BA'TCHELOR. See BACHELOR.

BATE. n. f. [perhaps contracted from debate.] Strife; contention; as a make-bate.

TO BATE. v. a. [contracted from abate.]

1. To lessen any thing; to retrench.
Shall I bend low, and in a bondman's key,
With bated breath, and whisp'ring humbleness,
Say this? Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
Nor envious at the sight will I forbear
My plenteous bowl, nor bate my plenteous cheer. Dryden.
2. To sink the price.
When the landholder's rent falls, he must either bate the labourer's wages, or not employ, or not pay him. Locke.
3. To lessen a demand.
Bate me some, and I will pay you some, and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely. Shakesp. Henry IV.
4. To cut off; to take away.
Bate but the last, and 'tis what I would say. Dryd. Sp. Friar.

TO BATE. v. n.

1. To grow less.
Bardolph, am not I fallen away vilely since this last election? Do I not bate? do I not dwindle? Why, my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown. Shak. Hen. IV.
2. To remit; with of before the thing.
Abate thy speed, and I will bate of mine. Dryden.

BATE seems to have been once the preterite of bite, as Shakespeare uses biting faulchion; unless, in the following lines, it may be rather deduced from beat.
Yet there the steel staid not, but inly bate
Deep in his flesh, and open'd wide a red flood gate. F. Queen.

BA'TEFUL. adj. [from bate and full.] Contentious.
He knew her haunt, and haunted in the same,
And taught his sheep her sheep in food to thwart;
Which soon as it did bateful question frame,
He might on knees confess his guilty part. Sidney.

BA'TEMENT. n. f. [from abatement.] Diminution; a term only used among artificers.
To abate, is to waste a piece of stuff; instead of asking how much was cut off, carpenters ask what batement that piece of stuff had. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

BATH. n. f. [bað, Saxon.]

1. A bath is either hot or cold, either of art or nature. Artificial baths have been in great esteem with the ancients, especially in complaints to be relieved by revulsion, as inveterate headaches, by opening the pores of the feet, and also in cutaneous cases. But the modern practice has greatest recourse to the natural baths; most of which abound with a mineral sulphur, as appears from their turning silver and copper blackish. The cold baths are the most convenient springs, or reservoirs, of cold water to wash in, which the ancients had in great esteem; and the present age can produce abundance of noble cures performed by them. Quincy.
Why may not the cold bath, into which they plunged themselves, have had some share in their cure? Addison. Spectator.
2. A state in which great outward heat is applied to the body, for the mitigation of pain, or any other purpose.
In the height of this bath, when I was more than half stewed in grease like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
Sleep, the birth of each day's life, fore labour's bath, Balm of hurt minds. Shakesp. Macbeth.
3. In chymistry, it generally signifies a vessel of water, in which another is placed that requires a softer heat than the naked fire. Balneum Mariæ is a mistake, for balneum maris, a sea or water bath. A sand heat is sometimes called balneum siccum, or cine-reum. Quincy.
We see that the water of things distilled in water, which they call the bath, differeth not much from the water of things distilled by fire. Bacon's Natural History, N° 684.
4. A sort of Hebrew measure, containing the tenth part of an homer, or seven gallons and four pints, as a measure for things liquid; and three pecks and three pints, as a measure for things dry. Calmet.
Ten acres of vineyard shall yield one bath, and the seed of an homer shall yield an ephah. Isaiah, v. 10.

TO BATHE. v. a. [baðian, Saxon.]

1. To wash in a bath.
Others, on silver lakes and rivers, bath'd
Their downy breast. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 437.
Chancing to bathe himself in the river Cydnus, through the excessive coldness of these waters, he fell sick, near unto death, for three days. South.

2. To supple or soften by the outward application of warm liquours.
Bathe them, and keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters, and lenitive boluses. Wifeman's Surgery.
I'll bathe your wounds in tears for my offence. Dryden.
3. To wash with any thing.
Phœnician Dido stood,
Fresh from her wound, her bosom bath'd in blood. Dryden.
Mars could in mutual blood the centaurs bathe,
And Jove himself give way to Cinthia's wrath. Dryden.

TO BATHE. v. n. To be in the water, or in any thing resembling a bath.
Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
I cannot tell. Macbeth.

The delighted spirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling regions of thick ribbed ice. Sh. Meas. for Meas.
The gallants dancing by the river side,
They bathe in summer, and in winter slide. Waller.
But bathe, and, in imperial robes array'd,
Pay due devotions. Pope's Odyssey.

BA'TING, or ABA'TING. prep. [from bate, or abate. This word, though a participle in itself, seems often used as a preposition.] Except.
The king, your brother, could not choose an advocate,
Whom I would sooner hear on any subject,
Bating that only one, his love, than you. Rowe's R. Conu.
If we consider children, we have little reason to think, that they bring many ideas with them, bating, perhaps, some faint ideas of hunger and thirst. Locke.

BA'TLET. n. f. [from bat.] A square piece of wood, with a handle, used in beating linen when taken out of the buck.
I remember the kissing of her batlet, and the cow's dugs that her pretty chopt hands had milked. Shakesp. As you like it.

BATO'ON. n. f. [baston, or bâton, Fr. formerly spelt baston.]

1. A staff or club.
We came close to the shore, and offered to land; but straightways we saw divers of the people with bastons in their hands, as it were, forbidding us to land. Bacon's N. Atlantis.
That does not make a man the worse,
Although his shoulders with batoon
Be claw'd and cudgell'd to some tune. Hudibras.
2. A truncheon or marshal's staff; a badge of military honour.

BA'TTAILLOUS. adj. [from bataille, Fr.] Having the appearance of a battle; warlike; with military appearance.
He started up, and did himself prepare
In sun bright arms and battailous array. Fairfax, b. i.
The French came foremost battailous and bold. Fairf. b. i.
A fiery region, stretch'd
In battailous aspect, and nearer view
Bristled with upright beams innumerable
Of rigid spears, and helmets throng'd. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

BATTA'LIA. n. f. [battaglia, Ital.] The order of battle.
Next morning the king put his army into battalia. Clarend.

BATTA'LION. n. f. [bataillon, Fr.]

1. A division of an army; a troop; a body of forces. It is now confined to the infantry, and the number is uncertain, but generally from five to eight hundred men. Some regiments consist of one battalion, and others are divided into two, three, or more.
When sorrows come, they come not single spies,
But in battalions. Shakesp. Hamlet.
In this battalion there were two officers, called Therfites and Pandarus. Tatler, N° 56.
The pierc'd battalions disunited fall,
In heaps on heaps: one fate o'erwhelms them all. Pope.
2. An army. This sense is not now in use.
Six or seven thousand is their utmost power.
—Why, our battalion trebles that account. Shakesp. Rich. III.

TO BA'TTEN. v. a. [a word of doubtful etymology.]

1. To fatten, or make fat; to feed plenteously.
We drove afield,
Batt'ning our flock with the fresh dews of night. Milton.
2. To fertilize.
The meadows here, with batt'ning ooze enrich'd,
Give spirit to the grass; three cubits high
The jointed herbage shoots. Philips.

TO BA'TTEN. v. n. To grow fat; to live in indulgence.
Follow your function, go and batten on cold bits. Sh. Coriol.
Burnish'd and batt'ning on their food, to show
The diligence of careful herds below. Dryden's H. and P.
The lazy glutton safe at home will keep,
Indulge his sloth, and batten on his sleep. Dryden.
As at full length the pamper'd monarch lay,
Batt'ning in ease, and slumb'ring life away. Garth.
Tway mice, full blythe and amicable,
Batten beside erle Robert's table. Prior.
While paddling ducks the standing lake desire,
Or batt'ning hogs roll in the sinking mire. Gay's Pastorals.

BA'TTEN. n. f. A word used only by workmen.
A batten is a scantling of wooden stuff, two, three or four inches broad, seldom above one thick, and the length unlimited. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

B A T

To BA'TTER. v. a. [battre, to beat, Fr.]

1. To beat; to beat down; frequently used of walls thrown down by artillery, or of the violence of engines of war.

To appoint battering rams against the gates, to cast a mount, and to build a fort. Ezek. xxi. 22.

These haughty words of hers

Have batter'd me like roaring cannon shot,

And made me almost yield upon my knees. Shakesp. H. VI.

Britannia there, the fort in vain

Had batter'd been with golden rain:

Thunder itself had fail'd to pass. Waller.

Be then, the naval stores, the nation's care,

New ships to build, and batter'd to repair. Dryden.

2. To wear with beating.

Crowds to the castle mounted up the street,

Batt'ring the pavement with their courfers feet. Dryden.

If you have a silver saucepan for the kitchen use, let me advise you to batter it well; this will shew constant good house-keeping. Swift's Directions to the Cook.

3. Applied to persons: to wear out with service.

The batter'd veteran strumpets here,

Pretend at least to bring a modest ear. Southern.

I am a poor old battered fellow, and I would willingly end my days in peace. Arbutnot's History of J. Bull.

As the same dame, experienc'd in her trade,

By names of toasts retails each batter'd jade. Pope.

To BA'TTER. v. n. A word used only by workmen.

The side of a wall, or any timber, that bulges from its bottom or foundation, is said to batter. Moxon's Mech. Exercises.

BA'TTER. n. f. [from to batter.] A mixture of several ingredients beaten together with some liquor; so called from its being so much beaten.

One would have all things little, hence has try'd

Turkey poult fresh'd from th' egg in batter fry'd. King's Art of Cookery.

BA'TTERER. n. f. [from batter.] He that batters.

BA'TTERY. n. f. [from batter, or batterie, Fr.]

1. The act of battering.

Strong wars they make, and cruel battery bend,

'Gainst fort of reason, it to overthrow. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Earthly minds, like mud walls, resist the strongest batteries. Locke.

2. The instruments with which a town is battered, placed in order for action.

Where is best place to make our batt'ry next?—

— I think at the north gate. Shakesp. Henry VI.

It plants this reasoning and that argument, this consequence and that distinction, like so many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way and passage into the obstinate inclosed truth. South.

See, and revere th' artillery of heav'n,

Drawn by the gale, or by the tempest driv'n:

A dreadful fire the floating batt'ries make,

O'erturn the mountain, and the forest shake. Blackmore.

3. The frame, or raised work, upon which cannons are mounted.

4. In law, a violent striking of any man. In trespass for assault and battery, one may be found guilty of the assault, yet acquitted of the battery. There may therefore be assault without battery; but battery always implies an assault. Chambers.

Why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the sconce with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action and battery? Shakesp. Hamlet.

Sir, quo' the lawyer, not to flatter ye,

You have as good and fair a battery,

As heart can wish, and need not shame

The proudest man alive to claim. Hudibras, p. iii. c. iii.

BA'TTLE. n. f. [bataille, Fr.]

1. A fight; an encounter between opposite armies. We generally say a battle of many, and a combat of two.

The English army that divided was

Into two parts, is now conjoin'd in one;

And means to give you battle presently. Shakesp. Henry VI.

The battle done, and they within our power,

She'll never see his pardon. Shakesp. King Lear.

The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong.

So they joined battle, and the heathen being discomfited fled into the plain. I Maccab. iv. 14.

2. A body of forces, or division of an army.

The king divided his army into three battles; whereof the vanguard only, well strengthened with wings, came to fight. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. The main body, as distinct from the van and rear.

The earl of Angus led the avant-guard, himself followed with the battle a good distance behind, and after came the arrier. Hayward.

4. We say to join battle; to give battle.

To BA'TTLE. v. n. [batailler, Fr.] To join battle; to contend in fight.

'Tis ours by craft and by surprize to gain:

'Tis yours to meet in arms, and battle in the plain. Prior.

We daily receive accounts of ladies battling it on both sides.

Addison. Freeholder, N° 23.

B A W

I own, he hates an action base,

His virtues batt'ling with his place. Swift.

BA'TTLE-ARRAY. n. f. [See BATTLE and ARRAY.] Array, or order of battle.

Two parties of fine women, placed in the opposite side boxes; seemed drawn up in battle-array one against another. Addison.

BA'TTLE-AXE. n. f. A weapon used anciently, probably the same with a bill.

Certain tinnors, as they were working, found spear heads, battle-axes, and swords of copper, wrapped in linen cloths. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

BA'TTLEDOOR. n. f. [so called from door, taken for a flat board, and battle, or striking.] An instrument with a handle and a flat blade, used in play to strike a ball, or shuttlecock.

Play-things, which are above their skill, as tops, gigs, battle-doors, and the like, which are to be used with labour, should indeed be procured them. Locke.

BA'TTLEMENT. n. f. [generally supposed to be formed from battle, as the parts from whence a building is defended against assailants; perhaps only corrupted from bâtiment, Fr.] A wall raised round the top of a building, with embrasures, or interstices, to look through, to annoy an enemy.

He fix'd his head upon our battlements. Shak. Macbeth.

Thou shalt make a battlement for thy roof, that thou bring not blood upon thine house, if any man fall from thence. Deut. xxii. 8.

Through this we pass

Up to the highest battlement, from whence

The Trojans threw their darts. Denham.

Their standard planted on the battlement,

Despair and death among the soldiers sent. Dryd. Aurengz.

No, I shan't envy him, whoe'er he be,

That stands upon the battlements of state;

I'd rather be secure than great. Norris.

The weighty mallet deals resounding blows,

Till the proud battlements her tow'rs inclose. Gay's Trivia.

BA'TTY. adj. [from bat.] Belonging to a bat.

Till o'er their brows death counterfeiting sleep,

With leaden legs and batty wings doth creep. Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

BA'VAROY. n. f. A kind of cloke, or furtout.

Let the loop'd bavaroy the fop embrace,

Or his deep cloke be spatter'd o'er with lace. Gay's Trivia.

BA'UBEE. n. f. A word used in Scotland, and the northern counties, for a halfpenny.

Tho' in the draw'rs of my japan bureau,

To lady Gripeall I the Cæsars show,

'Tis equal to her ladyship or me,

A copper Otho, or a Scotch baubee. Bramst. Man of Taste.

BA'VIN. n. f. [of uncertain derivation.] A stick like those bound up in faggots; a piece of waste wood.

He ambled up and down

With shallow jesters and rash bavin wits,

Soon kindled, and soon burnt. Shakesp. Henry IV.

For moulded to the life in cloths,

Th' have pick'd from dunghills thereabouts,

He's mounted on a hazel bavin,

A crop'd malignant baker gave him. Hudibras, p. iii. c. iii.

The smaller truncheons make billet, bavin, and coals.

Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.

To BAULK. See BALK.

BA'WBLE. n. f. [Baubellum, in barbarous Latin, signified a jewel, or any thing valuable, but not necessary. Omnia baubella sua dedit Othoni. Howden. Probably from beau, Fr.] A gew-gaw; a trifling piece of finery; a thing of more show than use; a trifle. It is in general, whether applied to persons or things, a term of contempt.

She haunts me in every place. I was on the sea bank with some Venetians, and thither comes the bawble, and falls me thus about my neck. Shakesp. Othello.

It is a paltry cap,

A custard coffin, a bawble, a filken pie. Shak. Tam. Shrew.

If, in our contest, we do not interchange useful notions, we shall traffick toys and bawbles. Government of the Tongue.

This shall be writ to fright the fry away,

Who draw their little bawbles, when they play. Dryden.

A lady's watch needs neither figures nor wheels;

'Tis enough that 'tis loaded with bawbles and seals. Prior.

Our author then, to please you in your way,

Presents you now a bawble of a play,

In ginglyng rhyme. Granville.

A prince, the moment he is crown'd,

Inherits every virtue round,

As emblems of the sov'reign pow'r;

Like other bawbles of the Tow'r. Swift.

BA'WBLING. adj. [from bawble.] Trifling; contemptible: a word not now in use, except in conversation.

A bawbling vessel was he captain of,

For shallow draught and bulk unprired;

With which such scathful grapple did he make,

With the most noble bottom of our fleet. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

BA'WCOCK. n. f. [perhaps from beau, or baude, and cock.] A familiar word, which seems to signify the same as fine fellow.

Why, how now, my bawcock? how dost thou, chuck?
Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

BAWD. n. f. [baude, old Fr.] A procurer, or procuress; one that introduces men and women to each other, for the promotion of debauchery.

If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not to fear the bawds. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

This commodity,
This bawd, this broker, this all changing word,
Hath drawn him from his own determin'd aid. Sh. K. John.

Our author calls colouring lena fororis, the bawd of her sister design; she dresses her up, she paints her, she procures for the design, and makes lovers for her. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To BAWD. v. n. [from the noun.] To procure; to provide gallants with strumpets.

Leucippe is agent for the king's lust, and bawds, at the same time, for the whole court. Addison. Spectator, N° 266.

And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,
To bawd for others, and go shares with punk. Swift.

BA'WDILY. adv. [from bawdy.] Obscenely.

BA'WDINESS. n. f. [from bawdy.] Obsceneness.

BA'WDRICK. n. f. [See BALDRICK.] A belt.

Fresh garlands too, the virgin's temples crown'd;
The youth's gilt swords wore at their thighs, with silver bawdricks bound. Chapman's Iliad, b. xviii.

BA'WDRY. n. f. [contracted from bawdery, the practice of a bawd.]

1. A wicked practice of procuring and bringing whores and rogues together. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Cheating and bawdry go together in the world. L'Estrange.

2. Obscenity; unchaste language.

Pr'ythee, say on; he's for a jig, or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps. Shakesp. Hamlet.

I have no fault: no bawdry he doth mean:
For witty, in his language, is obscene. B. Johnson.
It is most certain, that barefaced bawdery is the poorest pretence to wit imaginable. Dryden.

BA'WDY. adj. [from bawd.] Obscene; unchaste; generally applied to language.

The bawdy wind that kisses all it meets,
Is huff'd within the hollow mine of earth,
And will not hear't. Shakesp. Othello.

Only they,

That come to hear a merry bawdy play,
Will be deceiv'd. Shakesp. Henry VIII. Prologue.

Not one poor bawdy jest shall dare appear;
For now the batter'd veteran strumpets here
Pretend at least to bring a modest ear. Southern.

BA'WDY-HOUSE. n. f. A house where traffick is made by wickedness and debauchery.

Has the pope lately shut up the bawdy-houses, or does he continue to lay a tax upon sin? Dennis.

To BAWL. v. n. [ballo, Lat.]

1. To hoot; to cry with great vehemence, whether for joy or pain. A word always used in contempt.

They bawl for freedom in their senseless mood,
And still revolt, when truth would set them free. Par. Reg.

To cry the cause up heretofore,
And bawl the bishops out of door. Hudibras.

Through the thick shades th' eternal scribbler bawls,
And shakes the statues on their pedestals. Dryd. Juvenal.

From his lov'd home no lucre him can draw;
The senate's mad decrees he never saw;
Nor heard at bawling bars corrupted law. Dryden.

Loud menaces were heard, and foul disgrace,
And bawling infamy, in language base,
Till sense was lost in sound, and silence fled the place. Dryden's Fables.

So on the tuneful Margarita's tongue
The list'ning nymphs, and ravish'd heroes hung;
But cits and fops the heav'n born musick blame,
And bawl, and hiss, and damn her into fame. Smith on J. Philips.

I have a race of orderly elderly people, who can bawl when I am deaf, and tread softly when I am only giddy and would sleep. Swift.

2. To cry as a froward child.

A little child was bawling, and an old woman chiding it. L'Estrange's Fables.

If they were never suffered to have what they cried for, they would never, with bawling and peevishness, contend for mastery. Locke.

My husband took him in, a dirty boy; it was the business of the servants to attend him, the rogue did bawl and make such a noise. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

To BAWL. v. a. To proclaim as a crier.

It grieved me, when I saw labours which had cost so much, bawled about by common hawkers. Swift.

B A Y

BA'WSIN. n. f. A badger. Dict.

BAY. adj. [badius, Lat.]

A bay horse is what is inclining to a chestnut; and this colour is various, either a light bay or a dark bay, according as it is less or more deep. There are also coloured horses, that are called dappled bays. All bay horses are commonly called brown by the common people.

All bay horses have black manes, which distinguish them from the sorrel, that have red or white manes.

There are light bays and gilded bays, which are somewhat of a yellowish colour. The chestnut bay is that which comes nearest to the colour of the chestnut. Farricr's Dict.

I remember, my lord, you gave good words the other day of a bay courser I rode on. 'Tis yours because you liked it. Shakesp. Timon.

Poor Tom! proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting horse over four inch'd bridges. Shakesp. King Lear.

His colour grey,

For beauty dappled, or the brightest bay. Dryden's Virgil.

BAY. n. f. [baye, Dutch.]

1. An opening into the land, where the water is shut in on all sides, except at the entrance.

A reverend Syracusan merchant,

Who put unluckily into this bay. Shakesp. Comedy of Err.

We have also some works in the midst of the sea, and some bays upon the shore for some works, wherein is required the air and vapour of the sea. Bacon.

Here in a royal bed the waters sleep,
When tir'd at sea, within this bay they creep. Dryden.

Some of you have already been driven to this bay. Dryden's Epistle to the Whigs.

Hail, sacred solitude! from this calm bay

I view the world's tempestuous sea. Roscommon.

2. A pond head raised to keep in store of water for driving a mill.

BAY. n. f. [aboi, Fr. signifies the last extremity; as, Innocence est aux aboins. Boileau. Innocence is in the utmost distress. It is taken from aboi, the barking of a dog at hand, and thence signified the condition of a stag when the hounds were almost upon him.] The state of any thing surrounded by enemies, and obliged to face them by an impossibility of escape.

This ship, for fifteen hours, sat like a stag among hounds at the bay, and was sieged and fought with, in turn, by fifteen great ships. Bacon's War with Spain.

Fair liberty pursu'd, and meant a prey
To lawless power, here turn'd, and stood at bay. Denham.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;
Embolden'd by despair, he stood at bay;
Resolv'd on death, he dissipates his fears,
And bounds aloft against the pointed spears. Dryden's Æneid.

All, fir'd with noble emulation, strive;
And, with a storm of darts, to distance drive
The Trojan chief; who held at bay, from far

On his Vulcanian orb, sustain'd the war. Dryden's Virgil.

We have now, for ten years together, turned the whole force and expence of the war, where the enemy was best able to hold us at a bay. Swift.

He stands at bay,

And puts his last weak refuge in despair. Thomson.

BAY. n. f. In architecture, a term used to signify the magnitude of a building; as if a barn consists of a floor and two heads, where they lay corn, they call it a barn of two bays. These bays are from fourteen to twenty feet long, and floors, from ten to twelve broad, and usually twenty feet long, which is the breadth of the barn. Builder's Dict.

If this law hold in Vienna ten years, I'll rent the fairest house in it after threepence a bay. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

There may be kept one thousand bushels in each bay, there being sixteen bays, each eighteen foot long, about seventeen wide, or three hundred square feet in each bay. Mortimer.

BAY Tree. [laurus, Lat.] This tree hath a flower of one leaf, shaped like a funnel, and divided into four or five segments. The male flowers, which are produced on separate trees from the female, have eight stamina, which are branched into arms; the ovary of the female flowers becomes a berry, inclosing a single seed within an horny shell, which is covered with a skin. The species are, 1. The common bay with male flowers. 2. The common fruit bearing bay tree. 3. The gold striped bay tree, &c. The first and second sorts are old inhabitants of the English gardens; and as there are varieties obtained from the same seeds, they are promiscuously cultivated, and are not to be distinguished asunder until they have produced flowers. These plants are propagated either from seeds, or by laying down the tender branches, which will take root in one year's time. Mill.

I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree. Psalms xxxviii 35.

BAY. n. f. A poetical name for an honorary crown or garland, bestowed as a prize for any kind of victory or excellence.

Beneath his reign shall Eusden wear the bays. Pope.

To BAY. v. n. [abbayer, Fr.]

1. To bark as a dog at a thief, or at the game which he pursues.

And all the while she stood upon the ground,
The wakeful dogs did never cease to bay. Fairy Queen, b. i.

The

- The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bay'd;
The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid;
She rent the heav'n with loud laments, imploring aid.
Dryden's Fables.
2. [from bay, an inclosed place.] To encompass about; to shut in.
We are at the stake,
And bay'd about with many enemies. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.
To BAY. v. a. To follow with barking; to bark at.
I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
When in the wood of Crete they bay'd the bear
With hounds of Sparta. Shakesp. Midsum. Night's Dream.
If he should do so,
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welch Baying him at the heels. Shak. Henry IV.
BAY Salt. Salt made of sea water, which receives its consistence from the heat of the sun, and is so called from its brown colour. The greatest quantities of this salt are made in France, on the coast of Bretagne, Saintonge, &c. from the middle of May to the end of August, by letting the sea water into square pits or basons, where its surface being struck and agitated by the rays of the sun, it thickens at first imperceptibly, and becomes covered over with a slight crust, which hardening by the continuance of the heat, is wholly converted into salt. The water in this condition is scalding hot, and the crystallization is perfected in eight, ten, or at most fifteen days. Chamb.
All eruptions of air, though small and slight, give sound, which we call crackling, puffing, spitting, &c. as in bay salt and bay leaves cast into the fire. Bacon's Nat. History, N° 123.
BAY Window. A window jutting outward, and therefore forming a kind of bay or hollow in the room.
It hath bay windows transparent as barricadoes.
Shakesp. Twelfth Night.
BAY Yarn. A denomination sometimes used promiscuously with woollen yarn. Chambers.
BA'YARD. n. f. [from bay.] A bay horse.
BA'YONET. n. f. [bayonette, Fr.] A short sword or dagger fixed at the end of a musket, by which the foot hold off the horse.
One of the black spots is long and slender, and resembles a dagger or bayonet. Woodward on Fossils.
BAYZE. See BAIZE.
BDE'LLIUM. n. f. [βδέλλιον; בדרלה.] An aromatick gum brought from the Levant, used as a medicine and a perfume. Bdellium is mentioned both by the ancient naturalists and in scripture; but it is doubtful whether any of these be the same with the modern kind. Chambers.
This bdellium is a tree of the bigness of an olive, whereof Arabia hath great plenty, which yieldeth a certain gum, sweet to smell to, but bitter in taste, called also bdellium. The Hebrews take the loadstone for bdellium. Raleigh's History.
To BE. v. n. [This word is so remarkably irregular, that it is necessary to set down many of its terminations.

1. To have some certain state, condition, quality, or accident; as, the man is wife.
Seventy senators died
By their proscriptions, Cicero being one. Shakesp. J. Caesar.
He hath to night been in unusual pleasure. Macbeth.
Be what thou hop'st to be, or what thou art,
Reign to death, it is not worth enjoying. Shakesp. H. VI.
Be but about
To say, she's a goodly lady, and
The justice of your hearts will add thereto,
'Tis pity she's not honest, honourable. Shak. Winter's Tale.
Let them shew the former things what they be, that we may consider them. Isaiah, xli. 22.
Therefore be sure,
Thou, when the bridegroom with his feastful friends
Passes to bliss at the mid hour of night,
Hast gain'd thy entrance, virgin wife and pure. Par. Reg.
Is it not easy to discern what such men would be at. Stillingsf.
To say a man has a clear idea of quantity, without knowing how great it is, is to say, he has the clear idea of the number of the sands, who knows not how many they be. Locke.
2. It is the auxiliary verb by which the verb passive is formed.
The wine of life is drawn, and the meer lees
Is left this vault to brag of. Shakesp. Macbeth.
3. To exist; to have existence.
The times have been,
That when the brains were out the man would die. Macbeth.
Here cease, ye pow'rs, and let your vengeance end,
Troy is no more, and can no more offend. Dryden.
All th' impossibilities, which poets
Count to extravagance of loose description,
Shall sooner be. Rowe's Ambitious Stepmother.
To be contents his natural desire;
He asks no angel's wing, nor seraph's fire. Pope's Ess. on M.

4. To have something by appointment or rule.
If all political power be derived only from Adam, and be to descend only to his successive heirs, by the ordinance of God, and divine institution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government. Locke.
BEACH. n. f. The shore; particularly that part that is dashed by the waves; the strand.
The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice. Shakesp. King Lear.
Deep to the rocks of hell, the gather'd beach
They fasten'd, and the mole immense wrought on,
Over the foaming deep. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x. l. 299.
They find the washed amber further out upon the beaches and shores, where it has been longer exposed. Woodward on Fossils.
BE'ACHED. adj. [from beach.] Exposed to the waves.
Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Which once a day, with his embossed froth,
The turbulent surge shall cover. Shakesp. Timon.
BE'ACHY. adj. [from beach.] Having beaches.
Other times, to see
The beachy girdle of the ocean
Too wide for Neptune's hips. Shakesp. Henry IV.
BE'ACON. n. f. [beacon, Sax. from becn, a signal, and becnan, whence beckon, to make a signal.]
1. Something raised on an eminence, to be fired on the approach of an enemy, to alarm the country.
His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burn with wrath, and sparkled living fire;
As two broad beacons set in open fields,
Send forth their flames. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Modest doubt is called
The beacon of the wise. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
The king seemed to account of the designs of Perkin as a may-game; yet had given order for the watching of beacons upon the coasts, and erecting more where they stood too thin. Bacon's Henry VII.
No flaming beacons cast their blaze afar,
The dreadful signal of invasive war. Gay's Rural Sports
2. Marks erected, or lights made in the night, to direct navigators in their courses, and warn them from rocks, shallows and sandbanks.
BEAD. n. f. [beabe, prayer, Saxon.]
1. Small globes or balls of glass or pearl, or other substance, strung upon a thread, and used by the Romanists to count their prayers; from whence the phrase to tell beads, or to be at one's beads, is to be at prayer.
That aged dame, the lady of the place,
Who all this while was busy at her beads. Fairy Q. b. i.
Thy voice I seem in every hymn to hear,
With ev'ry bead I drop too soft a tear. Pope's El. to Abel.
2. Little balls worn about the neck for ornament.
With scarfs and fans, and double change of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all such knav'ry. Shakesp. Taming of a Shrew.
3. Any globular bodies.
Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war,
That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow. Sh. H. IV.
Several yellow lumps of amber, almost like beads, with one side flat, had fastened themselves to the bottom. Boyle.
BEAD Tree. [AZEDARACH.]
It hath pennated leaves like those of the ash; the flowers consist of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose; in the centre of the flower is a long fimbriated tube, containing the style; the fruit is roundish and fleshy, containing a hard furrowed nut, divided into five cells, each containing one oblong broadish seed. The outside pulp of the fruit in some countries is eaten; but the nut is, by religious persons, bored through, and strung as beads; whence it takes its name. It produces ripe fruits in Italy and Spain. Millar.
BE'ADLE. n. f. [bydel, Sax. a messenger; bedeau, Fr. bedel, Sp. bedelle, Dutch.]
1. A messenger or servitor belonging to a court. Cowel.
2. A petty officer in parishes, whose business it is to punish petty offenders.
A dog's obey'd in office.
Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand:
Why dost thou lash that whore? Shakesp. King Lear.
They ought to be taken care of in this condition, either by the beadle or the magistrate. Spectator, N° 130.
Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.
BE'ADROLL. n. f. [from bead and roll.] A catalogue of those who are to be mentioned at prayers.
The king, for the better credit of his espials abroad, did use to have them cursed by name amongst the beadroll of the king's enemies. Bacon's Henry VII.
BE'ADSMAN. n. f. [from bead and man.] A man employed in praying, generally in praying for another.
An holy hospital,
In which seven beadsmen, that had vowed all
Their life to service of high heaven's king. Fairy Queen, l. i.

In thy danger,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer;
For I will be thy beadsman, Valentine. Sh. T. Gentl. of Ver.
BE'AGLE. n. f. [bisle, Fr.] A small hound with which hares are hunted.

The rest were various huntings.
The graceful goddess was array'd in green;
About her feet were little beagles seen,
That watch'd with upward eyes the motions of their queen.
Dryden's Fables.

To plains with well bred beagles we repair,
And trace the mazes of the circling hare. Pope.

BEAK. n. f. [bec, Fr. pig, Welch.]

1. The bill or horny mouth of a bird.
His royal bird
Prunes the immortal wing, and cloy's his beak,
As when his god is pleas'd. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
He saw the ravens with their horny beaks
Food to Elijah bringing. Milton's Par. Regained, b. ii.
The magpye, lighting on the stock,
Stood chatt'ring with incessant din,
And with her beak gave many a knock. Swift.

2. A piece of brass like a beak, fixed at the head of the ancient gallies, with which they pierced their enemies.
With boiling pitch another, near at hand,
From friendly Sweden brought, the seams instops;
Which, well laid o'er, the salt sea waves withstand,
And shakes them from the rising beak in drops. Dryden.

3. A beak is a little shoe, at the toe about an inch long, turned up and fastened in upon the forepart of the hoof. Farrier's D.

4. Any thing ending in a point like a beak; as the spout of a cup; a prominence of land.

Cuddenbeak, from a well advanced promontory, which entitled it beak, taketh a prospect of the river. Carew's Survey.

BE'AKED. adj. [from beak.] Having a beak; having the form of a beak.

And question'd every gust of rugged winds,
That blows from off each beaked promontory. Milton.

BE'AKER. n. f. [from beak.] A cup with a spout in the form of a bird's beak.

And into pikes and musqueteers
Stamp'd beakers, cups and porringers. Hudibras, cant. ii.
With dulcet bev'rage this the beaker crown'd,
Fair in the midst, with gilded cups around. Pope's Odyssey.

BEAL. n. f. [bolla, Ital.] A whelk or pimple.

TO BEAL. v. n. [from the noun.] To ripen; to gather matter, or come to a head, as a fore does.

BEAM. n. f. [beam, Sax. a tree; runnebeam, a ray of the sun.]

1. The main piece of timber that supports the house.
A beam is the largest piece of wood in a building, which always lies cross the building or the walls, serving to support the principal rafters of the roof, and into which the feet of the principal rafters are framed. No building has less than two beams, one at each head. Into these, the girders of the garret floor are also framed; and if the building be of timber, the teazel-tenons of the posts are framed. The proportions of beams in or near London, are fixed by act of parliament. A beam fifteen feet long, must be seven inches on each side its square, and five on the other; if it be sixteen feet long, one side must be eight inches, the other six; and so proportionable to their lengths. Builder's Dict.

The building of living creatures is like the building of a timber house; the walls and other parts have columns and beams, but the roof is tile, or lead, or stone. Bacon's N. Hist.
He heav'd, with more than human force, to move
A weighty stone, the labour of a team,
And rais'd from thence he reach'd the neighb'ring beam. Dryd.

2. Any large and long piece of timber: a beam must have more length than thickness, by which it is distinguished from a block.

But Lycus, swifter,
Springs to the walls and leaves his foes behind,
And snatches at the beam he first can find. Dryden's Æneid.

3. That part of a balance, at the ends of which the scales are suspended.

Poise the cause in justice' equal scales,
Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails.
Shakesp. Henry VI. p. ii.

If the length of the sides in the balance, and the weights at the ends be both equal, the beam will be in a horizontal situation: but if either the weights alone be equal, or the distances alone, the beam will accordingly decline. Wilk. Mathem. Mag.

4. The horn of a stag.
And taught the woods to echo to the stream
His dreadful challenge, and his clashing beam. Denham.

5. The pole of a chariot; that piece of wood which runs between the horses.

Juturna heard, and seiz'd with mortal fear,
Forc'd from the beam her brother's charioteer. Dryden.

6. Among weavers, a cylindrical piece of wood belonging to the loom, on which the web is gradually rolled as it is wove.

The staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam. 1 Chr. xi. 23.

B E A

7. The ray of light emitted from some luminous body, or received by the eye.

Let them present me death upon the wheel,
Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might downstretch
Below the beam of fight. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Pleasing, yet cold, like Cynthia's silver beam. Dryden.
As heav'n's blest beam turns vinegar to sour. Pope.

BEAM of an anchor. The straight part or shank of an anchor;
to which the hooks are fastened.

BEAM Compasses. A wooden or brass instrument; with sliding sockets, to carry several shifting points, in order to draw circles with very long radii; and useful in large projections, for drawing the furniture on wall dials. Harris.

TO BEAM. v. n. [from the noun.] To emit rays or beams.
Each emanation of his fires

That beams on earth, each virtue he inspires. Pope.

BEAM Tree. See WILDSERVICE, of which it is a species.

BE'AMY. adj. [from beam.]

1. Radiant; shining; emitting beams.
His double-biting axe, and beamy spear;
Each asking a gigantic force to rear. Dryden's Fables.

Hide, hide in shameful night, thy beamy head. Smith.

2. Having horns or antlers.
Rouze from their desert dens the bristled rage
Of boars, and beamy stags in toils engag'd. Dryden's Virgil.

BEAN. n. f. [faba, Lat.]

It hath a papilionaceous flower, succeeded by a long pod, filled with large flat kidney-shaped seeds; the stalks are firm and hollow; the leaves grow by pairs, and are fastened to a midrib. The species are, 1. The common garden bean. 2. The horse bean. There are several varieties of the garden beans, differing either in colour or size. The principal sorts which are cultivated in England, are the Mazagan, the small Lisbon, the Spanish, the Tokay, the Sandwich, and Windsor beans.
The Mazagan bean is brought from a settlement of the Portuguese on the coast of Africa, of the same name; and is by far the best sort to plant for an early crop, a great bearer, and also an excellent tasted bean. The broad Spanish, Tokay, Sandwich, and Windsor beans are for the latter crops. Millar.

His allowance of oats and beans for his horse was greater than his journey required. Swift.

BEAN Caper. [fabago.]

The leaves of this plant are produced by pairs upon the same footstalk, and the footstalks grow opposite at the joints of the stalks; the cup of the flower consists of five leaves; and the flowers have also five leaves, expanded like a rose, with stamina surrounding the style, in the center of the flower cup.
This style becomes a cylindrical fruit, five cornered; divided into five cells, each containing many flat seeds. Millar.

BEAN Treffel. An herb.

TO BEAR. v. a. pret. I bore, or bare; patt. pass. bore, or born.
[beonan, bejan, Sax. bairan, Gothick. It is sounded as bare, as the are in care and dare.]

1. This is a word used with such latitude, that it is not easily explained.

We say to bear a burden, to bear sorrow or reproach, to bear a name, to bear a grudge, to bear fruit, or to bear children. The word bear is used in very different senses.
Watts's Logick.

2. To carry as a burden.

They bear him upon the shoulder; they carry him and set him in his place. Isaiah, xlvii. 7.

And Solomon had threescore and ten thousand that bare burdens. 1 Kings, v. 15.

As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young;
spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings. Deuteronomy, xxxii. 11.

We see some, who, we think, have born less of the burden, rewarded above ourselves. Decay of Piety.

3. To convey or carry.

My message to the ghost of Priam bear;
Tell him a new Achilles sent thee there. Dryden's Æneid.

A guest like him, a Trojan guest before,
In shew of friendship, fought the Spartan shore,
And ravish'd Helen from her husband bore. Dryd.

4. To carry as a mark of authority.

I do commit into your hand
Th' unstained sword that you have us'd to bear.
Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

5. To carry as a mark of distinction.

He may not bear so fair and so noble an image of the divine glory, as the universe in its full system. Hale's Orig. of Mank.

His pious brother, sure the best
Who ever bore that name. Dryden.

The sad spectators stiffen'd with their fears,
She sees, and sudden every limb she smears;
Then each of savage beasts the figure bears. Garth.

His supreme spirit or mind will bear its best resemblance, when it represents the supreme infinite. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

So we say, to bear arms in a coat.

6. To carry as in show.
Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,
Your hand, your tongue; look like the innocent flower,
But be the serpent under't. Shakesp. King Lear.
7. To carry as in trust.
He was a thief, and had the bag, and bare what was put therein. John, xii. 6.
8. To support; to keep from falling.
Under colour of rooting out popery, the most effectual means to bear up the state of religion may be removed, and so a way be made either for paganism, or for extreme barbarism to enter. Hooker, b. iv. § 1.
And Samson took hold of the two middle pillars, upon which the house stood, and on which it was born up. Judges, xvi. 29.
A religious hope does not only bear up the mind under her sufferings, but makes her rejoice in them. Addison. Spectat.
Some power invisible supports his soul,
And bears it up in all its wonted greatness. Addison's Cato.
9. To keep afloat.
The waters encreased, and bare up the ark, and it was lifted up above the earth. Genesis, vii. 17.
10. To support with proportionate strength.
Animals that use a great deal of labour and exercise, have their solid parts more elastick and strong; they can bear, and ought to have stronger food. Arbuthnot on Aliments,
11. To carry in the mind, as love, hate.
How did the open multitude reveal
The wond'rous love they bear him under hand!
Daniel's Civil War.
They bare great faith and obedience to the kings. Bacon.
Darah, the eldest bears a generous mind,
But to implacable revenge inclin'd. Dryden's Aurengz.
The coward bore the man immortal spite. Dryden's Ovid.
As for this gentleman, who is fond of her, she *bear*eth him an invincible hatred. Swift.
That inviolable love I bear to the land of my nativity, prevailed upon me to engage in so bold an attempt. Swift.
12. To endure, as pain, without sinking.
It was not an enemy that reproached me, then I could have born it. Psalms liv. 12.
13. To suffer; to undergo.
I have born chastisements, I will not offend any more. Job, xxxiv. 31.
That which was torn of beasts, I brought not unto thee, I bare the loss of it; of my hand didst thou require it. Genesis, xxxi. 39.
14. To permit; to suffer without resentment.
Not the gods, nor angry Jove will bear
Thy lawless wand'ring walks in upper air. Dryd. Æneid.
15. To be capable of; to admit.
To reject all orders of the church which men have established, is to think worse of the laws of men in this respect, than either the judgment of wise men alloweth, or the law of God itself will bear. Hooker, b. iii.
Being the son of one earl of Pembroke, and younger brother to another, who liberally supplied his expence, beyond what his annuity from his father would bear. Clarendon.
Give his thought either the same turn, if our tongue will bear it, or, if not, vary but the dress. Dryden.
Do not charge your coins with more uses than they can bear.
It is the method of such as love any science, to discover all others in it. Addison on Medals.
Had he not been eager to find mistakes, he would not have strained my words to such a sense as they will not bear. Atterb.
In all criminal cases, the most favourable interpretation should be put upon words that they possibly can bear. Swift.
16. To produce, as fruit.
There be some plants that bear no flower, and yet bear fruit: there be some that bear flowers, and no fruit: there be some that bear neither flowers nor fruit. Bacon's Natural History.
They wing'd their flight aloft; then stooping low,
Perch'd on the double tree that bears the golden bough. Dryden's Æneid.
Say, shepherd, say, in what glad soil appears
A wond'rous tree that sacred monarchs bears. Pope's Past.
17. To bring forth, as a child.
The queen that bore thee,
Often upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Ye know that my wife bare two sons. Genesis, xlv. 27.
What could that have done?
What could the muse herself that Orpheus bore,
The muse herself, for her enchanting son? Milton.
The same Æneas, whom fair Venus bore
To fam'd Anchises on th' Idean shore. Dryden's Æneid.
18. To give birth to.
Here dwelt the man divine whom Samos bore,
But now self-banish'd from his native shore. Dryden.
19. To possess, as power or honour.
When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
The post of honour is a private station. Addison's Cato.
20. To gain; to win.

- As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace. Shakesp. Othello.
Because the Greek and Latin have ever born away the prerogative from all other tongues, they shall serve as touchstones to make our trials by. Camden.
Some think to bear it by speaking a great word, and being peremptory; and go on, and take by admittance that which they cannot make good. Bacon.
21. To maintain; to keep up.
He finds the pleasure and credit of bearing a part in the conversation, and of hearing his reasons approved. Locke.
  22. To support any thing good or bad.
I was carried on to observe, how they did bear their fortunes, and principally, how they did employ their times. Bacon's Holy War.
  23. To exhibit.
Ye Trojan flames, your testimony bear,
What I perform'd and what I suffer'd there. Dryden.
  24. To be answerable for.
If I bring him not unto thee, let me bear the blame for ever. Genesis, xliii. 9.
O more than madmen! you yourselves shall bear
The guilt of blood and sacrilegious war. Dryden.
  25. To supply.
What have you under your arm? Somewhat, that will bear your charges in your pilgrimage? Dryden's Spanish Friar.
  26. To be the object of.
I'll be your father and your brother too;
Let me but bear your love, I'll bear your cares. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.
  27. To behave; to act in character.
Some good instruction give,
How I may bear me here. Shakesp. Tempest.
Hath he born himself penitent in prison? Shakesp. Measure for Measure.
  28. To hold; to restrain.
Do you suppose the state of this realm to be now so feeble, that it cannot bear off a greater blow than this? Hayward.
  29. To impel; to urge; to push.
The residue were so disordered as they could not conveniently fight or fly, and not only jostled and bore down one another, but, in their confused tumbling back, brake a part of the avant-guard. Sir J. Hayward.
Contention, like a horse
Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose,
And bears down all before him. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.
Their broken oars, and floating planks, withstand
Their passage, while they labour to the land;
And ebbing tides bear back upon th' uncertain sand. Dryden's Æneid.
  - Now with a noiseless gentle course
It keeps within the middle bed;
Anon it lifts aloft the head,
And bears down all before it with impetuous force. Dryden.
Truth is born down, attestations neglected, the testimony of sober persons despised. Swift.
The hopes of enjoying the abbey lands would soon bear down all considerations, and be an effectual incitement to their perversion. Swift.
  30. To conduct; to manage.
My hope is
So to bear through, and out, the consulship,
As spite shall ne'er wound you, though it may me. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
  31. To press.
Cæsar doth bear me hard; but he loves Brutus. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.
Though he bear me hard,
I yet must do him right. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
These men bear hard upon the suspected party, pursue her close through all her windings. Addison. Spectator, N° 170.
  32. To incite; to animate.
But confidence then bore thee on; secure
Either to meet no danger, or to find
Matter of glorious trial. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i. l. 1175.
  33. To bear a body. A colour is said to bear a body in painting, when it is capable of being ground so fine, and mixing with the oil so entirely, as to seem only a very thick oil of the same colour.
  34. To bear date. To carry the mark of the time when any thing was written.
  35. To bear a price. To have a certain value.
  36. To bear in hand. To amuse with false pretences; to deceive.
Your daughter, whom she bore in hand to love
With such integrity, she did confess,
Was as a scorpion to her sight. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
He griev'd,
That so his sickness, age, and impotence,
Was falsely born in hand, sends out arrests
On Fortinbras. Shakesp. Hamlet.
He repaired to Bruges, desiring of the states of Bruges, to enter enter peaceably into their town, with a retinue fit for his estate; and bearing them in hand, that he was to communicate with them of divers matters of great importance, for their good.

Bacon's Henry VII.

It is no wonder, that some would bear the world in hand, that the apostle's design and meaning is for presbytery, though his words are for episcopacy.

South.

37. To bear off. To carry away by force.

I will respect thee as a father, if Thou bear'st my life off hence.

Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

The sun views half the earth on either way,

And here brings on, and there bears off the day.

Creech.

Give but the word, we'll snatch this damsel up,

And bear her off.

Addison's Cato.

My soul grows desperate.

I'll bear her off.

A. Philips's Distrest Mother.

38. To bear out. To support; to maintain; to defend.

I hope your warrant will bear out the deed.

Shak. K. John.

I can once or twice a quarter bear out a knave against an honest man.

Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

Changes are never without danger, unless the prince be able to bear out his actions by power.

Sir J. Hayward.

Quoth Sidrophel, I do not doubt

To find friends that will bear me out.

Hudibras.

It is company only that can bear a man out in an ill thing.

South.

I doubted whether that occasion could bear me out in the confidence of giving your ladyship any further trouble.

Temple.

To BEAR. v. n.

1. To suffer pain.

Stranger, cease thy care;

Wife is the foul; but man is born to bear :

Jove weighs affairs of earth in dubious scales,

And the good suffers while the bad prevails.

Pope's Odyssey.

2. To be patient.

I cannot, cannot bear; 'tis past, 'tis done;

Perish this impious, this detested son.

Dryden's Fables.

3. To be fruitful or prolifick.

A fruit tree hath been blown up almost by the roots, and set up again, and the next year bear exceedingly.

Bacon.

Betwixt two season comes th' auspicious air,

This age to blossom, and the next to bear.

Dryden.

Melons on beds of ice are taught to bear,

And, strangers to the sun, yet ripen here.

Granville.

4. To take effect; to succeed.

Having pawned a full suit of cloaths for a sum of money, which, my operator assured me, was the last he should want to bring all our matters to bear.

Guardian, N<sup>o</sup> 166.

5. To act in character.

Instruct me

How I may formally in person bear,

Like a true friar.

Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

6. To tend; to be directed to any point.

The oily drops swimming on the spirit of wine, moved reflexly to and fro, sometimes bearing up to one another, as if all were to unite into one body, and then falling off, and continuing to shift places.

Boyle.

Never did men more joyfully obey,

Or sooner understood the sign to fly :

With such alacrity they bore away.

Dryden's Annus Mirab.

Whose navy like a stiff-stretch'd cord did shew,

Till he bore in, and bent them into flight.

Dryden.

On this the hero fix'd an oak in fight,

The mark to guide the mariners aright :

To bear with this, the seamen stretch their oars,

Then round the rock they steer, and seek the former shores.

Dryden's Æneid.

In a convex mirrour, we view the figures and all other things, which bear out with more life and strength than nature itself.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

7. To act as an impellent, or as a reciprocal power; generally with the particles upon or against.

We were encounter'd by a mighty rock,

Which being violently bore upon,

Our helpless ship was splitted in the midst.

Shakespeare.

Upon the tops of mountains, the air which bears against the stagnant quicksilver, is less pressed.

Boyle.

The sides bearing one against the other, they could not lie so close at the bottoms.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

As a lion bounding in his way,

With force augmented bears against his prey,

Sideling to seize.

Dryden's Fables.

Because the operations to be performed by the teeth, require a considerable strength in the instruments which move the lower jaw, nature hath provided this with strong muscles, to make it bear forcibly against the upper jaw.

Ray.

The weight of the body doth bear most upon the knee-joints, in raising itself up, and most upon the muscles of the thighs, in coming down.

Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

The waves of the sea bear violently and rapidly upon some shores, the waters being pent up by the land.

Broome on the Odyssey.

B E A

Spinola, with his shot, did bear upon those within, who appeared upon the walls.

Hayward.

9. To be situated with respect to other places.

10. To bear up. To stand firm without falling.

So long as nature

Will bear up with this exercise, so long

I daily vow to use it.

Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Persons in distress may speak of themselves with dignity; it shews a greatness of soul, that they bear up against the storms of fortune.

Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

The consciousness of integrity, the sense of a life spent in doing good, will enable a man to bear up under any change of circumstances.

Atterbury.

When our commanders and soldiers were raw and unexperienced, we lost battles and towns; yet we bore up then, as the French do now; nor was there any thing decisive in their successes.

Swift.

11. To bear with. To endure an unpleasing thing.

They are content to bear with my absence and folly.

Sidney.

Though I must be content to bear with those that say you are reverend grave men; yet they lie deadly, that tell you, you have good faces.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Look you lay home to him;

Tell him his pranks have been too broad to bear with.

Shakesp. Hamlet.

Bear with me then, if lawful what I ask.

Paradise Lost.

BEAR. n. f. [bena, Saxon.]

1. A rough savage animal.

Every part of the body of these animals is covered with thick shaggy hair, of a dark brown colour, and their claws are hooked, which they use in climbing trees. They feed upon fruits, honey, bees, and flesh. Some have falsely reported, that bears bring their young into the world shapeless, and that their dams lick them into form. The dams go no longer than thirty days, and generally produce five young ones. In the winter, they lie hid and asleep, the male forty days, and the female four months; and so soundly for the first fourteen days, that blows will not wake them. In the sleepy season, they are said to have no nourishment but from licking their feet; for it is certain they eat nothing, and, at the end of it, the males are very fat. This animal has naturally an hideous look, but when enraged it is terrible; and, as rough and stupid as it seems to be, it is capable of discipline; it leaps, dances, and plays a thousand little tricks at the sound of a trumpet. The flesh of bears was much esteemed by the ancients. They abound in Poland, Muscovy, Lithuania, and the great forests in Germany; and also in the remote northern countries, where the species is white.

Calmet.

Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,

Bid Salisbury and Warwick come to me.—

—Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death,

And manacle the bearward in their chains.

Shak. Henry VI.

Thou'dst shun a bear;

But if thy flight lay tow'rd the roaring sea,

Thou'dst meet the bear i' th' mouth.

2. The name of two constellations, called the greater and lesser bear; in the tail of the lesser bear, is the pole star.

E'en then when Troy was by the Greeks o'erthrown,

The bear oppos'd to bright Orion shone.

Creech.

BEAR-BIND. n. f. A species of bindweed; which see:

BEAR-FLY. n. f. [from bear and fly.] An insect.

There be of flies, caterpillars, canker-flies, and bear-flies.

Bacon's Natural History.

BEAR-GARDEN. n. f. [from bear and garden.]

1. A place in which bears are kept for sport.

Hurrying me from the playhouse, and the scenes there, to the bear-garden, to the apes, and asses, and tygers.

Stillingfl.

I could not forbear going to a place of renown for the galantry of Britons, namely to the bear-garden.

Spect. N<sup>o</sup> 436.

2. Any place of tumult or misrule.

BEAR-GARDEN. adj. A word used in familiar or low phrase for rude or turbulent; as, a bear-garden fellow; that is, a man rude enough to be a proper frequenter of the bear-garden. Bear-garden sport, is used for gross inelegant entertainment.

BEAR'S-BREECH. n. f. [acanthus.] The name of a plant.

The leaves are like those of the thistle; the flowers labiated; the under lip of the flower is divided into three segments, which, in the beginning, is curled up in the form of a tube; in the place of the under lip are produced the stamina, which support the pointals; the cup of the flowers is composed of prickly leaves, the upper part of which is bent over, like an arch, and supplies the defect of the upper lip of the flower; the fruit is of an oval form, divided in the middle into two cells, each containing one smooth seed. The species are, 1. The smooth-leaved garden bear's-breech. 2. The prickly bear's-breech. 3. The middle bear's-breech, with short spines, &c. The first is used in medicine, and is supposed to be the mollis acanthus of Virgil. The leaves of this plant are cut upon the capitals of the Corinthian pillars, and were formerly in great esteem with the Romans. They are easily propagated by paring the roots in February or March, or by the seeds sown at the same time.

Millar.

BEAR'S-

BEAR'S-EAR, or Auricula. [auricula urfi, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It hath a perennial root; the leaves are thicker and smoother than those of the primrose; the cup of the flower is shorter, so that the tube appears naked; the flower is shaped like a funnel; the upper part is expanded, and divided into five segments; this is succeeded by a globular seed-vessel, containing many small seeds; every year it produces vast quantities of new flowers, differing in shape, size, or colour; and there is likewise a great variety in the leaves of these plants. They flower in April, and ripen their seeds in June. Millar.

BEAR'S-EAR, or Sanicle. [cortusa, Lat.]

This plant hath a perennial root; the leaves are roundish, rough, and crenated on the edges, like those of ground ivy; the cup of the flower is small, and divided into six parts; the flowers are shaped, like a funnel, cut at the top into many segments; and disposed in an umbel; the fruit is roundish, terminating in a point, and is closely fixt in the cup, in which are contained many small angular seeds. We have but one species of this plant, which is nearly allied to the auricula urfi; but the flowers are not quite so large and fair. It loses its leaves in winter, but puts out new ones early in the spring; and, in April, it produces flowers, which are sometimes succeeded by seed pods; but it is very rare that they perfect their seeds with us. Millar.

BEAR'S-FOOT. n. f. See HELLEBORE, of which it is a species.

BEAR'S-WORT. n. f. An herb.

BEARD. n. f. [beard, Saxon.]

1. The hair that grows on the lips and chin.

Ere on thy chin the springing beard began
To spread a doubtful down, and promise man. Prior.

2. Beard is used for the face; as, to do any thing to a man's beard, is to do it in defiance, or to his face.

Rail'd at their covenant, and jeer'd
Their rev'rend parsons to my beard. Hudibras.

3. Beard is used to mark age or virility; as, he has a long beard, means he is old.

This ancient ruffian, Sir, whose life I have spared at suit of his grey beard. Shakesp. K. Lear.

Some thin remains of chastity appear'd,
Ev'n under Jove, but Jove without a beard. Dryden.

Would it not be an insufferable thing, for a professor to have his authority, of forty years standing, confirmed by general tradition, and a reverend beard, overturned by an upstart novelist? Locke.

4. Sharp prickles growing upon the ears of corn.

The ploughman lost his sweat, and the green corn
Hath rotted ere its youth attain'd a beard.
Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

A certain farmer complained, that the beards of his corn cut the reapers and threshers fingers. L'Estrange.

5. A barb on an arrow.

6. The beard or chuck of a horse, is that part which bears the curb of the bridle. Farrier's Dict.

TO BEARD. v. a. [from beard.]

1. To take or pluck by the beard, in contempt or anger.

No man so potent breathes upon the ground,
But I will beard him. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

2. To oppose to the face; to set at open defiance.

He, whensoever he should swerve from duty, may be able to beard him. Spenser's State of Ireland.

The design of utterly extirpating monarchy and episcopacy, the presbyterians alone begun, continued, and would have ended, if they had not been bearded by that new party, with whom they could not agree about dividing the spoil. Swift.

BE'ARDED. adj. [from beard.]

1. Having a beard.

Think every bearded fellow, that's but yok'd,
May draw with you. Shakesp. Othello.

Old prophecies foretel our fall at hand,
When bearded men in floating castles land. Dryden.

2. Having sharp prickles, as corn.

As when a field
Of Ceres, ripe for harvest, waving bends
Her bearded grove of ears, which way the wind
Sways them. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 982.

The fierce virago
Flew o'er the fields, nor hurt the bearded grain. Dryden.

3. Barbed or jagged.

Thou shouldst have pull'd the secret from my breast,
Torn out the bearded steel to give me rest. Dryd. Aurengz.

BE'ARDLESS. adj. [from beard.]

1. Without a beard.

There are extant some coins of Cunobelin, king of Essex and Middlesex, with a beardless image, inscribed Cunobelin.
Cambden's Remains.

2. Youthful.

And, as young striplings wheep the top for sport,
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about,
Admir'd with clamours of the beardless rout. Dryden.

BE'ARER. n. f. [from to bear.]

1. A carrier of any thing, who conveys any thing from one place or person to another.

He should the bearers put to sudden death,
Not thriving time allow'd. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Forgive the bearer of unhappy news;
Your alter'd father openly pursues
Your ruin. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

No gentleman sends a servant with a message, without endeavouring to put it into terms brought down to the capacity of the bearer. Swift.

2. One employed in carrying burthens.

And he set threescore and ten thousand of them to be bearers of burdens. 2 Chron. ii. 18.

3. One who wears any thing.

O majesty!

When thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost sit
Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,
That scalds with safety. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

4. One who carries the body to the grave.

5. A tree that yields its produce.

This way of procuring autumnal roses, in some that are good bearers, will succeed. Boyle.

Reprune apricots and peaches, saving as much of the young likeliest shoots as are well placed; for the raw bearers commonly perish the new ones succeeding. Evelyn's Kalendar.

6. In architecture. A post or brick wall raised up between the ends of a piece of timber, to shorten its bearing; or to prevent its bearing with the whole weight at the ends only.

7. In heraldry. See SUPPORTER.

BE'ARHERD. n. f. [from bear and herd; as shepherd, from sheep.]
A man that tends bears.

He that is more than a youth, is not for me; and he that is less than a man, I am not for him; therefore I will even take sixpence in earnest of the bearherd, and lead his apes into hell.
Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.

BE'ARING. n. f. [from bear.]

1. The site or place of any thing with respect to something else.

But of this frame, the bearings and the ties,
The strong connections, nice dependencies,
Gradations just, has thy pervading soul

Look'd through? or can a part contain the whole? Pope.

2. Gesture; mien; behaviour.

That is Claudio; I know him by his bearing.
Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.

3. In architecture. Bearing of a piece of timber, with carpenters, is the space either between the two fixt extremes thereof, or between one extreme and a post, brick-wall, &c. trimmed up between the ends, to shorten its bearing. Builder's Dict.

BE'ARWARD. n. f. [from bear and ward.] A keeper of bears.

We'll bait thy bears to death,
And manacle the bearward in their chains. Shak. Henry VI.

The bear is led after one manner, the multitude after another; the bearward leads but one brute, and the mountebank leads a thousand. L'Estrange.

BEAST. n. f. [beste, Fr. bestia, Lat.]

1. An animal distinguished from birds, insects, fishes, and man.

The man that once did sell the lion's skin,
While the beast liv'd, was kill'd with hunting him. Shakesp.

Beasts of chase are the buck, the doe, the fox, the martren, and the roe. Beasts of the forest are the hart, the hind, the hare, the boar, and the wolf. Beasts of warren are the hare and cony. Cowel.

2. An irrational animal, opposed to man; as man and beast.

I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more, is none. —

What beast was't then
That made you break this enterprize to me? Macbeth.

Medea's charms were there, Circean feasts,
With bowls that turn'd enamour'd youths to beasts. Dryden.

3. A brutal savage man, a man acting in any manner unworthy of a reasonable creature.

BE'ASTINGS. See BEESTINGS.

BE'ASTLINESS. n. f. [from beastly.] Brutality; practice of any kind contrary to the rules of humanity.

They held this land, and with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time;

That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime. Fairy Queen.

BE'ASTLY. adj. [from beast.]

1. Brutal; contrary to the nature and dignity of man. It is used commonly as a term of reproach.

Wouldst thou have thyself fall in the confusion of men, or remain a beast with beasts? — Ay — a beastly ambition. Shakesp.

You beastly knave, know you no reverence? King Lear.

With lewd, prophane, and beastly phrase,
To catch the world's loose laughter or vain gaze. B. Johns.

Vain idols,
It is commonly charged upon the gentlemen of the army, that the beastly vice of drinking to excess, hath been lately, from their example, restored among us. Swift.

2. Having the nature or form of beasts.

Beastly divinities, and droves of gods. Prior.

To

To BEAT. v. a. preter. beat, part. pass. beat, or beaten. [battre, French.]

1. To strike; to knock; to lay blows upon.
So fight I, not as one that beateth the air. 1 Cor. ix. 26.
He rav'd with all the madness of despair;
He roar'd, he beat his breast, he tore his hair. Dryden.
2. To punish with stripes or blows.
They've chose a consul that will from them take
Their liberties; make them of no more voice
Than dogs, that are as often beat for barking,
And therefore kept to do so. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her. Shakesp. M. Wives of Windsor.
There is but one fault for which children should be beaten;
and that is obstinacy or rebellion. Locke.
3. To strike an instrument of musick.
Bid them come forth and hear,
Or at their chamber door I'll beat the drum,
Till it cry, sleep to death. Shakesp. King Lear.
4. To break to powder, or comminute by blows.
The people gathered manna, and ground it in mills, or beat it in a mortar, and baked it. Numbers, xi. 8.
They did beat the gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires, to work it. Exodus, xxxix. 3.
They save the laborious work of beating of hemp, by making the axletree of the main wheel of their corn mills longer than ordinary, and placing of pins in them, to raise large hammers like those used for paper and fulling mills, with which they beat most of their hemp. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Nestor, we see, furnished the gold, and he beat it into leaves, so that he had occasion to make use of his anvil and hammer.
Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.
5. To strike bushes or ground, or make a motion to rouse game.
It is strange how long some men will lie in wait to speak, and how many other matters they will beat over to come near
it. Bacon's Essays.
When from the cave thou risest with the day,
To beat the woods, and rouse the bounding prey. Prior.
Together let us beat this ample field,
Try what the open, what the covert yield. Pope.
6. To thresh; to drive the corn out of the husk.
She gleaned in the field, and beat out that she had gleaned.
Ruth, ii. 17.
7. To mix things by long and frequent agitation.
By long beating the white of an egg, you may bring it into white curds. Boyle.
8. To batter with engines of war.
And he beat down the tower of Penue!, and slew the men of the city. Judges, viii. 17.
9. To dash, as water, or brush as wind.
Beyond this flood a frozen continent
Lies dark and wild; beat with perpetual storms
Of whirlwind and dire hail. Milt. Paradise Lost, b. ii.
With tempests beat, and to the winds a scorn. Roscommon.
While winds and storms his lofty forehead beat,
The common fate of all that's high or great. Denham.
As when a lion in the midnight hours,
Beat by rude blasts, and wet with wintry show'rs,
Descends terrifick from the mountain's brow. Pope.
10. To tread a path.
While I this unexampled task essay,
Pass awful gulfs, and beat my painful way,
Celestial dove, divine assistance bring. Blackmore.
11. To make a path by marking it with tracks.
He that will know the truth of things, must leave the common and beaten track. Locke.
12. To conquer; to subdue; to vanquish.
If Hercules and Lichas play at dice,
Which is the better man? The greater throw
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:
So is Alcides beaten by his page. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
You souls of geese,
That bear the shapes of men, how have you run
From slaves that apes would beat? Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Five times, Marcius,
I have fought with thee, so often hast thou beat me. Shakesp.
I have discern'd the foe securely lie,
Too proud to fear a beaten enemy. Dryden's Indian Emp.
The common people of Lucca are firmly persuaded, that one Lucquese can beat five Florentines. Addison on Italy.
Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, joining his ships to those of the Syracusans, beat the Carthaginians at sea. Arbutnot on Coins.
13. To harrafs; to over-labour.
It is no point of wisdom for a man to beat his brains, and spend his spirits about things impossible. Hakewell on Providence.
And as in prisons mean rogues beat
Hemp, for the service of the great;
So Whacum beat his dirty brains
T' advance his master's fame and gains. Hudibras.
I know not why any one should waste his time, and beat his head about the Latin grammar, who does not intend to be a critick. Locke.

14. To lay, or press, as standing corn by hard weather.
Her own shall bless her;
Her foes shake, like a field of beaten corn,
And hang their heads with sorrow. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
  15. To depress; to crush by repeated opposition; usually with the particle down.
Albeit a pardon was proclaimed, touching any speech tending to treason, yet could not the boldness be beaten down either with that severity, or with this lenity be abated. Hayward.
Our warriors propagating the French language, at the same time they are beating down their power. Addison. Spect. N° 165.
Such an unlook'd for storm of ills falls on me,
It beats down all my strength. Addison's Cato.
  16. To drive by violence.
Twice have I sally'd, and was twice beat back. Dryden.
He that proceeds upon other principles in his inquiry, does at least post himself in a party, which he will not quit, till he be beaten out. Locke.
He cannot beat it out of his head, but that it was a cardinal who picked his pocket. Addison. Freeholder, N° 44.
The younger part of mankind might be beat off from the belief of the most important points even of natural religion, by the impudent jests of a profane wit. Watts's Impr. of the Mind.
  17. To move with fluttering agitation.
Thrice have I beat the wing, and rid with night
About the world. Dryden's State of Innocence.
  18. To beat down. To endeavour by treaty to lessen the price demanded.
Surveys rich moveables with curious eye,
Beats down the price, and threatens still to buy. Dryden.
She persuaded him to trust the renegado with the money he had brought over for their ransom; as not questioning but he would beat down the terms of it. Addison. Spectat. N° 199.
  19. To beat down. To sink or lessen the value.
Usury beats down the price of land; for the employment of money is chiefly either merchandizing or purchasing; and usury way-lays both. Bacon's Essays, N° 42.
  20. To beat up. To attack suddenly; to alarm.
They lay in that quiet posture, without making the least impression upon the enemy, by beating up his quarters, which might easily have been done. Clarendon, b. viii.
Will. fancies he should never have been the man he is, had not he broke windows, knocked down constables, and beat up a lewd woman's quarters, when he was a young fellow. Addis.
  21. To beat the h. of. To walk; to go on foot.
- To BEAT. v. n.
1. To move in a pulsatory manner.
I would gladly understand the formation of a soul, and see it beat the first conscious pulse. Collier on Thought.
  2. To dash, as a flood or storm.
This publick envy seemeth to beat chiefly upon ministers.
Bacon's Essays, N° 9.
Your brow, which does no fear of thunder know,
Sees rowling tempests vainly beat below. Dryden.
And one sees many of the like hollow spaces worn in the bottoms of the rocks, as they are more or less able to resist the impressions of the water that beats against them. Addison.
  3. To knock at a door.
The men of the city beset the house round about, and beat at the door, and spake to the master of the house. Judg. xix. 22.
  4. To move with frequent repetitions of the same act or stroke.
No pulse shall keep
His nat'ral progress, but surcease to beat. Sh. Rom. and Jul.
My temp'rate pulse does regularly beat;
Feel, and be satisfy'd. Dryden's Persius, Sat. iii.
A man's heart beats, and the blood circulates, which it is not in his power, by any thought or volition, to stop. Locke.
  5. To throb; to be in agitation, as a fore swelling.
A turn or two I'll walk,
To still my beating mind. Shakesp. Tempest.
  6. To fluctuate; to be in agitation.
The tempest in my mind
Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
Save what beats there. Shakesp. King Lear.
  7. To try different ways; to search.
I am always beating about in my thoughts for something that may turn to the benefit of my dear countrymen. Addison. Guard.
To find an honest man, I beat about,
And love him, court him, praise him in or out. Pope.
  8. To act upon with violence.
The sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die. Jonah, iv. 48.
  9. To speak frequently; to repeat; to enforce by repetition.
We are drawn on into a larger speech, by reason of their so great earnestness, who beat more and more upon these last alleged words. Hooker, b. ii. § 4.
How frequently and fervently doth the scripture beat upon this cause? Hakewell on Providence.
  10. To beat up; as, to beat up for soldiers. The word up seems redundant.
- BEAT. part. passive. [from the verb.]

Like a rich vessel beat by storms to shore,
'Twere madness should I venture out once more. Dryden.
BEAT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Stroke.
2. Manner of striking.

Albeit the base and treble strings of a viol be turned to an unison; yet the former will still make a bigger or broader sound than the latter, as making a broader beat upon the air.

Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. ii. c. 2.

With a careless beat,

Struck out the mute creation at a beat. Dryd. Hind and P.

3. Manner of being struck; as, the beat of the pulse, or a drum.

BE'ATEN. particip. adj. [from to beat.]

What makes you, Sir, so late abroad,

Without a guide, and this no beaten road? Dryd. W. of Bath.

BE'ATER. n. f. [from beat.]

1. An instrument with which any thing is comminuted or mingled.

Beat all your mortar with a beater three or four times over, before you use it; for thereby you incorporate the sand and lime well together. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

2. A person much given to blows.

The best schoolmaster of our time, was the greatest beater.

Ascham's Schoolmaster.

BEATIFICAL. } adj. [beatificus, low Lat. from beatus, happy.]

BEATIFICK. } That which has the power of making happy, or compleating fruition; blissful. It is used only of heavenly fruition after death.

Admiring the riches of heav'n's pavement

Than ought divine or holy else, enjoy'd

In vision beatifick. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i. l. 684.

It is also their felicity to have no faith; for, enjoying the beatifical vision in the fruition of the object of faith, they have received the full evacuation of it. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i.

We may contemplate upon the greatness and strangeness of the beatifick vision; how a created eye should be so fortified, as to bear all those glories, that stream from the fountain of uncreated light. South.

BEATIFICALLY. adv. [from beatifical.] In such a manner as to compleat happiness.

Beatifically to behold the face of God in the fulness of wisdom, righteousness and peace, is blessedness no way incident unto the creatures beneath man. Hakewell on Providence.

BEATIFICATION. n. f. [from beatifick.] A term in the Romish church, distinguished from canonization. Beatification is an acknowledgment made by the pope, that the person beatified is in heaven, and therefore may be revered as blessed; but is not a concession of the honours due to saints, which are conferred by canonization.

To BEA'TIFY. v. a. [beatifico, Lat.]

1. To make happy; to bless with the completion of celestial enjoyment.

I wish I had the wings of an angel, to have ascended into paradise, and to have beheld the forms of those beatified spirits, from which I might have copied my archangel. Dryden.

The use of spiritual conference is unimaginable and unspeakable, especially if free and unrestrained, bearing an image of that conversation which is among angels and beatified saints. Hammond's Fundamentals.

We shall know him to be the fullest good, the nearest to us, and the most certain; and, consequently, the most beatifying of all others. Brown's Cosmologia Sacra, b. iii. c. 4.

2. To settle the character of any person by a publick acknowledgment that he is received in heaven, though he is not invested with the dignity of a saint.

Over-against this church stands a large hospital, erected by a shoemaker, who has been beatified, though never sainted. Addison on Italy.

BE'ATING. n. f. [from beat.] Correction; punishment by blows.

Playwright, convict of publick wrongs to men,

Takes private beatings, and begins again. Ben. Johnson.

BEA'TITUDE. n. f. [beatitudo, Lat.]

1. Blessedness; felicity; happiness: commonly used of the joys of heaven.

The end of that government, and of all man's aims, is agreed to be beatitude, that is, his being completely well. Digby.

This is the image and little representation of heaven; it is beatitude in picture. Taylor's Holy Living.

He set out the felicity of his heaven, by the delights of sense; slightly passing over the accomplishment of the soul, and the beatitude of that part which earth and visibilities too weakly affect. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 2.

2. A declaration of blessedness made by our Saviour to particular virtues.

BEAU. n. f. [beau, Fr. It is founded like bo, and has often the French plural beaux.] A man of dress; a man whose great care is to deck his person.

What, will not beaux attempt to please the fair? Dryden.

The water nymphs are too unkind

To Vill'roy; are the land nymphs so?

And fly they all, at once combin'd

To shame a general, and a beau?

Prior.

You will become the delight of nine ladies in ten; and the envy of ninety-nine beaux in a hundred. Swift's Direct. to Footm.

BE'AVER. n. f. [bievre, Fr.]

1. An animal, otherwise named the castor, amphibious, and remarkable for his art in building his habitation; of which many wonderful accounts are delivered by travellers. His skin is very valuable on account of the fur.

The beaver being hunted, biteth off his stones, knowing that for them only his life is sought. Hakewell on Providence.

They placed this invention upon the beaver, for the sagacity and wisdom of that animal; indeed from its artifice in building. Brown's Vulgar Errours, c. 4.

2. A hat of the best kind; so called from being made of the fur of beaver.

You see a smart rhetorician turning his hat, moulding it into different cocks, examining the lining and the button during his harangue: A deaf man would think he was cheapening a beaver, when he is talking of the fate of a nation. Addison. Sp.

The broker here his spacious beaver wears,

Upon his brow sit jealousies and cares. Gay's Trivia.

3. The part of a helmet that covers the face. [baviere, Fr.]

His dreadful hideous head

Close couched on the beaver, seem'd to throw,
From flaming mouth, bright sparkles fry red. Fairy Queen.

Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,

And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps. Shakesp. H. V.

He was slain upon a course at tilt, the splinters of the staff going in at his beaver. Bacon's Essays, N° 36.

BE'AVERED. adj. [from beaver.] Covered with a beaver; wearing a beaver.

His beaver'd brow a birchen garland bears,

Dropping with infant's blood, and mother's tears:

All flesh is humbled.

Pope's Dunciad.

BEAU'ISH. adj. [from beau.] Befitting a beau; foppish.

BEAU'TEOUS. adj. [from beauty.] Fair; elegant in form; pleasing to the sight; beautiful. This word is chiefly poetical.

I can, Petrucio, help thee to a wife,

With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous.

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

Alas! not hoping to subdue,

I only to the flight aspir'd;

To keep the beauteous foe in view,

Was all the glory I desir'd.

Prior.

BEAU'TEOUSLY. adv. [from beauteous.] In a beauteous manner; in a manner pleasing to the sight; beautifully.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beauteously; that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed. Taylor's Holy Living.

BEAU'TEOUSNESS. n. f. [from beauteous.] The state or quality of being beauteous; beauty.

From less virtue, and less beauteousness,

The gentiles fram'd them gods and goddesses.

Donne.

BEAU'TIFUL. adj. [from beauty and full.] Fair; having the qualities that constitute beauty.

He stole away and took by strong hand all the beautiful women in his time. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

The principal and most important parts of painting, is to know what is most beautiful in nature, and most proper for that art; that which is the most beautiful, is the most noble subject: so, in poetry, tragedy is more beautiful than comedy, because the persons are greater whom the poet instructs, and consequently the instructions of more benefit to mankind. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Preface.

Beautiful looks are rul'd by fickle minds,

And summer seas are turn'd by sudden winds.

Prior.

BEAU'TIFULLY. adv. [from beautiful.] In a beautiful manner.

No longer shall the boddice aptly lac'd,

From thy full bosom to thy slender waist,

That air and harmony of shape express,

Fine by degrees, and beautifully less.

Prior.

BEAU'TIFULNESS. n. f. [from beautiful.] The quality of being beautiful; beauty; excellence of form.

To BEAU'TIFY. v. a. [from beauty.] To adorn; to embellish; to deck; to grace; to add beauty to.

Never was sorrow more sweetly set forth, their faces seeming rather to beautify their sorrow, than their sorrow to cloud the beauty of their faces. Hayward on Edward VI.

Sufficeth not that we are brought to Rome,

To beautify thy triumphs and return,

Captive to thee and to thy Roman yoke. Shakesp. T. Andron.

These were not created to beautify the earth alone, but for the use of man and beast. Raleigh's History of the World.

How all conspire to grace

Th' extended earth, and beautify her face. Blackmore's Creat.

There is charity and justice; and the one serves to heighten and beautify the other. Atterbury.

To BEAU'TIFY. v. n. To grow beautiful; to advance in beauty.

It must be a prospect pleasing to God himself, to see his creation for ever beautifying in his eyes, and drawing nearer to him, by greater degrees of resemblance. Addison. Spectator.

BEAU'TY. n. f. [beauti, Fr.]

1. That

B E C

1. That assemblage of graces, or proportion of parts, which pleases the eye.
Beauty consists of a certain composition of colour and figure, causing delight in the beholder. Locke.
Your beauty was the cause of that effect,
Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep.—
—If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shakefp. Richard III.
Beauty is best in in a body that hath rather dignity of presence than beauty of aspect. The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit, and study for the most part rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon.
The best part of beauty is that which a picture cannot express. Bacon's Ornament. Ration. N° 64.
Of the beauty of the eye I shall say little, leaving that to poets and orators; that it is a very pleasant and lovely object to behold, if we consider the figure, colours, splendour of it, is the least I can say. Ray on Creation.
He view'd their twining branches with delight,
And prais'd the beauty of the pleasing sight. Pope.
2. A particular grace, feature, or ornament.
The ancient pieces are beautiful, because they resemble the beauties of nature; and nature will ever be beautiful, which resembles those beauties of antiquity. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Wherever you place a patch, you destroy a beauty. Addison.
3. Any thing more eminently excellent than the rest of that with which it is united.
This gave me an occasion of looking backward on some beauties of my author in his former books. Dryd. Fab. Pref.
With incredible pains have I endeavoured to copy the several beauties of the ancient and modern historians. Arbutnot.
4. A beautiful person.
Remember that Pellean conquerour,
A youth, how all the beauties of the east
He slightly view'd, and slightly overpass'd. Paradise Lost.
What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be?
Can he, who kill'd thy brother, live for thee? Dryden.
To BEAU'TY. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn; to beautify; to embellish.
The harlot's cheek, beautied with platt'ring art,
Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it,
Than is my deed to your most painted word. Shak. Hamlet.
BEAUTY-SPOT. n. f. [from beauty and spot.] A spot placed to direct the eye to something else, or to heighten some beauty; a foil; a patch.
The filthiness of swine makes them the beauty-spot of the animal creation. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. iii. c. 2. § 49.
BECAFI'CO. n. f. [becafigo, Span.] A bird like a nightingale, feeding on figs and grapes; a fig-pecker. Pineda.
The robin-redbreast, till of late, had rest,
And children sacred held a martin's nest;
Till becaficos sold so dev'lish dear,
To one that was, or would have been, a peer. Pope.
To BECA'LM. v. a. [from calm.]
1. To still the elements.
The moon shone clear on the becalmed flood. Dryden.
2. To keep a ship from motion.
A man becalmed at sea, out of sight of land, in a fair day, may look on the sun, or sea, or ship, a whole hour, and perceive no motion. Locke.
3. To quiet the mind.
Soft whisp'ring airs, and the lark's matten song,
Then woo to musing, and becalm the mind
Perplex'd with irksome thoughts. Philips.
Banish his sorrows, and becalm his soul
With easy dreams. Addison's Cato.
4. To becalm and to calm differ in this, that to calm is to stop motion, and to becalm is to with-hold from motion.
BECA'ME. The preterite of become; which see.
BECA'USE. conjunct. [from by and cause.]
1. For this reason that; on this account that; for this cause that.
How great soever the sins of any person are, Christ died for him, because he died for all; and he died for those sins, because he died for all sins; only he must reform. Hammond's Fundam.
Men do not so generally agree in the sense of these as of the other, because the interests, and lusts, and passions of men, are more concerned in the one than the other. Tillot's Preface.
2. It has, in some sort, the force of a preposition; but, because it is compounded of a noun, has of after it.
Infancy demands aliment, such as lengthens fibres without breaking, because of the state of accretion. Arbut. on Aliments.
To BECHA'NCE. v. n. [from be and chance.] To befall; to happen to: a word proper, but now in little use.
My sons, God knows what has bechanced them. Shakefp. Henry VI. p. ii.
All happiness bechance to thee at Milan. Shakefp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.
BE'CHICKS. n. f. [βήχια, of βήξ, a cough.] Medicines proper for relieving coughs. Diët.
To BECK. v. a. [beacn, Sax. bec, Fr. head.] To make a sign with the head.

B E C

- Bell, book, and candle, shall not drive me back,
When gold and silver beck me to come on. Shakep. K. John.
Oh, this false soul of Egypt, this gay charm,
Whose eye beck'd forth my wars, and called them home. Shakefp. Antony and Cleopatra.
- BECK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A sign with the head; a nod.
Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee
Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles. Milton.
2. A nod of command.
Neither the lusty kind shewed any roughness, nor the easier any idleness; but still like a well obeyed master, whose beck is enough for discipline. Sidney, b. ii.
Then forthwith to him takes a chosen band
Of spirits, likest to himself in guile,
To be at hand, and at his beck appear. Milton's Par. Reg.
The menial fair, that round her wait,
At Helen's beck prepare the room of state. Pope's Odyss. b. iii.
To BE'CKON. v. a. [from beck, or beacn, Sax. a sign.] To make a sign to.
With her two crooked hands she signs did make,
And beckon'd him. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. iv. stanza. 13.
It beckons you to go away with it,
As if it some impartment did desire
To you alone. Shakefp. Hamlet.
With this his distant friends he beckons near,
Provokes their duty, and prevents their fear. Dryden.
To BE'CKON. v. n. To make a sign.
Alexander beckoned with the hand, and would have made his defence unto the people. Acts, xix. 33.
When he had raised my thoughts by those transporting airs, he beckoned to me, and, by the waving of his hand, directed me to approach. Addison. Spectator, N° 159.
Sudden you mount! you beckon from the skies,
Clouds interpose, waves roar, and winds arise. Pope.
To BECLIP. v. a. [of be clyppan, Sax.] To embrace. Diët.
To BECO'ME. v. a. pret. I became; comp. pret. I have become. [from by and come.]
1. To enter into some state or condition, by a change from some other.
The Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. Gen. ii. 7.
And unto the Jews I became a Jew; that I might gain the Jews. 1 Cor. ix. 20.
A smaller pear, grafted upon a stock that beareth a greater pear, will become great. Bacon's Natural History, N° 453.
My voice thou oft hast heard, and hast not fear'd;
But still rejoic'd; how is it now become
So dreadful to thee? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 120.
So the least faults, if mix'd with fairest dead,
Of future ill become the fatal seed. Prior.
2. To become of. To be the fate of; to be the end of; to be the final condition of. It is observable, that this word is never, or very seldom, used but with the interrogative what.
What is then become of so huge a multitude, as would have overspread a great part of the continent? Raleigh's Essays.
Perplex'd with thoughts, what would become
Of me, and all mankind. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii. l. 275.
The first hints of the circulation of the blood were taken from a common person's wondering, what became of all the blood which issued out of the heart. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.
What will become of me then? for when he is free, he will infallibly accuse me. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
What became of this thoughtful busy creature, when removed from this world, has amazed the vulgar, and puzzled the wife. Rogers's Sermons.
3. In the following passage, the phrase; where is he become, is used for what is become of him.
I cannot joy, until I be resolved
Where our right valiant father is become. Shakefp. Hen. VI.
To BECO'ME. v. a. [from be or by, and comen, Sax. to please.]
1. Applied to persons; to appear in a manner suitable to something.
If I become not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. i.
Why would I be a queen? because my face
Would wear the title with a better grace;
If I became it not, yet it would be Part of your duty, then, to flatter me. Dryd. Cong. of Gran.
2. Applied to things; to be suitable to the person; to best; to be congruous to the appearance, or character, or circumstances, in such a manner as to add grace; to be graceful.
She to her fire made humble reverence,
And bowed low, that her right well became,
And added grace unto her excellence. Fairy Queen, b. i.
I would I had some flowers of the spring that might Become your time of day; and your's, and your's,
That wear upon your virgin branches yet
Your maidenheads growing. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
Yet be sad, good brothers;
For, to speak truth, it very well becomes you. Sh. Henry IV.

Your dishonour

Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity, which should become it. Shakesp. Coriol.
Wicherly was of my opinion, or, rather, I of his: for it be- comes me so to speak of so excellent a poet. Dryd. Dufr. Pref.
He utterly rejected their fables concerning their gods, as not becoming good men, much less those which were worshipped for gods. Stillingsf. Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idolatry.

BECOMING. particip. adj. [from become.] That which pleases by an elegant propriety; graceful. It is sometimes used with the particle of; but generally without any government of the following words.

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white

To make up my delight,

No odd becoming graces,

Black eyes, or little know not what, in faces. Suckling.

Their discourses are such as belong to their age, their calling, and their breeding; such as are becoming of them, and of them only. Dryd. Fables, Preface.

Yet some becoming boldness I may use;

I've well deserv'd, nor will he now refuse. Dryd. Aurengz.

Make their pupils repeat the action, that they may correct what is constrained in it, till it be perfected into an habitual and becoming easiness. Locke.

BECOMING. n. f. [from become.] Behaviour: a word not now in use.

Sir, forgive me,

Since my becomings kill me, when they do not

Eye well to you. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

BECOMINGLY. adv. [from becoming.] After a becoming or proper manner.

BECOMINGNESS. n. f. [from becoming. See TO BECOME.] Decency; elegant congruity; propriety.

Nor is the majesty of the divine government greater in its extent, than the becomingness hereof is in its manner and form.
Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. iii. c. i.

BED. n. f. [bed, Sax.]

1. Something made to sleep on:

Lying not erect, but hollow, which is in the making of the bed; or with the legs gathered up, which is in the posture of the body, is the more wholesome. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 738.

Rigour now is gone to bed,

And advice with scrupulous head. Milton.

Those houses then were caves, or homely sheds,

With twining oziars fenc'd, and moss their beds. Dryden.

2. Lodging; the convenience of a place to sleep in.

On my knees I beg,

That you'll vouchsafe me, raiment, bed, and food.

3. Marriage.

George, the eldest son of this second bed, was, after the death of his father, by the singular care and affection of his mother, well brought up. Clarendon.

4. Bank of earth raised in a garden.

Herbs will be tenderer and fairer, if you take them out of beds, when they are newly come up, and remove them into pots, with better earth. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 459.

5. The channel of a river, or any hollow.

So high as heav'd the tumid hills, so low

Down sunk a hollow bottom, broad, and deep,

Capacious bed of waters. Milt. Par. Lost, b. vii. l. 288.

The great magazine for all kinds of treasure is supposed to be the bed of the Tiber. We may be sure, when the Romans lay under the apprehensions of seeing their city sacked by a barbarous enemy, that they would take care to bestow such of their riches that way, as could best bear the water. Addison.

6. The place where any thing is generated, or reposit.

See hoary Albula's infected tide

O'er the warm bed of smoking sulphur glide. Addison.

7. A layer; a stratum; a body spread over another.

I see no reason, but the surface of the land should be as regular as that of the water, in the first production of it; and the strata, or beds within, lie as even. Burnet's Theory.

8. To bring to BED. To deliver of a child. It is often used with the particle of; as, she was brought to bed of a daughter.

Ten months after Florimel happen'd to wed,

And was brought in a laudable manner to bed. Prior.

9. To make the BED. To put the bed in order after it has been used.

I keep his house, and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds, and do all myself. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

BED of a Mortar. [with gunners.] A solid piece of oak hollowed in the middle, to receive the breech and half the trun-nions. Dict.

They have married me:

I'll to the Tuscan wars, and never bed her.

Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

B E D

2. To be placed in bed.

She was publicly contracted, stated as a bride, and solemnly bedded; and, after she was laid, Maximilian's ambassadour put his leg, stript naked to the knee, between the espousal sheets.
Bacon's Henry VII.

3. To be made partaker of the bed.

There was a doubt ripped up, whether Arthur was bedded with his lady. Bacon's Henry VII.

4. To sow, or plant in earth.

Lay the turf with the grass-side downward, upon which lay some of your best mould to bed your quick in, and lay your quick upon it. Mortimer's Husbandry.

5. To lay in a place of rest, or security.

Let coarse bold hands, from slimy nest,

The bedded fish in banks outwrest.

A snake bedded himself under the threshold of a countryhouse. Donne.
L'Estrange's Fables.

6. To lay in order; in strata.

And as the sleeping soldiers in th' alarm,

Your bedded hairs, like life in excrements,

Start up, and stand on end.

Shakesp. Hamlet.

TO BED. v. n. To cohabit.

If he be married, and bed with his wife, and afterwards re-lapse, he may possibly fancy that she infected him.

Wifeman's Surgery.

TO BEDD'BLE. v. a. [from dabble.] To wet; to besprinkle.

It is generally applied to persons, in a sense including inconvenience.

Never so weary, never so in woe,

Beddabled with the dew, and torn with briars,

I can no further crawl, no further go.

Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

TO BEDD'GGLE. v. a. [from daggle.] To bemire; to soil cloaths, by letting them reach the dirt in walking.

TO BEDD'SH. v. a. [from dash.] To bemire by throwing dirt;
to bespatter; to wet with throwing water.

When thy warlike father, like a child,

Told the sad story of my father's death,

That all the standers by had wet their cheeks,

Like trees beddashed with rain.

Shakesp. Richard III.

TO BEDD'WB. v. a. [from dawb.] To dawb over; to besmear;
to soil, with spreading any viscous body over it.

A piteous coarse, a bloody piteous coarse,

Pale, pale as ashes, all bedawb'd in blood,

All in gore blood.

Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

TO BEDD'ZZLE. v. a. [from dazzle.] To make the sight dim by too much lustre.

My mistaken eyes,

That have been so bedazzled by the sun,

That every thing I look on seemeth green.

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

BEDCHA'MBER. n. f. [from bed and chamber.] The chamber appropriated to rest.

They were brought to the king, abiding then in his bed- chamber. Hayward.

BEDCLO'ATHS. n. f. [from bed and cloaths.] It has no singular.]

Coverlets spread over a bed.

For he will be swine drunk, and, in his sleep, he does little harm, save to his bedcloaths about him.

Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

BE'DDER. } n. f. [from bed.] The nether-stone of an oil-
BEDE'TTER. } mill. Dict.

BE'DDING. n. f. [from bed.] The materials of a bed; a bed.

There be no inns where meet bedding may be had; so that his mantle serves him then for a bed. Spenser's Ireland.

First, with assiduous care from winter keep,

Well fother'd in the stalls, thy tender sheep;

Then spread with straw the bedding of thy fold,

With fern beneath, to fend the bitter cold. Dryd. Georg.

Arcite return'd, and, as in honour ty'd,

His foe with bedding, and with food supply'd.

Dryden.

TO BEDE'CK. v. a. [from deck.] To deck; to adorn; to grace.

Thou sham'st thy shape, thy love, thy wit,

And usest none in that true use indeed,

Which should bedeck thy shape, thy love, thy wit.

Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

Female it seems,

That so bedeck'd, ornate, and gay,

Comes this way. Milton's Samf. Agonistes, l. 710.

With ornamental drops bedeck'd I stood,

And writ my victory with my enemy's blood.

Norris.

Now Ceres, in her prime,

Smiles fertile, and with ruddiest freight bedeck't.

Philips.

BE'DEHOUSE. n. f. [from bede, Sax. a prayer, and house.] An hospital or almshouse, where the poor people prayed for their founders and benefactors.

BEDE'TTER. See BEDDER.

Be drops of balm to sanctify thy head. Shakesp. Hen. IV.
The countess received a letter from him, whereunto all the while she was writing her answer, she bedewed the paper with her tears. Wotton.
What slender youth, bedew'd with liquid odours,
Courts thee on roses, in some pleasant cave? Milton.
Balm from a silver box distill'd around,
Shall all bedew the roots, and scent the sacred ground. Dryd.
He said: and falling tears his face bedew. Dryd. Æneid.
BE'DFELLOW. n. f. [from bed and fellow.] One that lies in the same bed.
He loves your people,
But tie him not to be their bedfellow. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Misery acquaints a man with strange bedfellows.
Shakesp. Tempest.
And how doth my cousin, your bedfellow?
And your fairest daughter, and mine? Shakesp. Henry IV.
Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesom a bedfellow? Shakesp. Henry IV.
A man would as soon choose him for his bedfellow as his play-fellow. L'Estrange.
What charming bedfellows, and companions for life, men choose out of such women? Addison. Guardian, N° 120.
TO BEDIGHT. v. a. [from dight.] To adorn; to dress; to set off.
A maiden fine bedight he hapt to love;
The maiden fine bedight his love retains,
And for the village he forsakes the plains. Gay.
TO BEDIM. v. a. [from dim.] To make dim; to obscure; to cloud; to darken.

And 'twixt the green sea and the azur'd vault
Set roaring war. Shakesp. Tempest.
TO BEDIZEN. v. a. [from dizen.] To dress out.
BE'DLAM. n. f. [corrupted from Pethlehem, the name of a religious house in London, converted afterwards into an hospital for the mad and lunatick.]
1. A madhouse; a place appointed for the cure of lunacy.
2. A madman; a lunatick.
Let's follow the old earl, and get the bedlam
To lead him where he would; his roguish madness Allows itself to any thing. Shakesp. King Lear.
BE'DLAM. adj. [from the noun.] Belonging to a madhouse;
fit for a madhouse.
The country gives me proof and precedent
Of bedlam beggars, who, with roaring voices,
Strike in their numb'd and mortify'd bare arms,
Pins, wooden pricks. Shakesp. King Lear.
BE'DLAMITE. n. f. [from bedlam.] An inhabitant of Bedlam;
a madman.
If wild ambition in thy bosom reign,
Alas! thou boast'st thy sober sense in vain;
In these poor bedlamites thyself survey. Lewis's Miscel.
BE'DMAKER. n. f. [from bed and make.] A person in the universities, whose office it is to make the beds, and clean the
chambers.

rusticated for ever. Spectator, N° 598.
BE'DMATE. n. f. [from bed and mate.] A bedfellow; one that partakes of the same bed.
Had I so good occasion to lie long
As you, prince Paris, nought but heav'nly business Should rob my bedmate of my company. Shak. Tr. and Cress.
BE'DMOULDING. } n. f. [from bed and mould.] A term
BE'DDING MOULDING. } used by workmen, to signify those members in the cornice, which are placed below the coronet.
Builder's Dict.
BE'DPOST. n. f. [from bed and post.] The post at the corner of the bed, which supports the canopy.
I came the next day prepared, and placed her in a clear light, her head leaning to a bedpost, another standing behind, holding it steady. Wise man's Surgery.
BE'DPRESSER. n. f. [from bed and press.] A heavy lazy fellow.
This sanguine coward, this bedpresser, this horseback-breaker, this huge hill of flesh. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.
TO BEDRAGGLE. v. a. [from be and dragg.] To soil the cloaths, by suffering them, in walking, to reach the dirt.
Poor Patty Blount, no more be seen
Bedraggled in my walks so green. Swift.
TO BEDRENCH. v. a. [from be and drench.] To drench; to soak; to saturate with moisture.
Far off from the mind of Bolingbroke
It is, such crimson tempest should bedrench
The fresh green lap of fair king Richard's land.
Shakesp. King Richard III.
BE'DRID. adj. [from bed and ride.] Confined to the bed by age or sickness.
Norway, uncle of young Fontinbras,
Who, impotent and bedrid, scarcely hears
Of this his nephew's purpose. Shakesp. Hamlet.

B E E

Lies he not bedrid? and, again, does nothing,
But what he did being childish? Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
Now, as a myriad
Of ants durst th' emperor's lov'd snake invade:
The crawling galleys, seagulls, finny chips,
Might brave our pinnaces, our bedrid ships. Donne.
Hanging old men, who were bedrid, because they would not discover where their money was. Clarendon, b. viii.
Infirm persons, when they come to be so weak as to be fixed to their beds, hold out many years; some have lain bedrid twenty years. Ray.
BE'DRITE. n. f. [from bed and rite.] The privilege of the marriage bed.

Till Hymen's torch be lighted. Shakesp. Tempest.
TO BEDROP. v. a. [from be and drop.] To besprinkle; to mark with spots or drops; to speckle.
Not so thick swarm'd once the soil
Bedrop'd with blood of Gorgon. Milt. Par. Lost, b. x. l. 527.
Our plenteous streams a various taste supply;
The silver eel in shining volumes roll'd,
The yellow carp, in scales bedrop'd with gold. Pope's W. For.
BE'DSTEAD. n. f. [from bed and stead.] The frame on which the bed is placed.
Chimnies with scorn rejecting smoak;
Stools, tables, chairs, and bedsteads broke. Swift.
BE'DSTRAW. n. f. [from bed and straw.] The straw laid under a bed to make it soft.
Fleas breed principally of straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture; or the chamber or bedstraw kept close, and not aired. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 696.
BEDSWERVER. n. f. [from bed and swerve.] One that is false to the bed; one that ranges or swerves from one bed to another.
She's a bedswerver, even as bad as those,
That vulgars give bold'st titles to. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
BE'DTIME. n. f. [from bed and time.] The hour of rest; sleeping time.
What masks, what dances shall we have,
To wear away this long age of three hours;
Between our after-supper and bedtime?
Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.
After evening repasts, till bedtime, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion. Milt. on Education.
The scouring drunkard, if he does not fight
Before his bedtime, takes no rest that night. Dryden's Juv.
TO BEDUNG. v. a. [from be and dung.] To cover, or manure with dung.
TO BEDUST. v. a. [from be and dust.] To sprinkle with dust.
BE'DWARD. adv. [from bed and ward.] Toward bed.
In heart
As merry, as when our nuptial day was done,
And tapers burnt to bedward. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
TO BEDWARF. v. a. [from be and dwarf.] To make little;
to hinder in growth; to stunt.
'Tis shrinking, not close weaving, that hath thus
In mind and body both bedwarfed us. Donne.
BE'DWORK. n. f. [from bed and work.] Work done in bed;
work performed without toil of the hands.
The still and mental parts,
That do contrive how many hands shall strike;
When fulness call them on, and know, by measure
Of their observant toil, the enemy's weight;
Why this hath not a finger's dignity,
They call this bedwork, mapp'ry, closet war.
Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
BEE. n. f. [beo, Saxon.]
1. The animal that makes honey, remarkable for its industry and art.
So work the honey bees,
Creatures that, by a ruling nature, teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shakesp. Hen. V.
From the Moorish camp,
There has been heard a distant humming noise,
Like bees disturb'd, and arming in their hives. Dryden.
A company of poor insects, whereof some are bees, delighted with flowers, and their sweetness; others beetles, delighted with other viands. Locke.
2. An industrious and careful person. This signification is only used in familiar language.
BEE-EATER. n. f. [from bee and eat.] A bird that feeds upon bees.
BEE-FLOWER. n. f. [from bee and flower.] A species of fool-stones; which see. It grows upon dry places, and flowers in April. Millar.
BEE-GARDEN. n. f. [from bee and garden.] A plate to set hives of bees in.
A convenient and necessary place ought to be made choice of, for your apiary, or bee-garden. Mortimer's Husbandry.

bees are kept.
BEE-MASTER. n. f. [from bee and master.] One that keeps bees.
They

B E E

They that are bee-masters, and have not care enough of them, must not expect to reap any considerable advantage by them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BEECH. n. f. [bece, or boc, Saxon.]

This tree hath leaves somewhat resembling those of the horn-beam; the male flowers grow together in a round bunch, at remote distances from the fruit, which consists of two triangular nuts, inclosed in a rough hairy rind, divided into four parts. There is but one species of this tree at present known, except two varieties, with striped leaves. It will grow to a considerable stature, though the soil be stony and barren; as also, upon the declivities of mountains. The shade of this tree is very injurious to most sorts of plants, which grow near it; but is generally believed to be very salubrious to human bodies. The timber is of great use to turners and joiners. The mast is very good to fatten swine and deer; and affords a sweet oil, and has supported some families with bread. Millar.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood. Dryden.

Nor is that sprightly wildness in their notes,
Which, clear and vigorous, warbles from the beech.

Thomson's Spring.

BE'ECHEN. adj. [bucene, Sax.] Consisting of the wood of the beech; belonging to the beech.

With diligence he'll serve us when we dine,
And in plain beechen vessels fill our wine. Dryden's Juv.

BEEF. n. f. [bœuf, French.]

1. The flesh of black cattle prepared for food.

What say you to a piece of beef and mustard?

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

The fat of roasted beef falling on the birds, will baste them.

Swift.

2. An ox, bull, or cow, considered as fit for food. In this sense it has the plural beeves; the singular is seldom found.

A pound of man's flesh

Is not so estimable or profitable,

As flesh of muttons, beeves, or goats. Shakesp. M. of Ven.

Alcinous slew twelve sheep, eight white-tooth'd swine,

Two crook-haunch'd beeves. Chapman's Odyssey.

There was not any captain, but had credit for more victuals than we spent there; and yet they had of me fifty beeves among them. Sir Walter Raleigh's Apology.

On hides of beeves, before the palace gate,

Sad spoils of luxury! the suitors fate. Pope's Odyssey.

BEEF. adj. [from the substantive.] Consisting of the flesh of black cattle.

If you are employed in marketing, do not accept of a treat of a beef stake, and a pot of ale, from the butcher. Swift.

BEEF-EATER. n. f. [from beef and eat, because the commons is beef when on waiting.] A yeoman of the guard.

BE'EMOL. n. f. This word I have found only in the example, and know nothing of the etymology, unless it be a corruption of bymodule, from by and modulus, a note; that is, a note out of the regular order.

There be intervenient in the rise of eight, in tones, two bee-mols, or half notes; so as, if you divide the tones equally, the eight is but seven whole and equal notes. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

BEEN. [beon, Saxon.] The participle preterite of To BE; which see.

BEER. n. f. [bir, Welch.] Liquour made of malt and hops. It is distinguished from ale, either by being older or smaller.

Here's a pot of good double beer, neighbour; drink.

Shakesp. Henry VI. p. ii.

It were good to try clarifying with almonds in new beer.

Bacon's Natural History, N° 768.

Flow, Wellsted! flow, like thine inspirer, beer;

Tho' stale, not ripe; tho' thin, yet never clear;

So sweetly mawkish, and so smoothly dull;

Heady, not strong; and foaming, tho' not full. Pope.

BE'ESTINGS. See BIESTINGS.

BEET. n. f. [beta, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It hath a thick, fleshy root; the flowers have no visible leaves, but many stamina, or threads, collected into a globe; the cup of the flower is divided into five segments; the seeds are covered with an hard outer coat, and grow two or three together in a bunch. The species are; 1. The common white beet. 2. The common green beet. 3. The common red beet. 4. The turnep-rooted red beet. 5. The great red beet. 6. The yellow beet. 7. The Swiss or Chard beet. The two first mentioned are preserved in gardens, for the use of their leaves in pot herbs. The other sorts are propagated for their roots, which are boiled as parsneps. The red beet is most commonly cultivated and used in garnishing dishes. The Swiss beet is by some much esteemed. Millar.

BE'ETLE. n. f. [byrtel, Saxon.]

1. An insect distinguished by having hard cases or sheaths, under which he folds his wings.

They are as shards, and he their beetle. Sh. Ant. and Cleop.

The poor beetle, that we tread upon,

In corporal suff'rance finds a pang as great,

As when a giant dies. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

Others come in place, sharp of sight, and too provident for that which concerned their own interest; but as blind as

One way, a band select from forage drives

A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,

From a fat meadow ground. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Others make good the paucity of their breed with the length and duration of their days; whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous: first, in bifurcous or cloven-hoofed, as camels and beeves; whereof there is above a million annually slain in England. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 6.

Beeves, at his touch, at once to jelly turn,

And the huge boar is shrunk into an urn. Pope's Dunciad.

To BEFA'LL. v. n. [from fall. It befell, it hath befallen.]

1. To happen to: used generally of ill.

Let me know

The worst that may befall me in this case.

Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

Other doubt possesses me, lest harm

Befall thee, sever'd from me. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. ix.

This venerable person, who probably heard our Saviour's prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem, drew his congregation out of those unparalleled calamities, which befell his countrymen. Addison on the Christian Religion.

This disgrace has befallen them, not because they deserved it, but because the people love new faces. Addison's Freeholder.

2. To happen to, as good.

Bion asked an envious man, that was very sad, what harm had befallen unto him, or what good had befallen unto another man? Bacon's Apophthegms.

No man can certainly conclude God's love or hatred to any person, from what befalls him in this world. Tillotson.

3. To happen; to come to pass.

But since th' affairs of men are still uncertain,

Let's reason with the worst that may befall. Shak. J. Caesar.

I have reveal'd

This discord which befell, and was in heav'n

Among th' angelick pow'rs. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. vi.

license the suit to an higher court. Ayliffe's Parergon.

7. In the power of; noting the right of choice.

Give us this evening; thou hast morn and night,
And all the year before thee, for delight. Dryden.
He hath put us in the hands of our own counsel. Life and death, prosperity and destruction, are before us. Tillotson.

8. By the impulse of something behind.

Her part, poor soul! seeming as burdened
With lesser weight, but not with lesser woe,
Was carried with more speed before the wind. Sh. Com. of Err.
Hurried by fate, he cries, and born before
A furious wind, we leave the faithful shore. Dryden.

9. Preceding in time.

Particular advantages it has before all the books which have appeared before it in this kind. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

10. In preference to.

We should but presume to determine which should be the fittest, till we see he hath chosen some one, which one we may then boldly say to be the fittest, because he hath taken it before the rest. Hooker, b. iii.

We think poverty to be infinitely desirable before the torments of covetousness. Taylor's Holy Living.

11. Prior to; nearer to any thing; as, the eldest son is before the younger in succession.

ing the question beforegoing. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

4. Previously to; in order to.

Before this elaborate treatise can become of use to my country, two points are necessary. Swift.

5. To this time; hitherto.

The peaceful cities of th' Ausonian shore,
Lull'd in their ease, and undisturb'd before,
Are all on fire. Dryden's Æneid.

6. Already.

You tell me, mother, what I knew before,
The Phrygian fleet is landed on the shore. Dryden's Æneid.

7. Farther onward in place.

Thou'rt so far before,
The swiftest wing of recompence is slow
To overtake. Shakespeare.

BEFO'REHAND. adv. [from before and hand.]

1. In a state of anticipation, or preoccupation; sometimes with the particle with.

B E G

Quoth Hudibras, I am beforehand
In that already, with your command. Hudibras.

Your soul has been beforehand with your body;
And drunk so deep a draught of promis'd bliss,
She slumbers o'er the cup. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

I have not room for many reflections; the last cited author has been beforehand with me, in its proper moral. Addison.

2. Previously; by way of preparation, or preliminary.

His profession is to deliver precepts necessary to eloquent speech; yet so, that they which receive them, may be taught beforehand the skill of speaking. Hooker, b. i.

It would be resisted by such as had beforehand resisted the general proofs of the gospel. Atterbury.

With opportunity. Denham's Sophy.

See them embarked;
And tell me if the winds and seas befriend them. Addison.

Be thou the first true merit to befriend;
His praise is lost, who stays till all commend. Pope.
Brother-servants must always befriend one another. Swift.

TO BEFRINGE. v. a. [from be and fringe.] To decorate, as with fringes.

When I flatter, let my dirty leaves
Cloath spice, line trunks, or, flutt'ring in a rowe;
Befringe the rails of Bedlam and Soho. Pope.

TO BEG. v. n. [beggere, Germ.] To live upon alms; to live by asking relief of others.

I cannot dig; to beg I am ashamed. Luke, xvi. 3.

TO BEG. v. a.

1. To ask; to seek by petition.

He went to Pilate, and begged the body: Matth. xxvii. 58.

2. To take any thing for granted, without evidence or proof.

We have not begged any principles or suppositions, for the proof of this; but taking that common ground, which both Moses and all antiquity present. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

TO BEGE'T. v. a. I begot, or begat; I have begotten, or begot.
[begettan, Sax; to obtain. See TO GET.]

1. To generate; to procreate; to become the father of children.

But first come the hours, which were begot
In Jove's sweet paradise, of day and night,
Which do the seasons of the year allot. Spenser's Epithal.

I talk of dreams;
Which are the children of an idle brain;
Begot of nothing but vain phantasy. Shakesp. Romeo and Jul.

Who hath begotten me these, seeing I have lost my children;
and am desolate. Isaiah, xlix. 21.

'Twas he the noble Claudian race begat. Dryden's Æneid.

Love is begot by fancy, bred
By ignorance, by expectation fed. Granville.

Begets a thousand dangers? Denham's Sophy.

4. It is sometimes used with on, or upon, before the mother.

Begot upon
His mother Martha by his father John. Spectator.

BEGE'TTER. n. s. [from beget.] He that procreates, or begets;
the father.

B E G

For what their prowess gain'd, the law declares
Is to themselves alone, and to their heirs:
No share of that goes back to the begetter,
But if the son fights well, and plunders better,— Dryden.
Men continue the race of mankind, commonly without the intention, and often against the consent and will of the beget- ter. Locke.
BE'GGAR. n. f. [from beg. It is more properly written begger; but the common orthography is retained, because the derivatives all preserve the a.]
1. One who lives upon alms; one who has nothing but what is given him.
He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes. 1 Samuel, ii. 8.
We see the whole equipage of a beggar so drawn by Homer, as even to retain a nobleness and dignity. Broome on the Odyssey.
2. One who supplicates for any thing; a petitioner; for which,
beggar is a harsh and contemptuous term.
What subjects will precarious kings regard?
A beggar speaks too softly to be heard. Dryd. Conq. of Gran.
3. One who assumes what he does not prove.
These shameful beggars of principles, who give this precarious account of the original of things, assume to themselves to be men of reason. Tillotson.
TO BE'GGAR. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To reduce to beggary; to impoverish.
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd your's for ever. Shakesp. Macbeth.
They shall spoil the clothiers wool, and beggar the present spinners. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.
If the miser durst his farthings spare,
With heav'n, for twopence, cheaply wipes his score,
Lifts up his eyes, and hastes to beggar more. Gay's Trivia.
2. To deprive.
Necessity, of matter beggar'd,
Will nothing stick our persons to arraign
In ear and ear. Shakesp. Hamlet.
3. To exhaust.
For her person,
It beggar'd all description; she did lie
In her pavilion, cloth of gold, of tissue,
O'er-picturing Venus. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.
BE'GGARLINESS. n. f. [from beggarly.] The state of being beg-garly; meanness; poverty.
BE'GGARLY. adj. [from beggar.] Mean; poor; indigent; in the condition of a beggar: used both of persons and things.
I ever will, though he do shake me off
To beggarly divorcement, love him dearly. Shakesp. Othello.
Who, that beheld such a bankrupt beggarly fellow as Cromwell entering the parliament house, with a thread bare torn cloak, and a greasy hat, could have suspected, that he should,
by the murder of one king, and the banishment of another, ascend the throne? South.
The next town has the reputation of being extremely poor and beggarly. Addison on Italy.
Corusodes, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty-four pounds out of a beggarly fellowship. Swift.
BE'GGARLY. adv. [from beggar.] Meanly; despicably; indi-gently.
Touching God himself, hath he revealed, that it is his delight to dwell beggarly? and that he taketh no pleasure to be worshipped, saving only in poor cottages? Hooker, b. v.
BE'GGARY. n. f. [from beggar.] Indigence; poverty in the utmost degree.
On he brought me into so bare a house, that it was the picture of miserable happiness and rich beggary. Sidney, b. ii.
While I am a beggar, I will rail,
And say there is no sin, but to be rich:
And being rich, my virtue then shall be,
To say there is no vice, but beggary. Shakesp. King John.
We must become not only poor for the present, but reduced, by further mortgages, to a state of beggary for endless years to come. Swift.
TO BEGIN. v. n. I began, or begun; I have begun. [beginnan,
Sax. from be, or by to, and gangan, gaan, or gan, to go.]
1. To enter upon something new: applied to persons.
Begin every day to repent; not that thou shouldst at all defer it; but all that is past ought to seem little to thee, seeing it is so in itself. Begin the next day with the same zeal, fear, and humility, as if thou hadst never begun before. Taylor.
I'll sing of heroes and of kings;
Begin my muse. Cowley.
2. To commence any action or state; to do the first act, or first part of an act; to make the first step from not doing to doing.
They began at the ancient men which were before the house.
Ezekiel, ix. 6.
Of these no more you hear him speak;
He now begins upon the Greek:
These rang'd and show'd, shall, in their turns,
Remain obscure as in their urns. Prior.
Beginning from the rural gods, his hand
Was lib'ral to the pow'rs of high command. Dryden's Fab.

B E G

Rapt into future times, the bard begun,
A virgin shall conceive. Pope's Messiah.
3. To enter upon existence; as, the world began; the practice began.
4. To have its original.
And thus the hard and stubborn race of man,
From animated rock and flint began. Blackmore.
From Nimrod first the savage chase began;
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.
5. To take rise.
Judgment must begin at the house of God. 1 Pet. iv. 17.
The song begun from Jove. Dryden.
All began,
All ends in love of God, and love of man. Pope.
6. To come into act.
Now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow. Dryden.
TO BEGIN. v. a.
1. To do the first act of any thing; to pass from not doing to doing, by the first act.
Ye nymphs of Solyma, begin the song. Pope's Messiah.
They have been awaked, by these awful scenes, to begin religion; and, afterwards, their virtue has improved itself into more refined principles, by divine grace. Watts.
2. To trace from any thing as the first ground.
The apostle begins our knowledge in the creatures, which leads us to the knowledge of God. Locke.
3. To begin with. To enter upon; to fall to work upon.
A lesson which requires so much time to learn, had need be early begun with. Government of the Tongue.
BEGIN'NER. n. f. [from begin.]
1. He that gives the first cause, or original, to any thing.
Thus heaping crime on crime, and grief on grief,
To loss of love adjoining loss of friend,
I meant to purge both with a third mischief,
And, in my woe's beginner, it to end. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Socrates maketh Ignatius, the bishop of Antioch in Syria, the first beginner thereof, even under the apostles themselves. Hook.
2. An unexperienced attempter; one in his rudiments; a young practitioner.
Palladius, behaving himself nothing like a beginner, brought the honour to the Iberian side. Sidney, b. i.
They are, to beginners, an easy and familiar introduction; a mighty augmentation of all virtue and knowledge in such as are entered before. Hooker, b. v. §. 37.
I have taken a list of several hundred words in a sermon of a new beginner, which not one hearer could possibly understand. Swift.
BEGIN'NING. n. f. [from begin.]
1. The first original or cause.
Wherever we place the beginning of motion, whether from the head or the heart, the body moves and acts by a consent of all its parts. Swift.
2. The entrance into act, or being.
Also in the day of your gladness, and in your solemn days, and in the beginnings of your months, you shall blow the trumpets over your burnt offering. Numbers, x. 10.
Youth, what man's age is like to be, doth show;
We may our end by our beginning know. Denham.
3. The state in which any thing first is.
By viewing nature, nature's handmaid, art
Makes mighty things from small beginnings grow:
Thus fishes first to shipping did impart,
Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow. Dryden.
4. The rudiments, or first grounds or materials.
The understanding is passive; and whether or not it will have these beginnings, and materials of knowledge, is not in its own power. Locke.
5. The first part of any thing.
The causes and designs of an action, are the beginning; the effects of these causes, and the difficulties that are met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end. Pope on Epick Poetry.
TO BEGI'RD. v. a. I begirt, or begirded; I have begirt. [from be and gird.]
1. To bind with a girdle.
Or should she confident,
As sitting queen ador'd on beauty's throne,
Descend, with all her winning charms begirt,
T' enamour. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 213.
2. To surround; to encircle; to encompass.
Begird th' almighty throne,
Beseeching, or besieging. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v. l. 868.
At home surrounded by a servile croud,
Prompt to abuse, and in detraction loud:
Abroad begirt with men, and swords, and spears;
His very state acknowledging his fears. Prior.
3. To shut in with a siege; to beleague; to block up.
It was so closely begirt before the king's march into the west, that the council humbly desired his majesty, that he would relieve it. Clarendon, b. viii.
To

TO BEGIRT. v. a. [This is, I think, only a corruption of begird; perhaps by the printer.] To begird. See BEGIRD.

And, Lentulus, begirt you Pompey's house,
To seize his sons alive; for they are they Must make our peace with him. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

BEGLERBEG. n. f. [Turkish.] The chief governour of a province among the Turks.

TO BEGNA'W. v. a. [from be and gnaw.] To bite; to eat away; to corrode; to nibble.

His horse is stark spoiled with the staggers, begnawn with the bots, waid in the back, and shoulder shotten.

Shakefp. Taming of the Shrew.
The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul.

Shakefp. Richard III.
BEGO'NE. interject. [only a coalition of the words be gone.] Go away; hence; haste away.

Begone! the goddess cries, with stern disdain;
Begone! nor dare the hallow'd stream to stain.

She fled, for ever banish'd from the train. Addison.

BEGO'T. } The participle passive of the verb beget.
BEGO'TTEN. }

Remember that thou wast begot of them. Ecclus, vii. 28.
The first he met, Antiphates the brave,

But base begotten on a Theban slave. Dryden's Æneid.

TO BEGRE'ASE. v. a. [from be and grease.] To soil or dawb with unctuous or fat matter.

TO BEGRIME. v. a. [from be and grime. See GRIME and GRIM.] To soil with dirt deep impressed; to soil in such a manner that the natural hue cannot easily be recovered.

Her name, that was as fresh
As Dian's visage, is now begrin'd, and black

As my own face. Shakefp. Othello.

TO BEGUI'LE. v. a. [from be and guile.]
1. To impose upon; to delude; to cheat.

This I say, lest any man should beguile you with enticing words. Coloss. ii. 4.

The serpent me beguil'd, and I did eat!
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

Whosoever sees a man, who would have beguiled, and imposed upon him, by making him believe a lie, he may truly say, that is the man who would have ruined me. South.

2. To deceive; to evade.
Is wretchedness depriv'd that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'Twas yet some comfort,

When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will. Shakefp. King Lear.

3. To deceive pleasingly; to amuse.
With these sometimes she doth her time beguile;
These do by fits her phantasy possess. Sir J. Davies.

Sweet leave me here a while;
My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. Hamlet.

BEGU'N. The participle passive of begin.
But thou bright morning star, thou rising sun,
Which in these latter times hast brought to light
Those mysteries, that, since the world begun,
Lay hid in darkness and eternal night. Sir J. Davies.

BEHA'LF. n. f. [This word Skinner derives from half, and interprets it, for my half; as, for my part. It seems to me rather corrupted from behoof, profit; the pronunciation degenerating easily to behave; which, in imitation of other words so founded, was written, by those who knew not the etymology, be-half.]

1. Favour; cause.
He was in confidence with those who designed the destruction of Strafford; against whom he had contracted some prejudice, in the behalf of his nation. Clarendon, b. viii.

Were but my heart as naked to thy view,
Marcus would see it bleed in his behalf. Addison's Cato.

Never was any nation blessed with more frequent interpositions of divine providence in its behalf. Atterbury.

2. Vindication; support.
He might, in his presence, defy all Arcadian knights, in the behalf of his mistress's beauty. Sidney.

Lest the fiend,
Or in behalf of man, or to invade
Vacant possession, some new trouble raise. Paradise Lost.

Others believe, that, by the two Fortunes, were meant prosperity or affliction; and produce, in their behalf, an ancient monument. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

TO BEHA'VE. v. a. [from be and have.]
1. To carry; to conduct: used almost always with the reciprocal pronoun.

We behaved not ourselves disorderly among you. 2 Thessal. iii. 7.

Manifest signs came from heaven, unto those that behaved themselves manfully. 2 Macc. ii. 21.

To their wills wedded, to their errors slaves,
No man, like them, they think, himself behaves. Denham.

We so live, and so act, as if we were secure of the final issue and event of things, however we may behave ourselves. Atterbury.

2. It seems formerly to have had the sense of, to govern; to subdue; to discipline: but this is not now used.

But who his limbs with labours, and his mind
Behaves with cares, cannot so easy mis. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

With such sober and unnoted passion,
He did behave his anger ere 'twas spent,
As if he had but prov'd an argument. Shakefp. Timon.

TO BEHAVE. v. n. To act; to conduct one's self. It is taken either in a good or a bad sense; as, he behaved well or ill.

BEHA'VIOUR. n. f. [from behave.]
1. Manner of behaving one's self, whether good or bad; manners.

Mopsa, curious in any thing but her own good behaviour, followed Zelmane. Sidney.

2. External appearance.
And he changed his behaviour before them, and feigned himself mad in their hands. 1 Sam. xxi. 13.

3. Gesture; manner of action, adapted to particular occasions.
Well witnessing the most submissive behaviour, that a thrall'd heart could express. Sidney.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker, b. v.

One man sees how much another man is a fool, when he dedicates his behaviour to love. Shakefp. Much ado about Noth.

4. Elegance of manners; gracefulness.
He marked, in Dora's dancing, good grace and handsome behaviour. Sidney, b. i.

The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit; and study, for the most part, rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon's Ornam. Rational. N° 63.

He who adviseth the philosopher, altogether devoted to the Muses, sometimes to offer sacrifice to the altars of the Graces, thought knowledge imperfect without behaviour. Wotton.

5. Conduct; general practice; course of life.
To him, who hath a prospect of the state that attends men after this life, depending on their behaviour here, the measures of good and evil are changed. Locke.

6. To be upon one's behaviour. A familiar phrase, noting such a state as requires great caution; a state in which a failure in behaviour will have bad consequences.
Tyrants themselves are upon their behaviour to a superiour power. L'Estrange's Fables.

TO BEHE'AD. v. a. [from be and head.] To deprive of the head; to kill by cutting off the head.
See a reverend Syracusan merchant
Beheaded publicly. Shakefp. Romeo and Juliet.

His beheading he underwent with all christian magnanimity. Clarendon, b. vii.

On each side they fly,
By chains connext, and, with destructive sweep,
Behead whole troops at once. Philips.

Mary, queen of the Scots, was beheaded in the reign of queen Elizabeth. Addison on Italy.

BEHE'LD. participle passive, from behold; which see.
All hail! ye virgin daughters of the main!
Ye streams, beyond my hopes beheld again! Pope's Odyssey.

BE'HEMOTH. n. f. Behemoth, in Hebrew, signifies beasts in general, particularly the larger kind, fit for service. But Job speaks of an animal, which he calls behemoth, and describes its particular properties at large, in chap. xl. 15. Bochart has taken much care to make it appear to be the hippopotamus, or river-horse. Sanctius thinks it is an ox. The Fathers suppose the devil to be meant by it. But we agree with the generality of interpreters, in their opinion, that it is the elephant. Calmet.

Behold now behemoth, which I made with thee; he eateth grass as an ox. Job, xl. 15.

Behold! in plaited mail
Behemoth rears his head. Thomson's Summer, l. 695.

BE'HEN. } n. f. Valerian roots. Also a fruit resembling the tamarisk, from which perfumers extract an oil. Diet.

BEHE'ST. n. f. [from be and best; hæst, Saxon.] Command; precept; mandate.
Her tender youth had obediently lived under her parents behests, without framing, out of her own will, the forechoosing of any thing. Sidney, b. ii.

Such joy he had their stubborn hearts to quell,
And sturdy courage tame with dreadful awe,
That his behest they fear'd as proud tyrant's law. Fairy Q.

I, messenger from everlasting Jove,
In his great name thus his behest do tell. Fairfax, b. i. st. 17.

To visit oft those happy tribes,
On high behests his angels to and fro
Pass'd frequent. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi. l. 153.

Reign thou in hell, thy kingdom; let me serve
In heav'n God ever blest, and his divine
Behests obey, worthiest to be obey'd! Paradise Lost, b. vi.

TO BEHIGHT. v. a. pret. behot, part. behight. [from hazan, to promise, Sax.]
1. To promise.

2. It seems formerly to have had the sense of, to govern; to subdue; to discipline: but this is not now used.

But who his limbs with labours, and his mind
Behaves with cares, cannot so easy mis. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

That most glorious house that glist' reth bright,

Whereof the keys are to thy hand behight

By wife Fidelia.

Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. x. stanz. 50.

3. Perhaps to call; to name; hight being often put, in old authors, for named, or was named.

BEH'ND. prep. [hindan, Saxon.]

1. At the back of another.

Acomates hasted with two hundred harquebusiers, which he had caused his horsemen to take behind them upon their horses.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

2. On the back part; not before.

She came in the press behind, and touched. Mark, v. 27.

3. Towards the back.

The Benjamites looked behind them. Judges, xx. 40.

4. Following another.

Her husband went with her, weeping behind her. 2 Sam. iii. 16.

5. Remaining after the departure of something else.

He left behind him, myself, and a sister, both born in one hour.

Shakefp. Twelfth Night.

Piety and virtue are not only delightful for the present, but they leave peace and contentment behind them. Tillotson.

6. Remaining after the death of those to whom it belonged.

What he gave me to publish, was but a small part of what he left behind him.

Pope's Letters.

7. At a distance from something going before.

Such is the swiftness of your mind,

That, like the earth's, it leaves our sense behind. Dryden.

8. Inferiour to another; having the posteriour place with regard to excellence.

After the overthrow of this first house of God, a second was erected; but with so great odds, that they wept, which beheld how much this latter came behind it.

Hooker, b. 5. § 1.

9. On the other side of something.

From light retir'd, behind his daughter's bed,

He, for approaching sleep, compos'd his head. Dryden.

BEH'ND. adv.

1. Out of sight; not yet produced to view; remaining.

We cannot be sure, that we have all the particulars before us; and that there is no evidence behind, and yet unseen, which may cast the probability on the other side. Locke.

2. Most of the former senses may become adverbial, by suppressing the accusative case; as, I left my money behind, or behind me.

BEH'NDHAND. adv. [from behind and hand.]

1. In a state in which rents or profits, or any advantage, is anticipated; so that less is to be received, or more performed, than the natural or just proportion.

Your trade would suffer, if your being behindhand has made the natural use so high, that your tradesman cannot live upon his labour. Locke.

2. Not upon equal terms, with regard to forwardness. In this sense, it is followed by with.

Consider, whether it is not better to be half a year behindhand with the fashionable part of the world, than to strain beyond his circumstances. Spectator, N° 488.

3. Shakespeare uses it as an adjective, but licentiously, for backward; tardy.

And these thy offices,

So rarely kind, are as interpreters

Of my behindhand slackness.

Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

To BEHO'LD. v. a. pret. I beheld, I have beheld, or beholden. [behealban, Saxon.] To view; to see; to look upon.

Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears. Ezek. xl. 4.

When some young Thessalians, on horseback, were beheld afar off, while their horses watered, while their heads were depressed, they were conceived by the spectators to be one animal.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 4.

Man looks aloft, and, with erected eyes,

Beholds his own hereditary skies.

Dryden.

At this, the former tale again he told,

With thund'ring tone, and dreadful to behold. Dryden's Fab.

BEHO'LD. interject. [from the verb.] See; lo: a word by which attention is excited, or admiration noted.

Behold! I am with thee, and will keep thee. Gen. xxviii. 15.

When out of hope, behold her! not far off,

Such as I saw her in my dream, adorn'd

With what all earth or heaven could bestow,

To make her amiable. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii. l. 481.

BEHO'LDEN. particip. adj. [gehouden, Dutch; that is, held in obligation. It is very corruptly written beholding.] Obligated; bound in gratitude; with the particle to.

Horns, which such as you are fain to be beholden to your wives for. Shakefp. As you like it.

Little are we beholden to your love,

And little looked for at your helping hands. Shakefp. R. III.

I found you next; in respect of bond both of near alliance,

B E I

and particularly of communication in studies: wherein I must acknowledge myself beholden to you. Bacon's Essays.

I think myself mightily beholden to you for the reprehension you then gave us. Addison, Guardian, N° 109.

We, who see men under the awe of justice, cannot conceive, what savage creatures they would be without it; and how much beholden we are to that wise contrivance. Atterbury.

BEHO'LDER. n. s. [from behold.] Spectator; he that looks upon any thing.

Was this the face,

That, like the sun, did make beholders wink? Shakefp. R. II.

These beasts among

Beholders rude, and shallow to discern

Half what in thee is fair, one man except,

Who sees thee?

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 543.

Things of wonder give no less delight

To the wise Maker's, than beholder's sight. Denham.

The juggling chiefs in rude encounters join,

Each fair beholder trembling for her knight. Granville.

The charitable foundations in the church of Rome, exceed all the demands of charity, and raise envy, rather than compassion, in the breasts of beholders. Atterbury.

BEHO'LDING. adj. [corrupted from beholden.] Obligated. See

BEHOLDEN.

Because I would not be beholding to fortune for any part of the victory, I descended. Sidney, b. ii.

BEHO'LDING. n. s. Obligation.

Love to virtue, and not to any particular beholdings, hath expressed this my testimony. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

BEHO'LDINGNESS. n. s. [from beholding, mistaken for beholden.] The state of being obliged.

The king invited us to his court, so as I must acknowledge a beholdingness unto him. Sidney, b. ii.

In this my debt I seem'd loth to confess,

In that I shunn'd beholdingness. Donne.

BEHO'OF. n. s. [from behoove.] That which behooves; that which is advantageous; profit; advantage.

Her majesty may alter any thing of those laws, that may be more both for her own behoof, and for the good of the people. Spenser on Ireland.

No mean recompence it brings

To your behoof: if I that region lost,

All usurpation thence expell'd, reduce

To her original darkness, and your sway. Milton.

Wer't thou some star, which, from the ruin'd roof

Of shak'd Olympus, by mischance didst fall;

Which careful Jove, in nature's true behoof,

Took up, and in fit place did reinstate. Milton.

Because it was for the behoof of the animal, that, upon any sudden accident, it might be awakened, there were no shuts or stopples made for the ears. Ray on the Creation.

It would be of no behoof, for the settling of government, unless there were a way taught, how to know the person to whom belonged this power and dominion. Locke.

To BEHO'OVE. v. n. [behofap, Saxon; it is a duty.] To be fit; to be meet; either with respect to duty, necessity, or convenience. It is used only impersonally with it.

For better examination of their quality, it behooveth the very foundation and root, the highest wellspring and fountain of them, to be discovered. Hooker, b. i. § 1.

He did so prudently temper his passions, as that none of them made him wanting in the offices of life, which it behooved, or became him to perform. Atterbury.

But should you lure the monarch of the brook,

Behooves you then to ply your finest art. Thomson's Spring.

BEHO'OVEFUL. adj. [from behoof.] Useful; profitable; advantageous. This word is somewhat antiquated.

It is very behooveful in this country of Ireland, where there are waste deserts full of grass, that the same should be eaten down. Spenser on Ireland.

Laws are many times full of imperfections; and that which is supposed behooveful unto men, proveth oftentimes most pernicious. Hooker, b. iv. § 14.

Madam, we have culled such necessities

As are behooveful for our state tomorrow. Sh. Rom. and Jul.

It may be most behooveful for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publicly; so it is as requisite, in matters of judgment, punishment, and censure, that the same be transacted privately. Claarendon.

BEHO'OVEFULLY. adv. [from behooveful.] Profitably; usefully.

Tell us of more weighty dislikes than these, and that may more behoovefully import the reformation. Spenser on Ireland.

BEHO'T. [preterite, as it seems, of behight, to promise.]

With sharp intended sting so rude him smote,

That to the earth him drove as stricken dead,

Ne living wight would have him life behot. Fairy Q. b. i.

To BEHO'WL. v. a. [from be and howl.]

1. To howl at.

Now the hungry lion roars,

And the wolf howls the moon. Shakefp. Midsum. N. Dr.

2. Perhaps, to howl over, or lament clamorously.

BE'ING. particip. [from be.]

Those,

BEL

Those, who have their hope in another life, look upon themselves as being on their passage through this. Atterbury.
BE'ING. n. f. [from be.]

1. Existence; opposed to nonentity.

Of him all things have both received their first being, and their continuance to be that which they are. Hooker, b. v.

Yet is not God the author of her ill,

Though author of her being, and being there. Davies.

There is none but he,

Whose being I do fear: and under him

My genius is rebuked.

Shakesp. Macbeth.

Thee, Father, first they sung, omnipotent,

Immutable, immortal, infinite,

Eternal king! Thee, author of all being,

Fountain of light!

Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii. l. 374.

Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing to be an excellent creation. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

Consider every thing as not yet in being; then examine, if it must needs have been at all, or what other ways it might have been. Bentley.

2. A particular state or condition.

Those happy spirits, which ordain'd by fate

For future being, and new bodies wait.

Dryden's Æneid.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate;

From brutes what men, from men what spirits know;

Or who could suffer being here below? Pope's Essay on Man.

3. The person existing.

Ah, fair, yet false; ah, being form'd to cheat,

By seeming kindness, mixt with deep deceit.

Dryden.

It is folly to seek the approbation of any being, besides the supreme; because no other being can make a right judgment of us, and because we can procure no considerable advantage from the approbation of any other being.

Addison. Spectator.

As now your own, our beings were of old,

And once inclos'd in woman's beauteous mold.

Pope.

BE'ING. conjunct. [from be.] Since.

Dict.

BE IT SO. A phrase of anticipation, suppose it be so; or of permission, let it be so.

My gracious duke,

Be't so she will not here, before your grace,

Consent to marry with Demetrius;

I beg the ancient privilege of Athens. Sh. Midf. N. Dream.

TO BELA'BOUR. v. a. [from be and labour.] To beat; to thump: a word in low speech.

What several madnesses in men appear:

Orestes runs from fancy'd furies here;

Ajax belabours there an harmless ox,

And thinks that Agamemnon feels the knocks. Dryden, jun.

He sees virago Nell belabour,

With his own staff, his peaceful neighbour.

Swift.

TO BELA'CE. v. a. [Sea term.] To fasten; as to belace a rope.

D.

BEL'AMIE. n. f. [bel amie, Fr.] A friend; an intimate. This word is out of use.

Wife Socrates

Pour'd out his life, and last philosophy,

To the fair Critias, his dearest belamie. Fairy Q. b. ii. c. vii.

BEL'AMOUR. n. f. [bel amour, Fr.] Gallant; consort; paramour: obsolete.

Lo, lo, how brave she decks her bounteous bow'r,

With filken curtains, and gold coverlets,

Therein to shroud her sumptuous belamour. Fairy Q. b. ii.

BELA'TED. adj. [from be and late.] Benighted; out of doors late at night.

Fairy elves,

Whose midnight revels, by a forest side,

Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,

Or dreams he sees. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 781.

Or near Fleetditch's oozy brinks,

Belated, seems on watch to lie.

Swift.

TO BELA'Y. v. a. [from be and lay; as, to waylay, to lie in wait, to lay wait for.]

1. To block up; to stop the passage.

The speedy horse all passages belay,

And spur their smoaking steeds to cross their way. Dryden.

2. To place in ambush.

'Gainst such strong castles needeth greater might,
